Another questioner asked whether she wants to preserve the Indian race, or its culture, or both. She said they are synonymous, and that any adulteration of pure Indian blood lines would herald the decay of Indian culture. "There's one anthropologist for every eighteen Indians," she added. "We're kept alive to help you get your Ph.-D.'s."

Several questions got lost in the course of being articulated to Miss Horn's satisfaction, when the inquirer's stamina failed to match hers. Others elicited a "no comment", as when a questioner tried to get her to compare her segregationist philosophy to that of South Africa or Nazi Germany. "I came here to talk about Indians!" Miss Horn said in emphatic conclusion.

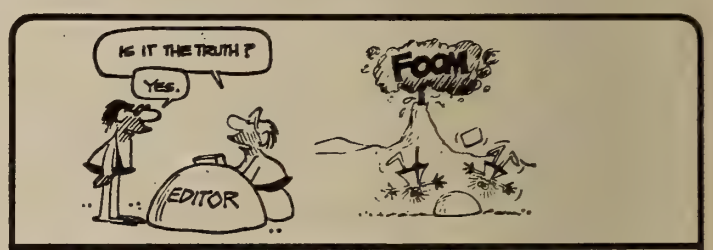
Crossword No. 2 solution

1P	A	2R	L	3E	Y	■	4E	5S	C	6A	P	7A	D	8E
I	■	U	■	L	■	9D	■	L	■	M	■	R	■	N
10P	E	N	S	I	V	E	■	11U	M	P	I	R	E	S
E	■	R	■	T	■	C	■	M	■	L	■	E	■	U
12R	H	I	N	E	■	13L	I	P	■	14E	L	S	I	E
A	■	O	■	■	■	A	■	■	■	■	■	T	■	D
15C	A	T	E	16R	■	17S	O	18R	E	19N	E	S	S	■
K	■	■	■	U	■	S	■	E	■	I	■	■	■	20F
■	21P	22L	A	N	G	E	N	T	■	23L	A	24D	L	E
25E	■	A	■	■	■	■	■	R	■	■	■	R	■	A
26L	O	S	E	27R	■	28E	N	A	■	29B	O	A	S	T
Y	■	C	■	U	■	L	■	C	■	L	■	C	■	U
30S	C	A	N	N	E	D	■	31T	O	U	G	H	E	R
E	■	R	■	I	■	E	■	S	■	R	■	M	■	E
32E	L	S	I	N	O	R	E	■	33A	B	O	A	R	D

Essay and Thesis Typing

Reliable typing services are offered to meet your individual requirements with minimum delay and minimum cost.

The Student Typing Service



STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

LADIES ELECTROLYSIS

Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call:

HARRISON SALON

542-5595

CLASSIFIEDS

LOST in vicinity of Union and Frontenace St., about 8:30 p.m., 18 Nov., book entitled 'Indaba My Children'. Book is of sentimental value. Contact Mr. Heder at 196 Union, 546-5048. Or leave a message.

NEED a place to store your motorcycle for the winter? We have a heated drive-in basement with lots of room. Cheap rates! Call 546-5081.

FOR SALE - stereo amplifier, 60 watts, frequency response 25-1800, Call 544-0179.

MEDICAL STUDENTS: skulls $30 to $75 and other fine osteological human products most reasonably priced. Write to 812-55 Maitland Street, Toronto 284, Ontario.

LOST -- pair of men's wire glasses in Physed Centre on Tuesday night. Call 542-1679.

FOUND -- pair of glasses left in car while hitchhiking to Peterborough on Nov. 11, Call registrar's office.

FOR SALE two snowtires for TR-4a. Call 544-6685. See you on Wednesday Donna!!! ????
THE NEWS STAFF just does not appreciate progress! They belong in a backwards country.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5 year warranty, 5 sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

TO the news staff: Sorry for the chaos, but the system works now.

GOOD show Simmons.'

IN MEMORIAM -- Friday was the second anniversary to the 'Saddest Day In Journalism' and we forgot to celebrate. Bhaa...

All welcome to meet and hear

Rabbi Karpol Bender,

Dean of Foreign Students, Bar Ilan University, Israel

who will speak on

Israel and the Diaspora

at Hillel House, 26 Barrie St.
Wednesday, November 24, 7 pm

Rabbi Bender was the Rabbi of the Kingston Jewish Community and Director of Queen's Hillel from 1960-68.

Orientation '72

Gael Applications

Gael application forms are now available in the AMS outer office. Be sure and pick up one. Final submission date is December 3. If you are interested in the orientation programme, don't hestitate to apply.

Birth Control and Abortion Information and Referal Centre

3 pm-11pm — student staffed — 165 University

THE RED CROSS IS PEOPLE LIKE YOU HELPING PEOPLE LIKE YOU

Fire alarms return

The fire alarm at Ban Righ is ringing again.

Residents at Ban Righ and Adelaide Halls were cleared from the building about nine o'clock Saturday night for the eighth false fire alarm of the year.

This one was the result of a malfunctioning sensor in the Ban Righ Furnace room, block chairman Pat Culm told The Journal. She said the several soundings of the alarm later Saturday night were the result of maintenance staff trying to adjust the sensor system.

"It's really sharp, you know, out into the rain for hours and hours," commented Ban Righ don Brenda Maybee.

Malfunctions have also been responsible for the seven previous alarms in Adelaide-Ban Righ since September.

Students get money

Queen's students got more than three million dollars in loans and grants last year under the Ontario Student Awards Programme.

The $3.1 million went to a total of 2669 students at Queen's, who got an average of $1172 each.

That represents $544 in Canada Student Loan and $628 in grant from the provincial government, according to the November issue of Campus, which is issued by the public relations department.

This fall the university gave out another hundred thousand dollars in entrance scholarships to 196 first-year students.

Union hearing is held

A labour relations examiner will visit Queen's to examine a request from employees of the public relations department that they be certified as a union.

That was the unexciting outcome of a highly formal hearing before the Ontario Labour Relations Board in Toronto Thursday.

In the 25-minute hearing, in a University Avenue office tower, lawyers for Queen's and for the Canadian Union of Public Employees quarrelled briefly over CUPE's claim that the five public relations employees make a reasonable bargaining unit and should therefore be certified as a union local.

University lawyer Ben Cunningham, prompted by personnel director Bill Wright, told the hearing board that three of the five are management people, frequently involved in decision-making and trusted with confidential information, and that the other two are secretaries liable to be transferred from one university department to another.

He said making one of he university 125 departments into a union local by itself could set a precedent that would make the university impossible to administer.

The board said an examiner would be sent to Kingston to look at the situation in detail, before any decision is reached.

One of the public relations employees, Miss Cathy Perkins, attended the hearing to oppose the union's application. The other four employees all signed the original application.

-schwier

Fireman pumps smoke from a guestroom in the Union about 12:30 Sunday morning. The fire began in a bundle of clothes and spread to the curtains; damage was not extensive. Earlier in the evening, city firemen had visited Ban Righ Hall for the latest in its series of alarm malfunctions.

Parking trial was not a success

The parking experiment tried on campus for the past two weeks was not very successful: nothing happened.

During the two-week experiment, holders of Queen's parking permits could put their cars in any campus lot, rather than following the colour-code restrictions which usually applies.

But the increased freedom was a failure, on the basis of early information, parking and security director R. I. Luker told The Journal.

The biggest problem was in the green-coded zone, Luker said – the area south of Union Street between Arch Street and University Avenue, containing the core of the central campus.

Everybody wants to park there, Luker said, and holders of green permits who normally park in the area found their spaces taken up with the cars of day-labour staff who arrive before eight o'clock.

Judging by the results of the test he said, most students and staff want the parking system kept "as it was".

But the experiment was successful in one way, Luker said: it made people realize how well off they were under the existing parking regulations.

Coed residence dies: men in favour, women against

The coed residence proposal died Friday night at a joint meeting of the residence governing councils. Former AMS speaker and campus personality Bob Buller, now high school liaison officer for the university, presided at the funeral.

"I think I've inherited a hornet's nest," Buller said as the meeting began. And he was proven right, as representatives of men's and women's residences recited their positions in the complex question which has been developing since last spring.

In the end, they agreed to pass the proposal on to the residences board, the governing body which would have to rule on it. It carries the endorsement of the Inter-Residence Council, student ruling body for men's residences but not the student Women's Residence Council.

WRC secretary-treasurer Beth Higginson began the discussion, reporting Thursday night's meeting at which the WRC decided not to approve the proposal to make Gordon-Brockington Houses a co-ed residence and put men into Chown Hall.

The decision, Miss Higginson said, was based on Wednesday's non-binding student referendum, in which the proposal did not receive a two-thirds vote of approval in women's residence. It had 65.4 per cent of those who voted, or about 45 per cent of residents overall, she said.

But, Victoria Hall (ABC) block chairman Joan Delavigne said, "We are willing to take the report to the Ban Righ Board, though we will not endorse it."

The Ban Righ Board, which met Saturday and saw the proposal briefly, governs women's residences but is subordinate to the overall Residence Board.

A storm of replies followed the statement of the WRC's position. Medical student Doug Romans, chairman of the committee which wrote the proposal originally, said, "I was under the impression that interpretation of the results would take place here" -- suggesting that WRC's decision of what the referendum result meant had been premature.

And Donald Gordon House warden Dr. P.O. Taylor commented, "The WRC feels itself bound by its constitution; it is really bound by its own choosing."

Morris Hall central committee chairman Bob Bobyk said there was no room in coed residence for 66.6 percent of women even if they did favour it.

WRC president Cindy Davidson observed that "Everyone has some arbitrary figure for deciding upon an issue. Ours is 66.6, and therefore our decision to reject the proposal was made for us."

IRC vice-chairman Val Kirpinsky said it was apparent that the WRC position would not change. "As bad blood will come in future discussion," he said, "we can only ask them to take it to the Ban Righ Board."

When it was pointed out that the meeting needed a motion on which to focus discussion, Miss Delavigne who was a WRC representative on the committee which wrote the proposal, moved that the report be presented to the relevant residence boards by the IRC and the WRC. With the addition of the words "for immediate consideration," suggested by IRC chairman Ian Nordheimer the motion was carried.

On the suggestion of Leonard Hall don John Moore, it was also agreed that the minutes of IRC and WRC meetings which discussed coed residences be sent to the boards.

The meeting adjourned after giving particular thanks to Romans, who had spent so much time and effort on devising a coed residence plan and piloting it through committees to the residence councils.

After the joint meeting, a special meeting of the IRC (the men's residences council) approved a motion to endorse the Gordon-Brockington-Chown proposal.

That motion was based on the belief that the referendum showed "a large majority of men, and a majority of women" in favour, IRC chairman Ian Nordheimer told The Journal.

He said there would be "no problem filling a coed residence".

The IRC motion included a recommendation that the proposal go into effect for September 1972.

It will be considered by the Men's Residences Board when it meets early in December.

MOLIERE

French Area Studies Centre
Presents

Bourgeois Gentilhomme

by
Le Treteau de Paris

Wednesday, 24 November 8 p.m.
Grand Theatre - 218 Princess
Tickets: $2.50 (Students)
$3.50 (non-students)
Division of Concerts Box Office
Theological Hall

This Sunday
and every Sunday is The Round Table

The Roast Beef Buffet

Only $2.99

(a regular $3.99 feature)

All You Can Eat
- cold cuts,
desserts, salads,
and ROAST BEEF

EVERY Sunday - 5-10 at
The Round Table
Fully Licensed
Home of Mr. Bojangles
Discotheque
542-7337

Bring anybody for dinner - great food from $2.99 - every night

Clip this coupon - your second cocktail only 25c - in any dining room

-seagram

Above is the corridor outside Pollution Probe's office in the Union. The old Journals have been there since they were donated to the paper recycling drive in July. At left is Probe's poster.

FOR THAT ONE WOMAN, GIVE ONE
DAZZLING DIAMOND SOLITAIRE

She's the one woman you chose from all the rest. Now you can give her one wonderful diamond. We will help you select a glorious diamond solitaire. To stand alone in all its glory, glow with clear brilliance and fire. Show the world she's the one woman in your world.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON ONTARIO
CANADA

Snowball man gets frosty rebuff

Determined Journal staffers Sunday night foiled an attempt by Stewart Searle to pull an overwhelming snow job on the unsuspecting campus.

Searle, who claimed he was speaking for the Snowball Committee, handed The Journal an icy press release announcing plans for Snowball, the winter carnival which runs from January 23 to 29 this year.

It said the emcees and directors for Snowball Variety Night have been chosen from among the hordes of applicants. Emcees will be Donna Coon, Gary Gannage and Derek McLean.

(It was McLean who was barker at the Crown and Anchor table during orientation's casino, while an admirer shouted, "Step right up! Watch the president of the Arts 73 shout himself hoarse!")

Debbie Pepler will be production director for the show; Don McKay will be technical director.

The variety night will be held on ice this year, in the Jock Harty Arena on January 28. Asked the reason for this policy change, Searle neatly skated around the issue.

Auditions for variety night will be held first in the arena on Friday, December 3, from 12:30 to 2:30 and 6:30 to 9:30. Groups or individuals with ideas or talent or ideally both, are invited to come out then; those interested should phone Miss Pepler. Anyone who would like to help backstage or with technical details can get in touch with McKay.

Carrying on with its theme of relocating events, Searle's statement explained, the Snowball semi-formal will be held in Grant Hall rather than in the Union. Parts of Kingston Hall will also be used; decorations will be based on the theme "Reflections", and chairman Barb Pattison is looking for groups which want to decorate rooms.

Searle's statement concluded with a bland and innocuous comment from Snowball chairman Terry Joyce. But, as mentioned, The Journal detected the plot and refused to print it.

All-student meeting called

There will be a general meeting of the Alma Mater Society, at which every student may vote, on the evening of December 7.

Last week's AMS executive meeting formally called the general meeting, although president Patrick Riley said he could not explain in detail what the meeting was supposed to do.

It was the concern of vice-president Victor Bradley, he said, and "Victor had to go out and referee a dispute in the Indian Club, for some obscure and oriental reason."

It was explained that the meeting December 7 was to decide what to do with the "unassigned reserve", a special AMS fund, now about $3500, which can only be spent with general student consent.

Angada hospital plans open house

The Angada Children's Hospital, a teaching hospital affiliated with Queen's and attached to Kingston General Hospital, will hold an open house for the community December 5.

Displays in the hospital, on Stuart Street at the foot of Arch Street, will show many of the activities in child health care which Angada carries on, a KGH announcement said.

A number of KGH doctors who are also members of staff at Queen's will be supervising displays. Dr. Michael Partington, head of paediatrics, will manage a display showing the apparatus which is used to measure the drugs in a patient's blood. And Dr. Dugal Campbell, professor of psychology and psychiatry, will be running a "do-it-yourself" booth showing how electronic equipment records a patient's physiological functions. And anaesthesiology professor will display what his speciality involves.

Other displays will include poison control, treatment of cystic fibrosis, transfusions, x-ray equipment and techniques, and the treatment of diabetic children.

Meds president Kent McKinnon and rehab therapy president Donna Tuck said that as far as they knew students were not involved in the programme.

Its main purpose is to let children have a look at the hospital. "If a child knows what the hospital looks like, he will not be frightened if he has to come to the clinic at a later date," the statement pointed out.

And its proceeds will help finance three new specialized facilities in Angada -- a burns unit, an intensive care unit, and a new rehabilitation service.

Computer contest held

The computing centre is sponsoring a computer programming competition with a deadline of January 31.

Prizes -- in the form of credits for use of the university computer -- are offered for the best programmes "of general interest". The top prize is $500 in computing time.

Entries will be judged, the computing centre announces, "on usefulness to the user community, reliability, clarity and style of documentation, and operating efficiency".

The contest is being held to extend the scope of the subroutine library -- the standard programmes, useful in a wide variety of problem-solving situations, which are kept on file for anyone to use who needs them.

Freshmen say goodbye

Two more first-year Queen's students were valedictorians at their high schools recently, both in the Kingston area.

He is first-year life science student Chris Pappas of Kingston, who was valedictorian at Queen Elizabeth Collegiate and Vocational Institute, and is a Journal staff photographer.

First-year phys ed student Ruth Reynolds of Verona was valedictorian at Sydenham High School north of the city.

AMS CONCERTS PRESENTS

KRIS KRISTOFFERSON

with TANNIS NEIMANN

SUNDAY NOV. 28 - GRANT HALL

TWO SHOWS 7:00 & 9:30

TICKETS:

$2.00 WITH STUDENT CARD

$3.00 WITHOUT CARD

MAXIMUM 2000 SEATS

SALE FOR STUDENTS IN UNION

11:00 - 3:00

Also on sale at the House of Sounds.

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 23
Tuesday, November 23, 1971
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

No thanks to "women liberators"

This editorial is directed to a particular (and unfortunately large) group on campus -- the type of male that put the "women-liberate yourself" classified ad in the Tuesday, Nov. 16 Journal (page 10). Women who are liberated are getting rather tired of that kind of bullshit, whether it is concious or not (and I'm not too sure that it was not), and I'm telling you, from all of us, to shove it.

One woman wrote, in 'Liberation News, that "Men adore the Cosmopolitan-Playboy idea of the 'Liberated' woman. She is allowed a mind-of-her-own and a stimulating career. What sophisticated male wants to live with an old-fashioned dormat? The new doormat is fantastically sexy, fucks a lot (not only do you not have to marry her, you don't even have to see her again) and manages, amidst all this liberation, to keep every ounce of her femininity. That means she still does all the housework."

The whole woman-stereotype has obtained a new male-given twist with Women's Lib...The 'liberated' girl is an even better tool to be manipulated than the old, unliberated one. The old-fashioned girl never fucked at all; the new one fucks on the first date. If she doesn't, she's told she's square, unliberated, old-fashioned. (Perhaps she's really just trying to spare the guy's feelings by not telling him that physically he turns her right off. But what delicate male ego could take that. No, the girl's just a poor little prude.)

Why don't you guys be more honest? If you want un-emotional, uninvolved sex, hire a prostitute. Pay for services rendered. Or masturbate. You don't want liberation, or liberated women. You want cheap, easy, degraded sex.

No woman worth being called a woman would want your type. (It's not that we don't like sex. We do. We just don't like what you offer.) And those 'women' that do, I feel sorry for.

I suppose you will still find a fair share of 'liberated doormats' around this conservative institution, the kind that believe the Birks and FDS ads, but if we have our way, they're not going to last. You had better hurry up with your 'liberation' programme before you find yourself out of luck.

-L.K.

Does this ad bug you?

I we, the undersigned vow not to patronize Birks, and to discourage patronage of Birks by my our friends until the company ceases its present degrading advertising campaign, which presents undesirable stereotypes of women.

Signed _____

Send to: Henry Birks & Sons Ltd.,
134 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.

Women's Lib: What's in it for men

It is unfortunate that there are a great many men who view Women's Lib with scorn, derision and who see it as a threat to their masculinity. It is unfortunate, because these men miss the central fact of the Women's Liberation movement: women do not want to and cannot succeed in their movement at the expense of men; rather, they will succeed only by creating fundamental changes in society which will enhance the lives of women and men.

What many men fail to see is that "Women's Lib" is really a misnomer for People's Lib, a movement whose purpose is to free people from their sex-defined roles, with the ultimate aim of creating a society in which people relate to other people solely as people, on the basis of their human qualities. The aim is to free everyone from narrow, limited roles which are based on one's sex and to have people instead do those things for which they have the ability and the desire, regardless of their sex (or age, race, nationality, religion, political affiliation, hat size or eye colour.)

That women are pushing to gain access to male-dominated jobs and to have all the other rights which now are the sole possession of men, but merely an attempt to bring about conditions in which sex, in nearly all situations, is irrelevant. Nor is it correct to say that members of Women's Lib are trying to force women into a work routine which women do not want and which has not proved to be very satisfying to men. They simply want a situation in which no one is forced to do anything, simply because of his or her sex.

The more perceptive of feminist writers have recognized that the continuance today of the inferior position is inextricably bound up with the way society is organized. They have recognized that not only are women victims of a male dominated society, but that men too are victims of a system which forces people to dominate others in order to move ahead or even survive; a system which, at the same time, offers most men only fairly unfulfilling jobs and leaves them so cut off from the sources of power that they have no one else to dominate but their women (and perhaps children); a system whose economy would collapse if payment had to be made for the costs of services provided free by women (child rearing, homemaking, sex services and many essential services provided by volunteers); a system which depends for its continuation on splitting people off from one another through divide-and-conquer tactics which prevent people from recognizing their common interest in banding together and changing the system which oppresses them.

While some men, too, have recognized many of the above characteristics of modern society, and have even recognized the disadvantaged position of women in it, most men fail to realize that their role, as men, is as narrow, sterile and basically non-human as that of women. Just as women are expected to be gentle, compassionate, unassertive and non-rational, men are expected to be firm, aggressive, decisive, unemotional and rational, and both sexes are not supposed to display the attributes assigned to the other sex. Not only are men prevented from engaging in many activities for which some of them might be ideally suited, but they also pay an enormous price in physical terms to keep hidden their "non-masculine" traits and feelings. Sidney Jourard, in an article entitled "Some Lethal Aspects of the Male Role" in North America (it's in Athos and Coffey, Commerce students), has stated that men are subject to tremendous tensions because they must be continually on guard against unmanly displays and he concludes that "manliness seems to carry with it a chronic burden of stress and energy-expenditure which could be a factor related to man's relatively shorter life-span" (compared with women.)

(Women, on the other hand, suffer psychologically because of their sex role. All humans have a need to develop to their fullest potential, yet women, from childhood, are taught to suppress this drive and are largely denied the chance for achievement. The result is frustration, which gives rise to a greater incidence of psychological problems among women than men. Their psychological problems are the counterpart of the male's physical stress, and both are closely related to the narrowness of their sexual roles.)

The fact is that both men and women are trapped in sex roles which prevent people from achieving their full potential as human beings, and this is no less true for the male simply because his role allows or requires him to dominate women. For a man cannot completely develop his potential as long as he must be aggressive, strong, unemotional and a decision maker, who is constantly under pressure to prove that he is a "man" by his ability to ball chicks, or conquer other men or nature. The role is degrading, dehumanizing and irrelevant. In fact, in terms of their development as human beings men are more threatened by the well-socialized wife-mother-submissive sex partner type of woman that he is by the truly liberated woman, because the former demands that he fill the empty, limiting role of "male", while the latter forces him to be a human being.

If they help achieve a society in which women can achieve their potential as humans, then feminists will of necessity have done the same for men. Seen in this light, Women's Lib is the most revolutionary movement in existence because it seeks to create a system in which no one is dominated by another in direct contrast to the present system which depends for its functioning on people exploiting other, either physically or emotionally, and forces them to derive much of their satisfaction from power-playing in their personal relationships.

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Managing Editors: John Solman, Charles Schwier
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Features Editor: Dave Walker
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks this issue to news staff Bob Mutrie, Rachael Edwards, Pat Spence and Kathleen Draper. Duty man: Chris Pappas. This paper was put out despite immense interference from the construction division. It was not easy.

FEEDBACK

letters to the editors

Shocked

Dear Editors:

With shock, disbelief, and disgust I read the Journal's account of the AMS meeting Monday November 15th. The clincher came when "without debate" (!) the inner council passed a motion to abolish training table.

This motion was defeated by the council on Oct. 25th when those people who were involved, and concerned had the opportunity to express opinion, and now for Mr. Bradley, and Mr. Riley to slink back into the protective womb of Inner Council and reraise the issue is ludicrous.

It is all too apparent to me that people who have dissociated themselves from the tone of interest of Queen's students have pushed a personal opinion through a formal channel for no other ends than their own. If Queen's students did not feel that they wanted to support our athletic programme then they would never have voted to increase the Athletic fee two years ago. The number of students at Football games, hockey and basketball games, and every other athletic event held at Queen's, and away, shows that our students indeed support the Athletic programme at Queen's, in total.

The system does not unduely favour the athletes, their activity can be carried on only during the early evenings, and this excludes them from the dinner hours. The fact that the product that they produce brings honour to the University, pride to its student body, and a reputation many other Universities would give all their academic staffs to obtain more than repays the cost of training table. Training table is essential for more than the promotion of team spirit, proper nutrition for athletes, interaction and understanding between teams.

To me it is a mystery why the AMS would stick its nose into an area where we already have more than adequate student representation, in the Intercollegiate Athletic committees, and try and dictate personal policies; or do they feel the students already on these committees are not capable of doing their jobs.

Rob Beamish

Rotten thievery

Dear Editors:

Sometime during last Saturday afternoon, when the Residence was unattended, a large leaved plant and its container were removed from the Reception area in Adelaide Hall. Two male students were observed walking up the street with them from a distance too far away to be apprehended.

They would appear rather obvious as the plant was very large. The plant was my own personal property, however the coal scuttle it sat in, was not. Discouraging as it may seem, I am truly hopeful that these items may soon return as mysteriously as they disappeared.

What a pity we are not permitted to beautify our surroundings without the constant fear of a dastardly act being committed time and time again.

Mrs. A. Hewett,
Supervisor,
Adelaide & Ban Righ Halls.

On creating intelligent opinion

Dear Editors:

In reference to your article "Protests criticized" (No. 21, Thursday Nov. 11) I would like to say that Dr. J. Duncan MacArthur and Dr. David B. MacLay raise a very good point:

The Amchitka blast was primarily a shame because it was a bomb. Certainly the emphasis has been often "misplaced" on environmental topics.

However one may note that ecological considerations were not irrelevant and one is not yet certain that some bad effects are not to come. But moreover I hope that those two scientists have seized the opportunity of attending various protests to make their point among demonstrators.

Clearly the hope of effective demonstrations, in the sense of preventing the test, was tiny (it always is, though nobody can claim there is no hope) but the tribune such demonstrations offer to alert a sensibilised opinion, on other and maybe more important aspects of the problems, should always be welcome.

Paul-Jean Cahen

the Dormouse

by Alan Broadbent

"I want to be able to walk down the hallway with my hair in curlers, and not have to be embarrased."

Now, is that any very grand aim?

This is the typical comment of female people who are opposed to co-ed residences here at Queen's. They figure that if men are allowed into their residence to roam around, to actually live there, then they can no longer walk around with their hair in curlers, or in their underwear, or appear in any other condition than the Queen of the hop.

This is not an attitude than can be taken lightly. Without the agreement of these types of people, it will be a very difficult thing for those who want to live in co-ed residences to be able to. And according to the recent referendum taken among residence dwellers, a goodly number of people want to live in a co-ed residence.

But it all seems to come down to this matter of haircurlers in the hallways. I personally am not that much in favour of haircurlers. If someone were to ask me if I preferred women in haircurlers to women without them, I would definately opt for the latter. Certain spiffy restaurants, for instance, frown on a gentleman arriving with a lady in haircurlers. Haircurlers have a history of befouling swimming pools, both by botching the machinery and by leaving rust marks. Society in general is not knocked out by haircurlers.

However, given that for some women haircurlers are necessary from time to time, I can accept them, and I am not at all disposed to embarass someone for wearing them, even in hallways. I would think that most people would feel the same way.

I cannot recall a time when I have heard someone hoot and catcall at a person in haircurlers. "Nyah, lookit old Ruth, she's wearing Haircurlers." The very words do not strike a familiar chord at all.

I do recall, once several years ago, that a woman wearing bobby-pins was frowned upon. It was in a small coffee-house in Montreal, and the woman in question had dropped a bobby-pin in her friends soup, inadvertently of course. The resulting wax slick on the top of the soup rendered the potage undrinkable, and the friend fished out the offending bobby-pin, allowing herself the luxury of a frown.

However, I know for a fact that it is not the practice of the residences at this university to serve soup in the hallways. That is done in the dining halls, and there are often guests of the opposite sex present at meal times.

I think that if haircurlers are offensive, the offense cannot be reserved to one sex. Women are as apt to find them repulsive as men.

Nor do I think that men are more apt to make the wearing of haircurlers embarrassing than are women. It has been made painfully obvious to me on many occasions that men are unaware of what lies above a woman's forehead, or outside of her ears.

"You didn't notice my hair. I just got it Done." How familiar these words sound to us members of the guilty sex.

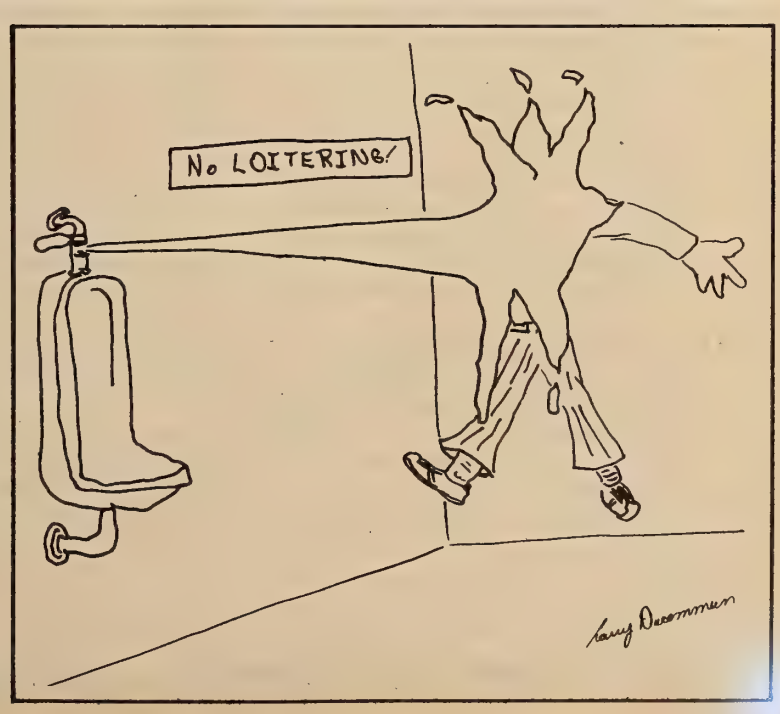
Notice haircurlers? It would take the careful scrutiny of a committee of men working over a prolonged period, and I can only recall one committee meeting that has ever taken place in a hallway, and that was in Richardson Hall some years ago. No-one with haircurlers walked past.

Perhaps the secret wish of these women who want to walk around in haircurlers is for people to notice these pains they take to look presentable. They may actually want everyone to notice their haircurlers, but only in an unembarassing way. Possibly the reason they pile up so much mileage in the hallways, rather than staying in their rooms or wearing hats or bags, is that they want their friends to see how hard they actually try.

"Hi, notice anything different about me?"

"Hi Ruthy, golly....is it your teeth, have you had them straightened?"

"No, no. Something else."



"Is it your new house coat? Your slippers?"

"No. It's above my forehead, and outside my ears."

"I know. You are wearing haircurlers. Boy Ruthy, you really try."

At any rate, it is not something to be ignored. We should do everything we can at this university to make sure that people can walk down the hall with their hair in curlers, and not be embarassed.

amalgam

20 profs and 50 students take on the world

by Bill Johnston

The most exciting and ambitious course being offered at this university is an engineering course.

Called Nature, Science and Man, it is a multi-disciplinary one-term course which is being run for the first time this year on an experimental basis. It has been accepted by the Faculty of Applied Science as a course, and given the same course weight as half an Arts option.

The course is run by over 20 faculty members from various departments and faculties, and is designed, according to Chemical Engineering professor Reg Clark, who is organizing the course, to provide students with "a look at where man is now and how he got there." It also provides students with an opportunity to explore, though fairly quickly, the work and thinking of many disciplines other than their own in an attempt to reveal the nature of man and the environment.

It is similar to other multi-disciplinary courses which have been offered at other universities in that it places its emphasis on the environment, but dissimilar in that it is not really concerned with pollution, at least, not directly. Clark says that he views the environment in a wider contest than just pollution, and includes such things as resource use, industrialization and how man views the environment, including the apparent lack of concern with spoilage of the earth. Clark feels that, if there is a disease here which is wider than just jumping of garbage, then let's look at it, "let's cure the disease and not just apply a balm to the spots."

The breadth of the course is designed to supply this over-all understanding of man and his environment and how the two are related to each other. The course began with lectures on the formation of the universe and the earth, then followed with descriptions of the composition of the earth's surface the role of the oceans in supporting life, the beginnings of life on earth and its delicate relation to the structure of the earth's surface and the atmosphere, the evolution of man, his relation to his environment including his needs for energy and food, the possibilities for new energy sources, and his impact on the environment. The course then looked at the ways a person's childhood environment effects the way he will behave, the ways people form societies, the way these societies function and survive, man's health and the effect of medical technology on man, and finally, how philosophers have viewed man.

This mass of information is presented to the 50 engineering students who are taking the course (and nearly the number of people who are auditing it) in the form of lectures, which are supposed to be more like a Dunning Trust lecture than a regular class lecture. Use of charts, projectors and other lecture aids is encouraged and has been extensively used, and students are relieved of the necessity of note taking, so that they can concentrate on th lectures, since lecture notes are prepared by the lecturers for them.

It is obvious that, with the large amount of information which is being provided in the course on so many subjects, the course is not supposed to merely provide "education." Instead, Clark says, the idea is to create some excitement about what is going on, to get people to think differently, to perhaps get them to read about areas which interest them, and most of all, to get them to know what the limits of their knowledge is. Clark feels that far too many people do not realize the extent to which their knowledge is far too narrow, and they mistakenly, often with dangerous results, think they know much more than they do. Certainly many of the disasters which have resulted from technology are a result of just this kind of mistaken thinking.

It seems that the course has been working, at least in this regard. Several of the students enrolled in the couse indicated to me that they had not realized the types of things that other people are doing in their work, and several of the professors who are giving some of the lectures have indicated that they too have gained a lot from having the opportunity to see what other professors in other deprtments and faculties are doing.

Extensive use has been made of videotape TV equipment in the course. All the lectures are taped so that students can play them back whenever they want, and the fact that the lectures are on tape has been useful to many of the lecturers, since they have been able to watch themselves in action and to pick out some of the faults they never knew they had. The tape also help in the organization of the course, since lecturers are able to go back over the classes that have preceded the ones they are presenting to find out what has been covered before.

Although the course was accepted last spring by the Faculty of Applied Science as a credit course, the Faculty felt that they could not afford to pay for the course because of budget restrictions. In order to get the course off the ground, the Chemical Engineering department has been paying the costs of the course, which consists mainly of the cost of printing up materials, since all the lecturers are volunteers.

Clark had hoped that the Faculty of Arts and Science would have approved of the course as a credit course, especially since there are so many Arts professors involved in it, but this did not happen, at least for this year. Clark said that the faculty seemed to feel that the course was unsuitable for Arts students. They were also apparently unconvinced that such a large amount of material could be crammed into a one-term course, and had some doubts about the possibility of marking such a course.

Clark hopes that, with this experimental year apparently successfully completed, the Arts faculty will accept the course for credit for next year. He also hopes that there will be a second term course ready for next year, which will use the case method to go into greater detail on some of the questions raised in the first term course.

Clark's enthusiasm and the enthusiasm of both the students taking the course and the faculty teaching it seems to indicate that at least the engineers will be able to continue to be exposed to this broadening experience in the future.

Canada's hou

This year, some 220,000 new houses and apartment units will be built in Canada - more than in any other single year. In the 1970s, two and a half million new homes will be constructed, almost as many in ten years as we have built in the past 30. Yet despite these record figures, Canada's housing crisis is getting worse.

In its 1968 inquiry, the federal Task Force on Housing reached one overwhelming conclusion: the vast majortiy of Canadians want their own homes - private, self-contained, ground-level houses with their own entrance and garden. In spite of this, about half the housing built today is for rent. Most of it in high-rise apartment buildings unsuitable for families with children. This leaves less than 100,000 houses a year for those who want to buy a home - about the same number as we were building 15 years ago.

A Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation survey shows that less than 16 percent of all new houses for sale last year were priced under $20,000 (the average was $28,614, a price fewer than seven percent of Canadians could afford). In Toronto less than one percent of new houses for sale in January were under $17,500, and thus within the reach of a family earning the average Canadian income of $7000 a year.

To see what's happened to housing prices, let's look at Peel Village, a progressive community 26 miles from Toronto. When the development opened in 1961, you could buy a 1400-square-foot, three-bedroom house for $16,000 - $1195 down and $98 a month. Income needed to qualify for a six-percent National Housing Act mortgage was $4600 (about a third of Canadians earned this much in 1961).

The last houses in Peel Village were sold early this year. About the only difference was that they had finished basements and double garages. But the price was $36,500, with a down payment of $4250 and monthly payments of $319 on first and second mortgages at 9¾ and 10 percent. Income required: $14,250. Only three percent of Canadians are in this bracket.

The tragedy is that we can build sound, attractive, well-designed houses in pleasant community settings at reasonable prices. Consider these facts:

—More than 7000 single-family houses were built last year, using conventional methods, under the federal government's "Innovative Housing" program. Average price: $13,310 including land.

—Engineered Homes Ltd. of Calgary has started a "cluster housing" project of 270 single-family detached homes selling for $16,000 to $18,000, within range of incomes in the $5500-$7000 bracket.

—The Willow Park Housing Cooperative in Winnipeg has built 268 town-house units with up to four bedrooms. These are available to members for a co-op share ranging from $600-$800, plus $145 a month to cover taxes, maintenance, mortgage, and all utilities except telephone.

Such prices are below the national average. But they don't imply revolutionary new techniques, only some production shortcuts, elimination of expensive frills, smaller floor area, and more efficient use of land. What, then, are the obstacles to economical housing?

To see how land values have affected the cost of housing, let's return to Peel Village.

Developer Charles Watson, president of Peel-Elder Ltd., bought the property - 1100 acres of farm land - in 1959-60 for around $3000 an acre and subdivided it at about $500 a lot. In 1961, a 50-

by-100-foot cent of the 1965, the lot total price worth $13,5
"Nothing large profi
"But it wou less than n
Watson b serviced l reduce the areas they water and division pl
Other su gains tax based on t property, t
the purcha undevelope suggestion
the munici advocated recommen governme acquire, se urban grov
Paul Hel resigned fr
Force's rec argues that land costs municipal developme
The type not so mu chitects, o municipal subdivision
(There a sets of buil because m
the Nationa
Twenty y 900-square a small lot own lawn, asked the sidewalks be paid off the next t carport an Today, houses like often inclu strips, curb lighting an paid for, at from 50 to sideyards placed on t allowances borhood of have roads
To comp codes also homes get is rarely un as high a prohibited basements landscaped constructio Attempts systems a officials. W

ng crisis: We're building more new houses than ever before but most are too expensive for most buyers rth about $4000 or 25 per- ce of the first homes. By l at $7000 - 38 percent of the the same sized lot was developer making such ," says Charles Watson. businessman who sold for e."

prices on the shortage of e municipalities want to l, they should decide what oped, put in trunk sewers, vices,then approve sub- ."

nedies include a capital profits; real-estate taxes the land, rather than on owners to develop; even riation by the Crown of all ut the most persistent residential land costs is bank," an idea strongly ng Task Force. Its report unicipalities or regional ed by federal loans, ell the land required for heir boundaries.

aded the Task Force and binet because the Task ns were largely ignored, m would not only reduce te profiteering, but give r control over their e have today is dictated opers, builders and ar- demand, as by rigid ws, zoning regulations, ge requirements.

thing like 2000 different ons across the country, alities refuse to accept ode.)

oung couple could buy a three-bedroom house on 8000. They put in their built fences. Then they ty to install curbs, ornamental lighting, to provement" taxes over ter they closed in the the basement.

s won't allow small ivision improvements - sidewalks, boulevard nd wiring, ornamental g - must be put in, and nimum lot width varies ndatory setbacks and vhere a house can be piece of property. Road e and a quiet neigh- homes must frequently any city streets.

st, municipal building t only large, expensive m allowable floor area e feet today and can be -bedroom houses are arages and finished d. Lots must be fully - the least expensive es banned outright.

nore efficient building uraged by municipal versal Homes tried to put in a subdivision of its architect-designed factory-built houses in Burlington last year, a council meeting hurriedly passed a bylaw requiring minimum house ceilings of eight feet - just six inches more than the Alcan homes needed to pass under highway bridges to get to the city (and six inches more than the National Building Code requires). Row housing, another practical way to cut land costs, meets with the same deep-rooted prejudice in most Canadian cities - unless it is built for rental.

Municipal officials have one strong economic argument to support their restrictions - the high cost of education. It costs about $600 a year to educate a child, and a new subdivision brings about one-and-a-half school-age children per house. Unless each house yields at least $900 in property taxes, the municipality is going to be in trouble.

Paul Hellyer believes there's a simple answer: pay for education from provincial revenues instead of municipal property taxes. "Government officials all know this is the answer, but nobody is willing to make the move."

The biggest single increase in housing costs lately has been in the cost of borrowing. Last year, conventional mortgage rates passed ten percent, a figure that would have seemed outrageous two or three years ago. At this rate of interest, the average $28,600 house will end up costing its owner $80,000, over a 30-year mortgage!

Short of government subsidies, however, there isn't much we can do about interest rates. Of more concern to the home-building industry is the constant rise and fall in the supply of mortgage money, now largely dependent on the vagaries of government monetary policy and the investment decisions of the big financial institutions.

Few people outside the construction industry realize how large mortgage lenders influence the kind of housing we build. Consider: More housing is built for rent than for sale, because mortgagees prefer to put their money in one large mortgage than in a number of small ones (particularly when they can also demand a share of the ownership of a big rental project). Like municipal tax departments, banks and trust companies prefer large, expensive houses to small, cheap ones, because they are better business risks. They also prefer conservative, traditional house designs and though there is no specific restrictions against the prefabs, most of the big lenders admit they haven't mortgaged any. In short, the mortgage companies, which financed 82 percent of all housing built in the last three years, probably have more control over the kind of housing we build than the federal government. That's like letting finance companies decide the country's fiscal policies.

In the final analysis, however, homeowners themselves must share some of the blame for the housing crisis. Time after time it has been our prejudice, our snobbery, our selfihsness that has stood in the way of low-cost housing.

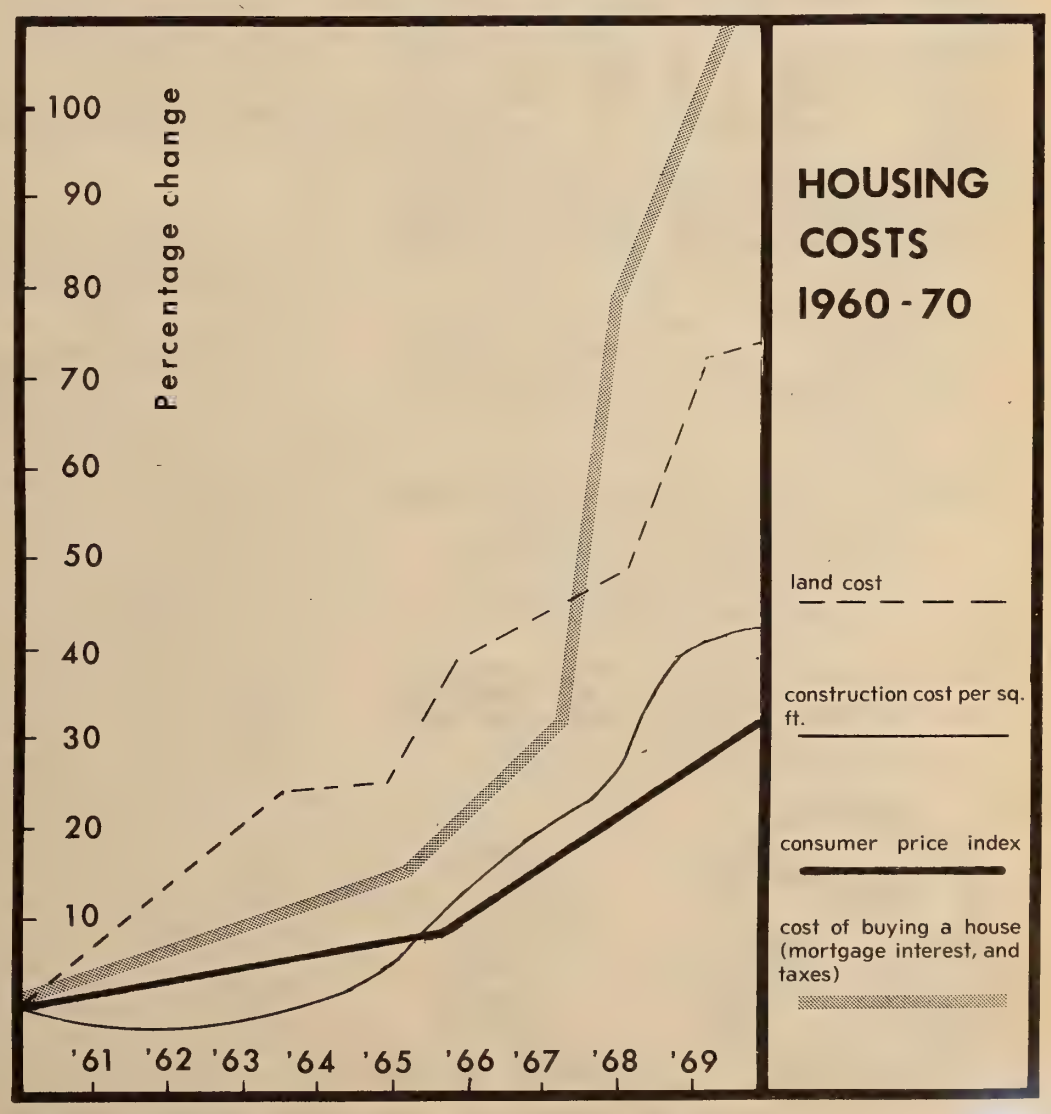
Most homeowners believe that in addition to their small piece of land, they also own a veto on the use of property around them. They are against any new type of housing, and particularly "low-cost" housing.

In spite of these problems, some attempts have been made to beat the housing crisis. One such attempt was the federal government's "innovative housing" programme, but while it helped to break the red tape that had strangled attempts to build low cost housing in many cities, it failed to produce any real innovations. It did pressure some municipalities into accepting changes that had been sought for years, including smaller lots and houses, attached housing, narrower roads, less expensive subdivision requirements.

What was mainly produced, however, was subsidized housing, which is limited to buyers with annual incomes below $6,000, and little was produced in the way of housing for the third of Canadian tax-payers who earn between $6,000 and $11,000, which is too much to qualify for government assistance and too little to afford most of the houses which are being produced today.

One or two cities in Canada are making an effort to meet this growing need and to produce innovative solutions to housing problems, including Saskatoon and Calgary, but it is difficult to find one that is realistically facing up to the fact that it must build as many houses in the next decade as it has built in the past three.

That means planning whole new communities right now, deciding what type of housing is to go where, and limiting construction activity to the type and price of housing that is needed to meet the needs of its citizens. It means starting right now to service those areas that should be developed first.



Many experts think that this is also the best way to stop skyrocketing land costs. These are mainly caused, they say, by erratic development, lack of rigid and specific land-use plans, and long delays in approving and servicing land.

It is apparent that the housing problem will not be solved simply by building more houses. Fewer Canadians can afford a home of their own today than ever before, and it is obvious that we'll have to take some bold and difficult steps to change the present pattern of house buildings.

We're still just building houses - so many boxes on so many tiny squares of land - when we should be building communities. Not new towns or "satellite cities," but urban and suburban developments that include a variety of housing (types, styles, and prices) grouped around landscaped parkways, recreation areas, convenient shopping facilities, schools, and natural activity centres where residents can meet and mix informally on a community level - on foot, and face to face.

Too many people think that low cost housing is just something that must be provided for the underprivileged. But most homeowners would think differently if they were trying to buy for the first time at today's prices. The house they bought even five years ago would be out of their reach by now.

(A combination of two articles by Harris Mitchell, editor of Canadian Homes.)

*a combination of two or more things

Bring anybody out for dinner -- Great food from 2.99 -- every night!

It's Time
to Book Your Party
or dance or stag or excuse for a drunk

The Round Table

We've got rooms from 5 - 1500 and great food and drink.

Call us . . . Now

The Round Table
Fully licenced - 542-7337

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

BACK BY POPULAR DEMAND
WANDERLUST II

SUPER SWEATER BUYS

Ladies' Long Sleeve Pullovers and Shrink Tops
All new fashion colors.
Sizes S.M.L. Canadian made.
VALUES TO 6.95 SPECIAL 2.99
— Second Floor Ladies' Wear —

Men's Long Sleeve Cardigans, Sleeveless Pullovers, Crew Neck Pullovers
Good selection of colors.
Sizes S.M.L.XL.
VALUES TO 9.95 SPECIAL 3.99
— Main Floor Men's Wear —

S&R DISCOUNT DEPARTMENT STORES

OPEN THURSDAY AND FRIDAY UNTIL 9 P.M

nine days

Tuesday, November 23.

7.30 p.m.: Meeting of the Queen's Astronomy Club in Room 319, Ellis Hall. The film "Universe" will be shown. Refreshments will be served after the meeting.

7.30 p.m.: Queen's University Amateur Radio and Electronics Club is holding its regular general meeting in the upstairs lounge of Clark Hall. All welcome.

Wednesday, November 24.

2.00 to 5.00 p.m.: Faculy of Medicine Symposium in the Auditorium of Hotel Dieu Hospital.

3.30 p.m.: Music Department presents an informal recital with commentary by pianist, Mrs. Valery Watts in Dunning Hall Auditorium.

3.00 p.m. - 11.00 p.m.: Birth Control and abortion information and referral at 165 University Avenue.

4.30 Biology seminar, Earl Hall, Room 11.

7.30 p.m.: Graduate Student Duplicate Bridge Club at Graduate House (157 King St. E.)

8.00 p.m.: "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme", presented in the Grand Theatre For further information contact Prof. Gobin. French Dept.

Thursday, November 25.

2.30 p.m.: Law Society presents a lecture by Flora Macdonald on "Politics and Law" in Theatre C, Macdonald Hall.

3.00 p.m. - 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral on 165 University Avenue.

4.30 p.m.: Lecture by Professor Karl Helleiner on "The Economic Consequences of Napoleon" in John Watson Hall room 517.

7.00 p.m.: The Bridge Club meets in the McLaughlin Room of the Union.

7.00 & 9.30 p.m.: Dunning Flick "Paint Your Wagon".

7.00 p.m. to 9.30 p.m.: Queen's University Department of Pharmacology presents Dr. D. W. Schneck from the Dept. of Medicine at the University of Iowa Hospitals, who will speak on "The Correlation of Serum Levels of Practolol With Its Beta Blocking Properties in Normal Men" in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

8.00 p.m.: Panel debate on the AMS court and constable system - its powers and functions in the McLaughlin Room of the Students Union.

Friday, November 26

4.30 - 5.30, 8.30 - 9.30 p.m.: Recreational Swims cancelled.

Saturday, November 27.

8.30 - 9.30 p.m.: Recreational Swim cancelled.

8.30 p.m.: The New York Harp Ensemble and the Vaghy Quartet will present a concert, a preview of the two ensembles' presentation at Carnegie Hall in Grant Hall.

Sunday, November 28.

10.30 a.m.: Folk Mass at Dunning Hall Auditorium. Coffee and doughnuts afterwards.

7.00 p.m.: Folk Mass at Newman House.

Monday, November 29.

8.30 p.m.: The division of concerts presents Robert de Gaetano in Grant Hall.

3.00 - 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral clinic at 165 University Avenue.

7.00 p.m.: The French Club meeting in the 3rd floor common room of the union.

Tuesday, November 30.

3.00 p.m. - 11.00 p.m.: The birth control and abortion information and referral clinic at 165 University Avenue.

7.30 p.m.: The Queen's Drama Department present Chronicles II in the Studio Theatre.

Wednesday, December 1.

3.00 - 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral clinic at 165 University Avenue.

12.00 p.m. - 5 p.m.: The faculty of medicine symposium for allied health professionals in the School of Nursing auditorium.

3.30 p.m The music department will be presenting a lecture on "The Evolution of a Composer" in Dunning Hall.

7.30 p.m.: Chronicles II in the studio theatre.

Theatres	Bars
Capitol - Carnal Knowledge	Commodore - Ricky Francis and the Golden Sounds
Hyland - Starting Wednesday: Summer of '42.	Pub - The Rembrant
Odeon - See No Evil	Shamrock - The Coachman

Deller - A Great Musician

By Ian Findlay

British counter-tenor Alfred Deller appeared in recital on Friday night at Dunning Hall, accompanied by Dr. R.F.C. Clarke on the harpsichord. Deller's reputation as a master in his field is well known, and he easily met the high expectations of his audience. Two extra features of the performance were the artist's own introductions to each set of pieces he sang, as well as his preface of the entire concert by some enlightening remarks on the place of the counter-tenor voice in music history.

The program opened with a set of five Elizabethan songs. This music's deceptively fragile character may seem strange at first hearing to people accustomed to the 18th and 19th century vocal repertoire; but once the listener becomes used to the melodic range and dynamic scale inherent in the style, he discovers that there are limitless possibilities for rich musical and emotional expression. Deller was able to explore these possibilities thoroughly, by means of his unique purity of sound and by phrasing that felt both spontaneous and carefully thought out.

The first half of the recital was concluded by three arias of Monteverdi, the most memorable of which was "Currite populi", remarkable for its coloratura-like technical virtuosity. Deller captured the mood of each aria in this group perfectly, and demonstrated the same sentivity and delicacy of phrasing as in the Elizabethan songs.

After the intermission were a short cantata by Bassani and two arias by Handel, the second of which, "Dove sei" from "Rodelinda", was an obvious highlight of the concert. The audience responded enthusiastically, and the response grew even more enthusiastic during the remainder of the concert, probably because of the less esoteric nature of the music offered. C.P.E. Bach's Wuttenburg Sonata No. 1 in A minor came next, giving an occasion to hear Dr. F.R.C. Clarke in a solo role. Dr. Clarke, whose accompaniment of the songs had been excellent, performed with effortless precision, and managed to generate a good deal of musical excitement, especially in the last movement.

Deller returned to conclude the recital with four songs by Purcell. The most striking of these were the final two, "O lead me to some peaceful gloom" and "Music for a while", in which the artist revealed once again both the purity and youthful quality of his counter-tenor voice, and his impeccable musicianship. In particular, Deller's continual achievement of almost imperceptible pianissimos throughout the evening demonstrated a dynamic control many concert artists would envy.

The audience applauded extremely warmly at the conclusion, bringing Deller out for another Purcell song as an encore. It was a privilege to hear this great musician, and Queen's should hope for his return in the near future.

Jean Genet and Me:
A Political Encounter of The Balcony

By Ivan Pereira

I saw Jean Genet's The Balcony for the first time three years ago. The Russians had that week so bloody-mindedly invaded Czechoslovakia and one interpreted the play as Jean Genet's Thermidor.

It seemed to me at the time that Genet had asked two very fundamental questions: Revolution for what? And Is the nature of revolutionary ethos such that it is always prey and easy victim to Thermidor? (See Crane Brinton's classic study, The Anatomy of Revolution, particularly chapter 8. 1965.). Bishops, Judges and Generals all over again, with pawns (i.e., Genet, the Czechoslovaks and us ordinary folk) still struggling for a breath of fresh air at the barricades! Surely, the last 2000 years, as Genet seemed to suggest, could not have been a source of optimism. The same roles kept surfacing time and again. Genet the rebel was tired and he had decided early in the play that those two questions were not going to bug and bother him like an eternal worm in the brain. This was undoubtedly Thermidor.

Jean Genet, I learnt a few months later, was that very week "bearing witness" at the 1968 Democratic Convention in Chicago. He floated out of the Chicago Hilton, perched his slight frame on a Coca Cola crate, and whispered ever so gently to the students at the barricades that he had come because he could not accept the fact that Vietnamese women and children were being swatted like flies in a battle-for-minds that they could not comprehend.

Last week, aware that Genet was a far more subtle playwright than he is given credit for, I decided to go and see the Drama Department's production of The Balcony. There was something very wrong with the audience. Genet did intend (he has said so himself) the characters to be "larger than life" and the heavy-heeled boots are suggestive. But there ought to have also been an all-pervading tension on that stage. Those characters ought to have been played as rats in a maze-trap desperately seeking escape and privacy. At the same time, there ought to have been an air of unreality about the way they went about their business. Instead, the cast seemed smug, sometimes even cynical, about almost every important piece of the action.

With all due respect (I am only an amateur drama enthusiast), the interpretation was a complacent one. One is always "gypped" when Preachers who have not been there attempt passion when expounding the Word among those who are true believers by circumstance, rather than by violent convulsion. In such situations, there is neither confrontation nor encounter. And there must be either the one or the other if Theatre is to be more than self-serving vaudeville.

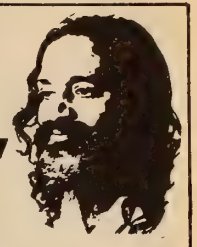
If Genet were in the front row, one is convinced that he would have been outraged. He would have got onto the stage and stopped the play; he would have pleaded for one hour, ten days, to work at it again. One recalls the incident in April, 1957, when he protested Zadek's distortion of his play as a satire on British Monarchy.

So much for Convocation Hall. One needs to go back to Genet, one needs to go back to The Balcony, and beyond it if necessary. One cannot allow Iram, with a mixture of mocking and bittersweet irony, to usher us out with: "You must now go home, where everything - you may be sure - will be even falser than here". Irma has her weaknesses, her jewels and her grand illusion, but Genet made her too shrewd and intelligent a woman to be cocksure about what she is saying. She could not possibly have said that line with relish. Indeed, there ought to have been a certain loneliness, an element of the tragic, even bitterness, showing through her proud bearing.

But there is a larger issue involved and this is where Genet deserts us. If home be "falser than here" (and perhaps it is), home can also be more brutal. The real question is: What does one do with home? When half this planet is starving to death, when seven million Vengalis are in refugee camps, when bombs rain on Vietnamese women and children night and day, ARE we seriously being told that Iram's House of Illusions is the answer? The ultimate joke, of course is that it took a homosexual to write about (if you will pardon the expression) sell-out to "pussy".

No. Genet is quite clearly writing from the barricades and the play only makes sense when viewed from that vantage-point. This play belongs to the politically disillusioned. Genet himself has said: "My starting point was Spain, Franco Spain; and the revolutionary who castrated himself was a symbol of all Republicans who have acknowledged their defeat. From that point onward, however, my play went one way, while Spain went another". (emphasis added).

One has to view the play in the context of European intellectuals (particularly French intellectuals) in the 1930s who rallied to the Loyalist (Republican) cause and in the context of the horror with which these same intellectuals discovered the Soviet concentration camps (Sartre's "Reply to Camus" is revealing in this regard See Satre, Situations.). Frederick R. Benson, in Writers in Arms, wrote that "never before during this century had writers been so completely involved in a historical event (Spanish Civil War) about which they felt moved to express themselves". "The Last Great Cause" (as Stanley Weintraub titled his book about it) fizzled out. It got subsumed into a wider cause, that against Hitler.



It is significant that Genet identifies the starting point of his play with the defeat of the Loyalists, with a symbolic act that takes place very near the play's end. Indeed, the real play does start near the very end. Regis Debray, writing a serious political tract about possibilities of revolution in Latin America argues: "History advances in disguise: it appears on stage wearing the mask of the preceeding scene, and we tend to lose meaning of the play" (Debray, Revolution in the Revolution? 1967. pp.19). Compare that with Roger's remark in The Balcony: "The fight is no longer taking place in reality...It's a combat of allegories. None of us know any longer why we revolted".

Starting from the castration scene (a gesture of great political significance) and moving backwards, the actual success or failure of the revolution takes on a minor significance (remember: "my play went one way, while Spain went another"). Yes, the play transcends the success or failure of an historical revolution. Genet addresses himself to a much more fundamental problem: Are the contradictions within the revolutionary experience (clearly evident in conversations between Roger and Chantel) and the nature of the struggle itself (tragically, there are roles and symbols in the old regime that, ultimately, the new regime cannot do without if it is to relate to the masses) such that even should the revolution succeed, it will not succeed?

Genet exposes the problem and he does it well. He has given us Chantel (obvious reference to La Passionara in the Spanish Civil War) who is the "soul and voice" of the insurrection but, significantly, does not know how to tie bandages. Similarly, the New Left has thrust forward Daniel Cohn-Bendit, Rudi Dutschke, Mario Savio and others. Great impressarios, and indispensible too, but very little knowledge about economics and administration. Revolutionary ethos, efficient administration and the very real needs of the masses all militate against each other. If the revolution succeeds, then the Chantels, the Dutschkes, the Cohn-Bendits and the Savios will either make a mess of things or they will merely be the public relations officers for Bureaucrats and Generals, the real power-wielders behind the scenes. In either case, revolutionary ethos is sacrificed: to chaos in the one instance and to organization and discipline in the other. In the Police Chief, Genet discovered a new power-wielder in modern society. Roger, in castrating himself, political power. (Incidentally, one might compare this to Genet's own prison experience: he frees himself from the clutches of the prison Guards and the prison walls by resorting to Imagination, Masturbation and Homosexuality. See Genet's Our Lady of the Flowers and Sartre's Introduction to it).

If The Balcony fails (and it does) it is because Genet, a devout pessimist, does not have it in him to offer us an answer. The existential content of his past history severely limits him to deep concern for personal emancipation and he declines to seek the political kingdom (this is one reason why Sartre could so perceptively paint him as a Martyr). If both reactionary and revolutionary (and, of course, the masses) are slave to sexual illusion (another central theme in the play, one that I have not discussed), then indeed the political kingdom is unattainable.

SIMS Queen's Presents

"CBC Telescope Film"

"Maharishi at Lake Louise"

This beautiful colour film telescopes in on Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, the world exponent of Transcental Meditation, A film well worth seeing! Coffee and discussion.

Wednesday Nov. 24 8:00 pm
Stirling Hall, Theatre C
Everyone Welcome Adm. Free

Monday thru Saturday
noon 'til 1 p.m.
its . . .

The Round Table

Mr. BOJANGLES ROOM a discotheque

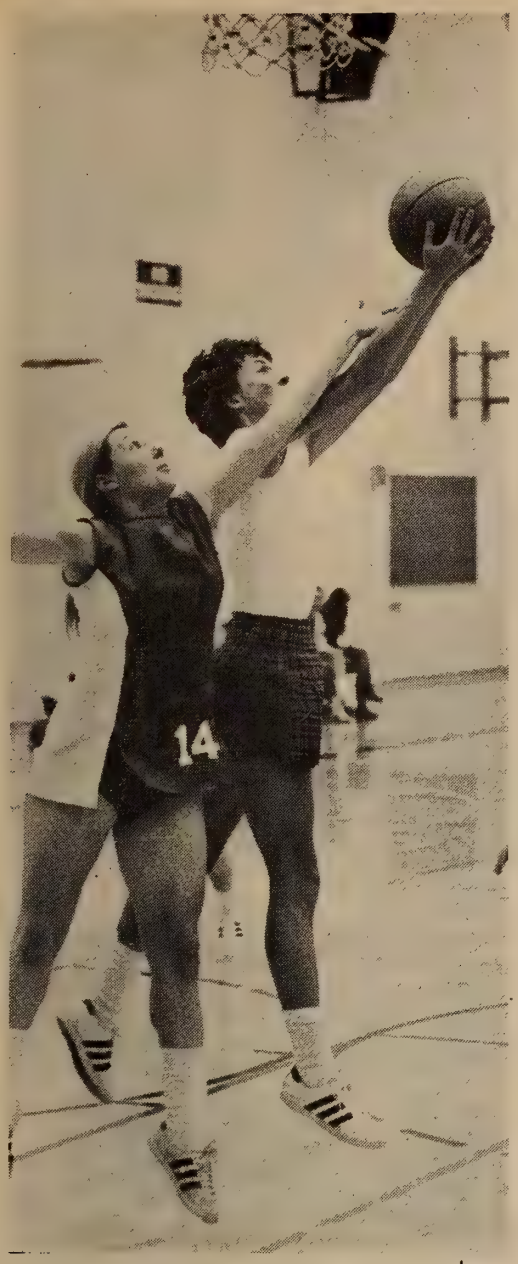
Get in on a DIFFERENT Atmosphere!! Dance to the latest in top sounds!! A new image -- a lively spot -- Come to see Bojangles -- You'll like it!! AT

The Round Table

Fully Licenced
Home of the Sunday Roast
Beef Buffet -- 542-7337

Bring anybody out for dinner -- great food from 2.99 -- every night.

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.



La Breche de Roland 1961
Francoise Andre
1926-Canadian (Vancouver)
oil and gold leaf on canvas
52"x34"

Moonrise, October
Mary Hiester Reid
1854-1921
Canadian (Toronto)
oil on canvas
22"x33"

from the permanent collection,
Agnes Etherington

-boon

Sue Higgins gets hacked vs. York

B-Ball Gals Win, Lose

Queen's basketball gals split a pair of weekend contests with York and U. of T., dumping York 56-34 Friday night before losing a squeaker 48-45 to a taller Varsity contingent. Loney Marshall hooped 18 points against York and added another 9 in the Toronto game. Karen Carson had 10 points against York, while centre Sue Higgins scored 10 in the Varsity contest.

The York game showed what the Gael Gals can do if they put their collective minds to it. Playing a tight zone defense that harassed the York girls into many turnovers, Queen's simply ran away from their opponents. Forwards Heather Dean and Karen Carson completely dominated the taller York centre on the boards, especially in the Queen's end, while Loney Marshall put on a shooting display that had some people shaking their heads (notably the York coach.).

The biggest factor in the victory was hustle. Coach Breda Mackie predicted that her charges would play that way, and they did. The Gaels pressed and ran a fair fast break throughout the game, while managing to get back on defense. The only problem may have been the fact that York was awful and U. of T. was not. The girls adjusted, but not quite soon enough, and lost a heartbreaker as a result.

Women's Gymnastics Win

The Women's Gymnastics Team competed against strong teams from U. of Ottawa and U. of Toronto in Ottawa and emerged victorious. Queen's earned 136 points, with U. of T. coming second with 104. Led by Viv Symington who won in floor, beam, and vaulting and placed second in bars; Queen's won the Intermediate Division, pacing them to their win. Only 8 of the 13 team members were able to attend the invitational meet, an indication of the strength of the team. Also placing for Queen's at the intermediate level were Anne Gardner, with a third, and Chris Goodbrand, 2 thirds; with Sue Roberts doing well but not placing. Beth Gilbert counted 2 thirds for the juniors, with Peggy Hutchison adding a second and Lee Anne Hoar showing well. It would seem that the gymnastics girls will do well this season.

For Your Information

Western Mustangs squeaked out a come-from-behind victory over the University of Alberta Golden Bears to capture the 1971 CIAU football championship. Paul Knill kicked a field goal with less than a minute to go to beat the Bears 15-14.

Laney Marshall - 18 points.

P.H.E.S.A. SEMINAR

University Sports - the Road to the Olympics?

by DAVE CAMERON

On Thursday night a P.H.E.S.A. Symosium was held concerning "The Role of Intercollegiate Athletics in Higher Education". At least, I think that was what it concerned. Towards the end it broke down into a discussion of the Olympic Games, the BS&T Concert, and Patrick Riley's likes and dislikes.

The main speaker was Mr. John Hudson, coach of Canada's National track team. His main argument was his contention that the university provide the training ground for Canada's prospective Olympic competitors. Mr. Hudson equates athletes with engineers, lawyers, and other specialized fields in that they should receive scholarships on the same level as these other fields. Jon Tondeur, Chairman of the University Council of Athletics, disagreed, maintaining that athletic scholarships would serve to distort the values of the university in the adopting of the "specialist" approach to sports. Somehow, however, Hudson came off sounding more convincing. One would imagine that he spends a good deal of time defending his more radical approach.

Bob Wright, former Simon Fraser and Queen's basketball star, expanded on the use of scholarships, pointing out the differences between the practice at Simon Fraser of giving legitimate athletic scholarships and the methods at Queen's of giving scholarships under the table (i.e. Jim Young). The school does not officially acknowledge them, but that does not make them nonexistent. It seems a bit foolish (not to mention hypocritical), particularly if you agree with Hudson, that it does not admit the use of scholarships. They can be a worthwhile motivation to an athlete, just as to a potential lawyer, to continue in his chosen field.

Wright also admitted the basic quality of all good athletes, that they were all egomaniacs at heart (yes, even the legendary Bobby's - Orr and Hull). It's refreshing to hear someone admit that athletes are human too.

The Symposium also had a "reaction" panel, whose job it was to question the stars. The panel, made up of Donna Gallagher, Geoff Smith, and the "famous" AMS President Patrick Riley, brought out the differing interests of intercollegiate and intramural sports. Hudson, on the other hand, contended that the intercollegiate holds up the other parts, as it provides a goal for the less proficient athletes. I imagine many of us have sat watching the football Gaels, and mentally sighed, 'If I was just a little faster(bigger, younger,...)'. Again Hudson seemed to make sense.

The last point made (Patrick Riley's irrelevant comments on Montreal, the Olympics, and the housing problem notwithstanding) was the development of intercollegiate sports into a business, like our American counterparts. It was pretty well unanimous that this does not have to happen.

the third eye cometh

Laurentian downs Gaels 7-5

by Ron Pratt

A defensive lapse in the final minutes of the third period cost the hockey Gaels their third straight victory in the young OUAA season. The Laurentian Voyageurs notched two unanswered goals in the last three minutes to dump the Gaels 7-5 here Saturday afternoon. The two teams had been tied 4-all going into the final twenty minutes of play.

The Gaels jumped out to a two-goal lead early in the first period on power-play goals by Colin Loudin and Bruce Cameron, but the Voyageurs fought back gamely and tied the score as Rick Morris and Ken Richardson potted markers. Morris Mott put the Gaels back in front 3-2 on a hard wrist shot that fooled Neil Cryderman in the Laurentian nets.

Mott's goal was set up on an end-to-end rush by defenseman Mike Lynch. The lead lasted only forty seconds, until Frank Hamill tallied his first goal of the game to knot the score 3-3. There was no further scoring in the period.

Laurentian took the lead for the first time early in the second period. Hamill put a blistering slapshot behind Clyde Harris for his second goal of the night. The Gaels fought back, pressing the Voyageurs until Murray Douglas slipped a power-play goal behind Cryderman to send the teams to the dressing rooms with a 4-all tie.

The final twenty minutes saw Laurentian grab a 5-4 lead on a powerplay goal by Ed Taylor at 3:57. Queen's centreman Norm Goulet was in the penalty box on a high-sticking call prompted by some fine acting on the part of a Voyageur forward.

The score remained unchanged until winger John Smith backhanded the puck into the net to tie the game 5-5. Smith was on his knees in front of the Laurentian goal when he got the puck, but made no mistake on the shot.

The goal came after the Gaels had put great pressure on Cryderman for several minutes; the Sudbury netminder stopped eight shots on the same shift before being beaten by Smith.

The Gaels missed a great chance to go ahead when Goulet and Dave Nuttal combined on a two-on-one rush only to have Goulet's shot miss the open corner by inches. After that, the Gaels' defense sagged, and began backing into their own end rather than trying to force the play at the blueline.

Clyde Harris was helpless as Richardson scored twice, the first at 17:49 and the second (his third of the night) at 19:42, while the Gaels were trying to get an extra attacker on the ice.

Individually, Colin Loudin led the Gaels with a goal and three assists, while Laurentian's Hamill had five points on two goals and three assists. Gaels' coach Bob Carnegie was not disheatened by the loss, but expressed concern with the team's inability to hold a lead, and their difficulty in clearing loose pucks out of their own end.

The Gaels certainly appeared flat in comparison to their efforts of a week ago. The passing was often inaccurate and sluggish, while their shooting was very erratic. The defense had problems moving both the puck and opposing forwards away from the net, while goalie Clyde Harris did not have one of his better games.

The happy point is that the Gaels were never out of the contest even with these difficulties. The Gaels' next league game comes tonight against Ottawa U. in Ottawa. This is a key game for Queen's who need the win to keep pace with Laurentian in the battle for first place.

-kirkpatrick

Murray Douglas (15), Bruce Cameron (7), crowd Laur'n goalie.

-marien

Men's Volleyball in first

The men's Volleyball Gaels moved into first place Saturday, downing Ottawa U. 3-1 and Carleton 3-0 in a round-robin meet at Carleton. The Gaels' next league competition will be at York next Saturday, when all seven teams in the OUAA East will meet in tournament action.

Volleyball

Intermediate Gals still undefeated

Queen's Women's Intermediate Volleyball team defeated Ryerson this weekend in the three games straight. The opposition had played several matches prior to Saturday and seemed quite confident in their ability to win. Queen's came from behind with a score of 13-7 to win the first game 15-13. Their main problems of positioning and setting for the spike soon improved for their second and third games which resulted in scores of 15-6 and 15-9. Hard serves by Debi Hay and Gylda Fry were beneficial to the team's success.

Next weekend the girls play in Toronto in the final tournament of the season and hope to repeat their success of the previous year by keeping Queen's on top...

Hockey Gals tie McGill

Another early-morning rise, saw the Queen's Golden Gals off to McGill Saturday. The entire game exhibited hard, fast hockey action with few shoots on goal by either team, the final score 2-2.

Early in the first period Ginny Backus, assisted by Gwen Harrison, put Queen's on the scoreboard. Both teams were skating well but shots on goal were weak and often deflected off of people in front of the nets. The action moved rapidly from end to end, but no more scoring was evident until the end of the period when Debbie Mullins scored for McGill.

Queen's controlled the play during the second period, but registered only one goal which was on a power play. This was scored by Gwen Harrison with assistance from Ginny Backus and Cathy Collins.

Play in the third period followed the pattern set in the first. The Golden Gaels held off the persistent Redmen until the final minute of play. Debra McCaw received a penalty for hooking. McGill took advantage and tied up the score in the final minute, on a goal by Lee Tibmarsh.

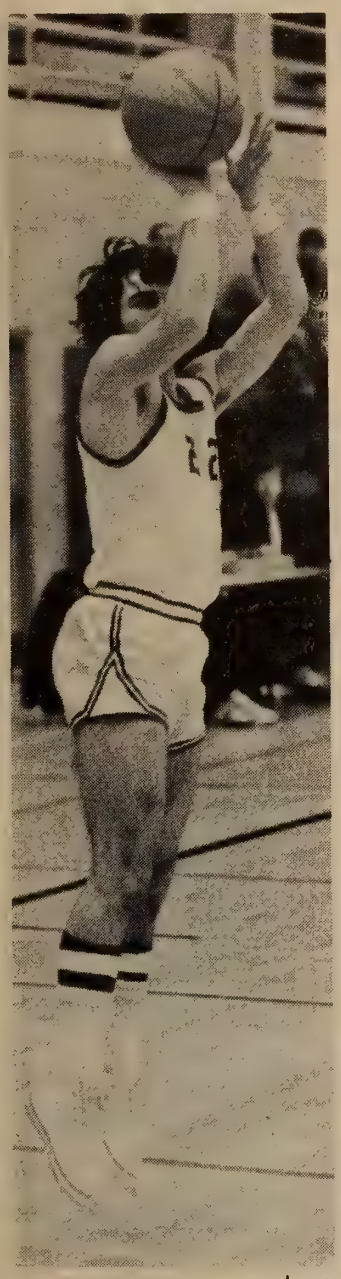
Queen's is thus far undefeated and could continue this streak in their up and coming games this weekend.

Queen's also met Trent U. in an exhibition game Thursday night, coming out the victors 5-0. Scoring was opened by Marg Mutch, skating the full length of the ice for an unassisted goal. Also contributing in the first period were Helen Walko, from Cathy Collins; and Ginny Backus, from Geri Morris. Both sides were held scoreless in the second period. The scoring resumed in the third period with Gwen Harrison counting unassisted. Helen Walko ended off the period, with assists going to Cathy Collins and Karen Howatson. Goal-tender, Cathy Wright was credited with the shut-out.

Trent has improved markedly from last year, especially in passing, however, Queen's did not play as well as they have exhibited that they can play in their other games.

Aqua Gals beat McGill

The Women's Swim Team competed in a dual meet in Montreal this past Saturday. McGill was defeated overall by a 313-258 margin. This was a warm-up invitational meet to get the girls used to competition before their meet next weekend at McMaster which will feature teams from a number of U.S. colleges.



Fifteen competitors represented Queen's at McGill, evidence that Queen's is finally building a team with enough depth to support the placings which it has been getting in the past. This will give Queen's a better chance as a team rather than just having a couple of good individuals. This meet was not seen as indicative of the potential of the team as McGill is not known as having a strong Swim team, however the experience of competition, along with the larger team, should have a good effect on Queen's placing in Intercollegiate competition.

Whereare the fencing results, Jon?

B-Ball Gaels split weekend series

The basketball Gaels opened the new OUAA season with a two-game road trip against York and Ryerson, and managed to escape with a split decision. The Gaels were bombed 74-46 Friday night by a large and remarkably mobile Yeomen contingent, but came back to beat the Rams 64-59.

-boon

Peter Gordon-22 points

Andy Daugulis continued to lead Queen's with 18 and 20 points respectively. Peter Gordon hooped 22 against Ryerson, the first time he has broken 20 in varsity play. Centreman Paul Howard had foul problems in both games, leaving the York contest late in the third period and the Ryerson game midway through the fourth.

The York contest has to be classified as an unqualified disaster. The whole team was lethargic on defense and indifferent on offense, taking too few shots and too many bad ones; in spite of the fact he collected 18 points, Daugulis took bad shots, trying to drive against a York defense that collapsed to clog up the middle.

The half-time score was 30-16, and the Gaels were lucky it was that close, since York was also playing badly. After Howard got into foul difficulties, York was able to dominate the boards at both ends of the court, and it was just a matter of how many, not whether. The Gaels took only 47 shots, and had huge quantities of turnovers. About the only bright spots in the game were the play of Ian Rawes, who was about the steadiest of the forwards, and the amazing hustle that guard Joe Davidson displayed late in the game.

Davidson was the only Gael that could have been accused of this, however. To quote an anonymous but reliable source, "I knew they weren't great, but there's no way they're that bad." Fortunately, the Gaels agreed, and decided to play basketball against Ryerson.

The Rams were a very different opponent from the tall York squad. With their tallest starter a mere 6' 3", Ryerson had to run and press to have a chance. The Gaels never gave it to them.

With Daugulis and Peter Gordon hitting from outside, and Howard and Rob Smart dominating the boards, the Gaels ran out to an early 13 point lead, increased it to as much as 18 in the third quarter, then held on as Ryerson began to hit from outside, after Howard and Smart had gotten into foul trouble.

-boon

Howard (42), Rob Smart (25) take rebound vs Ryerson

Queen's played a good, tough man-to-man defense, staying right on the nose of the Ryerson players, and just as importantly, they played as a team, thinking before they executed. This difference was quite enough to cancel out the flaws so visible against York.

The Gaels had several other bright spots against Ryerson. Guard Dave Smith played well, especially on defense, and Rawes continued to impress. If the Gaels can continue to play as a team, and if they remain willing to take the shots given to them, rather than trying to force the ball in close, then things could be interesting. If not, it will be a long season.

Swimmers drown Mac, Ryerson

The Gaels swimmers and divers won by a large margin in a double-dual meet at McMaster University on Saturday. Queen's defeated McMaster 68 to 45 and swamped Ryerson 90 to 18.

It was the first test for the Gaels this season and all the competitors performed admirably.

Notable standouts were divers Kirkpatrick and McEachern placing first and second against Ryerson and second and third against McMaster on the 1 and 3 metre boards.

Queen's swimmers took first in all but 1 of 11 events against Ryerson, while against McMaster, Lucas, McGlocklin, Herman, and Carson took the medley relay, and McGlocklin, Lucas, Herman, and Harkness won the freestyle relay.

J. Mackie and B. Ogilvie took second and third in the 1000 yard freestyle, and team captain, Rob Carson, swam second in the 200 yard freestyle, as well as the 200 yard butterfly. Brian Harkness took second in the 50 yard freestyle and the 200 yard backstroke.

Glenn McGlocklin handily won the 200 yard individual medley while Eric Cunningham added points with a third in this event.

Veterans Rob Herman, in the 100 yard freestyle, and Paul Lucas in the 200 yard backstroke, gave Queen's 2 more firsts against McMaster.

New swimmers John Ker and Jack Muir counted for second and third in the 500 yard freestyle, while brothers Doug and Jamie Noakes added the finishing touch to the individual swimming events with a first and second in the 200 yard breast stroke.

The double win was a team effort, and a good way to start the 1971-72 season especially with the O.U.A.A. relays meet, Saturday, November 27, when Queen's hosts 10 universities including the Canadian Universities' champions, the University of Toronto Blues. If the Gaels work together on the relays as well as they did this past weekend, they should swim very well.

-boag

Gymnasts dominate U.S. meet

Queen's gymnasts dominated five of six events to sweep a team victory in the University of Plattsburg Invitational Meet last Saturday. The host school finished second and the University of Vermont third.

Gaels' captain Jamie Archibald started the rout by winning the floor exercise competition with a smooth performance. Archibald sacrificed his spectacular fulltwisting back-layout sommersault in favour of a less-colorful but steadier routine. Drew Strickland took second in the floor exercises.

Dave Ross paced the Gaels through vaulting and the pommel horse, taking first and second respectively, with Tim Wasiliniuk placing in a tie for third in vaulting with teammate Strickland.

Wasiliniuk also edged out Garth Drozin of Plattsburgh on the rings, mostly on the strength of a double-sommersault dismount, and managed another first on high bar, despite a slight fever. Wasiliniuk, an Education student, is expected to have his full highbar routine ready for Ottawa U next weekend.

The real star of the day was Drew Strickland, who added a first-place finish in the parallel bars to his earlier work and captured the all-around Individual Championship. Wasiliniuk and Ross finished second and third in this competition.

Another pleasant surprise for coach Barry Brooker was the performance of Delio Tortosa, who put in an outstanding effort to take second in high bar. The Gaels will be in Ottawa next weekend for an important meet with Ottawa U and Carleton. Ottawa is the defending Eastern Division champion, and the main competition for Queen's. Watch for further developments.

Volleyball Gals drop two in T.O.

The Volleyball girls travelled away this past weekend to face York and U. of Toronto. Although the scores were close, losing 15-11 in each of the three games, the Friday night game against York was not well played by the Queen's girls.

Saturday, against U. of T. the Queen's team played a much better game but still came out on the bottom, bowing to the superior Toronto team three games straight but exhibiting a stronger game, especially in the end.

It is evident that the potential is there and should develop in future matches.

BACK PAGE

CANADA

OTTAWA - A billion-dollar natural gas sale to the United States was rejected Friday by the National Energy Board, casting fresh ammunition into the current debate about Canadian-American relations.

For the first time since large gas sales to the U.S. began in 1962, the regulatory board wholly denied applications from three companies that would have expanded exports by 2.66 trillion cubic feet over 15 to 20 years.

Canada's reserves are not adequate at this time for such a sale, the board said in a decision that cannot be reversed by the cabinet.

The federal government could have intervened before the decision was made - as it did in 1967 to alter conditions affecting construction of a pipeline through the U.S. for export and supply to Ontario.

A certain dissident was Alberta, prime source of the natural gas. It has been the big beneficiary of federal policy imposed in late 1961 - the so-called national oil policy - which concentrated on sales to the U.S. of oil and natural gas.

That meant that many consumers - Ontario gasoline buyers for example - have paid higher prices for gasoline than they might have.

The new decision increases the strain on Canada-U.S. economic relations already disrupted by U.S. trade restrictions and proposed measures to make U.S. exports more competitive.

OTTAWA - The four men who quit the special Senate committee on poverty last spring, saying it was censoring the facts, have produced an 80,000-word report of their own entitled The Real Poverty Report.

M.G. Hurtig Ltd. of Edmonton, the publisher, says the maverick report "describes in detail how Canada's establishment - monopolies, corporations, politicians and bureaucrats - create and sustain poverty in Canada."

The Real Poverty Report, like the special Senate committee report published Nov. 10, says a guaranteed annual income is vital to overcoming poverty. However, agreement ends there.

It proposes a plan that would cost about 12.4 percent of the gross national product, or $11.8 billion in 1971.

"That sounds astronomical," The Real Poverty Report admits.

But pointing to Canada's 4.5 million poor, it adds:

"The costs are high, simply because a guaranteed annual income, at any reasonable level, is extremely expensive when unemployment is high, when there is no adequate social insurance, and when the economy is victimizing a lot of people.

"If other structural measures were introduced, the guaranteed annual income would not be needed by as many people, and costs would fall drastically."

TORONTO - The Ontarion Medical Association says that some Ontario doctors should be re-examined on their medical competence.

In a brief presented Thursday to a provincial inquiry into hospital privileges, the OMA recommends that a re-examination programme be undertaken by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and that it start with requests from the medical advisory committees of hospials. At the same time, the associaton wants research into clinical practice to determine accurate indicators of decreasing medical competence.

QUEBEC - The reaction of doctors' and lawyers' groups to Quebec's proposed code of the professions was generally favorable Friday, but doctors objected to the Government naming the chairman of their disciplinary board.

The bill is a 248-article volume which makes some important changes to the way the professions will operate. For the rest, it is a centralization of the rules of 34 professions previous by governed by scattered, but similar, laws.

The important changes:

—An Interprofessional Council that already exists will be made a legal entity, to counsel the Government on the running of the professions.

—A governmental Quebec Professions Board will be created to oversee the ethics, finances, bill-collecting procedures and indemnity provisions of the corporations. Its three members will be named by the Government in consultation with the interprofessional council.

—Discipline in each profession will be regulated by a three-man board, profession named by their corporation and a government-named lawyer. There will be an appeal to a panel of three Superior Court judges.

TORONTO - In a 59-58 vote students at the University of Toronto Friday won the right to continue fighting for an equal vote with their teachers on decision-making committees.

The vote allowed a subcommittee of five students and five professors to bring in a report in three weeks on the governing of the Arts and Sciences Faculty. This faculty has about 13,000 of the U of T.'s 34,000 students.

The vote was held under the threat that the 52 student members would withdraw from the 206-member faculty council if they lost the vote.

WINNIPEG - University of Manitoba students have withdrawn from the university's two highest governing bodies.

The students' union (UMSU) council voted 15 to 2 not to participate on the 96-member senate and the 23-member board of governors until all student proposals have been implemented.

UMSU will concentrate its efforts on influencing university committees that report to senate and the board of governors. Students have representatives on all university committees.

QUEBEC- Premier Bourassa's personal intervention has renewed hope that the bitter La Presse conflict may soon be over.

After a two-hour meeting with the premier Friday, management and union representatives agreed to resume negotiations which broke down more than four months ago.

TORONTO - Two federal mediators appointed in an attempt to resolve Bell Canada's dispute with its 8,000 woman telephone operators face a tricky task.

The operators picture themselves as engaged in a struggle not only for better wages and working conditions, but against male management exploitation.

"We are up against a ruthless, male-dominated and male-oriented management," Mary Lennox, president of the Traffic Employees Association, said Friday.

"Bell has no respect for its female employees. And, for our part, we are good and sick of them. The women in the union just won't take it any more."

For the first time in its 26-year history, the association conducted a strike vote and has voted 96 per cent in favor of a walkout across Ontario and Quebec.

A few hours before a strike would have become legal on Wednesday, Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey sent telegrams to both sides saying he has appointed Roland Doucet, chief conciliation officer in Montreal, and his assistant, Ted Payne, as mediators.

THE WORLD

TUNIS - President Habib Bourguiba said Wednesday a federation between Israel and its Arab neighbors is the "only positive solution" to the Middle East conflict.

He was the first Arab chief of state to express such an idea publicly.

In an interview, the ailing 68-year-old Tunisian president emphasized that it may be 20 or 30 years before such a federation becomes practicable. But he foresaw only a perpetual state of guerrilla war as long as Israel refuses to conclude an "honorable peace" with the Arabs.

WASHINGTON - President Richard Nixon put the United States on a collision course with the United Nations Security Council Wednesday when he signed legislation permitting the U.S. to resume imports of chrome from Rhodesia.

The president's action drew angry protests at the UN, where the General Assembly approved Tuesday a resolution warning Washington that a resumption of chrome imports from Rhodesia would violate trade sanctions imposed by the UN and be a breach of international treaty obligations.

BANGKOK - The armed forces of Thailand staged a bloodless coup Wednesday night, dissolving the Council of Ministers and both houses of Parliament. Martial law was proclaimed throughout the country.

Radio Thailand, announcing the news at 8 p.m., said the administration of country had been taken over by the Revolutionary Party, a nucleus of military leaders headed by Field Marshal Thanom Kittikachorn, the Premier, who is also supreme commander of the armed forces.

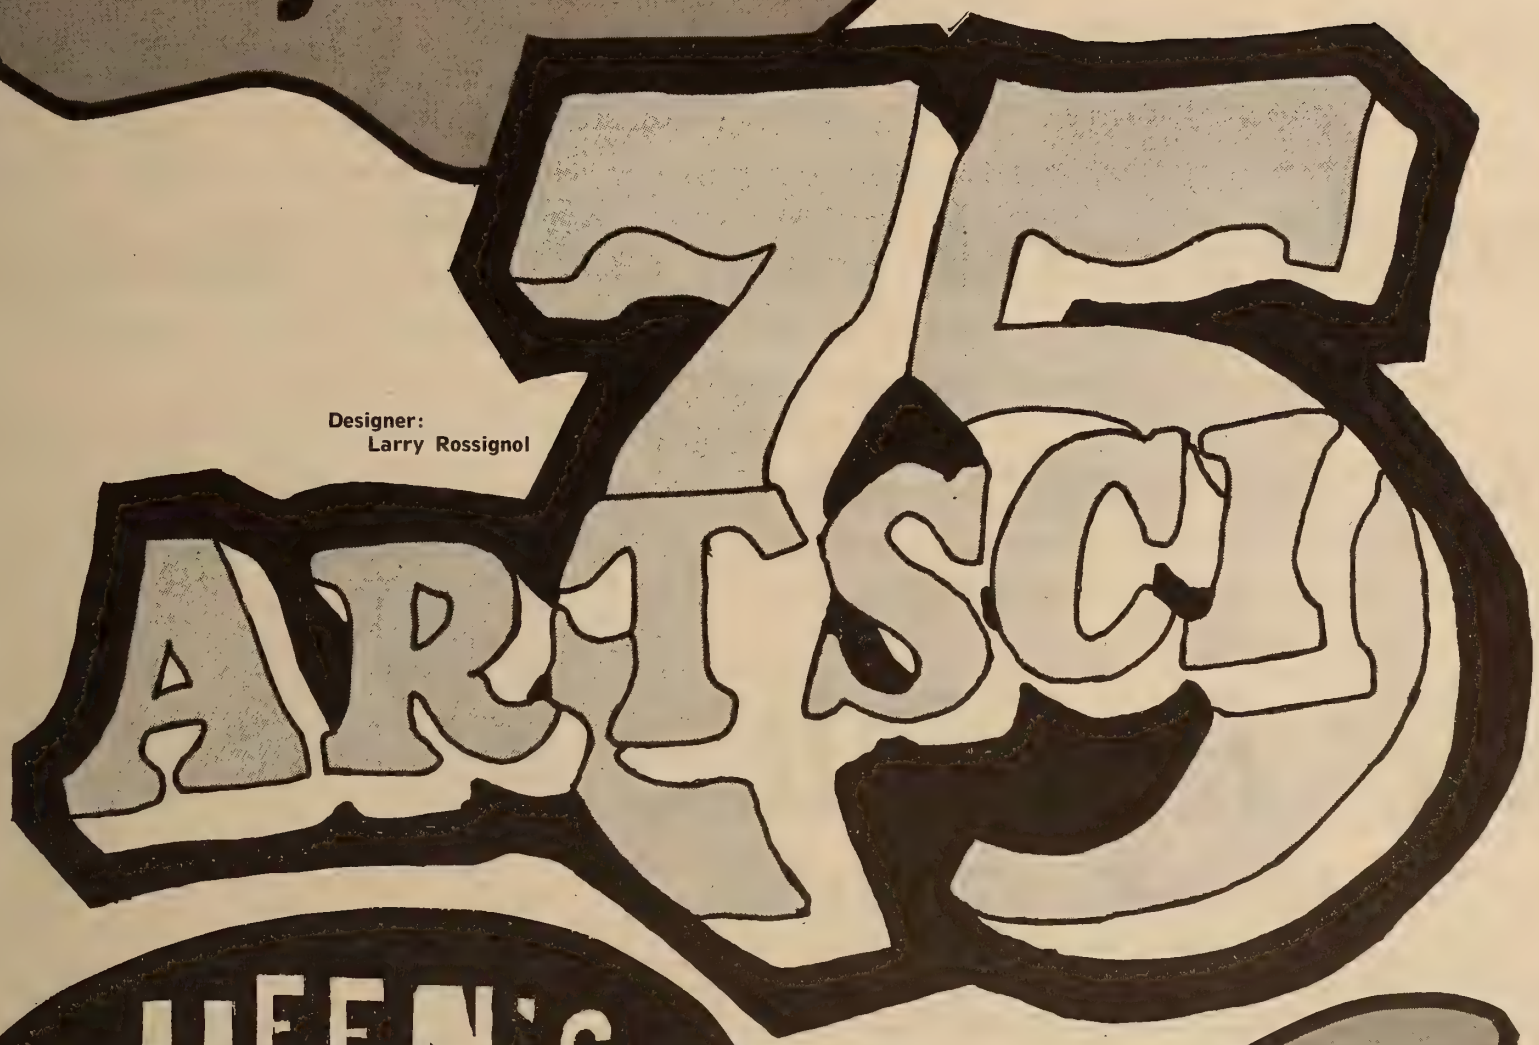
The broadcast said the party had ordered the dissolution of the Legislature, consisting of an elected House of Representatives and a Senate appointed by King Bhumibol Adulyades.

NEW YORK - Word has gone out from the White House that the administration wants more mobsters to be arrested to improve the appearance of its anti-crime record for President Richard Nixon's re-election campaign next year, Time magazine reports in its current issue.

"Quotas, in fact, have been established, though neither the justice department nor the FBI will take credit for them," Time says.

It said 1,000 hoodlums are to be arrested the first two months of next year - 200 in New York City, 60 in Philadelphia and five in Columbia, S.C., for example.

The magazine adds that arrests are being deferred now so that future quotas can be met.



MIAMI BEACH - President Richard Nixon's appeal to unions to co-operate with his Phase II economic controls got a cool reception Friday that ended with Mr. Nixon's stalking out of the AFL-CIO convention.

After a speech in which the President said he will use his powers to control wages and prices whether the unions co-operate or not, Mr. Nixon started to shake hands and chat with delegates on the convention floor.

Queen's
Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 27
Thurs., Nov. 25, 1971

Science 75 year crest is not yet available

Designer:
Larry Rossignol

Designer:
Peter Druxerman

see page
4

ONTARIO
HEALTH INSURANCE

ARTS CINEMA DAZE & discount

OWL & PUSSY CAT at Dunning, 9 p.m. Friday

50¢ with this year's Arts Year Card.. $1.00 without

YEAR CARDS ON SALE John Orr Room Fri. Noon - 2 p.m.

BROCK BOWLING 5-PIN 179 BROCK 548-3981

Regularly 45¢ a line - This weekend with Arts Yearcard 40¢ a line

MOTHER'S PIZZA PARLOR 455 Princess 549-0006

25¢ off each Pizza this weekend with Arts Yearcard. Also specializing in submarine sandwiches and spaghetti. BE A MOTHER'S BOY!

BAMBOO GARDENS Chinese Food - 527 Princess

PHONE 544-4404 for take-out 10% off each purchase over $1.00 for Arts Yearcard holders!

JOE & PAUL'S

YOUNG MEN'S WEAR

For the city's largest selection of LEES, LEVIS, G.W.G. Slacks and Jeans, Shirts, Boots, Belts, Jackets, Drop into JOE & PAUL'S. Bring any of these coupons for special prices. Offer good until December 4th (Saturday).

'JOE & PAUL'S'
VALUE $2.00
ON PURCHASE OF A PAIR OF DRESS PANTS
Flairs or Tapers

'JOE & PAUL'S'
VALUE $1.00
ON PURCHASE OF A PAIR OF JEANS
Stripe-Denim-Corduroy

'JOE & PAUL'S'
VALUE $2.00
ON PURCHASE OF SHOES & BOOTS

'JOE & PAUL'S'
VALUE $1.00
ON PURCHASE OF Dress or Sport Shirt

Joe and Pauls-Montreal at Princess-Open Thurs., Fri. until 9

GENUINE CANADIAN CRAFTS,
CLOTHES, TOYS and
CANADIAN BOOKS

CANADIAN SHOP

OF KINGSTON
telephone: 542-1115
219 Princess St.
(next to the Capitol Theatre)

Thesis Duplication

The 3600 III Xerox Duplicator has a wide range of machine capabilities for quality thesis or 'presentation' reproduction work.

The Student Typing Service

STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

Bring anybody out for dinner -- Great food from 2.99 -- every night!

It's Time
to Book Your Party
or dance or stag or excuse for a drunk

The Round Table

We've got rooms from 5 - 1500 and great food and drink.

Call us . . . Now

The Round Table

Fully licenced - 542-7337

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

Senatus Universitatis Reginae hisce litteris testatum vult candidatum ante Cancellarium 15.4 momentibus stetisse

S. S. Lazier

The report at right was originally a memo from convocation marshal (and civil engineering professor) Dr. Samuel S. Lazier to the chairman of the convocation committee, who is secretary of the university John W. Bannister.

It appears as an appendix to the agenda of today's senate meeting. The convocation committee and the committee on academic procedures will recommend that Scheme II be approved.

This would mean an average of 350 graduates at each of five convocations next year -- including one convocation with 500 general B.A. graduates.

As one of those who attended all convocations this year, and since we were using the Arena for the first time I amused myself by taking times for various parts of some of the convocations. Herewith the results of this amusement; as well as some suggestions for next year.

Convocation	Total No.	Graduands on hand	%	Laureation time ea. sec	Total Laureation Time Min.
Grad. St. etc.	326	132	40	10	25
Appl. Sc.	282	190	66	10	35
McArth.	331	148	45	7.5	20
BA (hons)	188	141	75	11	25
B. Sc. etc.	203	164	80	11	30
BA (A-K)	428	235	55	10	40
BA (L-Z)	429	251	58	10	40
Meds. Law †	222	184	83	15.4 Meds (singly)
				13 Law (singly)	45
		1445

The shortest Convocation this year, in total elapsed time, was the BA (A-K) which took 1 hr. 20 mins. The longest was the Meds, law etc. which took 2 hrs. The difference in time may be accounted for as follows:

Difference in laureation time 45 - 40	5 mins
Difference in addresses	22
Difference in Sponsio, prizegiving, etc.	13
	40 mins

The last item is unavoidable because there is a substantial prize list, particularly for the Law Faculty, whilst the prize list for BA ceremonies is almost nil.

Most of the other convocations ran to about 1 hr. 30 min., and perhaps this should be a target for future ceremonies, but not more than 45 minutes devoted to laureation.

. . The laureation time per graduand includes about 5 seconds of applause. If this was eliminated it is possible that perhaps 4 seconds might be saved per laureation, or about two seconds per graduand when they are laureated in pairs. Thus it is feasible to laureate a graduand in about 8 seconds on the average.

. . Assuming a dual laureation procedure without applause, it should be possible to laureate about 350 graduands in 45 minutes. It is estimated (see below) that about 1,750 graduands will appear at the 1972 Convocations. Thus it should be possible to accomplish Convocation '72 in five ceremonies.

CONVOCATIONS '72 PROJECTIONS

. . The figures which appear in the table below are the writer's estimates, based on 1971 figures, plus a small allowance for growth. The Faculty of Education is expected to grow sustantially, perhaps to 600 graduands in 1972. The writer should be pleased to have gross errors in these figures drawn to his attention.

Faculty of degree	estimated No. graduates 72	est. % turnout for Convocation	estimated No. at Convocation 72
Fac. Educ.	600	45	270
Appl. Sc.	300	66	200
B.A. (hons) & Gen.	250	75	190
B.A.	900	55	500
B. Sc.	100	80	80
B. Ph. E.	40	80	32
B. Comm.	80	80	64
M.D.	65	95	62
LL.B.	150	90	135
B. N. Sc. † Therapy	60	60	36
Ph.D. (eng)	12	40	5
Ph. D.	65	40	26
M.A.	70	40	28
M.Sc. (eng)	50	40	20
M. Sc.	50	40	20
M.B.A.	70	85	60
Theology	20	100	20
	2.882	Av. = 60%	1.748

OUTLINE OF CEREMONY

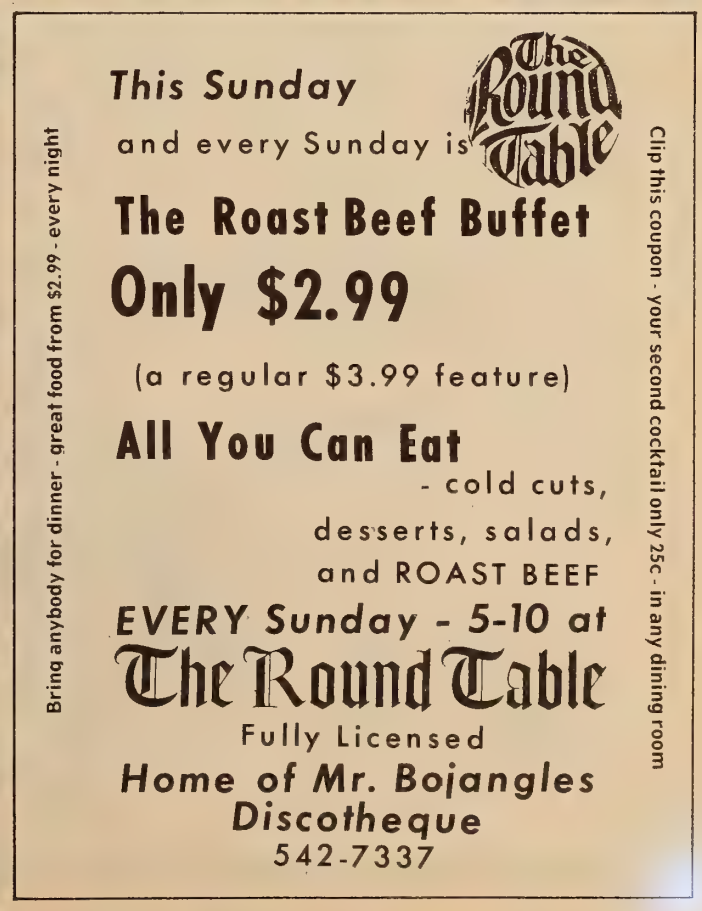
START	00 mins
HYMN, BENEDICTION plus PRINCIPAL'S ADDRESS	15 mins
Hon. Graduand, Laureation plus Address	15 mins
Laureation of graduands (350)	45 mins
Sponsio(s), Prizes plus Anthem	15 mins
TOTAL	95 mins

GROUPING OF GRADUANDS FOR CONVOCATIONS

There are a number of different groupings for those graduating, the following are two of such possibilities.

SCHEME I.

BA (hons and gen) 190 BPHE 32 BSc 80 PhD 26 Theology 20	348
MA 28 MSc 20 BA 290	338
BComm 65 MBA 60 BA 210	335
ApplSci 200 PhD and MSC (eng) 25 Law 135	360
Education 270 Meds 65 Nursing and rehab	370
Total	1750



SCHEME II

BA	500
BA (hons and gen) 190 BPHE 32 BSc (hons) 80	302
Grads 100 Law 135 Meds 65 Nursing and rehab 35	335
Appl Sci 200 B Comm 65 MBA 60	325
Education 270 Theology 20	290
TOTAL	1750

On the whole I would favour scheme one because it avoids the very large convocation of 500, and does spread the general BA around. There are not other combinations which are viable, assuming that BA Hons and BPHE must go together, and that the Nurses etc should be with MDs.

I should like to propose that these schemes be considered by the Convocation Committee, it is hardly necessary to call a meeting, but perhaps we might ask for reaction from the faculties by an early date. At that time it might be necessary to call a meeting of the Committee, in order to prepare a formal request to the Academic Procedures Committee of Senate.

OHSIP-OHSC

The numbers game

The general concensus among the secretaries at Health Service is that the mechanics of the new governmental health coverage plan are "screwy." The brilliant new plan, issued by some planner from the higher reaches of Queen's Park, will make your Ontario Health Services Insurance Plan (OHSIP) number the same as your Ontario Hospital Services Commission (OHSC) number. Now, for most people, those who had a social insurance (SI) number before they applied for medical coverage, their OHSIP number is the same as their SI number. But no more. Now that medical secretaries have probably just succeeded in changing all their PSI (Physicians Services Incorporated) numbers, as well as the various types of other insurance companies' numbers, over to OHSIP numbers, they will have to begin all over again changing the OHSIP numbers to OHSC numbers. So everyone will have two (the new OHSIP and SI) numbers instead of two (the old joint OHSIP-SI and OHSC) numbers. Fantastic improvement, huh? All that paperwork for that. The Bill Davis party is really on top of things

One of the secretaries remarked that "maybe Bert Lawrence (Health Minister) knows why they're doing all this, but he doesn't seem to be telling anyone." Perhaps creating all this extra work is part of Davis' plan for making more jobs. (Actually, they're laying off 400 people.)

The major benefit of the new plan is that as OHSC and OHSIP are amalgamated premium assistance can be obtained for both the OHSC and OHSIP coverage, rather than just OHSIP. As the government blurb says: ". . . Effective April 1, 1972, all single persons and families with no taxable income will be eligible for 100 per cent assistance on the new health combined premium. At present, such full premium assistance for low-income families and individuals is available only in respect of the OHSIP premium, not the OHSC premium.

". . . Effective April 1, 1972 eligibility for 50 per cent premium assistance will be broadened to include all single persons with taxable income under $1,000 and all couples and families with taxable income under $2,000. At present, partial premium assistance is available only in respect of the OHSIP premium and only up to taxable income levels of $500 for single persons, $1,000 for couples and $1,300 for families."

The general provincial budget will be used to accommodate any revenue loss resulting from the reform of the health premium scheme.

The new programme is expected to begin on April 1, 1972.

Anyone who is not now registered for Ontario Hospital Insurance should obtain an application from a bank, hospital or the Ontario Health Insurance Commission (2195 Yonge St., Toronto 7) and register without delay.

- Leslie Kaye

Premium payable by a representative family

Gross Income	Taxable Income	Full annual premium paid by taxpayer: New Policy	Full annual premium paid by taxpayer: Present System
$2,000	$0	$nil	$132.00
3,000	0	nil	132.00
4,000	330	132.00	202.80
5,000	1,300	132.00	202.80
7,000	3,300	264.00	309.00
10,000	6,300	264.00	309.00
15,000 and up		264.00	309.00

This representative family consists of a married taxpayer with two children. Taxable income is based on federal government's new tax bill. Under it, a single person can earn $1,600 and pay no tax, and thus no medical insurance premium. A married taxpayer can earn at least $2,950 and pay neither taxes nor medical premium.

COMPUTERS- I

By Richard Liskeard
in Last Post

One of the better rib-ticklers that can be thrown into the Keystone Kops Kontinentalism file the Liberals are so impressively amassing happened almost two years ago.

A man of no less stature than George McIlraith was Solicitor-General at the time, and it came to pass that he got a free tour of the FBI computer centre when he was down in Washington.

Much to his surprise, a request for information on a stolen car came pounding out on the computer from RCMP headquarters in Ottawa. Apparently an RCMP constable in Swift Current, Sask. was checking out an Ontario car that had been parked in his town for two days. He radioed his local dispatcher who queried RCMP headquarters on the teletype network.

While the constable waited in his car, Ottawa headquarters perused their file on stolen cars and came up with nothing. Ottawa apparently decided to check with the FBI in Washington if they had any record of the car.

As McIlraith watched, the computer in Washington replied that the car had been stolen in Scarborough, Ont. only four days before.

No comment was made by McIlraith as to why data was being stored in an FBI computer and not in RCMP headquarters. But RCMP Commissioner W. L. Higgitt said his force was using the FBI computer because it " . . . can locate the information and transmit it to Ottawa faster than the RCMP can search its own files manually."

Although the RCMP got its own computer, following this episode, this only accelerated the exchange of data between them and the FBI.

The episode is only a tiny example of what is becoming one of the greatest threats to Canadian sovereignty: Losing control of our data and information transfer systems to the United States. This has implications for security, industrial development, education, and scientific research. It is such a threat that the Science Council of Canada recently declared it one of the nation's top priorities to kill this trend.

The head of the federal task force on computer communications, Dr. Hans Jacob von Baeyer, likes to tell another story. He says it's true, and it goes like this:

A man brought a large suitcase full of computer punch cards to a Canadian customs shed as he came in from the U.S. and was told he'd have to pay duty.

The customs official decided the cards should be assessed as paper for import purposes. Then he noticed that there were holes punched in the cards.

"This paper is used," he said, "used paper comes in at a lower rate." And the man brought the cards in as cheap used paper.

"There could have been a hundred thousand dollars' worth of programming on those cards," Baeyer says. He offers it as proof of how impossible it is to stop the flow of computerized information into and out of Canada.

The historian Harold Innis devised what is probaly the most significant theory of Canadian communications, as related to the survival of the nation. Briefly it runs like this: Canada, in order to survive, must link itself horizontally along the 49th parallel. Canada ceases to be a political entity when communications lines go north-south. On the basis of this, he calls the building of the CPR in the 19th century the sine qua non of the Canadian nation.

This theory became the basis of all Canadian nationalism, both conservative and socialist. Both these political groups allied to found the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, an electronic CPR, on the theory that otherwise American broadcasting would kill us. The National Film Board, and Air Canada are similar pieces of government legislation that are per se economically illogical, but politically critical if you start from the premise that you must keep the nation a political reality. The traditional enemy of this view, as Georg for a Nation
tinentalist th economics ca

In a small r ago the Scienc advisory gro Council. decla flows of this c of being lost te at all costs an must be establ linking it in ur build a CPR

A previous Council note computer ma 1970's of the dustry, af automobiles, industrial co innumerable contemporary industry will shaping the s
The report
The comput fasted growi revenue for million (US.)
1969—a more
By 1974, it' double from
In Canada i if our GNP i billion, the co up to five per of comparisor our GNP on
This makes Canada's com concentrated the oil indu Markets. No t to bar the ro
But instead
Science Co
Technology o
Canada".

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Jol
Managing Editors: John Solman. C
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Features Editor: Dave Walker
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Ellic
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chr
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Gr.

Published three times a week (le periods) during the academic yea Society of Queen's University Inc. F opinions are those of the editors and the Alma Mater Society or the u pressed in articles are those of the ar
(613) 547-5540.

Thanks this issue to news staff Je wards and Bob Mutrie. Duty man:

The article on page 6 of Tuesday's Jo
Lib: What's in it for men" should hav Johnston). L.K., who wrote "No Thanks is Leslie Kaye.

amalgam

DING CONTINENTAL

Canadian computer firms are beginning to die like flies.

Takeovers by American data giants are taking place as regular as clockwork. One estimate is that Canadian computer firms have suffered a 30 per cent decline in business. In Calgary in 1970, about 300 people are estimated to have lost their jobs in that city's computer industry alone. In Kitchener-Waterloo, over 40 highly trained computer-programmers are listed with the unemployment office. A national estimate is as yet impossible to arrive at . It has reached the proportions of an industrial crisis, in the assessment of the Science Council, an organization not usually noted for alarmist tendencies.

The key factor in this anaemic death in the industry is illustrated by Baeyer's story of the man with a suitcase full of computer cards.

Calgary subsidiaries of U.S. oil companies send their data in the form of magnetic tape or telephone lines to parent firms' computers in the U.S. The processed data comes back to Canada and is charged duty on the cost of the tape—$30 to $40.

This isn't restricted to the oil industry. The key point is that what has hit a hundred other industries that have high American ownership here has hit the computer industry too. An American firm, almost invariably a subsidiary, will use either the facilities of the parent firm, or the subsidiary in Canada of the computer company that the oil company's parent company uses in the States. Keeps the billing simple.

The process is illustrated by what's happening to Canada's ad agencies—over a dozen have folded in a period of three years through the following mechanism: If Ford in the U.S has an account with an agency in New York, then Ford in Canada uses as its ad agency the Canadian subsidiary of the New York ad firm. Foreign ownership reaches its own cruising speed in the victim territory—the effects of foreign ownership extend far beyond who owns the plant itself. It affects the development of the entire industrial sector.

If Canadian ad agencies fold, so do supportive graphics industries; freelance photographers are forced out of work; copywriters are driven out of the market.

The Science Council's report recognized this: ". . . the creation of source material for services, such as information banks and computer-assisted learning, would migrate to the points of supply of these services. Thus much of the information and many of the ideas and values which underpin our society would eventually become largely alien. The Science Council, as a group of concerned and informed Canadians, consider these trends to be unacceptable."

Not only are supportive industries—(Everything from the companies that make computer cards, to electronics firms that make the circuits, to fine metal firms that make the bodies, to the electricians whose skills provide the construction, to the university engineering faculties that research and provide the trained manpower)—going to die off with the nub industry dying, but much more. Accessibility to data transmission and data banks play a large role in determining where a new industry will locate. If there isn't a good terminal in Quebec City, a company won't be too interested in locating in the economically depressed Gaspe. A computer trunk line is a road. And you don't build an industry where a road doesn't extend.

But we're talking about even more dangerous implications. To understand the threat of not having national control of the computer industry and the data network, we must understand the vast implications of computers.

The U.S. DATRAN company has predicted a volume of some 8,000 computer communications "calls", or transactions per second in the United States by 1980. An article in Fortune has predicted that 50 per cent of U.S computers will be inter-connected by 1974. Britain expects 50,000 computer terminals by 1973 and half a million by 1983—that's active computer data units, each an outlet of its own, like a telephone, seeking information from each other and from central data banks. By 1980, DATRAN predicts, there will be 2.5 million data terminals in the U.S.

The trick will be not whether you have a computer, but who has the massive data banks. Universities in the United States are already linking specialized information pools. A chemical data bank is linked to a biological data bank, for the smaller computers anywhere to query either or both.

Central data banks are assembled where there is a vast network of computers worth serving. If Canada does not assemble its data banks, it will have to plug into American data banks, and we'll have to file our information into American pools. The real power in this system lies in who controls what goes in and out of the banks. As in many things, it's not the information itself that frequently determines the product, but what kind of information is gathered, and how it's assembled and joined.

If every Canadian university didn't have a library of its own, it would have to depend on U.S. university libraries, and whether or not they felt like building up Canadian history sections. Medical students go where the best medical faculties and libraries are. A computer data bank is analagous.

It's critical not only to build up banks, but much more vital to build up a central network of access to the banks. For this reason, the Science Council report states that it is imperative to create a "National Spine", with branch lines, linking an east-to-west network, or it will flow north-south.

From his desk in downtown Ottawa, Baeyer pulls a full-page ad from the Calgary Albertan, announcing extension of the Cybernet data centre network into Canada.

Cybernet is a U.S.-based computer system with a linked chain of giant computers and data banks in Washington, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, Los Angeles and other big U.S. cities. Customers in any one of these points can rent use of part or all of the facilities, and that allows them free access to the entire multi-million dollar network.

The Albertan ad meant Calgary computer-users would have partial access to Cybernet's U.S.-based equipment. Of course, even with a healthy Canadian system, there would be massive intercourse between Canadian and American data banks—Canada can't try to assemble the last word on everything and hide itself from the data banks of the world. But that's not the danger lurking in the Cybernet ad.

A Calgary subscriber to Cybernet would get services for the same price as a subscriber in Palo Alto, California—despite the added distance from the computers.

Somebody has scribbled the word "dumping" beside this paragraph in the ad in Baeyer's hands.

That term is normally applied to more tangible commodities, and refers to selling an item in a foreign country below the price in the country where it's made. In Canada, most dumping is illegal.

Should a U.S. company be able to sell computer services cheaply in Canada because their biggest costs are already paid for by their U.S operations? If such unrestricted competition should be allowed, Canadian firms, who have higher costs, would go under in no time. And that's exactly what's happening.

Baeyer says he isn't sure whether anti-dumping laws could be applied to selling information—which is what Cybernet does.

The Science Council's thin 42-page report is historic in its importance because it drops the statement that chills most of Ottawa: " . . . it will be necessary to restrict the free play of market forces". Careers have been ruined for lesser slips in the cafeterias of the civil service.

Noting the healthy start the Canadian computer industry got in the 50's, it goes on to state: "This initial effort has been replaced by branch plant manufacturing sustained by tariff barriers and industrial incentive funds. Canadian participation in the broad range of opportunities for hardware development and manufacture has been extremely small, and the software and computer service industries are generally weak and shaky. Most of our computer service bureaus are reporting annual losses and several have been taken over by U.S. firms. (The lion's share of revenues . . . is enjoyed by foreign-owned computer firms.). . ."

"The Council feels." the report states, "that branch plant status for the Canadian computer industry is just not good enough.

"Leaving aside questions of exports, excessive dependence on foreign suppliers and lack of worthwhile jobs for highly-educated Canadians, we are above all faced with the urgent need to exercise control over the shape and thrust of industry, so that its development may be harmonised with our social priorities." Mark, that last sentence refers to all "industry", not just the computer industry.

Predicting that by building our own national computer communications network "we will make a radical change in the mental resources of our society," the report adds: ". . . because of the pervasive influence of computers on social and cultural affairs, on national unity and on our sense of national identity we feel that Canadians must be able to control fully the development of computer communications networks in Canada."

The report argues for a national spinal communications network, tying together regional subnetworks, controlled by a single organization, with government participation and regulation.

It notes that "no long-range commitments to build (such a network) of a scale comparable to the commitments made in the United States . . . have been announced by Canadian organizations. Thus, in the absence of government initiatives, it seems likely that Canadian computer communications facilities will remain essentially in their present state for some time to come."

The Council warns of the results:

— a continual outflow of funds for network charges to the U.S. "of a magnitude and growth rate largely beyond our control."

— little control by Canadians of privacy and security standards. (Most Canadian life insurance firms already store their private data on customers in U.S banks with parent companies; the possibilities of an international credit control system are staggering; and we already know about the RCMP and how jealously it keeps its data from the FBI— it doesn't take much to extrapolate into defence and political information).

— little opportunity for Canadian bodies even to verify that advertised standards of privacy and security are in fact being met.

— cheaper service from U.S points. leading to the decline or death of our industry.

— social implications of basic information being calibrated to U.S views, priorities and standards, thus affecting our own.

CLASSIFIEDS

LOST in vicinity of Union and Frontenace St. about 8:30 p.m., 18 Nov., book entitled 'Indaba My Children'. Book is of sentimental value. Contact Mr. Heder at 196 Union, 546-5048. Or leave a message.

FOR SALE - stereo amplifier, 60 watts, frequency response 25-1800, Call 544-0179. .

AFGHANI Coats for sale. $65. Also one fox fur coat $100. Phone 544-1709 or 544-3270. Ask for Marty.

MYOPIC! Would anyone knowing the whereabouts of a pair of dark-rim glasses lost last Friday please call 549-7152.

FOR RENT: 2 large single rooms near Queen's. $13 weekly-room. Suitable for two friends. No cooking. Phone 546-9314.

We wish Jack and Web and the rest of the future gang - little Jacks and little Webs - all the happiness in the world. Good luck and happy motoring.

To whomever picked up my bicycle pump Thursday Night. It works only for tubular tires. Please call 546-7738. I NEED IT.

RIDE WANTED to Ottawa Saturday morning early early early! Will pay well -- lily white body available. Call Pat, 544-8510.

FOR SALE: GUITAR AND AMP. HeathKit amp has three channels "guitar", "mike", and "base"; reverb; tremelo; fuzz; brightness; and bass boost with two twelve inch speakers and horn. Excellent condition $450. Univox guitar and plush case, very good action, fine condition $75. Call 544-7546.

Mont Ste-Anne

Skiing costs less and is more fun

- only gondola lift in Eastern Canada
- 2050' vertical drop
- 6545 hourly capacity
- 26 miles of trails and slopes (North and South sides)
- Season from November to May
- 5 or 7-day Ski Week Package

For free brochures and information, write to:
Mont Ste-Anne,
P.O. Box 40,
Beaupré,
Province of Québec
Toronto ski reports phone number (416) 483-4510

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police Offer
Career Opportunities To Graduates

Graduates from Universities across Canada are finding an interesting and rewarding career within the ranks of the RCM Police. Those holding degrees in Law, Science, Arts, Commerce, Engineering and Business Admin. who are able to meet all other entrance requirements are offered a commencing salary of $8,950.00 per annum.

Interviewers
Will Be On Campus

December 1 1971

For further information and appointment, please contact your placement office.

Monday thru Saturday
noon 'til 1 p.m.
its . . .

The Round Table

Mr. BOJANGLES ROOM a discotheque

Get in on a DIFFERENT Atmosphere!! Dance to the latest in top sounds!! A new image -- a lively spot -- Come to see Bojangles -- You'll like it!! AT

The Round Table

Fully Licenced
Home of the Sunday Roast
Beef Buffet -- 542-7337

Bring anybody out for dinner -- great food from 2.99 -- every night.

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

Come practice on us.

At Queen's Dec. 2 & 3

We mean it.

Even if you have no idea of coming with us, sign up for an interview.

Come in and rehearse.

Do it on a company whose very life depends on its ability to come face to face with strangers.

You won't waste our time. We have a number of surprises about the insurance business in general and ours in particular. So if there's a latent response in you, we're confident we can trigger it. Besides, we're perfectly willing to take the risk.

If you can't make an interview, take a look at "How to separate yourself from the herd." An eight page booklet on how to go to an interview on your terms. What to do about nervousness. About money. How to turn an interview around. When to get up and walk out. Things like that.

Our booklet is tucked into the new Employment Opportunities Handbook. The handbook is yours for the asking at the placement office.

"How to separate yourself from the herd" won't change the world for you.

But it just might help.

LONDON LIFE
InsuranceCompany,London,Canada

Sailors Head to Chicago

Queen's Sailing team leaves for Chicago today to compete in the 25th annual North American Intercollegiate Regatta. This marks the first time a Canadian team has been invited to the event. The Queen's contingent of skippers John Telgmann and Bob Lewis, with their respective crewmen Euan Swan and Sandy Goodall, qualified on the strength of their October victory in the Wayne State International Regatta, held in Detroit. It was Queen's first victory in this contest.

Competition on the chilly waters of Lake Michigan is expected to be very stiff, with the strongest teams coming from Seattle, Southern Cal., Miami, and the New England Universities. Cold weather and midterms have restricted practices for the Queen's representatives, but they are looking forward to the three-day Regatta. Races are scheduled to begin Friday, with over thirty schools entered; about 120 sailors from all parts of the U.S. (and Kingston) are involved.

Coming Events

Friday, Nov. 26:
Basketball - Queen's at Waterloo (men's) - Queen's at Carleton (women's)

Hockey - Lutheran at Queen's (men) 8:00 pm Harty Arena
U. of T. at Queen's (women) 5:15 pm Harty Arena

Volleyball - Queen's at Carleton (women's)

Saturday, Nov. 27:
Basketball - Queen's at Ottawa U. (women's)

Fencing - Queen's-R.M.C. Invitational 9:00 am

Gymnastics - Invitational at Ottawa U.

Hockey - Loyola vs. Queen's 8:00 pm Harty Arena (men)
McMaster vs Queen's 3:00 pm Harty Arena.

Swimming - Men's Relay Finals 10:00 am Queen's Pool

Volleyball - Queen's at York (men) OUAA 7-team round-robin tournament
- Queen's vs. Ottawa U. (women)

W.I.A.C. Bowling

WANTED: Students who want to relax and take a break from studies to come bowling with us Sunday night from 7:00 pm to 9:00 pm. Taxis will leave from the Gym at 6:45 pm. Everyone is welcome. For further information call Laura at 544-9273.

Participation . . or prestige?, Vol. II

by Chris Boon

Have you ever gotten that feeling that somewhere in the upper levels of the athletic administration there sits an ill-defined individual whose sole job it is to dispense red tape and screw people up? Well, it appears the little beastie has struck again.

Those of you who were here last year will remember that there was some question as to whether B-ball players Bob Wright and Brian MacKenzie had another year of eligibility left; since they aren't playing this year, the obvious assumption is that they did not, right?

Wrong! The question of eligibility was never submitted to the OUAA's Board of Reference for a ruling.

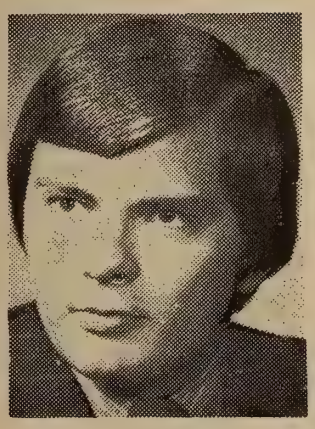
The situation, as explained to me by a reliable source, is this. Wright played one year of JV ball and two years of Varsity ball at SFU, and two years of Varsity at Queen's. MacKenzie played one year of JV and three years of Varsity at SFU, and one year at Queen's.

This means that both players have one year of Varsity eligibility remaining, unless the OUAA decides to count their JV year. The interesting point is that Alf Lane, a forward for the York Yeomen, came up through the same system that MacKenzie did, and is now in his second year with York. Funny, eh?

What I would like to know is, who made the decision not to fight about the eligibility question, and why. Even if the league turned down the request, the people in question would be no worse off than they are now.

Starting next year, freshman or JV years WILL count in determining eligibility. But that's next year. From here, it smells like, we won't do anything because they (Wright and MacKenzie) are good and the rest of the teams would probably squawk and if that happened the administration might get egg on its face, etc, etc. In fact, it smells rotten! Participation...or Prestige?

Now that, gentlemen, is a foul!



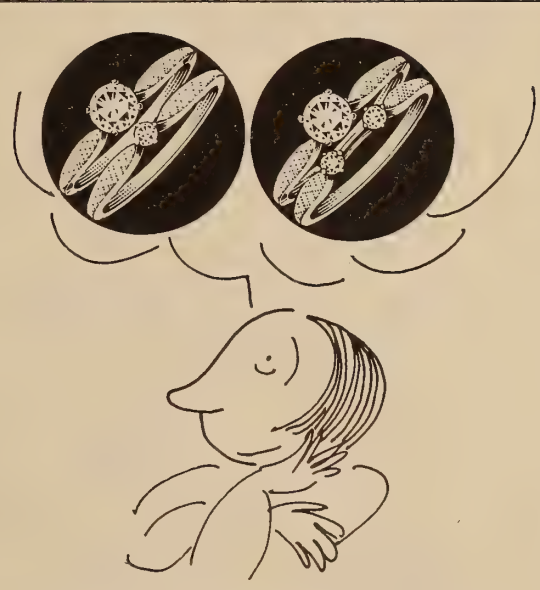
Managers

Managers of all intercollegiate sports should submit results of all games, including final score and scorers where applicable, to Kathy Breck, Rm 102, P.E.C., no later than 12:00 noon, of the following day. These results are needed for publicity and information services.

Notice

The squash courts and handball-paddleball courts in the Physical Education Centre will be repaired by Donolo Construction during the period Dec. 13 - Jan. 8 inclusive. It is intended to have the construction company work on no more than two courts at one time so that disruption of the use of the courts will be kept to a minimum.

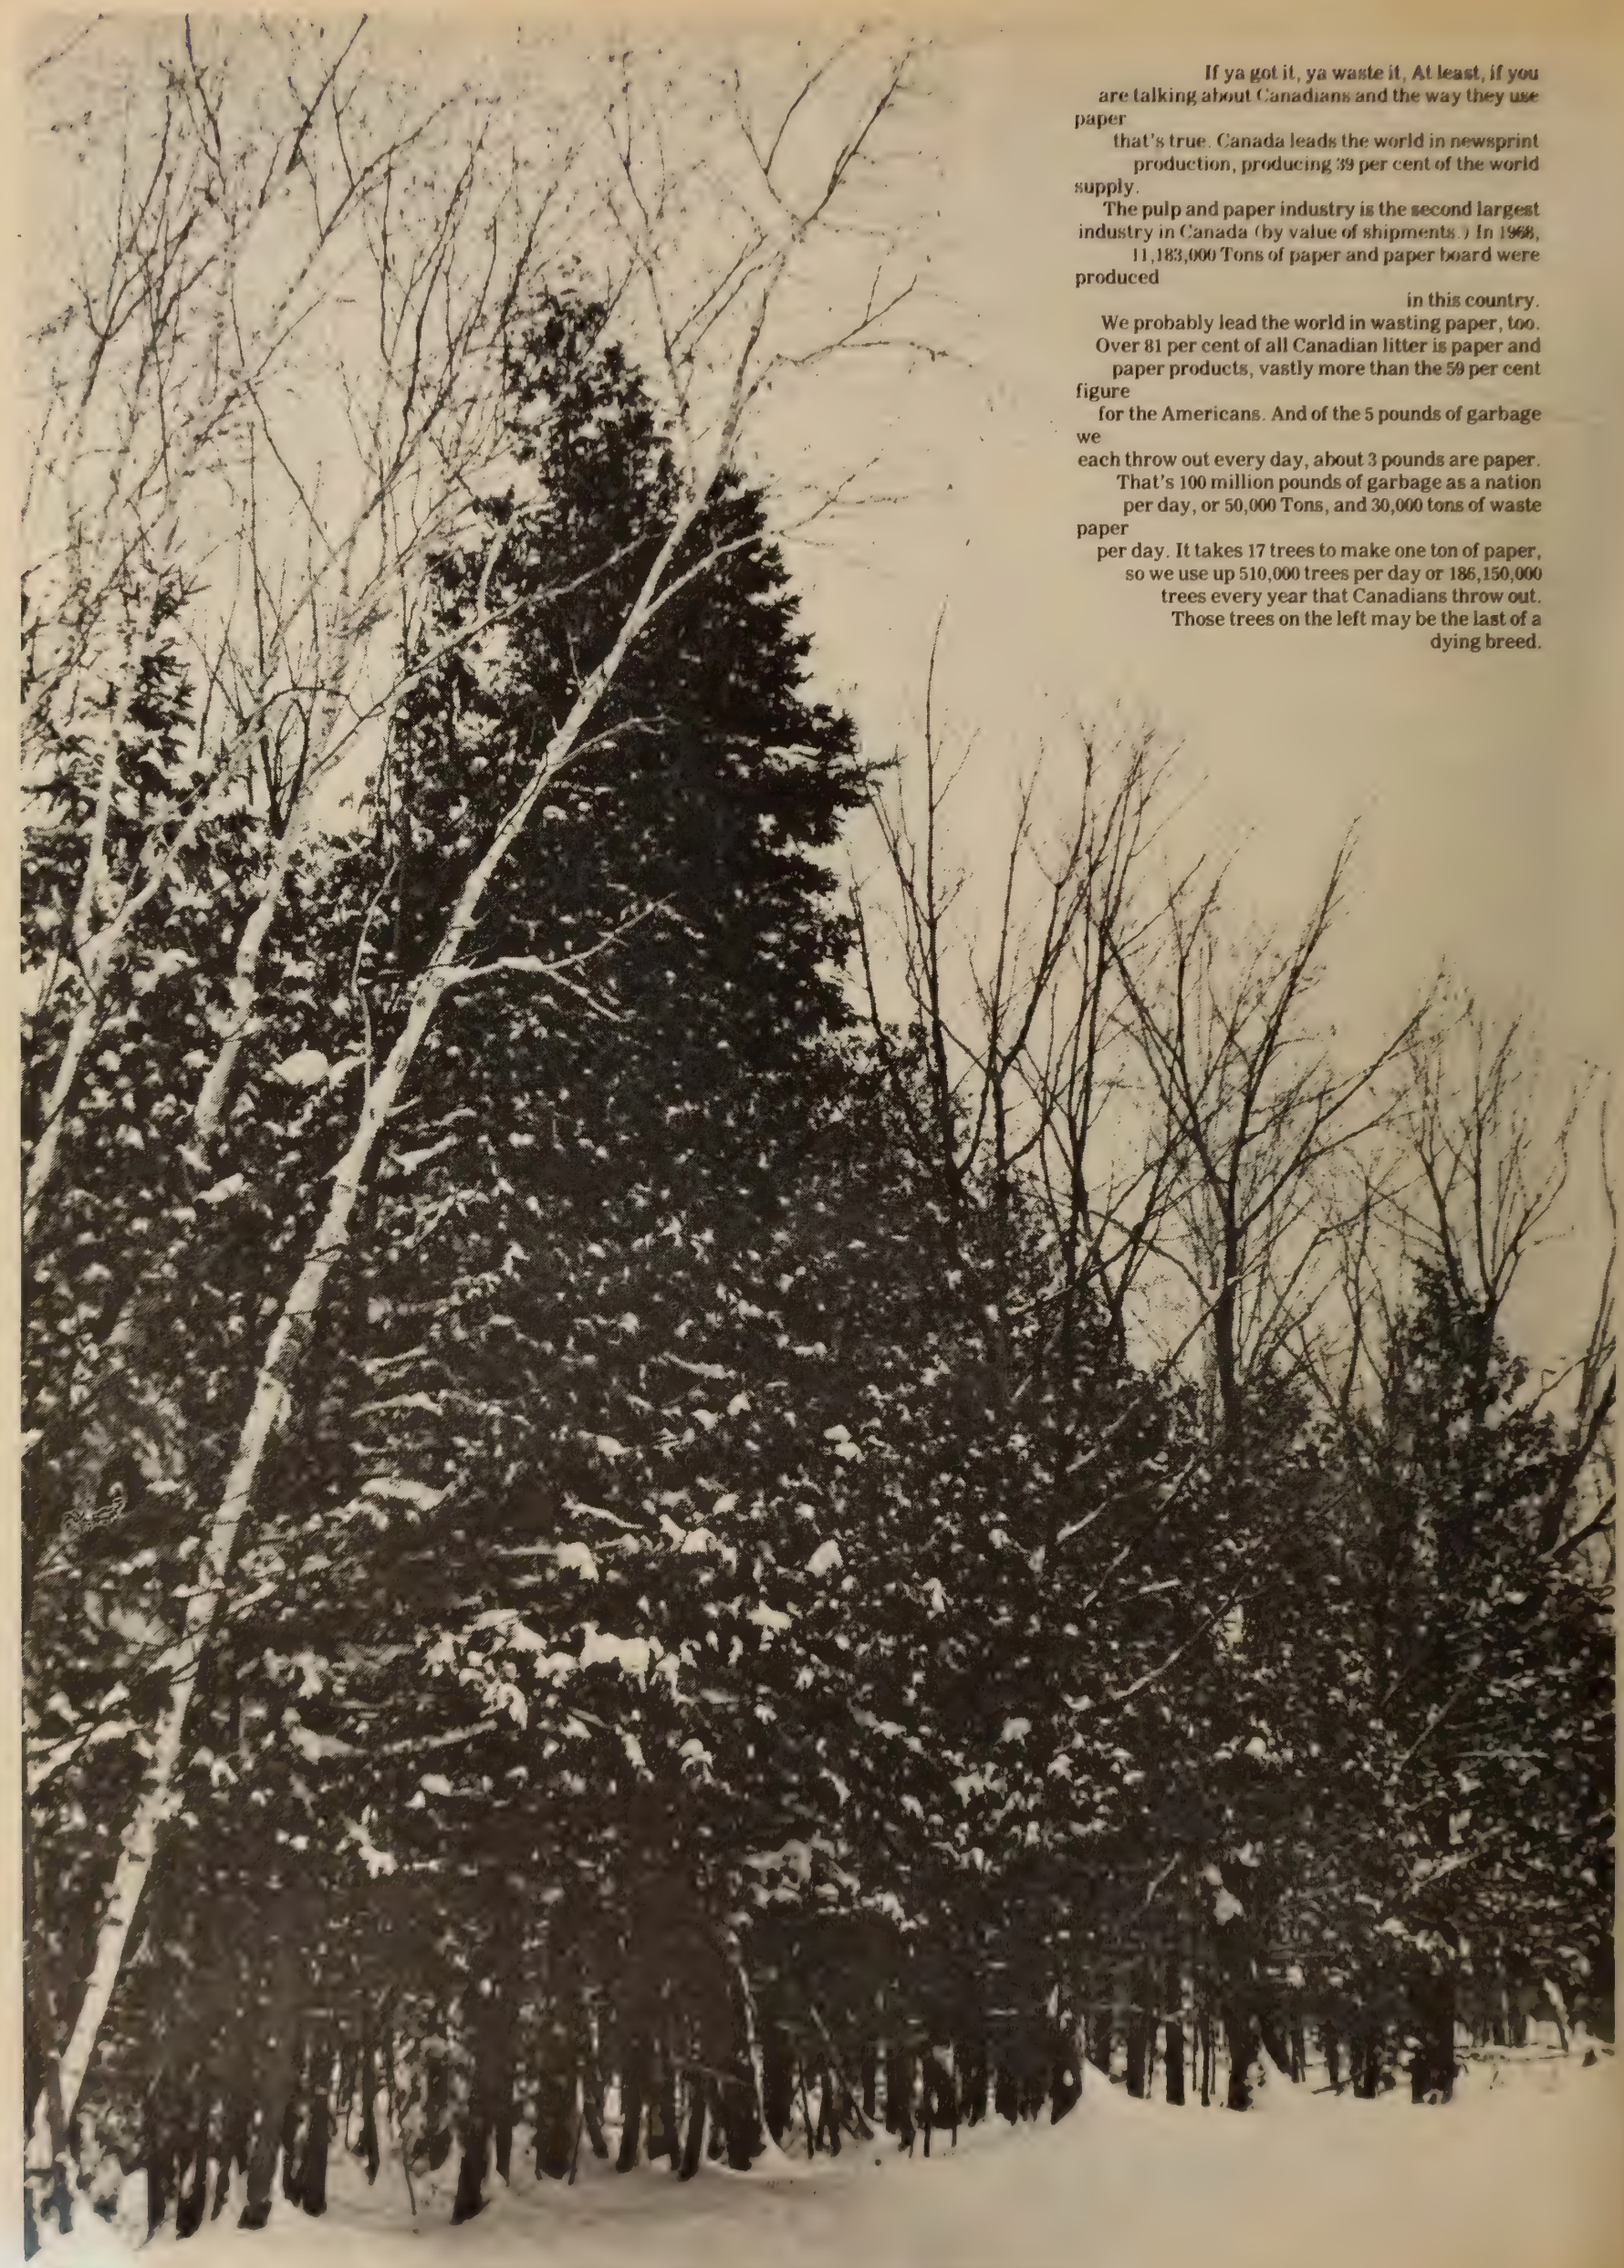
GRADUATING ?
GETTING MARRIED ?
TALK TO THE GUYS FROM SUN LIFE, REPRESENTING THE LARGEST CANADIAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY



Peter S. Scarf, B.A. (Hon.)
Arts '70

Terry J. Brady, B. Comm.
Comm. '71

SunLife OF CANADA



Phone 546-1117 275 Ontario St.

WE HAVE ALMOST AS MANY DIAMOND STYLES AS YOU HAVE DREAMS

Do you dream in pear shape. Or emerald cut. Perhaps you count brilliants to put you to sleep. We have dreamy diamonds in all shapes and sizes. Let us show you our wide and sparkling selection. We'll dazzle you with scores of blazing shapes . . . until you find your dream diamond.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET.
KINGSTON. ONTARIO
CANADA

If ya got it, ya waste it. At least, if you are talking about Canadians and the way they use paper that's true. Canada leads the world in newsprint production, producing 39 per cent of the world supply.

The pulp and paper industry is the second largest industry in Canada (by value of shipments.) In 1968, 11,183,000 Tons of paper and paper board were produced in this country.

We probably lead the world in wasting paper, too. Over 81 per cent of all Canadian litter is paper and paper products, vastly more than the 59 per cent figure for the Americans. And of the 5 pounds of garbage we each throw out every day, about 3 pounds are paper. That's 100 million pounds of garbage as a nation per day, or 50,000 Tons, and 30,000 tons of waste paper per day. It takes 17 trees to make one ton of paper, so we use up 510,000 trees per day or 186,150,000 trees every year that Canadians throw out. Those trees on the left may be the last of a dying breed.

Inmates say bitterness comes from prisons

By Jane Douglas

A Kingston Penitentiary inmate and two former prisoners said at Queen's Wednesday that the Canadian prison system produces bitterness, not rehabilitation.

"Bob", who is on day parole from the penitentiary, and former inmates "Hugh" and "Fred" were speaking to Dr. Joel Loken's sociology of deviance class at the faculty of education. The class has had other guests in recent weeks, including a speed addict, a "Jesus freak", a self-styled witch, and the president of a Toronto homosexual organization.

Bob works during the day with drug addicts in Kingston, and returns to Kingston Pen at nine o'clock each night. The experience is like being a schizophrenic, he told the class.

Convicts come out of the prison feeling fearful and self-conscious, he said, and build up a wall against society. How can they learn to live in society from behind a stone wall, he asked? There is a feeling that former inmates are constantly judged on what they were in the past, not on what they now are and do.

Prison guards are often "Perverse and cruel", one of the three said. Younger ones come to the job to help, but by the time they have any authority they have been "brainwashed" by older ones.

One guard, Bob said, told him that he had worked on an assembly line making teleivsion sets. And working at the penitentiary, he had found, was no better than that.

Asked about the April 1971 riot at Kingston Penitentiary, in which six guards were held hostage and two inmates died, Bob said people tend to forget that convicts are human beings and can get angry like anyone else.

The Kingston prisoners wanted to prove their points without harming the hostages, he said, but then "psychopaths" among the prisoners took control.

Eleven inmates were sentenced Tuesday to varying terms for their parts in the riot and the beatings and deaths which occurred.

Prisoners are put behind walls to protect society, one of the three said, but they don't learn how to cope with society while they are isolated from it. They only end up embittered and feeling dehumanized as a result of the regimented life in prison.

"Do this, do that," one of them said, is the way of life in prison. Guards say "Don't speak unless you're spoken to -- do what you can, and if you can't do more we'll make you -- but we are here to help you."

Fred said that after six years in prison, when he was released, he was ill at ease in society. He tried to buy cigarettes and didn't know how much they cost. It was like being in a time-machine, he said: he had missed the twist, and found go-go-girls in style instead.

It is no wonder that ex-convicts come out feeling hatred, one of them said; and 80 percent of them commit further crimes.

Day parole does not always work, Bob said, telling how he was ignored when he wanted more time outside because of family troubles.

And other recent improvements in prison systems have been superficial too, all three agreed. People suggest more interaction between prisoners and the community, Bob said, but the only trade he learned in prison was making mail sacks -- and the only place mail sacks are made is in prison.

Nobody cares about prisoners, one of them declared. He said even the education students who were listening to him would forget him five minutes after they walked out of the lecture-hall. Society is indifferent, he said.

Therefore, one former prisoner said, there is much talk about rehabilitation but very little actual rehabilitation. He said he had a feeling of awe that social scientists know so much about the causes of criminal deviance and still don't help prisoners.

And Bob said he was impressed that men can send people to the moon but still have not solved the problem of prisons and crime.

Queen's Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 28 Fri., Nov. 26, 1971

Have you ever lost a contact lens?

Benifits of American money are discussed

By Rachael Edwards

American investment in Canada, and its influence on Canadians, was the topic of an informal debate Monday night in the Student Union. Three professors and two students, supporting both sides of the controversy, were on the panel. Dr. Martin Prachowny of economics and fourth-year economics student Jan Jarvis were in favour of American investment in Canada, and commented on the financial side of the question. Dr. John Berry of psychology and fourth-year sociology student Jack McCulligh expressed concern for the detrimental effect of the U.S. influence on Canada. And Dr. Peter Leslie of political studies was chairman.

Prachowny opened the discussion by outlining some of the economic issues involved. He stressed that the underlying problem is not that of foreign investment but that of monopolies which exist in Canada today.

Prachowny said these monopolies put the greatest burden on the Canadian economy, and noted that the importance of U.S. investment is slowly declining and the percentage is likely to shrink even more in the future.

He mentioned that a number of monopolies in Canada, run from outside the country, began as subsidiaries of United States firms. But it is the monopoly system that is the real problem, he insisted, rather than the Americanism. Prachowny defended foreign investment in Canada and said Canadians can benefit in many ways from American financial interests in this country.

McCulligh concentrated his remarks on the great influence the United States has on Canadian media. He said Canadian media are basically American-oriented, and added that they should present more Canadian material.

"More than three-quarters of the magazines sold in Canada are American," McCulligh said, "and all the Canadian publishing houses are owned by Americans."

He pointed out that the Canadian edition of Time Magazine has four pages of Canadian news, written in New York. And he quoted a 1969 survey which found that only two of the top 20 songs in Canada were by Canadian groups.

"And there are no Canadian comic books printed."

McCulligh said Canadians are undergoing a "takeover of the mind" as a result of American influence.

Jarvis described the problem as "a molehill, not a mountain", produced by "a healthy but misguided sense of nationalism". He said there is little empirical documentation of the situation, and so there are few facts available on which to base arguments.

He said the costs of American investment are far fewer than its benefits. "The two countries share many of the same values, regarding democracy and capitalism," Jarvis commented, "and the U.S. firms in Canada act politically the same way the Canadian-owned ones do."

Problems associated with American firms, like pollution and the conflict between private and public ownership, are largely the result of industrialization, he said.

As for Canadian culture, Jarvis pointed out that with the higher incomes brought in the U.S.-run firms, Canada has more money to develop its own culture.

Berry expressed concern about whether the "socio-cultural-economic entity" called Canada could exist in the future. He said American investment in Canada causes indirect penetration of the American identity through ownership and politics.

Direct effects are those of the flood of American books and magazines, and the overflow of radio and television programmes, Berry said. He admitted that Canadians benefit in many ways, such as from the higher American standard of living, but stressed that Canada need not give up its identity to get those benefits.

Berry described Canada as a country of cultural pluralism, in contrast to the assimiliating culture of the United States. Canadians are "philosophical conservatives", he said, and approach problems calmly instead of over-aggressively as Americans do. And Canada is "a model of sane society, if the United States ever wants to get back on the right track!"

track!"

AMS CONCERTS PRESENTS

KRIS KRISTOFFERSON

with TANNIS NEIMANN

SUNDAY NOV. 28 - GRANT HALL

TWO SHOWS 7:00 & 9:30
MAXIMUM 2000 SEATS

TICKETS:
$2.00 WITH STUDENT CARD
$3.00 WITHOUT CARD OR AT GATE
BRING SOMETHING TO SIT ON

SALE FOR STUDENTS IN UNION 11:00 - 3:00
ALSO, from 12:00 - 3:00 on Saturday in Union Last chance to get $2.00 tickets !
Also on sale at the House of Sounds.

ARTS CINEMA DAZE & discount

OWL & PUSSY CAT at Dunning, 9 p.m. Friday
50¢ with this year's Arts Year Card.. $1.00 without

YEAR CARDS ON SALE John Orr Room Fri. Noon - 2 p.m.

BROCK BOWLING 5-PIN 179 BROCK 548-3981
Regularly 45¢ a line - This weekend with Arts Yearcard 40¢ a line

MOTHER'S PIZZA PARLOR 455 Princess 549-0006
25¢ off each Pizza this weekend with Arts Yearcard. Also specializing in submarine sandwiches and spaghetti. BE A MOTHER'S BOY!

BAMBOO GARDENS Chinese Food - 527 Princess
PHONE 544-4404 for take-out 10% off each purchase over $1.00 for Arts Yearcard holders!

Anglicans to appoint chaplain at Queen's

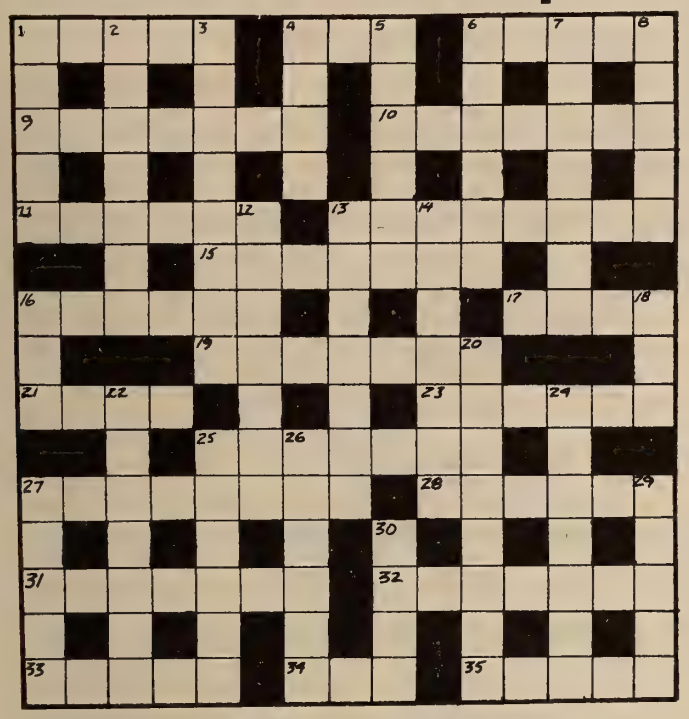
The Anglican Church of Canada will soon appoint an Anglican chaplain on the Queen's campus, the Ontario synod decided this week.

He will be a "priest-associate" at the church of St. James, on Union Street near Humphrey Hall, and paid jointly by that church and by the diocese of Ontario.

The Rev. Gordon Hendra, minister at St. James, said the chaplain might live at an apartment building at 148 Barrie Street which the church owns.

"A basement apartment could be a student drop-in centre," Hendra said, "and the ground floor facilities used by the Anglican church's appointee as chaplain on the Queen's campus."

And the Rev. Malcolm Norman, of the Church of the Good Shepherd in Kingston, commented that he thinks students "believe in the Christian concept, but for the stressing of denominations, no, they're not denominational-minded."



An "unidentified represtntive" of the diocese of Ottawa told The Kingston Whig-Standard that he "hasn't noticed any great upsurge in Christianity" at campuses which have Anglican chaplains, "but, on the other hand, I wouldn't like to see it withdrawn."

The official chaplain at Queen's, paid by the university, is the Rev. Dr. A. Marshall Laverty, of the United Church of Canada.

There is a Roman Catholic priest at Newman House near the campus, a part-time Lutheran chaplain, and a rabbi at Hillel House.

Queen's has about 1300 Anglican students, the synod meeting was told.

Journal crossword puzzle number 3

ACROSS
1. Equine
4. Part of body used during lectures
6. Calm fears
9. Record of meeting
10. Anti-Christmas figure
11. Marks on graph paper
13. Checked out the truth
15. Greeted militarily
16. Hind end
17. Plural of wast
19. Quiet
21. Former U.S. president
23. Four quarts
25. Sports car
27. Answer
28. Leads out
31. A whippersnapper
32. Something that grains
33. Forgetful river
34. English town
35. Filthy money

DOWN
1. American comedy
2. Sweet little curl
3. Muscle which straightens one out
4. Opposite of if then
5. Red like an apple
6. Fearful
7. Like a lion
8. Give in
12. French general until 1940
13. Snoopy bird
14. Homeless Pakistani
16. Used with ball
18. 2000 pounds
20. Corncrake
22. German imperialist
24. Short in speech
25. Staple drink
26. Stuttering insect
27. The wheel of a spur
29. What waiters and tennis-players do
30. Without beauty

TO SUBLET: two-bedroom apartment in married students' complex. Available December 1. Phone 549-1257 after 5:30 or leave message at international centre office.

AMS meeting

Monday night the AMS will leave the shelter of the McLaughlin Room and hold its regular meeting in the centre common room of McNeill House.

All students are welcome at this meeting, and can make motions and speak in an attempt to influence the central student government of the university.

The meeting in McNeill begins Monday at 7 p.m.

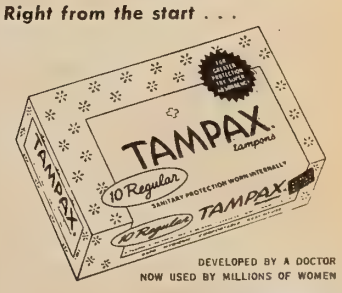
JADE GARDEN RESTAURANT
Specializing in QUALITY Chinese Food and Canadian Dishes
TAKE OUT - and DELIVERY SERVICE
CALL 542-3033

Remember when you used to skate on your ankles?

Well, everybody's got to be a beginner sometime. And now, isn't that gorgeous feeling of whizzing over the ice worth those first, awkward steps?

Learning to use Tampax tampons is a lot easier. In fact, you won't believe how comfortable, how easy they are to use until you've tried them.

Tampax tampons were developed by a doctor, so you know they're safe. They come in three absorbency-sizes: Regular, Super, Junior. No other tampons do. And one will be perfect for you.



They have a silken-smooth container-applicator that makes insertion correct and comfortable, every time. And for extra safety, the withdrawal cord is chain stitched the entire length of the tampon. Disposal is no problem either, because both the applicator and the tampon are completely flushable.

Tampax tampons. Millions of girls all over the world have tried them. And use them. Some day you'll remember when you first tried them too.

And you'll be glad you did.

Right from the start . . .

DEVELOPED BY A DOCTOR
NOW USED BY MILLIONS OF WOMEN

TAMPAX TAMPONS ARE MADE ONLY BY CANADIAN TAMPAX CORPORATION LTD., BARRIE, ONTARIO

The ideal car will go 60 mph

The mechanical engineers who are building "the ideal urban vehicle" have announced some details of their design.

It will carry six passengers, cost $2000 or less when mass-produced, go up to 60 miles an hour, and survive for half a million driving miles.

And, to conform to the rules of the contest in which the car will be entered, it will be "low in pollution, safe, economical" and "handles easily, reduces urban congestion, has a low maintenance schedule and can be easily repaired by a handyman".

Six Canadian universities and a number in the United States are taking part in the contest, which will be judged in Chicago next summer.

The exact body material of the Queen's entry has not yet been determined, but will probably be a high-impact plastic with built-in colour; "so paint chips won't be a problem". Corrosion-resistant aluminum or steel will be used for the frame.

Design teams – students in mechanical and other disciplines – are working out the details of the car "just for the satisfaction of building the best car", according to project coordinator Tim Secord, of Science 72.

The finished product will be a small car, only five feet wide and ten feet long. It will be propelled by a diesel and hydraulics system which the students are developing. And it will cost forty thousand dollars to build the first one.

Unlike most propulsion systems, the Queen's car will have the capacity to store unused energy for release at a later time when peak power is needed. Because of this feature, called an accumulator, the car will need only a small power plant, a 20-horsepower diesel motor, to produce a peak power output the same as that of a 100-150 horsepower engine.

The car will differ from present-day automobiles in many other aspects. There won't be a transmission, differential, or driveshaft – and hence no axles. Instead, the car will use wheel-mounted motors, powered by the accumulator, which will allow for "regenerative braking" (the recovering of lost energy caused by heat and friction of conventional braking systems).

No current automobile uses a diesel-hydraulics system. Secord said research has uncovered only three previous attempts to build such a car, all during the 1950's or earlier, before space technology and materials such as titanium.

The design team has religiously followed two criteria – simplicity and practicality. The car's doors, when opened, will slide into a recess in the body; the upper glass part into the roof, and the lower solid part under the car.

One of the competition's objectives is "to stimulate a project-oriented approach in engineering education which will incorporate ecological and social considerations as a basis in the design process."

The Queens car will fulfill these objectives and more. For instance, it will meet the U.S. emission controls proposed for the automobile industry for 1975, rather than 1973 as stipulated in the contest rules.

A number of safety features are being incorporated. The bumper will be capable of absorbing without damage an impact of five m.p.h. into fixed barriers.

Guiding the design team on passenger support, location, and instrument panel design – areas involving the man-machine interface -- are 15 students from the psychology department who are tackling these problems as part of G.M.E. Michaut's course "Psychology of Work and Skill", psych 380.

The psychology students, for example, are working on the design of a panel so that the instruments are in the best visual position for all kinds of driving and require a minimum amount of eye movement away from the road.

In addition to Michaud, a number of faculty members are involved, including E. F. Kurtz and K. L. Murray of mechanical engineering, and C. Mulvenna of engineering drawing, who are the faculty advisors to the eight mechanical engineering students working on the project. Two graduate students are also working on the project as part of their thesis work.

The team hopes to have a comprehensive design by December 1, a detailed design in February, construction started in April, and road testing carried out in July. And then, in August, it's off to Chicago.

Bews News

By George Smith
and Ross Feldman

With only two weeks left in the term most of the fall sports have been completed. Although playoffs are in process for indoor softball, volleyball and 5-pin bowling, championships in rugger (Law 72), soccer (PHE), football (Law 72) have been settled. The football final between Law 72 and Commerce 72 was one of the highlights of the Bews season. Law 72 required 6 overtime quarters to subdue Commerce 72 32-30 in the two game total point series.

The fall interfaculty schedules in football, soccer, and rugger have been run off, noteable only in their poor participation and mediocre play. With the interfaculty sports in progress simultaneously with the Bews playoffs, it was a problem of too much going on at once. The whole concept of interfaculty sports was brought up at the MIAC meeting and passed on to the Expansion subcommittee for further discussion.

The continued domination of PHE in the Bews was brought up for another airing at the meeting. With the boys from Phys. Ed. once again beginning to pull away from the pack, some of the sticks questioned a Bews system where a unit could aspire to was second place behind PHE.

A broadening of Bews activities to include sports not also on the PHE curriculum was proposed. One suggestion was a neuroanatomy competition -- an unlimited event where teams from all faculties would test their skill in dissecting and identifying cranial nerves in dogfish sharks. A round robin tournament in discounting future cash inflows was discussed, however decision on any new ideas for Bews restructuring must come from the Expansion subcommittee, which will be meeting after Christmas to determine next year's programme.

In conclusion, I would like to congratulate Bill (Killer) Wilson for battling his way to the championship of the brutal horseshoe pitching competition.

Squash

The Squash Courts and Handball-Paddleball Courts in the Physical Education Centre will be repaired by Donolo Construction during the period Dec. 13 to Jan. 8 inclusive.

It is intended to have the construction company work on no more than two courts at one time so that disruptions of the use of the counts will be kept minimum.

Alpine Skiing

The Queen's Women's Alpine Ski team will hold an organisational meeting Tues., Nov. 30 at 7 p.m. in the Women's Locker Room at the Phys. Ed. centre. Please attend if interested.

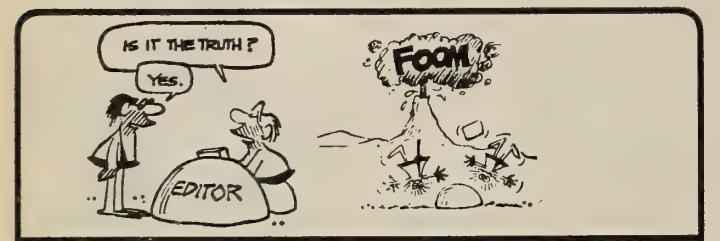
Fencing

Women first

The Women's Fencing team travelled to Montreal for a tri-meet against McGill and McMaster last weekend. The Queen's girls placed first in the round robin competition. The meet was held primarily to give the girls experience in competition.

Patty Manly of Queen's was voted best fencer of the day. Judy Krupanszky also had a good day for Queen's. A very good year of competition is expected from the girls.

Men second



The Men's Fencing team competed in a Foils-only Invitational Tri-meet at Ryerson on Saturday. The host team took first honours, followed by Queen's and York.

None of the Queen's competitiors, however were regular foil fencers as the regulars had to remain behind for classes. One of Queen's best, Jim Lamont, is in the hospital and unable to compete.

CLASSIFIEDS

SNOWBALL Variety Night auditions Friday, December 3, 12:30 to 2:30 and 6:30 to 9:30. Groups or individuals with ideas or talent contact Debbie Pepler, 544-1468. People interested in backstage work contact Don McKay.

FOR SALE: Sony tape deck, model 352D 4-track stereo. Brand new, still under warranty, $195.00. Call Gray Savage, 546-4160.

CLASSIFIEDS

GOT ANY old books (texts, paperbacks etc.) that you aren't using? If so, the prisons' book discussion groups would love to have them. Drop them off at the Student Volunteer Bureau office Mon-Fri, 10-4.30, 2nd floor Union, University Street entrance.

ART WORK for the Red Room: $150 to the successful artist, and deadline for working drawings is December 3. Hand in to Mrs. Denyse Williams at the art centre your plans for major art work (e.g. painting at least 4 x 6 feet) to decorate ASUS clubroom.

GW AND SIMMONS: even with the tripod, you still got your University Avenue pic reversed -- base and emulsion are different you know, as are left and right.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

REMINDER -- you must keep your pink student card until next September if you want your yearbook.

FOR SALE: new, fully-warranted Nikkormat, 58 mm fl.4 lens, $250.00. Also, one-year-old Minolta SRT 101, with 55 mm fl.7 lens, 2x teleconverter and 200 mm soligor lens, $225.00. Mac Gervan, 549-2232.

FOR SALE: stereo amplifier, 60 watts. Frequency response 25 - 1800. $100. Call 544-0179.

FOR SALE: guitar and amp Health Kit, has three channels, guitar, mike, bass. Reverb, tremolo fuss, brightness and bass boost; with two 12-inch speakers and horn. Excellent condition, $450. UniVox guitar and plush case, very good action, fine condition. $75. Call 544-7546.

STUDENT Volunteer Bureau still needs volunteers for senior citizens programs, Sunday schools, Kingston free school, scouts and guides, Ongwanada and Kingston psychiatric hospitals, Drop-ins, and nursery schools. There are also some other very special needs. If you'd like to be a volunteer or have filled out an application and haven't been placed drop around and we'll do our best to help you. Remember SVB is in the Union, 2nd floor, University Street entrance, 10 to 4:30 Mon. to Fri.

FOUND, black kitten, Divison and Earl. Phone 544-9656.

GEOFFY -- Happy Birthday Hon. I like you; I like you a lot! B.

ROGER: you owe $25.83 for the phone, $14.45 for heat and $5.00 for rent for a total of $45.28. Subtracting the $30 Don owed you leaves a balance of $15.28. Please pay!

Pizza Factory
OPEN 4 p.m. to 2 a.m.
544-1221
Free Delivery in City Limits and Fort Henry Heights
Open 7 Days a Week

The DSC of the Department of Economics
PROUDLY UNLEASHES THE BIG Economics Smoker & Animal Show
8 p.m. Friday, Nov. 26.
Upper Common Room, Union

AMS Outer Council Meeting
7:00 Monday, Nov 29
Upper Common Room
McNeill House
TOPIC: The future of the AMS and Student Government in General
All students welcome!

Don't miss out on the fun . . .
JOIN US !

WHITEFACE MOUNTAIN SKI TRIP (JAN. 22-23)

Group will leave Saturday morning by coach with a light lunch served before arriving in LAKE PLACID, N.Y. After a day's skiing at WHITEFACE MOUNTAIN, dinner and lodging will be provided at a privately-owned ski lodge in LAKE PLACID. Saturday night - PBU time of course! We'll start Sunday off with a large breakfast before skiing WHITEFACE again, and an optional dinner will be available for $3-4 before returning to Kingston that night. Total cost (including ski tow passes at $5 day) will be $25 per person if you sign up before Dec. 5th. Transportation ONLY available for $10 per person.

For further Info. Contact: Dave Snell at 544-0178
or Bob Morine at 544-0628

Birth Control and Abortion
Information and Referral Centre

Purposes of the centre:
+to accumulate and centralize any and all information regarding birth control and abortion
+ to assess the value of existing facilities such as the Student Health Service, KGH clinics,
+ to be able to give advice, information and referral service to anyone who asks for it
+ and to provide more than this. To be able to follow up referrals and if the person who comes to us is worried, frightened or possibly pregnant to be with her or him for however long necessary; in other words to go through the hassle together.
++ We are primarily concerned with the dispensing of information and literature, referrals and especially talking with and just being there.

Hopefully throughout the year we will sponsor such things as seminars, talk sessions or films.

We are not professionals, yet we are in contact various reputable professional people and agencies.
+++ If you need us or just want to get some things together please phone or come in. Someone will always be there between the hours of 3 p.m. - 11 p.m.

165 University Ave., Tel. 547-2806
(just two houses behind the Union)

G-G's Down Gaels

By Ron Pratt

Queen's Golden Gaels suffered through their second loss of the season Tuesday night at Ottawa as the University of Ottawa outhustled the Gaels 7-4 in an OUAA Eastern division clash. The loss was a key one for the Gaels who had hoped to stay close to the undefeated Laurentian team in the fight for first place.

Ottawa wasted little time in taking advantage of the Gaels' long trip to the capital as they scored twice in the first five minutes on goals by Bert Aube and Steve Aubrey. Both goals came as the Gaels' forwards failed to cover the points in their own end. Aube's goal was a deflection while Aubrey's shot from the point was screened as the Gaels bunched up in front of gloaie Clyde Harris.

However, as the period progressed, the Gaels found their skating legs and captain Morris Mott scored from the slot after Stan Galt and Mike Lynch had contributed some fine work in the corners. Queen's continued to press Ottawa but two penalties, both questionable calls, to Colin Loudon and Dave Melloy left the Gaels two men short for a minute and twenty seconds. The Gaels were forced to concentrate on stopping the Gee Gee power play and the penalty-killing of Graham Closs, Lynch and Mott thwarted their attack. The first period ended with Ottawa ahead 2-1.

Moving into the second period, Bob Aube deked Harris after the defense failed to clear a loose puck and the goal gave Ottawa a 3-1 lead at the 5:50 mark. The Gaels refused to quit and came back to narrow the margin to one goal when Bruce Cameron delfected Mott's drive from the point past goalie Alain Larose while Ottawa was a man short. At this point, Queen's was carrying the play to the Gee Gees who appeared shaken and disorganized by the Gael's hitting and forechecking. But for some reason, the Gaels eased up and Bob Aube scored his second goal to send Ottawa ahead 4-2. Aube backhanded the puck from a sharp angle after taking a fine pass at the Gaels' blueline from linemate Pierre Chartier. With the score at 4-2, Gaels' Closs was penalized for interference at the 15:15 mark and once again the Queen's penalty killers and Harris' goaltending saved the Gaels from falling behind by three goals.

The Gaels had their chances to score as well when both Bob Smith and Norm Goulet drove sizzling slapshots at the Gee Gee net only to have the drives rattle the goalposts. The second period ended on an unfortunate note for the Gaels who were not only trailing 4-2 but were forced to open the third period with Mike Lynch serving an unbelievable elbowing penalty. Lynch was penalized after he had thrown the best bodycheck by a Gael thus far in the season and the subsequent penalty seemed to take away the much-needed aggressiveness of the Queen's team.

The final period was nothing but a nightmare for Queen's. The team appeared to tire and were outscored 3-1 as Pierre Chartier, Bob Aube (wit his 3rd) and Dan Farant tallied to give Ottawa their 7-4 victory. The Gaels nevertheless had their chances to catch the Gee Gees when Stan Galt's backhander at 6:48 left Queen's trailing 4-3. But Chartier's powerplay goal with Loudon in the penalty box took the incentive and momentum away from the Gael attack. Aube's powerplay goal at 15:25 and Farant's short-handed score at 17:02 quickly smashed any Gaels' hopes for a comeback. In fact, the line of Aube, Aube and Chartier really killed the Gaels as it scored five of Ottawa's goals.

Queen's certainly put in a determined effort and cannot be faulted with quitting. But they made the same mistakes as they did in last Saturday's game with Laurentian. They had difficulty moving the puck out of their own end and early in the game appeared disorganized. One appreciable development was the aggressiveness of the defense who continually and successfully forced the play at the Queen's blueline rather than backing into their own end. The Gaels had numerous chances to score after the defense had stopped Ottawa but inaccurate passing and shooting prevented them from capitalizing on their chances. The Gaels have now allowed 14 goals in their last two games and that is simply too many. The defensive performance of the club as a whole must improve if the Gaels are to embark on a winning streak.

- mossman

John Smith drives down boards vs. Ottawa

Copying and Duplicating

The 3600 III Xerox Duplicator provides fast, excellent, thesis reproduction, photographic reproduction, solids and halftone reproduction, sorting and collating, and background clearing. Quality book copying and transparency reproduction can also be provided by our 720 Xerox Copier.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

Monday thru Saturday
noon 'til 1 p.m.
its . . .
The Round Table

Mr. BOJANGLES ROOM a discotheque

Get in on a DIFFERENT Atmosphere!!.Dance to the latest in top sounds!! A new image -- a lively spot -- Come to see Bojangles -- You'll like it!! AT

The Round Table

Fully Licenced
Home of the Sunday Roast
Beef Buffet -- 542-7337

Bring anybody out for dinner -- great food from 2.99 -- every night.

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

If you have a
'LUST' for world travel,
'WANDER' over to the
to Leonard Field on January 14th, 1972 for the IRC - WRC Semi-Formal

WANDERLUST II

BE ALERT

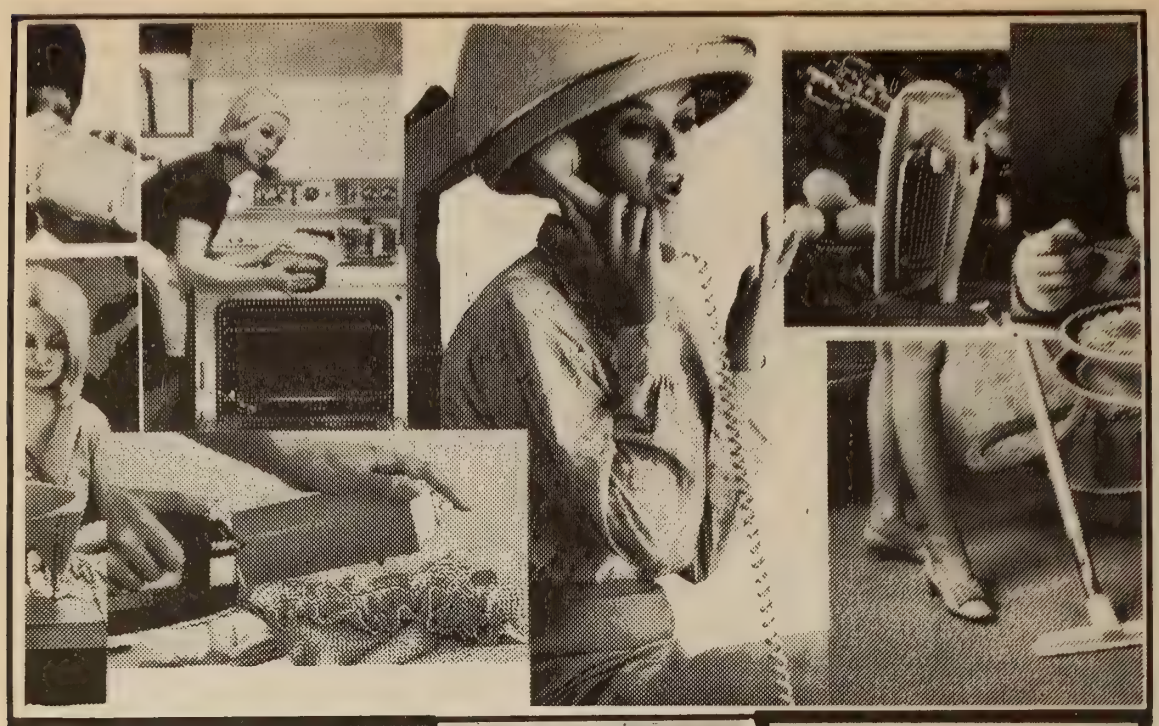
To sneak thieves who have stolen a number of wallets from unoccupied offices recently. To certain magazine salesmen and sales ladies who are working the various universities in Ontario. Their credentials are as spurious as the material they purport to sell.

Aunt Lucy's Restaurant
Licensed of Course
STEAKS - SEAFOODS
PIZZA - SPAGHETTI
and
KENTUCKY FRIED CHICKEN

St. James' Church
UNION and BARRIE
KINGSTON

9.00 a.m. - HOLY COMMUNION
11.00 a.m. - WHITE GIFT FAMILY SERVICE - The Rector
4.00 p.m. - Sunday afternoon Recital
7.30 p.m. - EVENING PRAYER

ST. ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

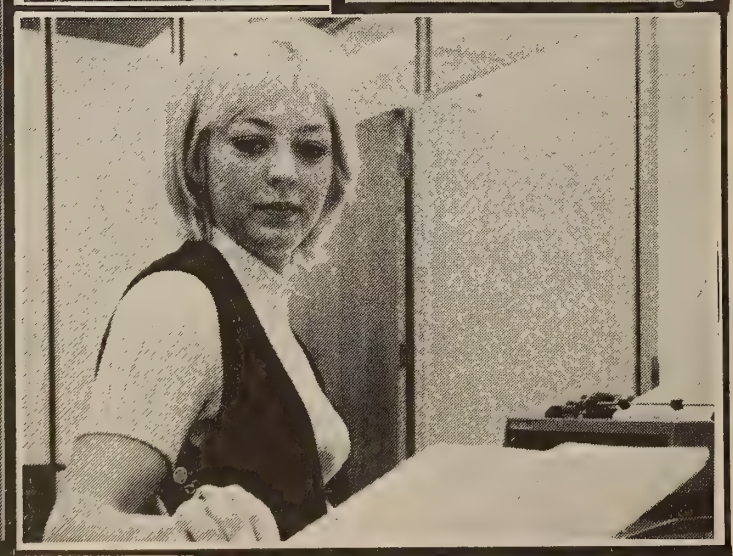


Reverend Max V. Putnam, B.A., D.D., Minister
Christopher C. Hunt, ARCO, Director of Praise

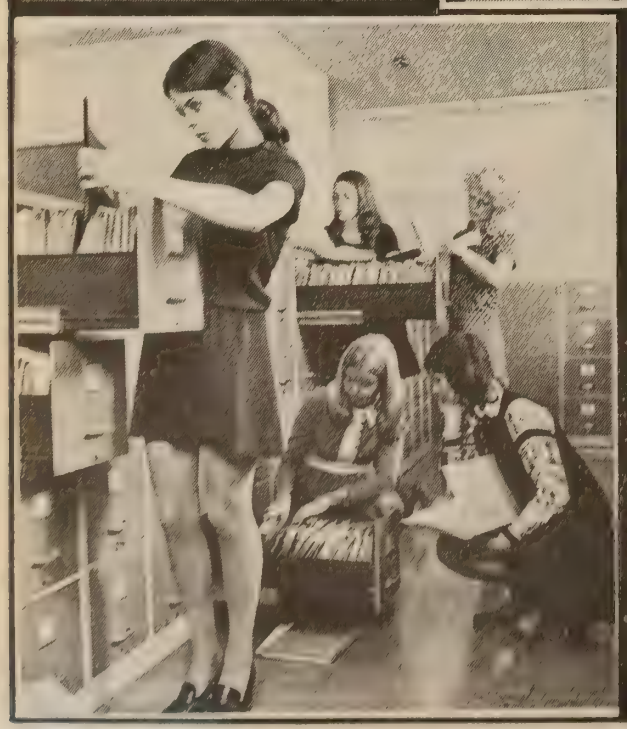
10.00 a.m. Young Adult Bible Study
11.00 a.m. Morning Worship

7.00 p.m. Evening Worship
7.30 p.m. "Radio Ministry" CKLC

8.15 p.m. Youth Fellowship



TUESDAY, 7.30 p.m.
Bible Study



for women only

Despite growing acceptance of the women's-liberation philosophy, few women have yet managed to extricate themselves from the Compassion Trap -- that pervasive social philosophy that believes that woman's primary social function is to provide tenderness and compassion.

Through the exercise of these traits, the belief runs, women have set themselves up as the exclusive model for protecting and nurturing others. Fundamental to this model is the synthesizing of fragemented elements into a viable whole -- a basic ingredient of any society's survival and one that informs the activities of every woman, whether in one-to-one relationships, or in keeping the family united, or in maintaining a home that eases the day-to-day living of those it shelters.

This arbitrary definition of woman's prime function has encouraged hypertrophy in a circumscribed part of the feminine psyche, while other qualities have yielded to gradual but persistent attrition. This manipulation of women's psychological resources is exploitation as blatant as the economic version that keeps them out of higher-salaried jobs and pays them less than men at all levels. Furthermore, it has much in common with the more gross exploitative view of women as purely sexual objects.

The Compassion Trap, with its underpinning philosophy and social systems, subverts and distorts both the individual identities and the social roles of women. This anachronistic perception of their innate characteristics and social capacities leads to a great deal of confused thinking and frustrated and ineffectual activity. The resultant misplacement of vital energies has equally negative effects upon women, who are caught in these self-defeating trivialities, and upon society, which is deprived of the many significant contributions women might make.

The framework within which this model has developed and flourished is the family, a social organism that originated from the biological imperative to assure the successful reproduction of the species and the survival of the offspring into independent maturity.

"both family and professional commitments incorporate the insidious notion that the needs of others should be woman's major, if nor exclusive, concern."

This domestic paradigm, the primary device for keeping women in both practical and emotional bondage, also has a potent influence on women's activities outside the home. The single woman and the married woman who have made a partial escape into a professional role frequently find themselves in the same bind that the housewife and mother are in, confronting similar demands and reacting with similar responses.

Although it is commonly said that this work is most appropriate for, or congenial to, women's nature, the more significant and prosaic explanation is that only these professions have been open to women in any large numbers until very recent times. The most familiar of the women-dominated professions are secretarial work, nursing, teaching, social work, psychology, and occupational, physical and speech therapy. Their position in the hierarchy of social values, the small degree of direct executive power they carry compared with that wielded by professions that have more prestige and the functions they involve all help to explain why they have been ceded graciously to women and informally defined as the legitimate province of women.

The emergence of the helping professions on a significant scale from the middle of the 19th Century was the psychosocial counterpart of the general economic trend that shifted industrial activity out of the small personal setting of individual homes into larger impersonal centers, usually factories. This shift made it easier to institute the division of labor that was a prerequisite for extracting maximum profit from industrial enterprise. It provided an opening for technological specialization and the eventual breakdown of complex productive processes into numberless minute, repetitive activities.

In the same way, the proliferation of the helping professions into a complex array of welfare services took many of the more highly specialized aspects of the nurturing and protective functions out of the home. This development was necessary partly to keep pace with the social problems that were an inevitable by-product of technological specialization in industry. In addition, when one or both parents were out of the home for a substantial part of the day, they had to delegate

the compassion trap

culturating functions. Thus the synthesizing role traditionally ged by women in the home was translated to a wider sphere ad its influence through a broader range of activities. Instead addition to) keeping the family intact and maximally functomen became involved in housekeeping tasks on behalf of t large and assumed responsibility for keeping its operation harging this mandate, working women were subject to the and standards of responsibility almost identical to those ced in the home. Both family and professional commitments ate the insidious notion that the needs of others should be major, if not exclusive, concern. Implicit in the role that rom this notion is the virtue of subordinating individual needs fare of others and the personal value and supposed reward of satisfaction from this exercise. This indirect expression of nd skills and these secondhand rewards are probaly the chief that distinguish women from men in their professional lives. y, woman's shift away from domesticity did not involve a gical emancipation from the pervasive concept of protection uring. Even worse, women have seen their supposed social gradually turned to their disadvantage, blunt their protest, their escape from the confining role. They have been d from taking action on their own behalf for fear of negative ions on others toward whom they stand in a protective role. have kept unsatisfactory marriages going for the sake of ldren. Unattached women have sacrificed career opbecause of other claims on their emotional resources, such or sick relatives. Employed women have weakened their equal treatment and professional equity by their reluctance he final sanction of walking out, for fear of the adverse efients.

find it extremely difficult to accept the short-term exof permitting (or even failing to prevent) harm to others, the long-term results may be highly beneficial.

culturation to the ideal of constant helpfulness, and their early habit of thought that contrains them to this emotional indenture, produce a high level of susceptibility to this very argument, particularly when extricating themselves from its premises takes so much intellectual effort and emotional fortitude.

A lot is said and written about the exploitation of women as sexual objects to further the psychological needs of the male and the consumer needs of an over-producing economy. What I am talking about is a process in which psychological attributes are subject to similar prostitution and misuse. This applies to the invaluable secretary, the personal assistant at the executive level, the woman physician in a rigidly structured medical hierarchy, the social worker, the nurse, the teacher, and many others in feminine jobs who feed their skills into a social program that they have rarely designed and that with few exceptions is geared to the maintenance of society's status quo in all its destructive aspects. Emotional manipulation of this sort distorts women's vision and creates the illusion that they are making a valuable contribution to society's well-being.

On examination, this illusion is impossible to maintain on several counts:

1) Today's society is primarily committed to destruction, both obvious and subtle. Even benign social institutions such as peace movements or progressive political groups are riven by divisiveness and hostilities.

2) Almost every human relationship found between human beings operates from a baseline of exploitation and self-interest rather than from one of mutual trust. The profit motive guides the social goals of most individuals and groups. In this context, women face a devastating dilemma: their traditional investment of skill and energy in other people's enterprises must either be dispensed with or turned to the immoral end of advancing the personal ambitions of ruthless individuals (or groups) or shoring up the crumbling efforts of inadequate ones.

3) Women cannot appropriately fulfill their time-honored function of ional manipulation distorts women's vision reates the illusion that they are making a ble contribution to society's well-being."

"women must abandon the role of the compassionate sibyl who is at everyone's beck and call."

eless, professionals in the helping areas have started to sort of emotional blackmail by deliberately participating in trikes and walkouts. New York City's social workers and ol teachers both have demonstrated rigorously the nd value of forcibly protesting conditions that are inimical es (conditions that therefore in the long run must also have effect upon the clients and children for whom the women tective responsibility).

rative that women feel justified in taking this stand when it y. To insure that they are not constantly lured into the of behavior for fear of doing harm, they need to examine n today's society, and particularly the psychological conhey make to the collusive pattern that so easily perverts nent. Before they can put an end to this unsatisfactory ney must look into the reasons that it persists even in the h frustrating consequences.

nt explanation that is not immediately obvious has to do aracteristics of society and the pressures put on women in of social transition.

ragmented world makes it essential for every individual f individuals to have an easily defined and socially reinthat will preserve a sense of identity and counteract the the relentless assault of status-conscious, competitive m.

f their ambiguous status, women are especially prone to lly alientating influences. They find it tempting to be as the person or group that has special understanding and is the willing repository for everyone else's unsolved his overriding need to feel useful in a social system that in ts accords little opportunity for significant participation women leap at an offer of involvement, even when it ng their underlying frustration and disappointment at the tionalization that personal ambition and success are The other side of the coin is that women's personal acreciprocal assistance because it depends on a social-cohesiveness level that today's social scene does not attain.

In my own field, social work, this pointless operation is particularly glaring. As a profession we are asked to address ourselves to individual social problems that are amenable only to temporary alleviation because of the social pathology from which the problems spring.

In many areas of serious social maladjustment, social workers could hasten a solution if they withheld their remedial intervention and permitted critical stresses to mount to explosive levels. This action would force a drastic and more basic attack on the underlying problems instead of a piecemeal concern with the more superficial symptomatic manifestations. Very few of us, either as individuals or as employees of a particular agency, would feel comfortable taking this seemingly ruthless path if it meant permitting the continuation of suffering that could be prevented, even though the long-range gains might be considerable.

This short-range focus on social and personal problems is another illustration of the Compassion Trap. It partially explains why women social workers occupy a small proportion of the profession's executive posts, which would give them power to plan long-range preventive services as well as those of the more immediate remedial kind. The majority have stayed at the practitioner level and concerned themselves with the narrower area of individual interpersonal problems. Their intuitive and empathic qualities have had a good effect but little total accumulative impact in proportion to the extent, nature and complexity of the social problems that challenge the profession today. From another perspective, social workers, particularly women, are at a further disadvantage because their profession has a relatively low status. Their colleagues, who represent more dominant power groups in the professional arena, are likely to ignore or overrule their expert formulations of diagnosis and treatment.

By Margaret Adams,
reprinted from Psychology Today.

how it works

In a crisis that demands the full exercise of the compassionate mandate, women are much more ready to push aside a creative enterprise to do so, even though in the long run the latter might represent a social contribution of more lasting value.

Not long ago I spent the weekend with a family of close friends in which both husband and wife are scientific writers. By common consent we three adults decided to reserve Saturday afternoon for a writing session. We turned down all social engagements for that day. My hostess' elderly parents were staying in the house and were expecting a former pupil of the grandfather to visit them for tea -- a very fitting activity that would make minimal demands upon the authors and yet provide a diversion for the house guests. So much for the plans.

Half an hour before the guest was expected, a car drew up and two young men, a young woman, and two small children got out. The former pupil had been driven over by his wife's sister and her family, so that what was designed as a quiet academic tete a tete mushroomed into a family tea party. Naturally, the elderly grandmother was not prepared to cope with four extra unexpected guests, so the two female writers of necessity abandoned their "scribbling" and reverted to their normal roles, dispensing tea and hospitality.

Although there were references to the various literary activites we were all engaged in, the invaders were completely oblivious of the disruption they had caused, obviously seeing my hostess primarily as a housewife and mother not as a scientific woman of letters. Our third writer, the husband, fared better. He remained cloistered in his study, with tea being taken in and apologies for his absence being relayed to the guests. This was quite justifiable, since there was no need to ruin three persons' afternoon. The point is that this behaviour disturbed no one; no one regarded it as unusual.

However, had my hostess and I adopted similar tactics a very different situation would have prevailed. Grandmother would have been upset at having to get tea and entertain four extra persons. The carefully arranged interview between Grandfather and his former pupil would have been spoiled. The visiting family would have gone home embarrassed at having made a social gaffe. My hosts' teen-age daughter would have probably been mortified to see her mother neglect guests. Thanks to the Compassion Trap and our susceptibility to its habitual claims, these vulnerable dependents were spared this painful experience.

On the other hand, as so often happens with women's enterprises, our precious afternoon of creative activity was destroyed and we had to postpone our literary commitments.

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 28,
Friday, November 26, 1971
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters:

Future physician opposes "guaranteed maximum income"

If I had seen Walter G. Spunde's letter of Nov. 19th scrawled upon the door of a stall in a public washroom, amid the usual obscenities, I would have thought little of it other than that it was of remarkable length for such cramped quarters, and that, by choosing such a place, the malevolent little creature that had composed that tirade at least knew its true value. However, Spunde's letter did appear in the Journal, apparently in the spirit of that school of journalism which holds that any opinion, no matter how insane, should be seriously entertained. For the record, this is not my conviction, and, because I cannot withdraw my financial support of the Journal (which was never given voluntarily, anyway), without withdrawing from Queen's altogether, a letter will have to suffice.

Spunde began his letter with the question "Has not every man the right to be poor?" and proceeded to answer it by informing the reader that he defends" the right of every man to choose not to work, to be poor and to starve." This is alright as far as it goes; certainly, if a man wishes to commit suicide, such a course of action is his business (laws to the contrary notwithstanding), although one might argue that a decisively placed injury would do the job much more quickly and with less agony per unit time.

However, Spunde then questions "the right of any man to be rich" and concludes, in the manner of a non sequitur, that there should be a guaranteed maximum income "in the sense that no one will exceed that upper limit." This, of course, is nonsensical for the term "guaranteed" maximum income" does not in any sense imply an upper limit on one's income that one is forbidden (by whom?) to exceed.

What does Spunde mean? First of all, there is no such thing as a "right to be rich", for at whose expense is the wealth to be provided? There is only the right to become rich, which is particularized way of expression the concept of property rights. Spunde does not differentiate between "being" and "becoming"; His target is wealth per se. Now, in effecting a limit on personal income, the limiter must obtain control over individual effort, which means political control: either through the confiscation of income in excess of the limit or through threats of physical violence and imprisonment. Property rights are the precondition of effecting one's right to life; they are the right of use and disposal of the product of one's effort, the end of which is the support of one's life. If one loses control of his property, he loses the control of his life. Such loss, of course, entails the gain of that control by someone else, namely the above-mentioned "limiter"; it literally entails masters and slaves.

Does Spunde offer any valid reasons for his proposal? He asks "Who in this world needs more than $50,000 a year?" and asserts (his diction, not mine) that "anyone who is worth more than this figure ($30,000 p.a.) is a rare genius, whose personal needs are, if anything, less than those of the common man." By what standard is Spunde arriving at these figures? No answer. Who is this "common man"? No answer. Who is this "genuis" and how do the requirements for his survival differ from those of this "common man"? Again, no answer. Who in this world needs, in order to survive, more than a cave, a bearskin and a chunk of raw meat? (If needs are to be Spunde's criteria for personal wealth, these latter three are more to the point: minimal physiological requirements for survival.)

Spunde then informs the reader that "society has a little need for those financial wizards whose only demonstrated ability lies in the accumulation of money (to the detriment of others)". Society, for those of you who may have been wondering is no more than the sum of those individuals who comprise it. If one were to take Spunde seriously, the absurd conclusion would be reached that those "financial wizards" have little need of their own existence - absurd because the concept "need" presupposes the existence of an entity capable of needing.

In the statement quoted in the paragraph above Spunde portrays the productive giants of Western society as phenomena no more curious than a bunch of packrats - neglecting to mention that if those "wizards" and their ancestors-in-spirit had not striven to the utmost of their abilities in the support of their lives, he would not have to advocate his "guaranteed maximum income", because mankind would either never have arisen out of the Stone Age, or would have died out long ago.

As for the "accumulation of money" and its detrimental effects, two errors exist therein. One is the implication that wealth is static, that it grows on trees, so to speak, gained on a first-come-first-serve basis. Nothing could be more fallicious. Wealth is dynamic, i.e. it has to be created, brought into existence by the mental effort (translated into action) of those who undertake its production for the support of their own lives. (The quantity produced is irrelevant to this last principle, which is the ethical basis for the validity of property rights.) And it has been this effort which has carried mankind from caves to skyscrapers via trade and the development of knowledge. The second error is the implication that the "accumulated" money sits and gathers dust. In actuality, this money, which is profit, is the basis for the means by which businesses stay in business: it is put back into research and development, into capital investment and expansion, all of which raise the standard of living, create a net increase in the number of jobs (as no government scheme can) and set more and more of every man's time free from manual labour - and this is detrimental? To whom? Only to a worshipper of the living standard on the banks of the Ganges.

Spunde, in the last third of his letter, is quite careful to anticipate opposition to his proposal. "The poorer people," he states, "will be among the first to oppose such a suggestion as it would mean the loss of one of their dearest (unattainable, and pathetic) hopes." Presumably, he is referring to the rags-to-riches story that has, indeed, occurred in North America, and, while I haven't any statistics on hand, research at the local library will yield support of such a position - support which invalidates the implication that a person cannot rise out of poverty to attain wealth of at least some degree. (Ability is an aspect of wealth's creation that is conspicuously absent from Spunde's considerations.) He also notes that the "bourgeois" will be defended when his plan is "laughed to scorn as undesirable, impracticable and ridiculous" and concludes with "such are the more of our primitive society!" If this society is primitive, then the society at the end of Spunde's machinations is a primeval jungle: A $30,000 a year income ceiling would stagnate, if not destroy, almost every business in North America.

All of Spunde's complaints are presented in the context of a society that "permits" these so-called (By Spunde) evils to occur. What this means is that Spunde considers the right to life and it corollary, the right to property, to be grants to the individual by society, i.e. the state that can be revoked at any time. His plan is based on the unstated, but implicit, assertion that one exists by permission of society. However, since society is only a collection of individuals, this means that Spunde's political context is, literally, a slave state. Does he envisage himself among the permitters or among the permitted? No answer. (The fact is that rights cannot be created or granted or destroyed, but are inalienable from the existence of their possessors; they are the requirements of man's survival as protected in the social context. For example, since the product of one's effort is required for the support of one's life, then in society, which means politically, one posssesses property rights - regardless of whether or not they are honoured and protected by the government of one's society.)

The last thing that Spunde is defending is rights, and as an advocate of "progress in the social fields" (whatever that catchprase means) he has misplaced a verb somewhere: His proposal, if implemented (by some madman) could only lead to the regression of society into the second Dark Age.

(Those of you who saw the film "The Omega Man" may recognize the spirit of Walter G. Spunde in the person of the leader of the monk-like albinoes therein who regarded knowledge qua knowledge as evil and sought to destroy it.)

Norman Eshoo

or, what's the medical practice for but to make money?

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Managing Editors: John Solman. Charles Schwier
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Features Editor: Dave Walker
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks this issue to the usual skeleton staff, and those who finked out on us, and, since she doesn't often get credit, photo assignments manager, Val Jacobsen. Duty man: Lee Perry.

One round trip to Chinese embassy

Dear Editors:

The People's Republic of China has now exploded their eleventh nuclear bomb in the atmosphere (Globe and Mail, 19 Nov.)

Considering the great excitement over the underground explosion by the United States on Amchitka Island, I await with much curiosity the Canadian response.

The C.B.C. has reported that fallout will soon appear over Japan, and in a few days we can expect signs of the explosion in the air over Canada.

Will there be any Canadian reaction?

Will Canadian students picket the Chinese embassy in Ottawa?

Will Pierre Berton go to Peking?

Will Canadian hyprocrisy win the day?

To any Queen's student who will organize and bring off a protest march to the Chinese embassy I will gladly pay the cost of one round-trip bus.

Roderick Robertson
Drama Department

AMS demonstrates "moral irresponsibility"

Dear Editors:

I am most distressed to read in the Minutes of the Outer Council Meeting of Monday, November 15, that Council felt it incumbent upon themselves to make up the replacement value of D. Merrick's car. It seems to me that since the insurance company had given Merrick "actual value at the time of the accident", there was no need to make up any replacement value. Merrick had received replacement value from the insurance company. To say that there is a difference between actual value at the time of the accident and actual replacment value (amounting to $565.00 in this case) is to completely misunderstand what replacement value is. Replacement value is not what the car may be intrinsically worth to the insuree but what the value of the car is on the open market. If Merrick had sold his auto to the A.M.S., the price would have been what the insurance company paid, not that amount plus $565.00.

The A.M.S. has not given Merrick his actual replacement value for a three month old car but they have actually replaced his old car with a brand-new one. One can realize the deep sincerity of the A.M.S. in accepting their moral obligation to Merrick. However, this moral responsibility should not go beyond any monetary losses suffered by Merrick. This, in point of fact, means that the Council's responsibility stopped when the insurance paid up the value of the car. To give Mr. Merrick $565 is to demonstrate moral irresponsibility.

Council members should not be so concerned with setting precedents as they should be with the rationale of what they have done. Hypothetically, if Merrick had smashed up an old '56 Ford with an actual value at the time of the accident of $100, the Council would have granted Merrick additional funds required for actual replacement. That would mean enough money to replace the '56 Ford with a new one -- an amount which today would probably surpass the value of a 1971 Ford. Of course, this is ridiculous. That would be an altogether different situation - we hope. But the theory is the same. If you give the Ford driver 15 years of free driving, you should give Merrick 3 months of free driving. In reality, it cost Merrick $565 to drive his car for 3 months. If after that time he wished to buy a new car again, it would be up to him to pay the $565.

The import of this discussion is that Merrick received for his car just what it was worth to anyone else. He has suffered no monetary loss. Because the Council is morally responsible to all the members of the A.M.S. and not only Merrick, to grant Merrick any money at all is to misappropriate students' funds. However, thanks to Council's generosity with our money, Merrick has not only not suffered a loss but has received a financial gain which should inspire him to make as many more trips to Toronto for the A.M.S. as possible. He can't lose.

Ross Dunsmore

3 cheers for the engineering mentality?

Dear Editors:

Iwas rather amused to see the reaction which appeared in the Nov. 19 Journal to Mr. Steer's comments on the Amchitka test. Like Mr. Steer, I too received the impression that the authors of the Cannikin Blast articles were convinced that the experiment would most probably result in disaster. For example Mr. Edwards' essay of Oct. 28 was titled "On Amchitka, radioactive fish, tidal waves and earthquakes are just a test blast away", and goes on to state "Nor is it possible to place much faith in the predictions of the AEC on what the likely result of the test will be". These appear to discredit the article's latter statement that odds were in favour of the explosion occuring safely. It seems the author has hedged his bets quite nicely - no matter what happened in the test it would be predicted in his essay.

In Mr. Edwards' Journal letter of Nov. 19 he continues on to add that he has "...never seen a coherent argument as to why the tests should be conducted at all".What he actually means is that he has not read of any reason that he agrees with. The rationale behind the blast was to study a possible warhead for the Spartan Anti Ballistic Missel (ABM). The debate over the ABMs was long and hot, but in the end the Political decision was made to go ahead with the project. This necessitated the Amchitka blast. A nuclear warhead is a complex device, and when it is to be redesigned for a new role technical problems creep in. The only way to be completely certain that these difficulties have been solved, as with any other device, is to build one and test it. Mr. Edwards apparently disagrees with the ABM system and thus with the Cannikin Blast, as is his right. Yet his claim that no one who agrees with the test is able to present a coherent argument for it would simply prove to me the words in the song "The Boxer":"..a man hears what he wants to hear and disregards the rest." Please, sir, credit the AEC with some intelligence.

One of the things that puzzles me about the Amchitka protesters is that while complaining about the hypocrisy of those in power they tend to display the same colours themselves. For example many protesters, like Mr. Edwards, question the right of any nation to conduct potentially dangerous experiments. Consider now that on Sept. 25, '71 the U.S.S.R. exploded a multi megaton nuclear device underground in Novaya Zemlya which registered 6.7 on the Richter scale in Uppsolo, Sweden. While this is a relatively stable area, thus reducing the earthquake hazard, the possibility of a radiation leak must still exist. Yet this seemed of no concern to the Amchitka protesters.

Last week the People's Republic of China let off an atomic blast In The Atmosphere. This generated far more radioactivity in the ecosphere than any Amchitka result except a major leak would have allowed. Did Pierre Berton run over to Peking with a petition signed by 130,000 protesters, as Mr. Rannells' letter of Nov. 19 told us he did for the Amchitka blast?

The reasons why neither blast was protested probably has little to do with these countries' ideologies. Yet it does seem rather hypocritical of the protesters to attack only the U.S.A. because, unlike other nations, it announces its tests before they occur.

Another puzzelling detail is the protesters claim the AEC is completely incompetent. Lacking sufficient data to do so I cannot comment on Mr. Rannells' letter concerning the uranium miners' deaths..I therefore invite him to write another listing references to this information. However I do find it interesting that Mr. Edwards letter states the "mass media" is "soft-pedalling" AEC mistakes. Funny that this is the same mass media which embarrassed the U.S.A. government with the Pentagon Papers. Oh, the AEC makes blunders, some of them big ones, yet as Lord Leverhulme said, "The man (organization) who does not make mistakes does not usually make anything". From what I have read the AEC is far more competent than either Mr. Edwards or Mr. Rannells believe.

Finally I wish I could receive the same complement as Mr. Steer did. It seems to me that an "Engineering Mentality" is what this world needs more of. Maybe we could then clean up some of the world's problems rather than just talk about doing so.

Glenn Chapman
Science '72

We don't quite understand this, but . . . .

Dear Editors;

I have just seen a photo with your AMS president's "message" in Queen's Journal, Thursday, October 21, 1971.

I have never seen a more blatant example of fucking student fascism and power tripping. Now I might be just a half-assed prospector and not one of your intellectuals but it appears to me that you people are getting a little carried away with your pseudo-responsible activities. I don't know how you easterners work but when I spent a year at UBC in 1968-69 we certainly didn't have any of that shit. Why don't you get down to your thinking and try to get a little further morally, than breeding your own pigs, long-haired or otherwise. I don't know what you've got around there for campus police but I think you'd be better off with those trained for security, i.e., RCMP, who know how to enforce and use power without being pigs. AMS Constables? Bullshit -- Student Fascism!!

J. Paul Stevenson,
Manson Creek, B.C.

ASUS President condemns WRC treatment of co-ed residence referendum

Dear Editors:

Following the co-ed residence proposals since about mid-October to the present, I find myself appalled at and at a loss to understand the current situation. In November 2nd's edition of the Q.J. we are told that the Vic-Gord-Brock proposal was scrapped because it was "too ambitious" and on the basis of a mock application form distributed in Women's residence there appeared to be no interest among women to live in Gordon-Brockington.

Sometime later a second proposal for co-ed living was put forth by the Co-ed Residence Committee involving Chown Hall and Gordon-Brockington. Tuesday Nov. 9th's Journal contains a report that on the basis of a second mock application form distributed in women's Residence which was completed by 56 per cent of the women, 73 applied for the 101 positions open to them in the co-ed res. If we extrapolate to 100 per cent of the probable number of applications increases to about 140, quite enough to fill the 101 places.

In Tues. Nov. 16th's Journal two statements are made by the WRC: the first is that the vote to be taken on the Gord-Brock-Chown proposal would not be binding on the WRC, and therefore one can assume its purpose was to get an expression of opinion from the women now in residence. Secondly, the WRC president stated that the WRC is in favour of the principle of co-ed res on campus for 1st year students.

In Friday, Nov. 19th's Journal we have a report of the non-binding referendum which shows men strongly in favour (89 per cent) and a majority of women (65 per cent) in favour of the proposal. We further learn that strong opposition to the proposal came from Chown (55 per cent of the no-vote). Upon some inquiry one can discover that the reason for this was not because most of these women were against co-ed res, but rather because they did not wish to see Chown become a men's residence, thus precluding women from living there at all, a motive which some people have suggested as being selfish in light of the purpose of the referendum.

Finally, in today's (Nov. 23) Journal we have the report of the joint meeting of the residence governing councils which I find disgusting. From my impression of the situation it appears that the WRC is using any available excuse at hand in their attempts to block the co-ed residence proposal.

The Journal quotes Miss Davidson (Pres. WRC) as saying that "Everyone has some arbitrary figure for deciding upon an issue. Ours is 666.6 and therefore our decision to reject the proposal was made for us."

This is pure and simple rubbish. Page 6, article 13, of the WRC constitution, Feb. '71, states: Additions and amendments may be made to the constitution on a two-thirds majority of the votes polled; this shall apply in the case of residence rules . . . A general ballot vote may be held on controversial rule changes and constitutional changes at the discretion of central committee."

Firstly, it was stated at least twice in the Journal that the referendum would not be binding on the WRC and thus on those grounds alone it can be seen that the WRC claims to be "bound in this matter" by the constitution on a non-binding referendum is nonsense.

Secondly, any intelligent reading of article 13 will make it clear that this article was not, nor could it reasonably be stretched to cover the situation at hand. The referendum was plainly not an addition or change to the WRC constitution, nor could it ever be construed to be a controversial rule change. The co-ed res proposal was the result of more than two-years work culminating in a committee report dealing with a new concept of undergraduate residence living, and the WRC attempts to apply their constitutional rules to this issue are, to say the least, unreasonable and arbitrary (to use Miss Davidson's word.)

It is my feeling that the WRC and perhaps others are trying to block the co-ed residence proposal in the face of a majority of students in both residences who favour the proposal.

It is clear to me that students in residence both favour and want co-ed residence and, as it is they who pay the $1100 a year to live there, they should be listened to! In conclusion I should like to quote Article 1 of the WRC constitution:

"It is the aim of the Women's Residence Councils to represent and govern the Women in residence; eliciting and expressing the resident's opinion in order to provide pleasant and stimulating atmosphere, and conditions suitable for study."

Taken broadly I think the WRC is failing miserably.

To the students in residence who want a co-ed residence, don't give up.

Marv Boos,
President ASUS.

ORIENTATION '72

Applications are being accepted for Gael for Orientation '72. Gaels will be involved either in freshmen in that their responsibility will be a Gael group or as organizational Gaels will be responsible for organizing events.

All applications will be having 10 - 15 minute informal interviews which will be held in the first week of classes in January. Interview times will be known by Dec. 10. Applications should be submitted by Dec. 3 to the AMS office.

GRANT HALL

SERIES #4

Monday, November 29
8:30 P.M.

ROBERT
DE GAETHANO
PIANIST

Beethove, Barber, Brahms
Sponsored by
Queen's University
Division of Concerts

MUSIC DEPARTMENT,
QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

CONCERT

THE NEW YORK HARP ENSEMBLE &
THE VAGHY STRING QUARTET
8:30 SATURDAY 27 NOVEMBER '71
GRANT HALL ADMISSION FREE

ALMA MATER SOCIETY

Student Typing Service

Services ESSAYS and THESIS TYPING
Top Quality duplicating on the NEW 3600 III Xerox Duplicator.
720 Xerox and Ditto Copying.

Mon - Thu 8:30 am - 10:00 pm
Fri 8:30 am - 4:30 pm
Sat 12:00 am - 5:00 pm
Sat 1:00 pm - 10:00 pm

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

This Sunday
and every Sunday is The Round Table
The Roast Beef Buffet
Only $2.99
(a regular $3.99 feature)
All You Can Eat
- cold cuts,
desserts, salads,
and ROAST BEEF
EVERY Sunday - 5-10 at
The Round Table
Fully Licensed
Home of Mr. Bojangles
Discotheque
542-7337

Bring anybody for dinner - great food from $2.99 - every night

Clip this coupon - your second cocktail only 25c - in any dining room

inadays

Friday, November 26

3.00 - 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral clinic at 165 University Avenue. 547-2806.

1.30 - 5.30, 8.30 - 9.30 p.m.: Super bash for the Art Centre's 1971-'72 super lottery. Live radio broadcasting from the centre, dancing, viewing of exhibition of local artists, a bar, and goodies to eat. Dress - informal, and everyone invited. Admission is $2.00, which also gets you a lottery ticket. At Agnes Etherington Art Centre.

5.15 p.m.: Women's ice hockey vs U. of T. in the Arena.

8.00 p.m.: African Club's Top Variety Party. Free drinks and refreshments, all welcome in the international centre.

8.30 p.m.: The Drama and English Departments present Maurice Good in his own adaptation of John Synge Comes Next. Free. In Convocation Hall.

Saturday, November 27.

8.30 - 9.30 p.m.: Recreational Swim cancelled.

8.30 p.m.: The New York Harp Ensemble and Vaghy Quartet will present a concert, a preview of the two ensembles' presentation at Carnegie Hall in Grant Hall.

9.30 - 5.30 Display of batique, Flemish weaving, lathed wood, screen prints and blown glass by Multi Media Artists. At Boswell's Books, 73 Brock.

Sunday, November 28

10.30 a.m.: Folk Mass at Dunning Hall Auditorium Coffee and doughnuts afterwards.

7.00 p.m.: Folk Mass at Newman House.

7.00 p.m.: Queen's Chinese Club will organize a buffet at the International Centre Lower Lounge. Members - $1.50, Non-members - $1.75. Tickets available from club executives only.

8.30 - 10.30 p.m.: Beginner's yoga class. Combatants room, gym.

Monday, September 29

7.00 p.m.: Stan Corbett and Michael Morton will discuss The Nature of Morality in the Coffee Room of John Watson.

7.30 p.m.: Drama Department presents Toronto's Studio Lab Theatre, Tickets $1.00 at Drama Department. In Convocation Hall.

8.00 p.m.: Queen's Ski Club meeting in Stirling D. Plans for Tremblant weekend, and announcements of all ski trips. Memberships available.

Tuesday, November 30.

3.00 p.m. - 11.00 p.m.: The birth control and abortion information and referral clinic at 165 University Avenue.

7.30 p.m.: The Queen's Drama Department present Chronicles II in the Studio Theatre.

Wednesday, December 1.

3.00 - 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral clinic at 165 University Avenue.

12.00 p.m. - 5 p.m.: The faculty of medicine symposium for allied health professionals in the School of Nursing auditorium.

3.30 p.m.: The music department will be presenting a lecture on "The Evolution of a Composer" in Dunning Hall.

7.30 p.m.: Chronicles II in the studio theatre.

9.30 - 10.30 p.m.: Beginners Yoga class in the Combatant's room, gymnasium.

Thursday, December 2.

3.00 to 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral at 165 University Ave. (547-2806)

7.00 p.m.: Bridge Club meets in McLaughlin Room of Union.

7.30 & 9.00p.m.: Drama Dept. presents Chronicles II in the Studio Theatre.

7.30 to 9.30 p.m.: The Dept. of Pathology sponsors a Medical Sciences Lecture "Current Concepts of the Pathogenesis of Atherosclerosis", presented by M.R.C. Visiting Professor, R.H. More M.D., in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

8.30 p.m.: Collin's Bay Drama Club presents "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" at the Grand Theatre.

8.30 p.m.: The Music Dept. presents a concert by Queen's Wind and Choral Ensembles in Grant Hall.

Friday, December 3.

3.00 to 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral at 165 University. (547-2806)

7.30 t& 9.00 p.m.: Drama Dept. presents Chronicles II in the Studio Theatre.

8.30 p.m.: Collin's Bay Drama Club presents "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" at the Grand Theatre.

Saturday, December 4.

3.00 to 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral at 165 University. (547-2806)

Sunday December 5.

10.30 a.m.: Folk Mass at Dunning Hall Aud. Coffee and doughnuts afterwards.

3.00 to 11.00 p.m.: Birth control and abortion information and referral at 165 University. (547-2806)

7.00 p.m.: Folk Mass at Newman House.

Concert by the Collegium Musicum vocal consort undder the direction of Wilbur Maust.

THEATRES	Bars
Capitol - Carnal Knowledge	Commodore: Ricky Francis
Hyland - Summer of '42	Pub: Rembrandt
Odeon - Face Off	Shamrock: Coachmen
Friday night bonus - Madrone	401: Sunday Summit
	Manor: Larry Lee and The Chelsea Wind

Vaghy &Harps Coming

Kingstonians will have the opportunity to hear an unusual presentation on Saturday, November 27th, in Grant Hall at 8.30 p.m. The four harps of the New York Wind Ensemble and their director, Aristid von Wurtzler will combine forces with the Vaghy String Quartet in what will be a preview for Kingston of the concert in which the two groups will be performing in Carnegie Hall on December 5th 1971.

The Vaghy String Quartet is familiar to Kingston audiences and needs no further introduction. The New York Harp Ensemble is under the leadership of Aristid von Wurtzler who is internationally recognised as one of the greatest harpist of the Budapest Philharmonic Orchestra after his graduation from the Franz Liszt Academy where he studied with Kodaly. He is presently teaching Harp at the New York University. The four other harpists Rebecca and Martha Flannery, Eva Jasler and Barbara Pniewska - who form the ensemble are all students of his Master classes. The Ensemble, after an auspicious start with numerous appearances in and around New York last year, and in Florida, will make its European debut in 1972. Before going overseas they will be heard, in addition to the concert in Kingston, in Carnegie Hall on December 5th and later at the Lincoln Centre.

Saturday's program will be a varied one ranging from Handel and Bach to the present day. In fact, one work by Tibor Serly - who studied under the composer Bela Bartok - will receive its premiere performance. The work, INNOVATIONS FOR STRING QUARTET AND HARP, one of the very few written for this combination of instruments, was composed especially for Aristid von Wurtzler. Another piece receiving its first performance will be MODERN SKETCHES (with strings and harp, written by Aristid von Wurtzler.

Add to these, works by Alan Hovahness, Andre Gretry, Granados and Sakura Sakura, and the result is a program which should appeal to people of many ages and tastes.

There will be no admission charge for this concert and no tickets will be needed to gain admission.

off the record

by dick Loney

KRISTOFFERSON

By D. Loney

Kris Kristofferson is a songwriter with a talent which embraces the realms of the country music charts while it simultaneously has taken one of his own tunes to the high reaches of the Top 40 Rock charts as well. A female country warbler took his "Help Me Make It Through The Night" to the pinnacle of country success, as did Gord Lightfoot with his "Me and Bobby McGee", while currently, Kristofferson's own vocalizing can be heard on his top ten number "Loving Her Was Easier".

His first album, titled appropriately enough, KRISTOFFERSON, displayed this dichotomy in its containing the author's version of Johnny Cash's hit "Sunday Mornin' Comin' Down" while it also brought forward his witty semi-rock "Blame It On The Stones" which spoofed the automatic parental reaction towards Johnnie's unruly behavior -- "blame it on the Rolling Stones".

Mainly Kristofferson's affinities are with country and folk music however. His second album is named after one of his new songs -- THE SILVER TONGUED DEVIL AND I -- and it presents K.K.'s husky-throated baritone reciting and singing ten songs which are flavoured with both folk and country patterns. The title song as well as "Billy Dee" and "Jody And The Kid", are in the ballad tradition, telling their stories to the backing of Kristofferson's guitar and that of country ace guitarist Jerry Kennedy.

His songs don't receive the customary country type backings -- they are replete with piano and some good orchestrations under the baton of Bergen White -- a name which has recently been seen on the liner notes of Elvis Presley's last few albums. The acceptance of White into the Presley camp says one thing -- class. White provides tasteful horn and string arrangements for Kristofferson's songs such as "When I Loved Her" and "Breakdown".

His current hit leads of the second side of the Kristofferson album No. 2 -- "Loving Her Was Easier (Than Anything I'll Ever Do Again)" -- and its crooned in that low monotone voice that reminds one of the John Cash vocal range, but with even more of a raspy sound. In an extended recitation explaining how "The Pilgrim-Chapter 33" was originally dedicated to Chris Gantry (a guitarist featured on this album), Jerry Jeff Walker, and a host of others, Kristofferson is in the realm of his first album rememberance of Johnny Cash's almost deathly duel with "bennies" and booze. This "pilgrim" is a poet, and a picker and a pusher – a rather mixed bag of accomplishments and in typical Kristofferson fashion he has seen a lot of hardship.

This penchant for the sordid and unpleasant side of life is constantly finding its way into the song-poems of K.K. The final cut on the album is one of those unidentifiable songs about the death of a nebulous "she" who was "far from home" and who "died all alone" -- just for conjecture's sake, we might add that it could very well be an Epitaph for the deceased female rock singer "Pearl" - Janis Joplin.

With such a range and choice in material at his disposal it will be intersting to see just which "mode" of music will be presented by Kris Kristofferson at Sunday's two A.M.S. Concerts at Grant Hall. In all probability he would prefer to be kept out of any particular pigeon-hole and just sing his songs, rather than be nominated a folk singer who does rock and country, or a country singer who has leaned towards songs of social content.

The liner notes would tend to describe the songs on his latest album, as well as offering comment on the subject-matter which finds its way into the songs of Kris Kristofferson. He says: "Call these echoes of the going-ups and the coming-downs, walking pneumonia and run-of-the-mill madness, coloured with guilt, pride, and a vague sense of despair".

THE ENGLISH AND DRAMA DEPARTMENTS JOINTLY PRESENT

MAURICE GOOD

IN HIS

OWN ADAPTATION

John Synge Comes Next

READINGS - IMPERSONATIONS - QUOTATIONS

TONIGHT 8:30

Convocation Hall
Admission Free

THE QUEEN'S DRAMA GUILD

London Theatre Tour

$250 Students
$375 Non Students

Includes all transportation, accommodation, breakfasts and tickets to seven shows

$50 Deposit Required

- with application. Write to the Guild Theatre Tour, Basement, Theology Hall, Queen's.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 20th - SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 27th
FEBRUARY READING WEEK

Bring anybody out for dinner -- Great food from 2.99 -- every night!

It's Time to Book Your Party

or dance or stag or excuse for a drunk

The Round Table

We've got rooms from 5 - 1500 and great food and drink.

Call us . . . Now

The Round Table

Fully licenced - 542-7337

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

A.S.U.S. Art Commission

Students are invited to submit working drawings for an art work to be installed in the Red Room, Kingston Hall. A fee of $150 will be paid to the successful artist on installation of the work.

CONDITIONS:
All submissions to be from students.
Any student may enter.
The work to be of a major size. (i.e. in terms of a painting, not less than 4' x 6')
The artist will be responsible for all cost of materials and installation of work by January 15, 1972.
Entries to be handed in to Mrs. Denyse Williams, Agnes Etherington Art Centre, by Friday, December 3, 1971

BACK PAGE

CANADA

KINGSTON - A 12-man jury acting on the direction of Mrs. Justice William Henderson Tuesday accepted guilty pleas to manslaughter from 12 of the 13 convicts charged with the beating deaths of two other Kingston Penitentiary inmates.

The jury accepted a guilty plea to assault from the 13th man.

Mr. Justice Henderson began sentencing the accused late Tuesday - handing out prison terms ranging from 2 years to 15 years, most of them concurrent to sentences now being served.

The judge in his charge to the jurors asked them to take into account the intentions of the accused and the conditions existing in Kingston Penitentiary at the time of last April's four-day riot when the dead inmates were beaten.

The accused acted under a set of conditions, he said, which "were such as to deprive an ordinary citizen of the power of control."

He painted a picture for the jury, based on the evidence of the month-long trial, of the highly charged atmosphere in the cellblock - controlled by the inmates throughout the riot - in the early hours of April 18 - with fear of an imminent invasion by soldiers, fear of shooting and violence.

Up to that time, Mr. Justice Henderson said, the so-called prison undesirables, the sex offenders, child molesters and informers, had been protected by other inmates.

In the last hours, the undesirables were brought out to the centre of the cellblock dome floor to be used as the first line of defence. The very sight of these undesirables generated an emotional and irrational reponse among the inmates, the judge said.

Then word of an army invasion coming within minutes was flashed through the cellblock. The judge said: "Things got out of hand."

He told the jury that a plea of guilty to manslaughter would satisfy the ends of justice if it could be shown that there was no intent to kill, that no actions were carried out with the presumption of the accused that they would cause death or that the conditions under which the accused acted had deprived them of control.

MONTREAL - Bernard Lortie was sentenced to 20 years in prison Monday for the kidnapping of Quebec Labor Minister Pierre Laporte, on Oct. 10, 1970.

He is the first of four men charged with the kidnap-slaying of Mr. Laporte to be convicted and sentenced on the kidnapping charge.

Beautifying Montreal

MONTREAL - Last week newspaper boxes were banned from city sidewalks as part of a campaign to beautify Montreal, and now Mayor Jean Drapeau is studying the removal of mailboxes and sidewalk phone booths.

Drapeau said Sunday the placement of ugly mailboxes was under discussion with the Post Office and thought was being given to alternatives to Bell Canada's phone booths.

This fits in with Drapeau's beautify Montreal programme in 1967, when he had large billboards set up along the highways leading into Montreal to keep people from seeing the slums, the worst in North America, behind them. (Across the front of these billboards, slum residents had scrawled "Visitez les slums.")

OTTAWA - The Cabinet has approved a further $158-million assistance plan for Canadian manufacturers hurt by the U.S. import surcharge or by other protectionist measures being contemplated in the United States.

Details of the scheme are to be announced in the next few weeks. It will augment the $80-million in non-repayable grants to be paid out over the next five months to maintain employment in plants injured specifically by the 10 per cent U.S. import surcharge that was applied on Aug. 15.

The new plan will authorize the General Adjustment Assistance Board to guarantee up to $150-million in loans from private lenders to firms hurt by the U.S. surchage or by other actions having a like effect.

OTTAWA - The security-weary Trudeau government has been faced with yet another leak of a secret cabinet document.

The third confidential paper - giving approval in principle to a yet unannounced multi-million dollar program for financing native cultural education centres - was dramatically shown to a nation-wide CBC TV audience last night by Alberta Indian leader Harold Cardinal.

And Cardinal, president of the Indian Association of Alberta, angrily used the occasion to announce that the association would not accept any further federal money for new programs and would terminate existing ones.

Cardinal charged the federal government was attempting to use funds promised the association to control its operations.

The decision to withdraw from the federal programs will mean the association giving up from $600,000 to $800,000 for education programs in the current fiscal year and probably $1,000,000 in the next several years, as well as $26,000 in recreation programs this year alone, Cardinal said.

The photostat of the document shown on the CBC public affairs program Weekend last night is an alleged minute of the cabinet committee on social policy on July 16. It bore the Privy Council stamp and the word "confidential."

OTTAWA - Canada's forest reserves are richer by an estimated 4,488 trees and city coffers poorer by about $6,000 because of Ottawa's four-weekend pilot paper pick-up.

That's the official verdict after the last collection Saturday.

City Controller Lawrence Greenberg said Ottawa is the first North American city of its size to attempt city-wide paper recycling.

TORONTO - The survival of the CTV television network next fall became a real question when the Canadian Radio-Television Commission Monday demanded the network explain by Jan. 31 how it plans to meet increased Canadian-content program regulations, due to take effect Oct. 1, 1972.

CTV is at present operating at a 50 per cent Canadian program level and commission rules call for 60 per cent for next season. The network and its stations have said they won't be able to afford it.

The commission's announcement Monday finally rejected this plea.

LONDON, Ont. - A Bell Canada official said yesterday customers may some day be charged for directory assistance from operators when numbers are listed in the telephone directory.

TORONTO - Dr. John Robert Evans, 42, McMaster University's dean of medicine and a proponent of changes in medical education, has been named president of the University of Toronto.

His appointment, effective next July 1, marks the end of a long search for a successor to Dr. Claude Bissell, who retired as president last June 30, one year after announcing his resignation.

TORONTO - The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario says that it should be allowed to investigate cases where doctors leave one hospital for another to avoid charges of incompetence.

Dr. Andrew Bruce of Kingston, president of the college, told a provincial inquiry into hospital privileges Tuesday that some doctors move from one hospital to another when there is a threat that their privileges will be reduced or cancelled.

If he stays and disciplinary action is taken, the college keeps a register of the information which is open to the public. But if the doctor moves to avoid action, the College knows nothing about the incident.

THE WORLD

MOSCOW - Russia's two Mars probes were closing on their target Monday and speculation that one or both might attempt a soft landing on the mysterious red planet.

But official sources here remained silent on the progress of Mars 2 and 3 and on what exactly Soviet scientists are planning to do with them.

Meanwhile, the American Mariner 9 spacecraft, orbiting Mars for the 15th time yesterday, returned pictures to Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif. that showed the huge Martian dust storm was dying down.

WASHINGTON - The constitutional amendment to guarantee women equal rights with men, approved by the House on Oct. 12 by 354-23 vote, was rejected Monday by a Senate judiciary subcommittee.

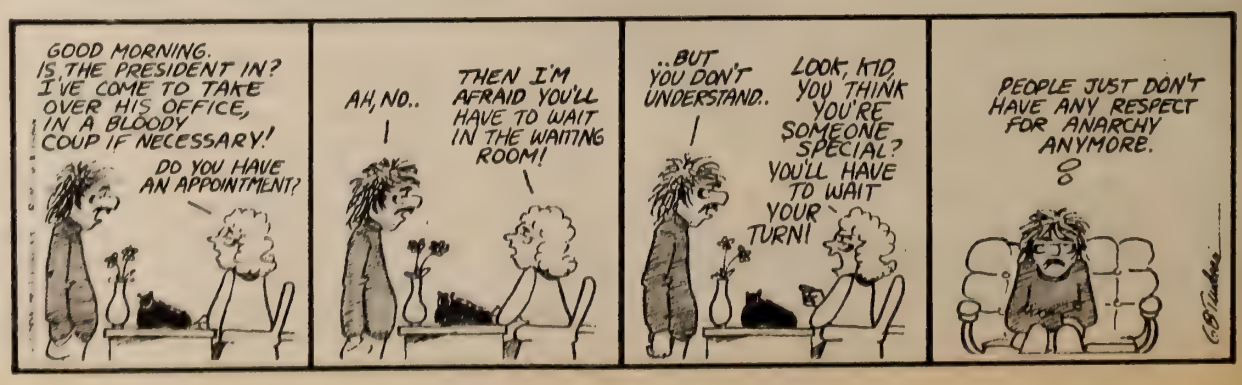
GENEVA - Maurice Strong, Canadian head of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, said he is "not a candidate" for the post of UN secretary-general when U Thant retires at the end of the year.

But he would not say he would refuse the job if it were offered to him.

Strong received an honourary Doctors of Laws degree from Queen's last May.

WASHINGTON - Treasury Secretary John Connally said Monday there was "nothing inherently bad" in current relations between the U.S. and Canada because of the trading dispute over the 10 per cent U.S. surcharge on imports.

"They (Canadians) understand much of our problem," Connally told a press conference.



Connally said meetings had been going on between U.S. and Canadian negotiators for several weeks on "various trade problems" with the U.S. seeking "slight changes and moderations" in trade relations.

Connally gave no indication that the U.S. was ready to modify its demands on Canada in return for repeal of the surcharge, and he repeated U.S. claims that Canada was getting too good a deal for it to continue unchanged.

PAKISTAN - Pakistan declared a national emergency Tuesday and charged that Indian forces had seized two villages and some border outposts in East Pakistan.

A spokesman said an Indian attack in the district of Comilla in East Pakistan had been beaten back during the day and that heavy fighting in border areas between India and East Pakistan was in progress.

Indian troops rolled into East Pakistan Tuesday, taking with them artillery, amphibious vehicles and large amounts of good and ammunition. The Indian forces also apparently moved in tanks.

Queen's
Journal
Vol. XCIX, No 29
Tues., Nov. 30, 1971

Queen's asks city for zoning by-law changes

Queen's has applied to the city of Kingston for two exceptions to its zoning by-laws -- one to make George Richardson Memorial Stadium legal, and the other to permit construction of the 16-storey apartment tower which is planned for a site wouthwest of it.

The Kingston Whig-Standard, and some members of the city planning board, are upset because Queen's has gone ahead with its building plans despite the apparent by-law violations.

The university has already awarded a contract -- to the Montreal firm of Stephen Sura Inc. -- to build the $1.5 million apartment complex. But a city hearing on the university's request for a zoning change to make the building legal will not be held until December 9.

Kingston planning director George Muirhead said Thursday the university wants permission to build the 16-storey structure in an area where the limit now is six storeys (75 feet).

But Queen's vice-principal (administration) Russell J. Kennedy said Friday the zoning by-law is not clear and apparently exempts institutional buildings, such as the university tower on its own campus.

Kennedy also said details of the building had been previously discussed with city hall officials, who had made no objection.

The Whig-Standard said Thursday excavation for the building had started, but Kennedy denied this. Building inspector Donald Bruce told the Whig-Standard that a building permit "for foundation only" had been issued for the project, and that some digging had started but then stopped.

The 200-bed residence is to be the tallest of "two or three" towers which would be a "focus for architectural development" on the west campus, Kennedy said. It was conceived by Project Planning Associates and designed by Marshall, Merrett, Stahl, Elliott and Mill.

Project Planning Associates had assured Queen's that the tower would comply with all Kingston by-laws, Kennedy said. He added that the construction contract requires assurance of legality from the Ontario Student Housing Corporation, the channel through which federal funds will pay for most of the project.

"I'm not saying that this is the proper way to do business," Kennedy told the Whig. "Actually, it's a poor situation."

He said he hoped the city would soon approve by-law amendments or exceptions to make the building's legality clear.

"Quite in reality," however, "the city could deny this. It would leave us in an extremely awkward position."

At the same time, Queen's has asked for another exception regarding the minimum amount of yard necessary between a building and the edge of the property. For the west campus structures the legal minimum is 50 feet.

But Richardson Stadium comes within 35 feet of a row housing apartment development along Yonge Street to the west. And the new tower would do the same.

The Whig says Queen's has planted trees along the 270-foot area where the stadium comes close to the edge of the campus, and has planned a chain-link fence to reduce the effect of the closeness.

Muirhead said this was not adequate and recommended that "additional buffering, in the form of coniferous trees as mature as possible, be placed along the boundary in addition to those trees already planted."

Brendan McConnell, a member of the planning board and 1967 New Democratic candidate for the Ontario legislature, said there is considerable interest among west Kingston residents about the plans for Queen's expansion. He said this is partly because "there has already been extensive criticism over student behaviour at Queen's games".

The planning board turned down McConnell's suggesion that its December 9 public meeting be held in that area of Kingston, perhaps at McArthur Hall. The hearing will be at city hall as usual.

Work is not being carried on now on the apartment tower, though physical plant director Cam Jones said earlier in November that he hoped to see construction begin before winter. The tower is supposed to be ready for occupancy in the fall of 1972.

No Journal on Thursday

There will be no issue of The Journal on Thursday this week. Staff members claimed they needed time to discover what courses they are registered in, before exams start. The Journal will appear Friday as usual.

AMS court and constable system comes under attack

The validity of the AMS court was discussed in an open debate last Thursday night by members of the Queen's Debating Society, Chief Justice of the Court Richard Lane and interested students.

Richard Kersey, President of the Debating Society opened the debate by stating, "the AMS court is a system of special privileges, placing Queen's students above other members of our community."

Chief Justice Lane replied that the AMS court was never intended to replace city courts, but was a valid mediation procedure for handling cases unsuited to criminal and civil law courts.

Kersey argued that cases of student assault should be taken to a regular court of law where any other public citizen would be tried. "The leniency of the AMS court has provided an open opportunity for Queen's students to break the law," he added.

Dean T.S. Webster, Dean of Student Affairs was first to oppose Kersey's views. He pointed out that it is the "victim's choice" to be tried in either the AMS or the city court. But in many cases an AMS court decision recommending expulsion would be comparable to a three month jail sentence handed down by city court.

Constable Jerry Molloy commented that if constables were to take each case to the city courts, the costs of trials and lawyers would far exceed the present Constable budget.

In regard to the constable system, Chief Constable Glen Agar suggested that it provided greater freedom for students. In most cases the constables could not charge students who were using drugs at concerts.

However, Kersey argued that city police forces have been known to overlook certain incidents also.

Dean Webster closed the meeting with a description of past cases, particularly the "painting raids" in 1966. In retaliation to a Queen's prank which resulted in the painting of the Canons at RMC, cadets painted doors and windows here at Queen's. Webster commented that it was the efficiency and validity of our AMS constable system that put a quick end to the incident.

Crossword No. 3 Solution

1 H	O	2 R	S	3 E	■	4 E	A	5 R	■	6 A	L	7 L	A	8 Y
U	■	I	■	X	■	L	■	U	■	F	■	E	■	I
9 M	I	N	U	T	E	S	■	10 S	C	R	O	O	G	E
O	■	G	■	E	■	E	■	S	■	A	■	N	■	L
11 R	U	L	I	N	12 G	■	13 V	E	14 R	I	F	I	E	D
■	■	E	■	15 S	A	L	U	T	E	D	■	N	■	■
16 B	O	T	T	O	M	■	L	■	F	■	17 W	E	R	18 T
A	■	■	■	19 R	E	S	T	F	U	20 L	■	■	■	O
21 T	A	22 F	T	■	L	■	U	■	23 G	A	L	24 L	O	N
■	■	A	■	25 C	I	26 T	R	O	E	N	■	A	■	■
27 R	E	S	P	O	N	S	E	■	28 E	D	U	C	E	29 S
O	■	C	■	■	■	E	■	30 U	■	R	■	O	■	E
31 W	H	I	F	F	E	T	■	32 G	R	A	I	N	E	R
E	■	S	■	■	■	S	■	L	■	I	■	I	■	V
33 L	E	T	H	E	■	34 E	L	Y	■	35 L	U	C	R	E

Convocation proposal rejected

An attempt to streamline convocations exercises through a regrouping of faculties and a reduction of the number of convocations from seven to five was rejected by the Senate Thursday and returned to the Convocation Committee for further study.

That committee recommended to the Senate that of the possible groupings of graduating students, the best would have the following graduates grouped together :BA (Hons. and Gen.), BPHE, BSc., PhD., and Theology (348 graduates expected); MA, MSc., and BA (338 graduates expected); BComm., MBA and BA (335 graduates expected); Appl. Sc. PhD., Sc. (Eng.) and Law (360 graduates expected); and Education, Meds and BNSc and Rehab (370 graduates expected). (This is scheme I as outlined on page 3 of Thursday's Journal.)

However, this recommendation ran into the opposition of student Senator (Theology) Dave Pritchard, who in reworking the figures used by S.S. Lazier to produce the report, found that there were fairly large differences in the times the five convocations would take. Pritchard moved that the motion be sent back to the committee so that they might try to come up with a solution which would produce convocations of more equal length.

It was also suggested that there be more consultation with students in producing any new recommendations. John Bannister, Chairman of the Convocation Committee, noted that they had tried to find students to sit on the committee, but had not been able to do this.

Pat Riley, AMS President, replied that Doug Romans had been chosen to sit on the committee and that he expected that the problem of finding students for the committee would now be solved.

CLASSIFIEDS

AVAILABLE now - one intimately charming (ie not terribly large) room, with use of kitchen, for one female at Barrie and Queen. $15 per week. Call Kathy at 544-9426.

LOST - pair of brown gloves Thursday in Soc building, film house, or reference room. Call 544-6348.

MIRABLE Dictu! Sod (A B Stodart) has gone co-operative and may be found dottering about in the back of 373 Johnston St. Phone 544-6166 for usual demented pratings.

LOST - Ladies watch in Leonard Field. Wednesday evening, Call 544-8633.

FOR SALE: new, fully-warranted Nikkormat, 58 mm fl.4 lens, $250.00. Also, one-year-old Minolta SRT 101, with 55 mm fl.7 lens, 2x teleconverter and 200 mm soligor lens, $225.00 Mac Gervan, 549-2232.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

WANTED - one roommate to share a new fully furnished 3 bedroom apartment. Rent $55 plus utilities. Call 544-9540.

WANTED, 2-bedroom apartment near campus on January 1. Please call 544-7078, 544-7064.

ESSAYS and THESIS TYPING
Top Quality duplicating on the NEW 3600 III Xerox Duplicator.
720 Xerox and Ditto Copying.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

Monday thru Saturday
noon 'til 1 p.m.
its . . .
The Round Table
Mr. BOJANGLES ROOM a discotheque

Get in on a DIFFERENT Atmosphere!! Dance to the latest in top sounds!! A new image -- a lively spot -- Come to see Bojangles -- You'll like it!! AT
The Round Table

Fully Licenced
Home of the Sunday Roast
Beef Buffet -- 542-7337

Bring anybody out for dinner -- great food from 2.99 -- every night.
Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

MEN'S TOP QUALITY GENUINE LEATHER
SNOW BOOTS
.FAMOUS BRAND NAME
.BATES FLOATERS .SISMAN
.DONAGHY'S OF IRELAND
Borg and shearling lined
Sizes 6 to 13
VALUES TO 36.00 IN THE GROUP
SPECIAL
5.00 TO 19.99
OPEN THURSDAY AND FRIDAY UNTIL 9 P.M.

S&R DISCOUNT DEPARTMENT STORE

Summer session in May and June

An experimental intersessional programme will take place this summer, offering a number of courses in Arts and Science between the end of school and the beginning of summer school, as a result of a Senate decision last Thursday.

The introduction of this programme for the months of May and June is a result of a demand by the Minister of Colleges and Universities, John White, that the universities look at ways of getting more use out of university facilities. It was proposed by the Faculty of Arts and Science, where it was concluded, after much debate and a fair amount of disagreement, that the idea should at least be tried to see whether or not it is viable.

A questionnaire was distributed at registration in September to find out whether students are interested in the idea and to find out in which courses there was interest. A total of 1,306 students (both summer school and intramural) indicated that they were interested, and significant interest was shown in psychology and sociology courses (all years), English and math (years 2,3 and 4), drama and film (years 1-3), history, economics and geography (3rd year), biology (year 2 and 3) and computing and information science (1st year.) These departments will prepare lists of courses which they feel they can offer next summer, the lists to be completed by the beginning of next term. Students will pre-register in the courses by January 31, paying a small pre-registration fee which they will forfeit if they do not attend the intersessional course. Those courses will be offered in which a sufficient number of students register (about 25) and whether or not courses will be offered will be settled early in February.

The teaching of these courses will be considered to be part of the normal course load of faculty members, although if it is impossible to find someone to teach a course, staff members could be paid (this latter policy applying only in this experimental year.)

The proposal did not pass Senate without strong objections being voiced by some of the Senators. T.G. Ison (law) felt that the idea of making the intersessional courses part of the normal work load, and compensating professors for this with time off and lighter work loads throughout the year would eventually lead to a deterioration in the quality of the faculty, because faculty members need a concentrated relatively long period in which to do research to keep up to date in their field and this programme would take away from that time. Ison also felt that it would be very difficult to evaluate whether or not this type of deterioration took place when the programme was to be tried and then accepted or rejected after only year's experience.

University Council reviewed

A committee met last weekend to discuss what the university council should do with itself.

Committee member Miss Mary Alice Murray, secretary of the faculty of law, said the group was formed last spring and includes representatives of alumni, university officers, faculty members, and one student: arts and science senator Trisha Jackson.

The university council itself is a ceremonial body – half of it consists of the senate and the board of trustees, and the other half is elected by Queen's graduates everywhere.

Every member of the committee is preparing his own written presentation, Miss Murray said, and those reports will be combined by the study committee into one working report.

It is to review the purposes, procedure and effectiveness of the university council and suggest changes.

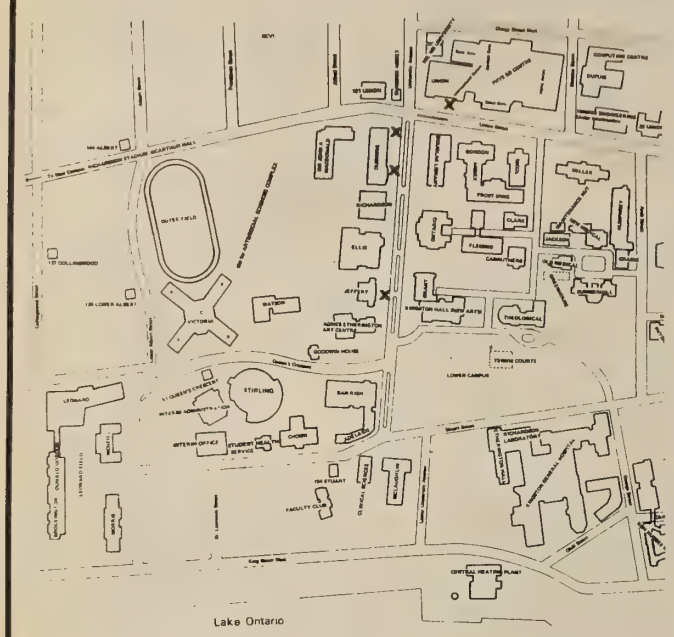
The working report, which is to be prepared by the committee chairman, Belleville lawyer R. Cameron, will be discussed by the committee in January. An interim report then will go to the whole council when it meets in May.

-solman

Do you want to wield power? Even more importantly, are you in engineering? The Engineering Society is accepting applications for Chief FREC and for chairman of the freshman welcoming committee. Deadline is December 2. EngSoc president Herman Janssen told The Journal there were no applications yet; he pointed out that for three years now, science girls have headed the welcoming committee, but said he did not know if the tradition would be upheld.

COSMIC CLOCK
Different things for different people

HAVE YOU TRIED OUR PANTS?



Your friends have!

Sweaters
Shirts
Jeans

386 Princess St.
544-5755
Across from the Odeon

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 29
Tuesday, November 30, 1971
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters:

x marks one lonely garbage can

It's lonely being an outdoor campus garbage can

In an exclusive Journal interview, one of Queen's five (yes, just five) outdoor garbage cans commented that being one of only five outdoor garbage cans on campus was really a very lonely existence.

With tears in his eyes, the garbage can described his vision of a truly happy community of garbage cans, in which hosts of these litter recepticals covered the campus and were not concentrated in a narrow area as they are now. He noted, however, that he and his three compatriots would be happy with a situation somewhat similar to that of Princess St., where a complete family of garbage cans spans the length of the business section, with one can per block.

The garbage can also stated that he felt that it was grossly unfair that the garbage cans have been excluded from some of the choicest sites on campus, places with a view and some sort of atmosphere. He indicated that he personally would love to move from his present location in front of the Union to either the quadrangle behind Grant Hall or to Leonard Field, where he could see the lake. Or perhaps in front of the women's residences, where he could girl-watch. (He thought maybe the WRC could help in this, since they seem interested in garbage, having handed the campus a lot of it in the last month.)

The garbage can also told the Journal that he was sometimes quite underfed, and being without arms to pick up his own trash, he noted that he would appreciate any the help he could get. He added that some of his friends who are mailboxes have been objecting recently to being force-fed on apple cores, candy wrappers and old Journals, and he said that, with more of his kind around, the mailboxes would be spared what they view as a less than pleasant diet.

Before our reporter left, the can thanked him for the opportunity to throw out some of his ideas.

New York City, Ontario?

The assumption seems to growing that Canada is merely the 51st state of the United States. For instance, an Ohio schoolgirl wrote to Information Canada in October requesting information on Canada, because her class was studying all the states of the Union and the one chosen for her was Canada.

Last week, we found a notice on the bulletin board of the International Centre from the Singapore High Commission in Canada, requesting some information from any Singapore nationals studying in Canada. The information is to be sent to the Singapore High Commission in Canada, at 711 Third Avenue, NEW YORK CITY.

Or maybe we have annexed the US, or at least New York City. Wonder how Mayor John Lindsay would react to giving up his presidentials ambitions and becoming the Member of Parliament for Manhatten South?

More on Co-ed Res:

a res. for real people

Dear Editors:

As a supporter of the Women's Liberation Movement, I usually am able to support women against men in any reasonable cause. But this time it is obvious that the men are acting in a liberated and mature way, not the women. I am referring to the fact that the Queenswomen in residence seem to be against a co-ed residence.

However, I suppose it was to be expected. There seems to be an over-supply of the "I want to be able to walk down the halls in curlers and not be embarrassed" types at Queen's.

The original purpose of having a respectable women's residence was essentially to protect the women's virtue. Open weekends sort of K.O.'d that aspect. So what's the purpose of having residences exclusively for women now? One haircurler type has neatly answered the question for us: to have a place where women can prepare for the Big Man Hunt. Men are not wanted in this feminine retreat - not until the women are all dolled up and ready for them. I don't suppose any of these types have asked themselves what they are going to do when they catch The Man - maybe live apart for half the week?

These people are not prepared to admit that they don't look like a fashion model 100 percent of the time. Nor are they prepared to find out that men don't either.

I've not heard any complaints of this sort so far in the Science '44 co-op - neither of embarrassment from the women or shock from the men. And the co-op is a much more human place than the glorified man-trap hotel they call women's residence.

Anyway, good luck on the Man Hunt, girls. And especially good luck to you after you catch him - with your attitudes, you're going to need all the luck you can get.

-S.C.

dirty pool, WRC

Dear Editors:

On Monday Nov. 29, a motion was introduced at the AMS meeting at McNeill asking the AMS to investigate the conduct of the WRC as regards their handling of the question of co-ed residence. The motion was introduced by the undersigned first year resident students with the aim not necessarily to prolong discussion of co-ed residence itself, but the the hope that the AMS will take steps to ensure that the irresponsible actions of the WRC not be re-inflicted on the Queen's student body.

Even to the most vitriolic critic of the coed proposal, the actions and performance of the WRC in the matter must seem to be reprehensible. It occurs to us that the proposal that was placed before the student body was more than a compromise between the IRC and the WRC. This proposal gave the WRC everything they had wanted and more within a co-ed framework. The coed committee report by Doug Romans dealt with depth in even the most minute detail (for example, he dealt with the size of facuet fixtures needed in conversion of washrooms) making the committee's coed recommendation a most feasible idea. Mr. Romans had asked the WRC not to hold a meeting prior to the joint IRC-WRC meeting of Nov. 19, and the WRC agreed. Despite this verbal acquiescence to Mr. Roman's request, the WRC held a meeting on Thursday evening Nov. 18, and convinced themselves that co-ed was in fact an impractical and unsuitable idea. The very idea that such a two-faced council could then, upon discovery that only 65 percent of women favoured co-ed, act in such a proper and constitutional way to us seems utterly absurd. The opposition of Miss Davidson seems to be based largely on a stereo-typed view of male residents that is based entirely on conjecture, and conjecture should not be the basis for any decision affecting such a large number of people. It is our belief that the WRC did everything in their power to block co-ed residence and that this in fact is not their purpose. The purpose of the WRC (or any residence council) should be to enforce the wishes of the majority of their constitutents. The 35 percent who voted against co-ed residence need not be placed in coed residence; it's that simple and we feel that any objective governing body would have recognized this fact. The only function the WRC should have had in the referendum was the distribution and computation of ballots and results. We feel that the extra-curricular political jerry-manderring of the Women's Residence Council was not only unwarranted but as well it was a largely irrresponsible betrayal of the wishes of all students in residence and should therefore be investigated by the central student government the AMS.

-Georgina Binks (Chown)
Jenny Chance (Chown)
Terry Macli (Morris)
Vicki Wilgress (Chown)

A poem:

A poem on the injustice of being a human, by wm. clarke, sunday, november 21st, 1971, Kingston, Ontario.

GOD DAMN THE MONTH OF NOVEMBER!

But let's hear more!

Dear Editors:

For some weeks past I have noticed in the Ten Days column that a certain group of forward-looking people have been studying "rape". I have always, since earliest puberty, found this topic a fascinating contemplation.

Indeed, how the thing can be done at all without one beginning to feel somewhat ridiculous, incompetent, in short a bumbling idiot, and especially so if "the intended" has a tendency to struggle, remains for me to this day a mystery.

How I wish someone from that group would write to the Journal and inform the university community of the new techniques and ideas discussed by them.

I personally am too shy to go to their meetings, besides which, it may be that if I do I should find myself entangled in marathon discussions which, for me, might not really be to the point.

Thus too, I cannot be at Pollution Probe and Survival meetings at one and the same time, and in any case I prefer to go to "Carnal Knowledge" of which I have heard something. What problems and ideas were discussed (if any)? No, not the minutes of the meeting - the ideas.

Then there's that cloak and dagger figure, the S.C.M. Do any ideas worthy of expression ever emanate from that body?

And ideas in general, on politics, on legislation, on the validity of university education, on the psychological effects of segregated residence living (on rats and guinea pigs of course), etc., etc., where are they?

Why are ideas locked away in lecture rooms and only exposed to groups intimidated by examination failure, who naturally sense the need for secrecy?

It seems to me that apart from the quite amazing efforts of a few people at the Journal office, little is being done by the university community to blow any ideas through the pages of the Journal. The notable exception was Survival's efforts over Amchitka. But let's hear more! We may not be willing to join, but we, eager-minded students that we are, are always willing to listen.

I should even welcome a "Pure Economic Theory of Wife-beating"!

Walter G. Spunde.

More Frenchman's view

Dear Editors:

Since R.A.B. doesn't in the least understand "A Frenchman's View of October, 1970" please give me the opportunity to explain it to her or him and all others who misunderstood.

Perhaps I do not understand the English language enough to communicate effectively - but there are limits. First of all, I do not see how one could possibly conclude that I am "mad at the English." I was writing about a very specific time, October 1970, not just passing judgement on "the English."

If you failed to see that I was referring to "the October crisis" by reading the letter itself, you couldn't have missed it in the headline. I sounded bitter simply because I did not write in a super-logical, scientific style. If you failed also to see what it is I think you do not understand, what you cannot grasp and what I mean when I say "blessed-cursed with that Anglo-Saxon singlemindedness, mes amis, perhaps you cannot read.

Either you understand a situation or you don't. Asking "What don't we understand?" is equivalent to saying "We don't understand," and if this is so what can I do except give my view of the situation in order to make you see.

What you cannot grasp is "that 'Nous vaincrons' is not spoken in the same spirit as "Come, my friends, 'tis not too late to seek a newer world." " This is precisely expressed, is it not?

I explained (or failed to, according to R.A.B.) that we could simultaneously sympathize with the Laporte family and with the F.L.Q. because we are not blessed-cursed with Anglo-Saxon singlemindedness. This singlemindedness, to me, is evident in your conception of October, 1970.

Secondly, in view of the fact that R.A.B. asks what do French-speaking "people like her want?" I would like to ask him a question:: what is a French-speaking person like me? A restless native perhaps? I do not pretend to be spokesman for a people.

You could (if you looked hard enough) probably find a French Canadian who would willingly stand in the middle of Place Ville Marie and duly chant "Canada stand together, understand together" until maple leaves fell from the sky - but this type is rare.

As for suggesting that I wanted "some paper which says, "We give our permission for the French to speak French as long as they want," I reply: do you know what "Nous vaincrons" means? (If you don't, "Nous vaincrons" is Mandarin Chinese for a quaint French Canadian colloquialism.)

As usual, when the English Canadian is confronted with separatism there arises a vague reference to the impossibility of economic independence. You've been listening to too many C.B.C. specials. By the way, "splendid isolation" is R.A.B.'s notion, not ours, and we don't want to "keep this standard of living." Read Yvon Deschamps monologue in the October 29, 1971 Journal, and you'll see why.

Your idea of a French Canadian is an English Canadian who by some quirk of fate speaks French. We are not different because we speak French but because we are French Canadians (at the moment.)

Being a French Canadian is not analogous to being a Welsh Canadian and wearing ribbons on St. David's Day. It is not similar to having a particular ethnic background, it's having a completely different culture from the usual diluted American kind.

Finally, R.A.B. proves my point about the eternal Anglo-Saxon efficiency in a way that no article expressing a Frenchman's view could. I speak of "logique etouffate" and he states what he thinks I meant in the form of a syllogism.

Brenda

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Managing Editors: John Solman. Charles Schwier
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Features Editor: Dave Walker
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks to Rachael, Gian, Dave W. for driving them, Alain, Dave Snook, and Charlie and Paul. Special thanks to the Calgary Stampeders for winning and letting me escape this horror show for a few hours. That made my day. 2:00 a.m. and we need peanut butter sandwiches..

Do you REALLY think you're worth $50,000?

Dear Editors;

I found Norman Eshoo's letter (Future physician opposes "guaranteed maximum income", Journal, Nov. 26) to be an extremely interesting reiteration of what I would call the egoistic view of society. The arguments were mostly familiar and similar to many I have come across in media reports, literature and, indeed, to my own opinions back in a period in which I was heavily influenced by such writers as Ayn Rand, with whom I'm sure Mr. Eshoo must be quite familiar. To anyone of a similar philosophical bent I would recommend "Atlas Shrugged" - a leather bound copy would make a fine bible.

In Mr. Eshoo's letter, as in all such expositions, there are a few basic and unquestioned assumptions which I would like to expose for a more critical examination.

The first is the basic question of property rights or "the right of use and disposal of the product of one's efforts." To Mr. Eshoo if one "loses control of his property" he falls into a situation of "masters and slaves". In terms of this definition we are all already slaves in that the governments control our property with income, capital gains, estate and other taxes. I am not denying that this is the case - I too worry about the problems of keeping our "masters" under control. It is, however, a necessary situation. Governments must perform certain vital and, with increasing population and societal complexity, ever more expensive functions and differential taxation is the only way of financing them. Careful analysis will show that while the rich pay more for these functions they also benefit proportionately more. The question of a maximum income which sparked this whole issue becomes then a logical extension of our present situation. The tax burden would simply be shifted so that wealth beyond a certain level, call it $50,000 per year, becomes impossible. The morality of this I will deal with in the next point - here I am just pointing out that the concept of income limitation isn't exactly revolutionary.

Mr. Eshoo next proceeded to attack the suggestion that $50,000 per year is all one could possibly need by first deriding it as too arbitrary and second bringing the argument to the point of absurdity in a caveman's bare physiolological needs. Rather than evading the question in abstruse argument let us look at just how much money one "needs" in the present day Canadian context. I have found as a single student that $2,000 per year will keep me quite comfortably and without any noticeable hardship. Would I be ten times as happy with $20,000? Or even twice as happy? I think not. I realize that this will be very unpopular at Queen's where many students expect to and probably will be making more than $50,000 per year but I personally am quite willing to submit to taxation which would stop me from ever reaching that figure if it means that a number of others can reach my present standard of living. I do not require a fantastic salary in order to engage in an occupation I consider worthwhile. To Mr. Eshoo, among others if one can judge from press reports, the medical profession does not seem to fit that category. Does he really feel that he is worth more than ten times as much as, for instance, a factory employee making $5,000 per year?

The next point is one common to all arguments in favor of laissezfaire capitalism; that is, that the rich are those gifted individuals who create wealth and that, because of this, they deserve it. I will deny neither that wealth is dynamic (any fool who has ever had a savings account knows that money creates more money) or that capitalism was the prime motive force behind our present Western civilization. My contention is that like many previous philosophies of life it is now outmoded and cannot cope with the complexities of today's world. Wishful daydreams aside, Horatio Alger is dead and the day of the individual entrepreneur is over. Apologists for the wealthy will always be able to point to the rare exception who has made the rags to riches trip but we can no longer afford to build our societal values around these few cases. Generally your wealthy individual is one who has been born into the corporate elite. It takes money to make money. Howard Hughes did not start in the ghetto. He inherited a prosperous corporation which provided his power base.

The point to note is that it is not the individual who creates the wealth but wealth itself. He is merely assuring himself of a share in it Basically the economy is a process by which natural resources and manpower are transformed through the agencies of technology and organization to goods and services which must be divided among the total population. Especially today when natural resources are perceived as fixed and technology is limited by the capacity of the environment to absorb its side effects, there is only so much in the pot to go around and if one group takes out more than its share, there is less for the rest. Mr. Eshoo would say that by not allowing one group, the wealthy, from taking as much as they could under a free market we are limiting their rights. This may be true but by allowing a free hand to the economically powerful group we would be even more severely limiting the freedom of the majority. A person born into a ghetto situation would, without government efforts to ameliorate the initial handicap of the social situation he is raised in, be free only to work under whatever conditions are set by the economically powerful or to starve. I would prefer to trust my rights to a government in which I had some modicum of control than to the corporate elite over which I had none. The optimum situation in my opinion would be one in which there was the minimum of government interference consistent with the maximum freedom for the maximum number of people. To me this situation requires a greater redistribution of wealth than now is the case.

My final point is that I believe some form of income control is becoming increasingly necessary in the context of the present world situation. The fact is that were the population of the world to stabilize at its present level (an extremely unlikely circumstance) this planet could not support an average standard of living as high as the current North American one Given an increasing population the rest of the world must face a decreasing standard of living if we are to maintain our present one. Thus we may reach the point of maintaining our position by taking the resources of poorer countries by force, a course the United States appears to be moving toward and, to me, a clearly unacceptable one. Under these circumstances perhaps a $50,000 or lower maximum income would not be impossible to conceive of, even for doctors. Instead of propelling us into a "Second Dark Age" it might be the only way of preventing one.

I would like to conclude by addressing Mr. Eshoo directly. Such "rights" as the right to become rich are very relative to time and place. To use an analogy, it you were travelling on horseback by yourself through a desert you could play with guns and have all the rights you wanted. If instead you were travelling in crowded and delicate modern jetliner you would be severly limited in your rights. The sort of behavior that would be quite acceptable in the desert could in the latter situation mean that no one would survive the trip. Might I suggest that your philosophy is more appropriate to the desert?

- Ron Hartling,
Arts '72

Even Santa gets fewer letters than we do

Re "women's liberators"

Dear Editors;

Miss Kay: your generalizations and choice of language deter (sic) from your editorial concerning "women's liberators." The fact that you as co-editor presumably allowed Miss Vogl's disgusting article of a few weeks ago to be printed, does not enhance your editorial either.

There are several valid points to be made by and for Women's Lib. But they are often lost in such generalizations as yours. Be precise and you'll find that that same "large group" you refer to actually support most of the arguments presented.

- Derek McLean

Glen Agar and the constable run-around

Dear Editors;

When I returned to school this year, it was with the realization that I would not exactly be living in luxury. However, I hoped to line up a part time job to supplement my meagre funds and provide me with some spending money.

So when I heard that the AMS was hiring constables, I rushed right over to sign up. I inquired at the time as to what basis applicants were being selected and was encouraged to hear that all who applied would be given the chance to work at least one function in order that the chief constable, Glen Agar, could observe us in action and decide whether or not we were suited to the job.

Shortly thereafter, I was asked to work during the Queen's vs. Waterloo football game, where I performed my duties as constable in what I can only assume was a satisfactory manner, as I heard nothing either way from the senior constables there.

Mr. Agar had informed us in a meeting before the game that if we wanted more work, we should call him up and let him know. This I did in the following week and was assured by Mr. Agar that he would get in touch when he had something for me.

Two weeks later, having heard nothing from Mr. Agar, I again called him and was told that he would call me back with a job at the end of that week.

He must have forgotten.

The week previous to Home Coming I called again, at which time Mr. Agar again promised to call me back at the end of the week. He didn't call at the end of that week or another either.

I was puzzled, to say the least, but chose not to pursue the matter further. I thought that either Mr. Agar had a very bad memory or I had somehow incurred his dislike. In any case, calling him seemed to no avail.

This week, I spoke to another constable and was surprised to find that she had been given the same run-around by Mr. Agar; promises aplenty but no work.

Should it not be the chief constables responsibility to hire as many constables as are necessary and, if they are not qualified or are unnecessary, to fire them? If we are not needed, why were we hired, and if we are not qualified to be constables, why doesn't Mr. Agar say so instead of making false promises?

Surely, if Mr. Agar cannot be bothered to treat his constables fairly, someone can be found who can do the job as well as he and still be considerate of his employees?

- Brian Manning

The Balcony as "political"

Dear Editors;

To Ivan Pereira: You point out well, in your article in Tuesday's Journal, the reasons why Genet's work may comment on political things, but will fail to be constructive etc. and to his basic concern with personal freedom etc. but certain things you say which I hope can be taken as revealing "where you are" - really cannot stand unchallenged.

I found it impossible to relate to the Balcony as a "POLITICAL" experience as opposed to "political" - the politics of personal relationships.

On the latter level, it's insights were constructive etc.- especially those relevant to the playing out of male and female roles. These you seemed to completely miss - and instead say things like : "Similarily (to Chantel etc.) the New Left has thrust forward Daniel Cohn-Bendit, Rudi Deutschke, Mario Savio and others."

What you crucially fail to realize is that the "New Left" in no sense "thrust forward" anybody. These European representatives you mention have not been nearly as cynical, either, about exploiting the position they attained by the fact that the only way in which they can be comprehensible to the dispensers of public knowledge is by their creation as "heroes" as have their North American counterparts, e.g. Rubin etc.

And as to your comments about their theory etc. - what do you know of it? Deutschke, particularily, comes from an organization- German SDS- whose members are developers of several critical bodies of Marxist economic thought.

Without a concept of any of these people in their social context- with an understanding of the collective nature of their development- you remain where you are- a person who refuses to understand the left in any terms but those of bourgeois academia.

Cohn-Bendit and his comrades used one of the most assimillated forms of Marxism- not only anarchism- yet seen.

I don't really know what you were thinking when you wrote this, of course- but at least perhaps you are interested in the problem. Which is more than most people seem to be.

- Leslie Keith, Sociology

More shocked

Dear Editors:

With "shock, disbelief and disgust" I read Rob Beamish's account of his anguish at the abolishing of training table.

To reiterate another point-of-view: the number of students that show up at Grant Hall to write final exams does indeed show that Queen's students support the academic program "in total". Thus, Allen Broadbent's proposal that hard-working students enjoy the benefits of a training table doesn't really seem all that outrageous.

You can't bleed a rock and maybe you can't reason with a jock, but some of us get just as much satisfaction from maintaining high scholastic averages as others do from winning a football game.

If an athlete misses a meal due to practice, why can't special arrangements be made in the dining hall(s) for a late supper? And another question: why don't participants in other sports (e.g.; hockey) have a training table?

Football may be big business and games may be fun, but we all have to eat, whether our noses get in the way or not.

Douglas R. Shane

Those endearing trees

Dear Editors:

We have noticed with great sadness that part of one of Queen's grand institutions, the trees - glorious trees - have been converted into firewood and splinters. Undoubtedly there was a valid reason, but somehow we miss those trees - those endearing trees.

Thus we ask, is there any way that the AMS or some other endowed body could plant some trees in the spring when the other trees remind us of the gaps.

the Purple Frosh and Heartbroken

the Dormouse

by alan broadbent

I was gratified during the course of the past few weeks to receive some letters addressed to the gems of advice proliferant in this space from time to time. Being a rather lethargic rodential type, I found the idea of actually composing individual replies to be excessively taxing, and have thus chosen to reply to these queries at this time.

As one will see, the subject matter of the letters is various, but I have tried to communicate meaningful and profound replies to all.

Dear Mr. Doormat;

I am a third year student in the department of Metaphase Dypthongs, and have been pondering the existence of the university. Could you enlighten me?

V.B.

Reply: I congratulate you on your calling. In response to your question, I recommend a diet of herb tea and soy bean paste. My aunt lost over sixty pounds in this way, bless her soul.

Dear Mr. Dormant;

What is the significance of the American president being jeered by the U.S. labour assemblage recently?

R.M.N.

Reply: It is obviously an attempt on the part of the Nixon administration to capture the college and university vote in the 1972 american election. By incurring the distate of the labour movement, Mr. Nixon hopes to strike an alliance with students, who for some time have found themselves in the bad light of the 'hardhat' element.

Dear M. Dormez;

What is the official role of the R.C.M.P. on the university campus?

P.R.

Reply: According to the comments of a former big deal in the national police force made last year on this campus, the role of the R.C.M.P. is to act as if they are not here, to ask only lawful questions, to not infringe on the rights of any citizen of the country, and to hide from their superiors any commies they might incarcerate.

Dear Mr. Doornob;

What is the source of the current sag in relations between the U.S. and Canada?

P.E.T.

Reply: The answer to this question is quite simple. In a further attempt to simplify their view of the world, the U.S. has decided to place Canada in the 'other' categorie on their list, and we are now officially grouped with nations under the description 'developing country with resources to spare'. It is expected that the current problems will be sorted out when the U.S. further simplifies things by listing countries under either 'expensive' or 'cheap'.

Dear Mr. Titmouse;

Will winter be of short or long duration this year?

J.F.

Reply: I regret to report that winter will be rather long this year, due to the impending federal election in either 1972 or 1973. This is a result of the enlarged winter works program instituted by the Trudeau government recently. They want the entire country to see the merits of the winter program, and to grease a maximum number of palms, so they have arranged for an extended winter season to this purpose.

Dear Mr. Dormouth;

What did you think of the Grey Cup game this year?

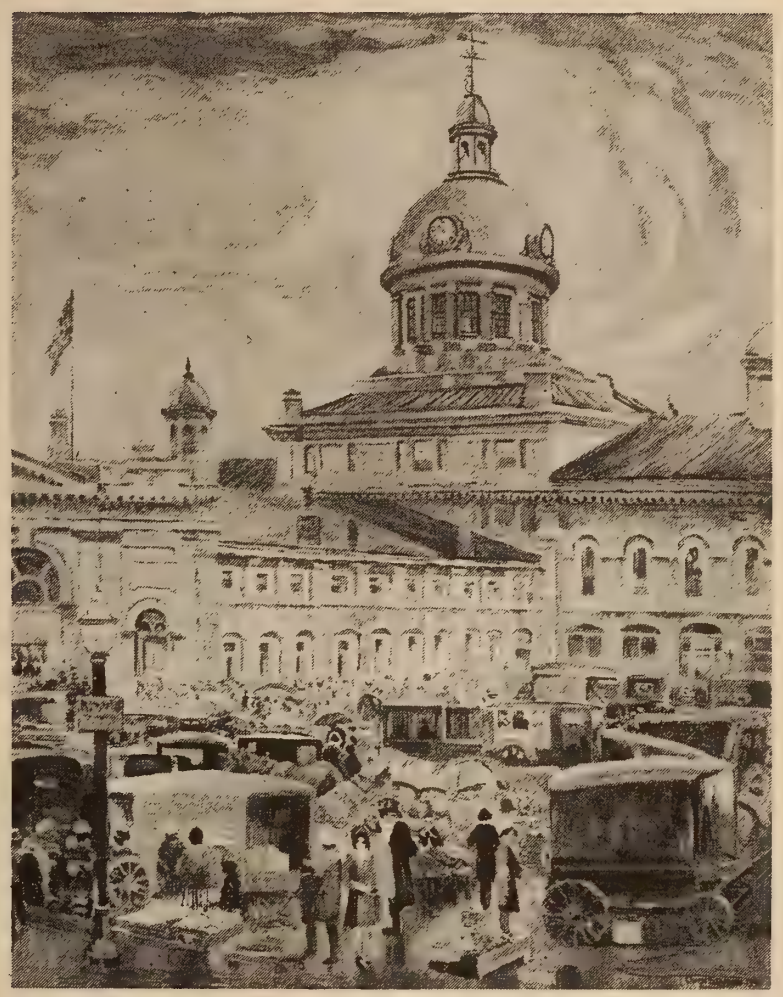
L.C.

Reply: I thought that the beer tasted much better than in previous years, but that the anchovie tarts faded after the first quarter. The pretzels played a strong game, but when the chips were down in the second half, the chip-dip seemed to lack any verve.

Dear Mr. Dorsal;

Just what is this AMS thing, and who does it think it is trying to kid, anyway?

P.C.S.



Reply: The AMS is a creature with 8,000 pairs of legs, clad only in a cap of its own choosing, and they kid only those who take the opportunity to be kidded rather than keeping their legs moving with the rest.

Two Views:
Kingston Market

Part of the Agnes Etherington permanent collection; these two oil paintings are just two examples of many. The history of "art" in Kingston begins in the 1860's, with an art section of the Provincial Exhibition held in the newly built Crystal Palace. The paintings were hung from wood slats nailed on the window frames or on the brick walls of the exhibition buildings by a local carpenter. In 1884 a city art school was founded under the auspices of the Mechanics Institute with an annual government grant of $100.00

The principal benefactor of the present art centre was Agnes Etherington, who, as Agnes Richardson, had inherited the house, which is now the basis of centre, from her father.

These two paintings are "Kingston Market" by Owen Staples in 1930, and on the bottom, "The Market Square, Kingston" by David B. Walkely.

Bourgeois Gentilhomme au Grand Theater: Un Succès Bien Mérité

par Alain Chouinard

La représentation du Bourgeois gentilhomme de Molière au Grand Theater a connu un succès bien mérité auprès du public de Kingston. Les Comédiens des Champs Elysées ont donné un spectacle de qualité, présenté d'une manière tout à fait professionnelle.

Du début à la fin de la représentation nous avons goûté la fine saveur de cette critique caricaturale, de ce tableau pittoresque de la bourgeoisie qui aspire aux grandeurs. Le Molière génial et familier restera toujours un auteur "contemporain" grâce à la psychologie de ses personnages qui même s'ils frôlent parfois le ridicule grossier, constituent des exemples typiques des prétentions vaniteuses et naïves, symboles des faibles d'esprit.

Tout les éléments du théâtre chez Molière servent à démonter avec force le ridicule, surtout le comique, car pour Molière, plaire c'est d'abord et avant tout faire rire. La pièce jouée au Grand Theater ne fait pas exception: les costumes de notre bourgeois, alias Monsieur Jourdain, mettaient en évidence les élégantes bouffonneries de ce bourgeois en quête d'approbation sociale parmi l'aristocratie. Certes, tout le mérite revient à Roland Bertin dont le talent a su donner le ton à tout le spectacle.

Il a joué son rôle d'une façon merveilleuse ; encore une fois, nous pouvons dire que l'acteur s'est substitué au personnage. Qui n'a pas goûté le menuet exécuté par Monsieur Jourdain avec un rythme tapageur, une grâce toute éléphantesque et une mimique absolument loufoque? Que dire de ces dialogues avec le maître de chant et le maître de danse? Oui, on pouvait sentir toute l'ironie subtile de Molière qui dénonce en fait, une société où l'on pratique la rationalisation pour en arriver pour en arriver invariablement au même but: l'argent.

Ceux qui en ont, sont, comme Monsieur Jourdain, trop bourgeois pour connaître sa vraie valeur et ceux qui en manquent, siphonnent les bourgeois dupes et naïfs comme Monsieur Jourdain. Mais que cela ne tienne, il y a aussi l'intellectuel, le maître de philosophie. L'ironie est encore plus subtile, plus mordante. Voilà le philosophe-savant universel mais spécialiste en rien qui a une opinion sur tout qu'il ne connaît pas — qui réprime les autres pédagogues en faisant une colère parce que justement ces messieurs se sont disputés en faisant une colère.

Il faudrait également souligner le talent de jacques Giraud: en plus d'être chorégraphe de la pièce, jouait le rôle du maître d'armes et de Covielle. Le maître d'armes avait lui aussi la parole facile et les gestes rapides; son tempérament fougueux a déclenché cette dispute entre trois professeurs. Quant à Covielle, on peut dire qu'on lui doit une fière chandelle: sans lui, il n'aurait pas eu de grande finale, ni d'heureux mariages.

La scène la plus amusante est celle où l'on procédede à la nomination de Monsieur Jourdain au poste de "mamamouchi", soidisante grande distinction de l'empire turque. En fait il s'agissait pour Covielle de manigancer une visite du prince turque pour Monsieur Jourdain. Mais que Cléonte, n'est nul autre que Cléonte, l'amoureux de la fille de Monsieur Jourdain.

Bien entendu, Monsieur Jourdain s'opposait vivement à ce mariage car le jeune homme n'est pas de noble famille. Covielle monte toute une histoire fantastique que va gober Jourdain trop aveuglé par sa soif de prestige et de gloire. Il consent sans hésiter au mariage du prince et de sa fille: Lucile ne reconnait pas Cléonte mais Covielle réussit à lui montrer Cléonte sans moustache à la jeune fille qui supplie son père . . . Jourdain ne remarque même pas la duperie ni le changement "trop rapide dans l'attitude de sa fille et . . . surtout celle de sa femme!

Il faut dire que l'épouse de Monsieur Jourdain est justement ce genre de femme qui ne s'en laisse pas imposer . . . elle voulait Cléonte comme gendre, alors elle a participé avec joie au complot pour rouler son mari royalement.

Jourdain est à ce point naif, qu'il ne voit même pas que son "meilleur ami," le comte Dorante fait la cour à la marquise. Dorante emprunte continuellement de grosses sommes à Jourdain qui, empresse de faire plaisir à son "ami" ne cesse de répeter: "C'est un honneur pour moi, Monsieur le comte, c'est un grand honneur. c'est trop d'honneur."

Le comte hypocrite et crapuleux, ne cesse de flatter Jourdain: "Ce matin-même, je parlais de vous dans la chambre du Roi". Jourdain dans sa bonhommie typique de bourgeois ambitieux s'imagine que le comte se fait le porte-parole de Jourdain auprès de Dorante, la marquise que convoite notre héros comique. Mais evidemment le comte se sert des capitaux de Jourdain pour faire sa cour auprès de la marquise. Cette peinture de l'aristocratie est encore un tableau plus mequeur que tous les autres. Molière ne dénonce pas l'aristocratie mais il l'accuse avec tout son talent. sa verve satirique.

Ne voit-on pas la marquise sous un angle tout à fait défavorable? Je crois que Molière a voulu la depeindre comme une brillante splendeur inutile. En fait, il la montre comme une femme snob et prétentieuse qui n'a valeur que les bijoux et les vêtements qu'elle porte: on pourrait dire qu'elle est tout au plus un joli portemanteau.

Somme toute, une représentation qu'il ne fallait pas manquer surtout si on appreçie le théâtre de qualité . . .

One Flew O

by Rachael Edwards

The steel doors clanged behind us as we walked rather apprehensively down the halls of Collins Bay Penetentiary. We were on our way to talk to the members of the Drama Group about the play that they are putting on this weekend, One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest by Dale Wasserman based on the novel of the same title by Ken Kesey. It will be presented on Friday, Dec. 3 and Saturday, Dec. 4 at the Grand Theatre, curtain time 8:30 P.M.

We went into the schoolroom where all of the rehearsals have taken place, and I was quickly surrounded by a group of inmates who were eager to talk about the play. They told me that all of the male roles in the play are being performed by inmates of the Penetentiary, but there are five actresses from outside who are taking the females roles in the play.

One inmate said he thought that this was probably the first play put on in Canada that included women with a group of inmates from a Penetentiary. The group has been rehearsing for about two months for two evenings a week, and are now just about ready to perform for the public. Last Wednesday evening they put on the play for an audience made up of the other inmates of the Penetentiary.

Everyone was very excited about the upcoming performances, but just a tiny bit nervous, as this is the first time on stage for are two vintage Dylan tunes which are enhanced by the countrified rock of Nelson's idiom.

On side one there is a perfect balance between the quiet Lightfoot-like musings of Rick's "The Last Time Around" and the sheer drive of the Stones belter "Honky Tonk Woman". Good balance, good tunes; great musicians, great album!

One of the reasons the Byrds have remained one of America's top groups has been their ability to change styles like the musical chameleons that they are. The current personnel -- Roger McGuinn, founder and lead guitarist; Skip Battin, bassist; Clarence White, other lead guitarist; and drummer Gene Parsons -- have been a unit for a couple of years now. Their previous l.p. to their current release (BYRDMANIAX - Columbia KC 30640) was a dual record affair which was super-saturated by a country sound -- what a shock to hear the zany, orchestrated songs on BYRDMANIAX!

The change is not a qualitative one of lesser degree, but rather just a mixing and augmentation of style. The influence of earlier Byrd-standards firmly in the folk-rock category finds its way into the lush sound of "Kathleen's Song" -- it is a fusion of strings and horns and reeds under the direction of Paul Polena, which takes the Byrds music that one step further toward a "perfect" sound. The piano work of Larry Knechtel (whole album session credits would read like a Grammy Award programmers cue-sheet), is a factor which makes this Byrds album as expert an exercise as they have been responsible for to date.

The opening bars of "Glory Glory" announce Larry K.'s presence in the trademark style of rock's premier pianist (with due respect to Elton John, Leon Russell, and Little Richard!) -- it is a heavily-accented piano outing that is closely followed by "Pale Blue", Roger McGuinn's song which is successfully-instituted amalgam of orchestra, plectrum guitar picking by Clarence, and resonant harp-work by Gene Parsons.

Knechtel, and a chorus of female voices are to the fore on "I Trust", which also turns loose Clarence White's shoulder-operated wah-wah guitar, heard for the first time on their last set, UNTITLED. There are a couple of Skip's songs included, one of which is a compendium of filmdom personages from Hollywood's Golden Era, called "Citizen Kane". Clarence White, joined by harmonica and fiddle, breaks out the five-string banjo for a down home bit of pickin' on "Green Apple Quick Step".

-egger

Over the Cuckoo's Nest

...e men. Rocky, who plays the male ...e play, R.F. McMurphy, told me that ...mes lies awake at night reciting his ...hat he won't forget them. The in- ...We proud of the fact that they have ...t of the preparation for the play ...le the Penetentiary walls.

...was built in the workshop and is to ...sorted to the Grand Theatre by bus. ...a manager is Mr. Chamberlin from ...to Theatre and he is being assisted ...s inmates.

...ncy Helwig is the director of the ...he originator of the Drama Group. ...d the group about a year ago at the ...f the Protestant Chaplain of the ...ary. At first she organized workshops to teach the inmates a few of the basics of acting. Then, last June, the group entered a play into the Dominion Drama Festival in Ottawa.

The play was called A Criminal Record and it was written by a former inmate of the Penetentiary, Peter Madden. The success of that play encouraged them to put on a play for Kingston audiences. Mrs. Helwig is very pleased with the co-operation and enthusiasm of the inmates who are involved with this play. However, she said that there are difficulties to overcome. "We spend as much time trying to get through the red tape as we do actually rehearsing."

The inmates told me about their roles in the play and were obviously enjoying acting in the one they had chosen. They were chosen by audition from the inmates who were interested in acting. There are a fair number of parts in the play which allows almost as many men as are interested to take part in the production.

One Flew Over a Cuckoo's Nest takes place in a mental institution which is ruled completely by the Big Nurse, Miss Ratched. A new inmate, R.P. McMurphy, who has feigned insanity to get away from the hard life of prison, enters the institution. Seeing the conditions there, he is determined to overthrow the iron rule of the Big Nurse. This one-man campaign develops into an all-out battle of wits between himself and the Big Nurse, which gradually draws in the rest of the inmates of the institution.

The play allows lots of scope for character acting which is what the men enjoy and have fun doing. They look on the play as an outlet--something to talk and think about during the dull routine of prison life. Their enthusiasm for the venture is unlimited and it is this enthusiasm that is bound to overcome any difficulties and make the play a success.

Advance ticket sales so far have been good, and there are special rates for pensioners, students and groups. This is rather a unique play and should be well worth going to see.

Concert Brilliant from Start to Finish

By Ian Findlay

The Queen's University Music Department presented the New York Harp Ensemble and the Vaghy String Quartet in concert on Saturday night in Grant Hall, and it was brilliant from start to finish. The opening half was occupied by four pieces played by a harp quartet consisting of Rebecca Flannery, Ewa Jaslar, Barbara Pniewska and Marth Flannery.

The first of these was a charming dance by Andrew Getry which revealed a volume and fullness of sound from the instruments that was startling. Two concerti by Handel and Vivaldi followed, and both were played with impeccable musicianship and great attention to phrasing and clarity of line. The first half of the concert concluded with an arrangement of Bach's Prelude from the Third Partita, and again, the fullness of sound added a new dimension to this well known work.

One of the most notable things about the performances by the harp quartet in the Bach and throughout the concert was its instinctive feeling for phrase endings. The precision of ensemble was evidence of a highly developed sense of communications among the players.

After the intermission, harp soloist Aristid von Wurtzler and the Vaghy String Quartet joined forces in Tibor Serly's "Innovations for String Quartet and Harp". This piece was innovative in the best sense of the word, in that it put individual techniques (e.g. striking the wood of the instruments with drum sticks) at the service of the overall musical conception.

The performance was technically faultless, and emotionally convincing, and the rapport between the quartet and von Wurtzler was phenomenal. The Vaghy's contribution served as a reminder of how fortunate Queen's is to have this fine quartet on campus.

Aristid von Wurtzler played his own composition next, which was entitled "Modern Sketches". This piece explored the virtuoso potential of the solo harp, and included some highly refined and at the same time humourous effects in the last movement. The harp quartet returned for the final three works on the program - "Island of Mysterious Bells" by Alan Hovhaness, "Japan Folk Songs" by Sakura Sakura, and "Spanish Dance No. 5" by Granados. The Hovhaness and Sakura pieces sounded extremely natural.

off the record

By Dick Loney

In the light of the prolific press which John Lennon has commanded of late for his scathing denigrations of former pal McCartney it's about time he justified a few of his hollow accusations. After a senseless, tasteless, musically-barren spate of albums with wife Yoko notably present (scream! shriek! protest!) here at least in the form of a new release (IMAGINE-Apple SW 3379) is some indication that this is the talented side of Lennon back with us anew.

Lead song "Imagine" is currently a hot item on the charts -- it has the simplicity of the only previous solo song of John's ("What Is Love?") which approached the Lennon-McCartney magic of yesteryear. John's simple keyboard style is deceptively beautiful beneath the hackneyed appeal for world peace and brotherhood of man which infuses his lyric with dull regularity. (No! peace and brotherhood are not boring thoughts, but since "Give Peace A Chance", the thought of Chairman John has chimed the same notes in rather predictable fashion.)

In what is surely an unconscious lapse into what he calls the "muzak" of ex-mate Paul, Lennon is able to recall the jovial frivolity of Bungalow Bill for a few moments as he sings "Crippled Inside". The title detracts from the fact that this is a good-time-tempo tune, with George Harrison's dobro heavily dominating some rinky tinky, excellent, Nicky Hopkins piano work. It's not all fun with Lennon however. The difference is based on a solid rock base--excellent lead guitar work by George Harrison and Hopkins's piano was never better since his early tour of duty with the Stones.

The bitter cacophonic lyric of "Gimme Some Truth" gets John's point across effectively:

no short haired yellow bellied son of tricky dicky is gonna mother hubbard soft soap me with just a pocketful of hope, money for dope money for rope.

Lennon's muse is an inspiration of many moods -- "Oh My Love" has all of the emotional impact of his earlier and lovelier "Julia", but the notes of this love ballad are fading in our ears when Lennon comes down hard on "Pauly" again with "How Do You Sleep". There is wit in the acerbity of the verse in this blast at McCartney, but Paul's choice of mute indifference toward the rantings of Klein in the Playboy interview, and the disordered ramblings of Lennon in the Rolling Stone "interview" leads one to question most of the accusations after viewing "Let It Be"; which revealed Paul as organizer, and at times emotionally-distraught pleader for some kind of direction in the Beatles career.

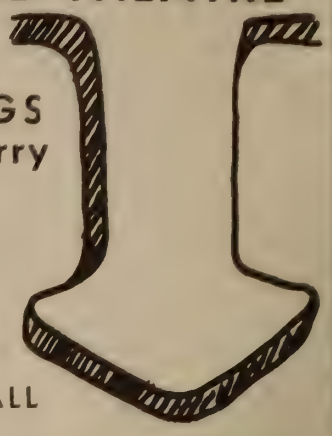
If the Beatle-battle is to continue, at least Lennon has been challengingly inspired by the two McCartney l.p.'s and George's prolific tripartite journey into the solo artistry realm. If Lennon is superior to McCartney as songwriter and performer, (as he would have us believe), he will have to prove it on the discs -- so far, "Maybe I'm Amazed" is ably holding off the entire solo-Lennon canon single-handedly!

RUDY THE FIFTH (Decca DL 75297) does not happen to indicate that this is the fifth album for Rick Nelson and the Stone Canyon Band. Researcher and fellow-Nelson-enthusiast Greg Stewart from down CKWS way informs that this appellation is that of a sparkling wine indigenous to California, and indeed, this is merely the third of the recently issued Rick Nelson showcases of which you shall scarcely find a trio of albums that handle the country-rock blend more superbly. Of the three, this, the newest is best. It combines a pair of Dylan numbers which never sounded so good, with a Rolling Stones classic and six full-fledged Nelson-penned gems, and throws in a two-part classical guitar exercise ("Song For Kristin") and a revival of an early Sixties hit gratis ("Feel So Good").

As he displayed in the two previou... Rick has matured into a better-tha... rock composer. "Life", a softly ... acoustic ballad set to the strings ... Haskell, has a lilting quality that s... away from the turntable humming ... changes of the descending stru... Nelson's optomistic and pleasing s...

"Thank You Lord" begins a... almost incantatory gospel tune wit... chorus, but then Rick's piano bridg... hand-clapping, tambourine-thum... bongo-beat bring the tempo up to ... frenzied spiritual of the Deep South... Pilot" is a rocker which suits the ... capabilities of Rick and the Stone... Band -- the drumming of Pat Shanah... guitar of Allen Kemp; the bass ... Meisner and electric steel of Tom Br... join in with Rick for 4:06 of country r... Nelson mold.

On the rousing opening song "Thi... Rick utilizes the honky-tonk piano ... Belling as he does for the oum... treatment of Dylan's "Just Like A ... which fits Rick's voice to perfection. ... already displayed a fondness for so... early Dylan folkrock ventures, taki... Belongs To Me" to the hit parade hei... on RUDY THE FIFTH, "Just ... Woman" and "Love Minus Zero - N...



WANDERLUST II

IRC-WRC Semi Formal
JANUARY 14th, 1972

TICKETS:

Leonard Hall (Supper meal lines) - starting Dec. 1 Union (John Orr Room) starting Dec. 5, 11:30 a.m. - 1 p.m. daily
TICKETS $4.00 (before Dec. 14) $6.00 after Dec. 14

QUEEN'S DEPARTMENT OF DRAMA
presents
THE STUDIO LAB THEATRE
with
COMINGS AND GOINGS
by Megan Terry
and TESTS
by Paul Ableman

NOV. 30, 1971
7:30 P.M.
CONVOCATION HALL
TICKETS $1.00 tickets at Drama Department

the third eye cometh

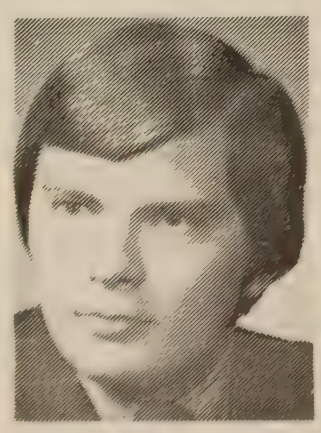
Don't miss out on the fun . . .
JOIN US !

WHITEFACE MOUNTAIN SKI TRIP (JAN. 22-23)

Group will leave Saturday morning by coach with a light lunch served before arriving in LAKE PLACID, N.Y. After a day's skiing at WHITEFACE MOUNTAIN, dinner and lodging will be provided at a privately-owned ski lodge in LAKE PLACID. Saturday night - PUB time of course! We'll start Sunday off with a large breakfast before skiing WHITEFACE again, and an optional dinner will be available for $3-4 before returning to Kingston that night. Total cost (excluding ski tow passes at $5 day) will be $25 per person if you sign up before Dec. 5th. Transportation ONLY available for $10 per person.

For further Info. Contact: Dave Snell at 544-0178
or Bob Morine at 544-0628

Birth Control and Abortion



Information and Referal Centre

3 pm-11pm — student staffed
— 165 University

GRADUATING ?
GETTING MARRIED ?

TALK TO THE GUYS FROM SUN LIFE, REPRESENTING THE LARGEST CANADIAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Peter S. Scarf, B.A. (Hon.)
Arts '70

Terry J. Brady, B. Comm.
Comm. '71

SunLife OF CANADA

Phone 546-1117 275 Ontario St.

MAKE HER ACCEPTANCE OFFICIAL WITH AN ENGAGEMENT DIAMOND

Your proposal was brilliant. Her acceptance sweet. And now it's time to publicize the pledge with a diamond on her finger. Our selection is wide and brilliant. We'll help you choose the right ring. To announce your honorable intentions to the world.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

tensedays

Tuesday, November 30.

7.30 p.m.: All interested in helping to sell Christmas cards and buttons for Pakistan refugee relief, or distributing information on this issue, are invited to a meeting in the International Centre Conference Room.

7:30 p.m.: The Drama Dept. presents Toronto's Studio Lab Theatre in Convocation Hall. Tickets are $1.00 at the Drama Dept.

Wednesday, December 1.

12:00 to 5:00 p.m.: The Faculty of Medicine symposium for allied health professionals in the School of Nursing auditorium.

3:30 p.m.: The Music Dept. will be presenting a lecture by Professor Istvan Anhalt on "The Evolution of a Composer" in Dunning Hall.

7:00 p.m.: The Consumer's Interest Group is holding their final meeting of this term in Room 102 of Jeffery Hall. This organization intends to study, investigate and take action on consumer complaints and unacceptable business practices in Kingston. For further infr phone Mike Lazure at 544-0517.

7:30 and 9:00 p.m.: Chronicles XI presented by the Drama Dept. in the Studio Room. Tickets at Drama Dept.

9:30 to 10:30 p.m.: Beginner's Yoga class in the Combatant's Room in the Gym.

Thursday, December 2.

3:30 p.m.: The Psychology Dept. presents the Psychology Colloquim Series in Humphrey Hall, Room 102.

7:00 p.m.: Bridge Club meets in McLaughlin Room of Union.

7:30 p.m.: Come and find out what's going on with Elrond in the Red Room of Kingston Hall.

7:30 p.m.: The Ukrainian Club sponsors a guest speaker at the International Centre. D. Struk (B.A. Harvard; M.A. U. of Alberta; Ph. D. U. of Toronto) a young associate professor of Slavic Studies of U. of T. will give an introductory survey of Ukrainian literature, both modern and classic. All welcome.

7:30 & 9:00 p.m.: Drama Dept. presents Chronicles II in the Studio Theatre.

7:30 to 9:30 p.m.: The Dept. of Pathology sponsors a Medical Sciences Lecture "Current Concepts of the Patholgenesis of Atherosclerosis", presented by M.R.C. Visiting Professor, R.H. More M.D., in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

8:30 p.m.: Collin's Bay Drama Club presents "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" at the Grand Theatre.

8:30 p.m.: The Music Dept. presents a concert by Queen's Wind and Choral Ensembles in Grant Hall.

9:30 to 10:30 p.m.: Queen's Christian Fellowship invites interested graduates and faculty for coffee at "Logos" Bookstore, 264 Princess.

Friday, December 3.

7:30 to 9:00 p.m.: Drama Dept. presents Chronciles II in the Studio Theatre.

8:30 p.m.: Collin's Bay Drama Club presents "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" at the Grand Theatre.

8:30 p.m.: The Cecilian Consort presents Music for Christmas in the Dunning Hall Aud. Tickets, $1.00 under 12 and $2.00, are available from consort members or at door. Proceeds to Angada Children's Hospital.

Kirsten Moller at MacArthur

Kirsten Moller will present a recital of piano music for the Kingston Music Club on Monday evening, December 6th at 8:30 p.m. at Duncan MacArthur Hall. The programme for the evening performance will include the "Partita No. 1 in B flat Major" by J.S. Bach, the "Sonata in C minor" by Franz Schubert, "Chaconne" by Carl Nielsen, and F. Chopin's "Waltzes in E flat Major, op. 18; C sharp minor, op. 64 no. 2; and e minor" plus the "Ballade in F minor, op. 52".

After graduation from the Royal Danish Conservatory of Music in Copenhagen, Denmark in 1958 Kirsten Moller was awarded an extra year in the soloist class and a final public debut. The Denmark-America Foundation then sponsored her for a semester at the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore, Maryland where she studied with Mr. Erno Balogh. She performed for the U.S. Educational Foundation for students and scholars in Washington, D.C. and at similar gatherings of the Denmark-America Foundation in Copenhagen.

In competition in October 1963 Mrs. Moller received a scholarship which enabled her to participate in a masterclass given by Madame Lilli Karus at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music. After this she studied for a year with Mr. Adolph Baller at the San Francisco Conservatory and performed for the International Students Club as well as in a recital arrranged by the Sacramento Symphony League.

Book Review

"The Plastic Orgasm" by LaVerne Barnes

Ritual invocation to the Gods pounds in chanting waves from the stands where these speed freaks of the sports world sit - the football fans: Fat assed, beery breathed, wet palmed, puce cheeked, they are blood crazy, goal mad superfans who live vicarious adventures through their plastic-padded heroes. They revel in their unit power. They can make or break a player, a coach, a team manager - just as the media boys can. In the grip of the plastic orgasm they become one; a conglomerate mass with one mind, one voice, one body which swells and recedes with the game.

And they are all victims of one of the biggest con games in the world.

So what if the player is geared up with bennies, sodium amytal or nembutal; if he is frozen with Xylocaine so he can go on with the game; if the American players get better pay than the Canadians; if the coaches and team managers are primarily Americans; if the white southern coaches exercise their racist tendencies in "liberal" Canada; if men's bodies and their marriages are broken; if there is a "system" which exercises privileges and discipline as strongly as the establishment. So what.

LaVerne Barnes is the wife of a black football player, Emery Barnes, and through his association with the B.C. Lions she came into contact with the rough, tough, hypocritical hemisphere where the good-sport, clean-living image idealized by press and people is in violent contrast with the con man's ethic which allows virtually anything.

The plastic orgasm is a wife's eye view of the carnival. Bitter, honest, caustic, it tears through the plastic mask and exposes the corrupt ugliness beneath.

Student Health Service

The services available to all students include:

Medical - 547-6106 - 24 hours daily - when the Health Service is closed, answering service will put an emergency case in touch with the physician on duty.

Clinic hours - 9:00 p.m. to 11:30 a.m.) Monday through Friday
1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.)

Allergy Injections and Immunizations - during clinic hours
Opthamology - consultations by appointment - ½ day per week.

Copying and Duplicating

The 3600 III Xerox Duplicator provides fast, excellent, thesis reproduction, photographic reproduction, solids and halftone reproduction, sorting and collating, and background clearing. Quality book copying and transparency reproduction can also be provided by our 720 Xerox Copier.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

Confidelle
Pregnancy Test Kit
For Home Use Available at Moffats Phcy.
226 Barrie St.
Kingston

Elrond College - Grow With People
What's Going On Here
ELROND
Come and Find Out
Thursday, December 2nd,
7:30 p.m.
Red Room - Kingston Hall
General Campus Public
Welcome
Elrond College - Grow With People

This Sunday
and every Sunday is The Round Table
The Roast Beef Buffet
Only $2.99
(a regular $3.99 feature)
All You Can Eat
- cold cuts,
desserts, salads,
and ROAST BEEF
EVERY Sunday - 5-10 at
The Round Table
Fully Licensed
Home of Mr. Bojangles
Discotheque
542-7337
Bring anybody for dinner - great food from $2.99 - every night
Clip this coupon - your second cocktail only 25c - in any dining room

What the AMS did with your money

The document below is the annual financial statement of The Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Incorporated. It is addressed to "the members, The Alma Mater Society" -- that is, all students at Queen's. It tells, in a formal manner, what was done with the students' money during the twelve months from May 1, 1970, to April 30, 1971.

It begins with a statement, signed by the accountant who audited the AMS books, to the effect that this statement presents the financial position of the AMS with certain exceptions which are stated.

A statement of assets tells what the AMS owned on April 30. This includes cash accounts receivable, and "deferred expense" relating to Tricolor, since its operating year is not the same as the fiscal year. Also under assets are the "fixed assets" consisting of office furniture, band instruments, hoods and gowns, and so on. The $500 "other asset" is what it cost the AMS to incorporate itself last year, and corresponds to the "goodwill" of a business.

Balancing the assets are the liabilities, which are accounts payable and "deferred income", also chiefly for Tricolor, and a surplus of just under ten thousand dollars.

The "statement of general fund surplus" tells how this surplus arose starting from the $96,161 surplus the AMS had at the beginning of the year. Most of the money was transferred to the "reserve fund", as Note 1 at the bottom indicates. After those transfers were made, the surplus at the beginning of the year was only about five thousand dollars; the AMS made a $4385 profit in the fiscal year to reach the $9640 surplus.

After those statements about the general fund, statements are given for the reserve fund, which contains the money used by the AMS for long-term and special projects. Its assets include cash, accounts receivable, and a quarter of a million dollars in outstanding loans, which are summarized further down. Balancing those assets are payable loans, other miscellaneous accounts payable, and a capital or surplus of $90,825.

Most of the money which appears in this table consists of the loans summarized in a table further down. Almost a quarter of a million dollars consists of loans from the university which the AMS has immediately lent out again, $157,294 to Elrond College and the rest, $68,111, to Science 44 Co-op. These amounts simply pass through the AMS bank-account, and the AMS acts as a middle-man between Queen's and those two organizations. (Beginning in 1971-72, those loans are managed directly and the AMS does not take any part; hence that money will not appear in next year's financial statement.)

There are smaller loans outstanding to both Science 44 and Elrond which did not come from the university.

Again, a table is provided to show where that capital came from: mostly, from the money transferred out of the general fund as already mentioned. (This was done to make the bookkeeping more straightforward, believe it or not.)

Next come statements of revenue and expense for the fiscal year. Under revenue for the AMS come student fees, Journal advertising, and similar income of various kinds.

Under expenses are Journal printing Tricolor printing, committee activities, office expenses, salaries of office staff, and many other items. Further down, the "commissions expense" is broken down to show what each of the commissions (major committees) spent.

Revenues for 1970-71 totalled $130,379, and expense totalled $125,994. This results in an "excess of revenue over expense for the year" of $4385, which has already been noticed as part of the general fund surplus.

At the bottom of the statement are several notes which explain (to accountants) some unusual features of the AMS finances.

No financial statement is easy to understand. And this one, reflecting a year in which the AMS underwent great changes, is especially convoluted. But it shows that the student government at Queen's is solvent and even financially healthy.

And the officers of the AMS are quite willing to answer students' questions about student money. Anyone with a question should inquire at the AMS office for vice-president Victor G. Bradley.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Alma Mater Society as of April 30, 1971

To the members,
The Alma Mater Society:

We have examined the balance sheets of the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Incorporated as at April 30, 1971 and the statements of revenue and expense, surplus, and capital for the year ended on that date. Our examination included a general review of the accounting procedures and such tests of accounting records and other supporting evidence as we considered necessary in the circumstances with the following exception:

Proper accounting records have not been kept for the operation of the liquor lounge known as the "House of Commons" nor for the band operation ao far as appears from our examination.

As a result:

i The financial operations of the lounge have not been reflected in these financial statements.

ii Band revenue of $2,401 shown for 1971 is the net proceeds paid over to the society after deducting certain payments made by the band for operating expenses of concessions, etc. Information was not available for 1971 to include these payments as band expenses and reflect gross revenue for the year.

In our opinion, except for the operation of the "House of Commons", these financial statements present fairly the financial position of the society as at April 30, 1971 and the results of its operations for the year ended on that date in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the previous year.

Signed: England, Leonard, Macpherson & co.
Chartered Accountants

General Fund Balance Sheet

CURRENT ASSETS		CURRENT LIABILITIES
Cash	$ 32,611	Accounts payable	$ 12,486
Cash on deposit with Queen's University (interest bearing)	501	Due to reserve fund	13,689
Accounts receivable	22,158	Deferred income - Tricolor	31,985
Less alowance for doubtful accounts	(7,852)		58,169
Loans to student organizations	1,277
Deferred expense - Tricolor	14,239
	62,934
FIXED ASSETS
Fixed assets - at cost	48,065
Less accumulated depreciation	(43,690)
	4,375
OTHER ASSETS		SURPLUS
Incorporation expense - at cost	500	Accumulated net revenue (see sked.)	9,640
	67,809		67,809

Statement of Revenue and Expense

REVENUE		EXPENSE
Student fees	$ 48,352	Queen's Journal	$ 41,720
Rental of hoods and gowns	5,265	Tricolor	19,613
Queen's Journal	40,225	Band (including depreciation)	8,539
Tricolor	19,420	Commission expenses (see sked.)	23,707
Band	2,401	Club grants	3,733
Who's Where	8,048	Hoods and gowns expense	2,810
Interest revenue	329	Expenses of pres and v-pres.	457
Sundry	6,339	Honoraria	2,866
	130,379	Administration - salaries	11,201
		Administration - office expenses	5,368
		Legal and audit	1,872
		Interest expense	82
		Sundry expense	4,019
			125,994
Excess of revenue over expense	4,385

Reserve Fund Balance Sheet

ASSETS		LIABILITIES, RESERVES AND SURPLUS
Cash in bank	$ 31,915	Liabilities:
Cash on deposit with Queen's		Accrued interest payable	$ 9,338
Unassigned student interest fees (non interest bearing)	1,527	Loans payable (see sked, nt. 3)	225,405
AMS Lecture fund	3,048	AB of C deficit (see nt. 5)	10,973
Deposit pursuant to By-Law 5 (interest bearing)	7,663		245,716
Accrued interest receivable on loans	10,295	Reserves:
	54,448	As per by-Law 5 (nt. 4)
		Balance - beginning of year	6,399
Guaranteed investment certificate		Annual provision	2,057
(Maturing March, 1973)	5,600	Interest earned	457
Loans receivable (see sked.)	269,649	Balance - end of year	8,913
Advances re student services:
House of Commons	5,758	Reserve for Theatre Building
Housing committee (see nt. 6)	3,000	Balance - beginning of year	6,486
Due from General Fund	13,698	Interest earned	213
		Balance - end of year	6,699
		Total reserves	15,612
		Capital (see sked.)	90,825
	352,153		352,153

Statement of General Fund Surplus

Balance -	$ 96,161
Less transfers to reserve fund arising form reclassification of accounts:
Appropriations from surplus of AB of C Athletic Board of Control	80,519
Appropriations form Health Insurance Plan rebates	6,500
Unassigned student interest fees	1,527
Sundry	2,360
	90,906
Revised balance	5.255
Excess of revenue over expense for year ended April 30, 1971	4,385
	9,640

Schedule of Loans Payable

QUEEN's UNIVERSITY
50 years at $891 per month starting at same time as payments from Elrond College	$ 157,294
Maturity Sept 1, 1994 7- 6 7/8 % repayable monthly at $484.90	68,111
	225,405

Schedule of Loans Receivable

SCIENCE '44 CO-OP
Maturity Sept 1, 1994 - 6 7/8 % repayable monthly at $484.90	$ 68,111
Maturity July 1, 1993 - 6 1/4 % repayable monthly at $98.22	14,244
ELROND COLLEGE (see nt. 3)
30 years at 7 7/8 % starting after first payment due to CMHC by Elrond College	30,000
50 years at 7 7/8 % starting after first payment due to CMHC by Elrond College	157,294
	269,649

Statement of Reserve Fund Capital

Balance - (see stat. of gen. fund surplus)	$ 80,519
Less
Interest expense	14,000
AB of C deficit	10,973
	24,973
	65,933
Add:
Interest revenue
Surplus arising from Health Insurance Plan rebates	16,316
	8,576
Balance -- April 30, 1971	90,825

Schedule of Commissions Expenses

Services	$ 903
Communications
Who's Where	4,897
Printing service (net)	2,162
Other	784
External affairs	4,343
Campus activities	2,453
Judicial
Legal aid to students	1,475
Other	1,366
Education
Festival of the Arts	1,739
Other	3,585
	23,707

(1) COMPARABILITY --- In 1971, the society has assigned to the Reserve Fund all assets and liabilities of a non-current operating nature In addition, the expense classifications have been changed. The balance sheets at April 30, 1971 have been recast to provide comparative figures (ommitted here) but information was not available to permit such a recasting of other financial statements. As a result of the changes outlighned above, the attached financial statements are not directly comparable with those of the preceding year.

(2) UNIVERSITY CENTRE BUILDING --- The society pledged in 1970 the sum of $500,000 towards the cost of a new student centre. The money is to be raised by a special student levy for seven years. In 1971 the sum of $39,140 was collected from students and retained by Queen's University for this purpose.

(3) LOANS TO ELROND COLLEGE INC. --- The society has made arrangements with Queen's University to borrow a maximum of $600,000 to assist the society in financing loans to Elrond College Inc. The loan from the University is to be secured by the assignment of a second mortgage from the college. As at April 30, 1971, $157,000 has been borrowed from the university and advanced to the college under these arrangements. Negotiations were under way at the balance sheet date to recover the advances and retire the debt as full discharg of loans.

(4) RESERVES --- The basis of increasing the reserve under the AMS constitution, formerly By-Law 8, now By-Law 5, has been changed from an annual provision of $100 to an annual provision of 25¢ per student.

(5) ATHLETIC BOARD OF CONTROL (A.B. of C.) --- The society*s responsibility for the operation of this body was formally terminated as at June 30, 1970 and the society is liable to Queen's University for the deficit incurred in the last fiscal year prior to that date.

(6) HOUSING COMMITTEE -- During the year ended April 30, 1971, the society undertook to rent from Queen*s University a number of houses for the purpose of subletting to students. Rentals were made on this basis over the eight months to April 30, 1971. Other than a cash advance of $3,000 to this committee, the society's financial statements to dot include the rental operation described. The operation resulted in a net loss of $439 calculated as follows:
Gross rental income -- $5,658, less operating expenses -- $6,097 yields net loss of $439.

2-0 U of T

2-0 McMaster

Hockey Gals in First: Sweep Weekend series

-perry

Karen Howatson (6) gets dumped after scoring Gaels' insurance goal vs McMaster

The ice hockey gals pursued their winning streak this weekend in their encounters with the Toronto and McMaster teams.

Under the quiet coaching of "Cookie" Cartwright the gals won 2-0 against U. of T. Friday afternoon. Liz Lankin slipped in the winning goal in the first period. Debby Gilmour earned the assist by passing the puck from behind the net to the left wing, from where Liz quickly netted a wrist shot.

The second goal was the net results of a text book passing attack set up by Ginny Backus and Cathie Black. The final execution was accomplished by Jane Moran who poked the puck into the far corner behind the goalie.

The heated action on the ice resulted in the distribution of three penalties to the gals. The charger, Cathie Black and the holder Marg Mutch; each sat out the regulation ninety seconds. In spite of the time lost by these valuable players, the Toronto team was kept ineffective throughout the game.

In the second period a penalty shot was awarded to Barb Spence for Toronto on a hooking infraction by Debby Gilmour. In a masterful display of stick handling, Barb succeeded in drawing Wanda well out of the net. However, she then stepped on the puck and lost control of the situation, skating into the corner.

The second win for the gals was against McMaster on Saturday afternoon. With Annabelle Twiddy at the helm, the Queen's gals carried off another 2-0 win.

The first two periods on Saturday ended in a scoreless tie. In the third period Karen Howatson came to life and popped in the winning tally at 4.40, assisted by Helen Walko and Cathy Collins. At 8.14 the tricky trio still going strong, led another attack against the hapless visitors culminating in a second goal by Karen. She laced a backhand over the unfortunate goalie's shoulder, confirming once again that old adage, "when you're hot, you're hot". Karen had had a good chance to cool off earlier in the game as she sat out the regulation minute and a half body contact.

For those readers interested in the girls statistics, Mac outshot Queen's 22-12 and chaulked up five penalties to Queen's two. Wanda Gyde attained her first two shutouts of the season.

The good number of spectators who turned out for Saturday's game were treated to a brief figure skating display by Helen Walko late in the game. Presented with the opportunity of an open shot on net, Helen swung viciously but missing the puck pirouetted gracefully, returning to action soon after.

Sports fans will be gladened to know that although Gwen Harrison dislocated her patella during the game, she is recovering and is expected to be back in the line up for the next game.

With their record of 3 wins and 1 tie the Queen's girls are presently at the top of their league.

B-Ball Gaels Bombed

Frank Tindall's B-Ball Gaels participated in the annual Naismith Classic in Waterloo this weekend, and came away shaking their collective heads. The Gaels, playing without co-captain Andy Daugulis, their leading scorer, were mauled 83-36 by a strong Dalhousie squad. The Gaels were out-shot, out-rebounded, and outscored throughout, being held to a paltry 9 points in the first half. Steve Berzanson led Dal with 21 points, while Peter Gordon managed 12 for the out-gunned Gaels. Dal went on to meet SFU in the semifinals, but lost to the tall west coast club.

The Gaels were shunted into the consolation semi-final against U. of T., and managed to stay in that game. Daugulis' absence still hurt, but Queen's displayed considerably more life, staying close to the taller Varsity team until the final moments of the fourth period. The Blues pulled away to win, 66-45. Rob Smart led all scorers with 19 points, while Gerry Barker had 17 for T.O.

The Gaels open at home this coming Wednesday with an exhibition game against Jefferson Community College, and host Laurentian in a league contest Saturday night. Both these schools have strong teams, so even with Daugulis back in the lineup, things could be rough. Fans will be appreciated.

Gaels drop two on weekend

by Ron Pratt

Queen's Golden Gaels hockey coach Bob Carnegie must be wondering what he has to do to get his team back into the win column. Carnegie's charges peppered no less than 53 shots at Waterloo Lutheran on Friday night yet still managed to suffer a 6-5 setback. It was the Gael's third straight defeat, but as Carnegie commented: "we just shouldn't have lost."

The Gaels continually forced the play as Lutheran concentrated on waiting for breaks rather than forechecking Queen's. As a result, several Gaels had great opportunities to score but either shot wide or were stopped by Lutheran goalie George Blinkhorn. Queen's opened the scoring when Morris Mott scored on the power play at 15.48. But the lead was short-lived--16 seconds to be exact--and Robb Benders' slapshot beat Clyde Harris and sent the teams into the dressing rooms tied 1-1.

Lutheran regained the lead at 6.48 of the second period when Jim MacCrea scored his first of three goals (he also picked up 3 assists). MacCrea blocked Graham Closs' drive from the point and outskated Mott to beat Harris. Murray Douglas tied the score at 2-2 when he deflected Mott's drive past Blinkhorn while Lutheran was short-handed. Waterloo's Doug Tate sent the Hawks ahead 3-2 when the Gaels defense was caught up ice. Queen's continued to skate and shoot furiously but Blinkhorn allowed only one goal (out of 24 shots) to get by him and Waterloo led 3-2 going into the third period.

Loudon shoots...and hits another goal post

Queen's frustration continued to mount as they fell behind 4-2 after just 37 seconds into the third period. Lutheran surged ahead 5-2 when Tate deked Harris after picking up a loose puck at the Queen's blueline.

Carnegie began changing his lines hoping for more goals and John Smith's rising wrist shot narrowed the deficit to two goals. Murray Douglas' second goal at 12.43 trimmed the score to 5-4 Lutheran, and the Gaels appeared to be on the verge of exploding for more. But MacCrea's third goal of the game, less than a minute later, took the momentum away from Queen's. Douglas completed his "hat trick" at 16.00 on a fine individual effort as he cut around the Lutheran defense to push the puck past Blinkhorn. Gaels' best scoring chance after that goal was Mott's drive off the post with 2.37 left in the period.

Once again, the Gaels' turned in a fine effort and once again defensive miscues cost the Gaels a victory. Queen's record now stands at 2 wins, 3 losses, but the team has lost 4 in a row (including Saturday's exhibition loss to Loyola by 8-2). The Gaels' certainly are having problems but Carnegie will have over a month to solve them since the Gaels' next league game isn't until the new year. However, Queen's continues its exhibition schedule as they prepare for the Hockey Canada tournament here Dec. 28 and 29. Their next exhibition clash is Saturday at 2 p.m. against Sir George Williams University at the Harty Arena.

Fencers First

The Women's Fencing team competed in the Queen's-RMC Invitational meet this past weekend. Unfortunately the girls didn't have the turnout that was expected, with only Trent showing up. In spite of that, a good time was had by all, with the Queen's girls placing first in bouts.

This meet was another good chance for the girls to get practice in competition before the first part of the OWIAA's in Ottawa next weekend. They expect to make a good showing in this upcoming tournament.

B-Ball
Wed. Nite
8:15 PM.

T. O. Choked Again.. Calgary won the Grey Cup

Wrestlers Second

Queen's wrestlers took on their first opponents of the season Saturday in a tri-meet against R.M.C. and Ryerson, and came out in the middle. Veterans Mike Dwhytie and Rob Beamish came up with victories in their weight classes, as did newly-arrived transfers Bob Pesowsky and Ted Pordham, both McArthur College students.

Rookies Steve Brown, Del DeMonte, Bill Graham and Pete Verhoeven showed good potential, but the most pleasant surprise came from John Johnson of Rehab, who won his matches handily.

However, the overall team effort of the well-conditioned R.M.C. squad proved too much, and the Gaels had to settle for second place. The team may be strengthened after Christmas by the addition of football star Jim Sherritt, who has expressed some interest in keeping his hand in during the off season.

His presence might give the Gaels the first legitimate heavyweight wrestler seen here in many a season. However, time will tell.

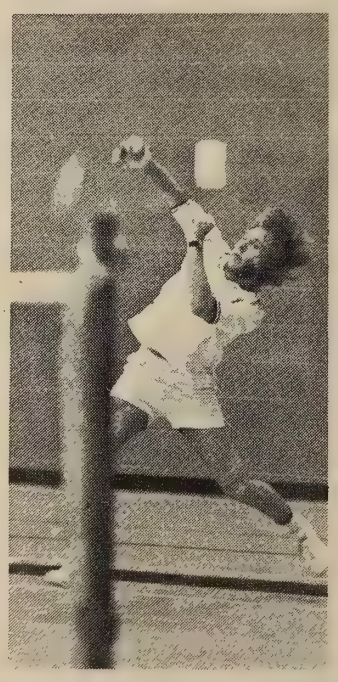
Volleyball Men Take OUAA East

Queen's volleyball team swept four straight matches Saturday to clinch first place in the OUAA's Eastern Division. Playing four best-two-of-three contests, the Gaels were in action for almost eight hours, forcing player-coach George Rada to use his reserves in the later matches.

Queen's started quickly, disposing of York 15-5, 15-11, and dumping Ryerson 15-7, 15-8. Then things slowed down. The Gaels dropped their first game to U. of T. 12-15, but battled back to win the match 15-8, 15-13, after trailing by as much as 5-10 in the final game. Against Laurentian, Rada went to his bench for the first two games, splitting them 15-12, 12-15, this put the rested first-stringers back in to dump the Voyageurs 15-1.

The Gaels will now represent the OUAA East in the all-Ontario finals to be held at Western next Saturday. Rada has expressed confidence that his squad can hold its own against the West winner. Not a bad show for a team that didn't exist two years ago.

-boag



Badminton: Queen's wins again

For the second year in succession, Queen's University won the Queen's Invitational Badminton Tournament held at the Bartlett Gym last Saturday (November 27). This year however, competition was much keener especially that provided by York University, led by Jim McKee who ranks among the top twenty players in Canada. Other teams involved were Ryerson and McMaster.

Playing in the number 1 singles berth, D. Howard secured 2 out of a maximum of 6 points. He put up a good fight against J. McKee, the eventual entertaining match to S. Redmond of McMaster. James Lim, in second berth, scored four points with convincing wins over Ryerson and McMaster players, while losing narrowly to Ksiazkiewicz. Henry Fei and Boon Ong, the third and fourth players from Queen's, won all their matches with considerable ease, scoring 6 points each.

In the first doubles, J. Lim and H. Fei swept through all the opposition and once again confirmed their superiority in doubles play. With this win and last week's Kingston Open Badminton Chamiopnship title in their hands, the pair is well on the way to a successful season. The second doubles team of D. Howard and B. Ong rounded off the day with 5 points to give Queen's the Championship with a total of 29 points followed by York (26), McMaster 14) and Ryerson (3).

Considering the fact that Queen's played without at least 2 of heir top players, this is indeed a very creditable performance. The uture certainly looks bright for this team!

Swimmers Manage a Close Fifth

The Queen's Women's Swim team met with 7 other Ontario universities last Saturday in the McMaster Invitational meet. The overall results had Queen's (174 points) placing a close fifth to Guelph (192 pts) and Waterloo (184) who took third and fourth places. McMaster walked away with first (334 pts), followed by U. of T. (280).

In the relay (400 yd medley) Cathy Brace, Sue Derby, Cathy Clark and Deb Turnbull placed second in their heat, and fifth in the final. The 400 yd freestyle relay team of Brenda Prosenyak, Jane Kersel, Cathy Clark, and Cathy Brace placed first in their heat, and fifth in the final.

Individual times of all competitors improved, and returning swimmers Cathy Brace and Cathy Clark came through with a second each in their events.

As this was the toughest meet so far, the Queen's girls fared quite well.

Volleyball Gals Falter

The Women's Senior Volleyball team has been unable as yet to come up with a concerted team effort. They lost to Carleton in four games last Friday with scores of 15-9, 12-15, 15-10 and 15-4. In another four game match on Saturday, they were defeated 15-2, 15-1, 8-15 and 15-9 by Ottawa U. Nancy Foster was outstanding for Queen's in back lines defense, but until the team as a whole starts to function up to its potential, such individual efforts will be wasted.

The Queen's Drama Guild presents a

London Theatre Tour

during the February Reading week- Feb. 20 to 27th

$250 - student
$275 - non-student cost includes all transportation, accommodation, breakfasts and tickets to 7 shows

Write to the Guild Theatre Tour, Basement, Theology Hall, Queen's University

Please reserve a place for me on the London Theatre Tour. Enclosed is my $50. deposit. I understand that full payment must be made by January 1, 1972, and that all reservations made after that date must include full payment.

Please print

Name _____ Phone _____

Local address _____ Age ____ Sex ____

Student (Yes or No) _____ (If Yes) Year ____ Major _____

Make cheques payable to GUILD THEATRE TOUR.

LADIES ELECTROLYSIS

Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call:

HARRISON SALON 542-5595

Bring anybody out for dinner -- Great food from 2.99 -- every night!

It's Time to Book Your Party

or dance or stag or excuse for a drunk

The Round Table

We've got rooms from 5 - 1500 and great food and drink.

Call us . . . Now

The Round Table

Fully licenced - 542-7337

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

B-Ball Gals Split Weekend Series

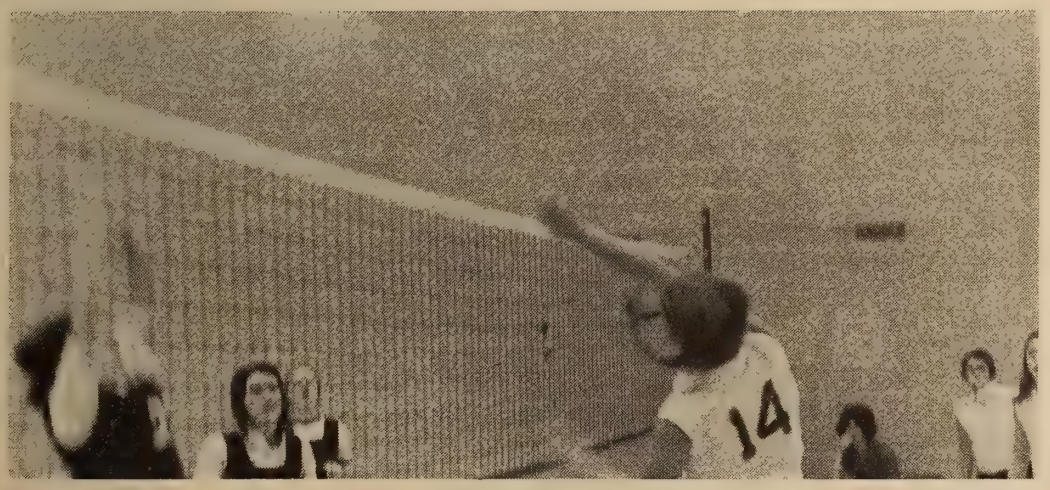
Ladies' Basketball Team played in Ottawa on the weekend; to come home with a repeat of last week's outcome in Toronto.

Friday night the girls played well as a whole team working together with all members scoring. The combination of two rookie players, Janet Eady and Laney Marshall, added 30 points to the final score. Laney being tops with 18 pts, Janet second with 12 and, close behind, second year player Karen Carson with 10. Final score for the game was Queen's 72 and Carleton 27. High scorer for Carleton was Linda Williams with 9.

Saturday's games provided the stiffest competition the Queen's girls have yet encountered in intercollegiate play. Ottawa, using a stiff zone defense and 1-3-1 offense, took advantage of the costly mistakes in passing and fumbling made by the Queen's girls. The final score was Ottawa 74 and Queen's 41. High scorer for Ottawa was Coleen Dufresne (23 pts) while Laney Marshall led Queen's scoring again with 19 pts.

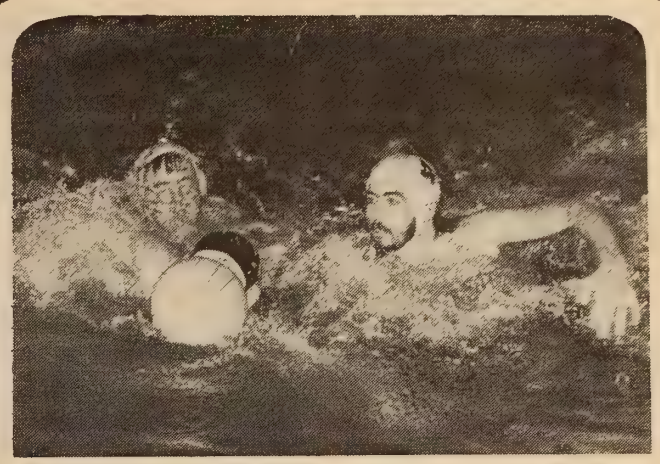
Next game is against Laurentian Sat. Dec. 4 at 6:15 p.m. The Laurentian team is strong, with good height, and are rumored to play a rough game. They beat Carleton last weekend and were also beaten by Ottawa U., but coach Brenda Mackie feels the team will come through next week.

Intermediate B-Ball Second; Loss to Ryerson Proves costly



The Intermediate Basketball girls wound up their season with a round robin at U. of T. this past weekend. Friday afternoon they met Brock in their first game of the meet. Jean Chrichton of Queen's was outstanding, not only in scoring with 11 points, but also in both offensive and defensive rebounding. Barb Platt and Jarmilla Smola netted 10 and 9 points respectively for Queen's to aid in the 50-18 victory.

In the Friday evening game Queen's defeated Trent 31-24, with Smola again sinking 9 points.



The Queen's girls faced the strong Ryerson squad early Saturday morning. The girls seemed tired as they gave up an important 28-17 victory to Ryerson.

The final game against U. of T. was close-fought throughout. The game was tied with only 20 seconds left, when a Queen's player sunk a corner shot to gain a 23-21 win.

Queen's and Ryerson emerged from the tournament with identical win-loss records; however, the championship was awarded to Ryerson by virtue of their win over Queen's. Toronto took third place, and Brock and Trent tied for fourth.

-edwards

-pappas

Waterpolo 3rd in OUAA

The Queen's waterpolo team concluded a moderately successful league schedule Friday evening, downing York 9-4 before bowing to Toronto 9-3. This split left the Gaels with a 3-3 record, good for second place in the East, and as it turned out, third overall.

The Gaels came from behind a 3-1 first-quarter deficiet to dump the Teomen, but couldn't move the ball against a faster U. of T. squad. After holding the Blues in a scoreless first period, Queen's was subjected to a rash of goal-scoring, with several Toronto makers being set up by errant passes. Standouts for the Gaels were Archie Nesbitt with 4 goals and Paterson and Gord Hurd, with two each.

Saturday afternoon, the Queen's pool hosted the OUAA title game between Mac and Toronto. Mac won easily, 8-3. This game was preceeded by two exhibition games, the first between a hastily-assembled Queen's Women's team and an experienced Ottawa ladies squad, and the second between the Gaels and Waterloo, in what was to have been the OUAA consolation final (Western didn't show, and Waterloo did, so...). The Ottawa team won easily, 9-1, but the Queen's girls allowed only two goals in the second half, with Fran Warrick tallying the Queen's marker. The Gaels had a slightly easier time against a fast, tough Waterloo squad, managing a 13-12 victory despite a Warrior surge in the final period, when they outscored Queen's 5-0. Hurd netted 5 goals for Queen's, Nesbitt had 3 and Paterson and Patterson 2 each.

The Gaels finished with an 11-3 record overall, all three losses coming at the hands of U. of T.

Intermediate Volleyball Splits

The Intermediate Volleyball girls were ending their season at U. of T. as well. They began their round robin with a marathon 5 game match, finally defeating Brock 13-15, 12-15, 15-5, 15-6, and 15-6.

Friday evening they met the powerful U of T squad. Queen's did manage to take one game but lost overall with match scores of 15-13, 15-5, 10-15 and 15-6.

Ryerson also defeated the Queen's girls when they met early the next morning. Queen's forced the strong Ryerson team to four games before finally taking the loss 15-5, 13-15, 15-6 and 15-4.

The Queen's team rallied for an easy win over Trent with scores of 15-3, 15-13 and 15-7.

Petite Judy Burma was the outstanding player of the Queen's team. She showed an outstanding ability to block, spike and serve. A longer season would probably have allowed the girls to jell as a team and show better in the finals.

Find out about The Bahá'í Faith
at the Fireside

Thursday December 2
At 7 p.m.

In small 2nd floor
common room, the Union

Admission is free
Refreshments will be served!

Queen's Drama Guild Presents

It's Called
The Sugar Plum
and Birds of a Feather

Directed by Morison Bock

Convocation Hall, Dec. 1st - 4th 9 p.m.

Tickets: Students - 50¢ - nonstudents - 75¢ at the door

CANADA

TORONTO - John White, Ontario minister of universities and colleges, warned Friday that the public wants its money's worth from higher education.

White told an informal meeting with reporters that "we won't be satisfied with anything less than excellence" for the $750 million that universities and colleges are getting this year in tax money.

White's remarks come at a time when universities and colleges are complaining about a shortage of funds.

He also said he's considering another cutback in support for graduate students - reduced last year from $5,000,000 for graduate fellowships to $3,500,000.

Canada's oldest operating magazine, Saturday Night, has received $29,000 in special government grants since it turned itself into a non-profit firm to be eligible for public support. The 84-year-old magazine has been losing money since 1948.

Saturday Night was revamped into a non-profit firm in mid-summer, editor Robert Fulford said in an interview Friday. "I haven't announced it earlier because I was waiting for our board of directors to be selected."

OTTAWA - Canada protested to China Thursday against a Chinese nuclear test Nov. 18. The protest was lodged by Canadian Ambassador in Peking, Ralph Collins, the External Affairs Department said.

External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp told the Commons, in reply to a question by Social Credit Leader Real Caouette, that Mr. Collins had been instructed to make the protest.

CHARLOTTETOWN - The committee studying Prince Edward Island's restrictive Public Order Act has recommended its immediate repeal.

The legislation, introduced last year, could be used to ban almost any public gathering.

Premier Alex Campbell, who tabled the committee's interim report Wednesday, said the act will be replaced by legislation consistent with the committee's report but not during this session of the Legislature.

MONTREAL - Mayor Jean Drapeau has been charged with failing to file federal income tax returns for the years 1968 and 1969.

Sessions Court Judge Cyrille Morand yesterday issued a summons ordering the mayor to appear in court Dec. 6 on two charges under the Income Tax Act.

Drapeau, a lawyer, could not be reached for comment Friday night.

He receives $25,000 a year as mayor of Montreal and an additional $11,000 as a member of the Montreal Island metro council.

The complaints against the mayor were sworn out by an RCMP officer, J.P.A. Matte, on Oct. 20, but did not become public knowledge until Friday.

The complaints allege that the National Revenue Department sent the mayor a registered letter last March 22, requesting him to file his 1969 tax return within one month. The documents add that he had not replied to the letter.

The mayor has been involved in a court battle with the Windsor Hotel since his upper-crust restaurant in the hotel basement went out of business last January.

The hotel filed suit in bankruptcy court for payment of back rent and property damage totaling $42,750 from the mayor's restaurant firm, the Vaisseau d'Or Inc. (the Golden Vessel).

The mayor struck back with a $100,000 countersuit, claiming the hotel's civil action had created adverse publicity and defamed his character.

Lawyers for the two parties settled out of court Nov. 5, but the dispute erupted again six days later when a crew of movers directed by Drapeau removed furniture and glassware from the padlocked restaurant.

The mayor and his movers became involved in shoving matches and heated arguments with hotel security guards and both sides have promised to renew legal action.

TORONTO - License Plates good for five years are on the way for Ontario motorists.

Starting a year from now with the 1973 plates, motorists will no longer have to get a new set of plates annually but instead will use the same plates for five years.

They will, however, have to buy a vinyl renewal sticker each year at the rate presently charged for new sets of plates. They are $35 for an eight-cylinder, $27.50 for a six and $20 for a four.

TORONTO - Publishers of seven Ontario daily newspapers with a combined circulation of more than one million announced plans Friday to establish a provincial press council.

The council, which will deal with citizens' complaints against the press and work for establishment of common ethical and professional standards, is expected to begin operations next year.

Establishment of such press councils was a major recommendation of the Senate committee on the mass media headed by Senator Keith Davey, which submitted its report late last year.

Publishers who joined in launching the project at an initial meeting here this week were: Mark Farrell, Windsor Star; W. J. Blackburn, London Free Press; E. H. Wheatley, Brantford Expositor; John E. Motz, Kitchener-Waterloo Record; Beland Honderich, Toronto Star; R. W. Southam, Ottawa Citizen, and John D. Muir, Hamilton Spectator.

MONTREAL - Paul Rose was found guilty Friday of kidnapping Quebec Labor Minister Pierre Laporte on Oct. 10, 1970.

Rose, a 28-year-old former teacher, is already serving a life sentence for the murder of Mr. Laporte, whose strangled body was found in an abandoned car a week after the kidnapping.

EDMONTON - The environment won out over economics when the Alberta Government approved tenders this week totalling $181,802 for the disposal of about 11,000 scrap vehicles at stockpile sites throughout the province.

The average disposal cost will be $16 per vehicle in tenders awarded to two metal-recovery firms for the collection and recycling of the hulks.

THE WORLD

LOS ANGELES - Students who have tried to register to vote this fall have run into stumbling blocks thrown up by local election officials.

Often the officials are confused by the laws or frightened by the young people's potential impact on college towns, and their actions have evoked cries of protest and a number of lawsuits by student activists.

WASHINGTON - The United States is quickly moving towards an interim solution to the world monetary crisis that would mean an end to the 10 per cent surcharge on imports early in the spring.

Key diplomatic sources say President Richard Nixon has decided to ease the demands that Treasury Secretary John Connally has placed before American trading partners as the price for lifting the surcharge, imposed Aug. 15.

CAIRO - All 13 Arab countries represented at the Cairo military meeting have agreed to wage war against Israel, the Egyptian chief of staff said Thursday.

Gen. Saad el Shazli said after the conference that "delegates voiced full desire to participate in the battle, with each country contributing what it can afford."

LONDON - Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home, emphasizing that members of Parliament should consider "past history and the present realities of power," Thursday unveiled the Rhodesian settlement proposals that almost certainly will evoke strong criticism.

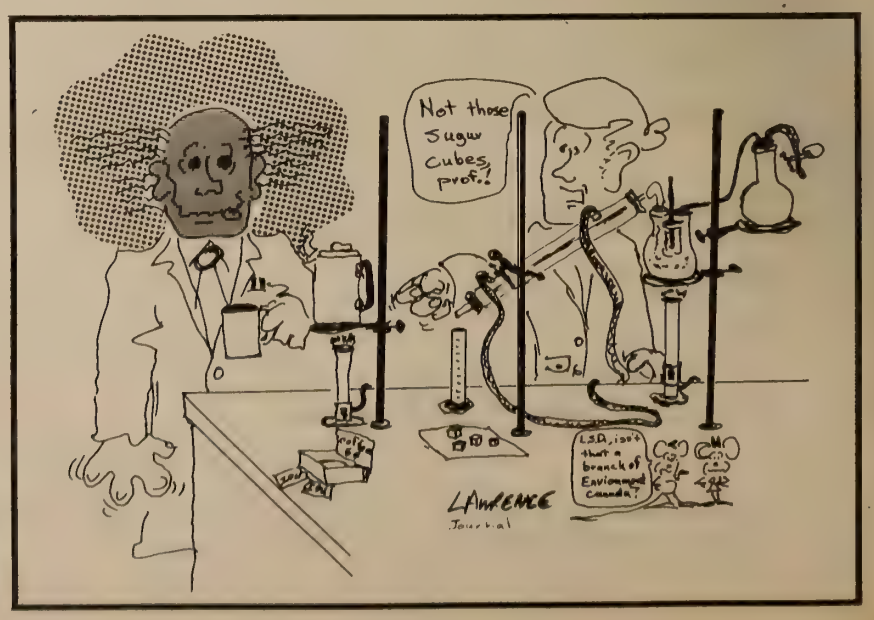
Sir Alec told the House that the terms were fully within the five principles that the Government has maintained must be a condition of Rhodesian independence from Great Britain.

The time it will take the Africans to achieve Legislative parity will leave the 250,000 Europeans in power over 5,000,000 blacks for a long time. The lowest estimate is 30 years.

But the important concession Sir Alec gained from Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith was the removal of a constitutional provision that prevented blacks from ever going beyond parity in the assembly; in other words, from ever achieving a political majority.

LONDON - A Soviet space scientist said in a book published in Britain Wednesday that Moscow's space program is a gigantic bluff covering bad workmanship and technical inadequacy.

Leonid Vladimirov, a Soviet engineer and journalist who defected while on a visit to Britain in 1966, said the Soviet space program originally began as a series of publicity stunts.



In his book, The Russian Space Bluff, Mr. Vladimirov said these stunts were aimed at persuading the West that Russia had reached a level of advanced technology comparable with that of the United States.

Mr. Vladimirov's book describes political pressures and frustration under which Soviet scientists and technologists work, always separated by security barriers.

He said the West has always overrated Soviet strength in space because of early Soviet successes.

"Russia knew a long time ago that she could not beat America to the moon because she cannot build a moon rocket," he said. "Even today the Soviet Union cannot produce any significantly big jet nozzles."

Mr. Vladimirov said the two-man and three-man Soviet flights of the Voskhod series of the mid-1960s were short because the capsules were overloaded.

BACK PAGE

MEMO

Queen's Journal

Vol. XCIX No. 30 Friday, Dec. 3, 1971

Chas: Something was missing at the AMS meeting on Monday. Bradley. You know,

- boag

'Tis the season, almost

The annual Christmas carol service (it's sponsored by the Engineering Society) starts at 8:30 p.m. Sunday in Grant Hall. Everyone on campus is invited; AMS personages will read the lessons, a brass choir of music students will play, and choristers from St. George's Cathedral will lead the carols.

The Journal will publish Tuesday and Thursday next week as usual; the Thursday paper will be a special issue with Christmas goodies and details on holiday events. There will be no Friday paper, but The Journal will appear Tuesday, December 14, with its last issue for 1971.

The third eye, the Journal magazine, formerly sweven, will be distributed early next week.

May we remind you of the following other important dates in the near future:

December 13 - Victor Bradley's birthday.

December 17 - Math 226 exam.

December 18 - Oil Thigh on Skates in City Hall Square, Toronto.

December 26 - Feast of St. Stephen the Martyr.

January 10 - Classes resume.

the vice-president -- curly-haired guy, quotes numbers a lot. He didn't show up; probably couldn't find his way to McNeill House, which is where they held the meeting, for some reason. They did have a few new faces, though, mostly residence people who wanted to talk about, guess what, coed residence.

Seems that Terry Macli, who is Artsci 75 rep on the ASUS executive, and Vicky Wilgress, who is social convenor of Artsci 75, and a few other people, didn't like the way the Women's Residence Council handled the whole coed residence issue. They both pointed out that they had voted against it when it came up last week, but they wanted the whole thing reopened anyway.

So Macli, who lives in Morris, and Vicky and two of her pals from Chown, asked the AMS to "examine the conduct of the WRC" and to hold a new study of coed residence possibilitiees. The discussion wasn't particularly inspiring; everybody brought out their pet positions.

Like, it will not surprise you to learn that Pat Riley, when he gave an introductory speech, said he wanted coed residences. He was critical of the proposal they turned down last week, though: "It was chosen because it was objectionable to all parties, and therefore would get by."

And Marv Bloos, president of the ASUS and campus big wheel, expressed some displeasure with the WRC. He was countered by Ian Nordheimer, who gallantly overlooked the IRC's support of coed res to speak in defence of the WRC and urge the AMS not to force anything onto anybody. (The WRC itself wasn't represented; it seems Cindy Davidson went home for the weekend and forgot to come back.)

Anyway, they turned that motion down, 9 to 10, and went on to turn down the idea of starting a brand new study of the whole coed res idea. In the course of that debate, Andy Pipe -- the longest memory on outer council, I think -- made an impassioned speech for sin and against motherhood, pointing out that WRC and, occasionally, IRC have always been the sticking-points when it came to the crunch on something like coed res. He said the AMS should investigate them, not it ("them" being the WRC and the IRC, AND "it being coed res".

Val Karpinsky, who is vice-chairman of the IRC, said loudly that coed res isn't dead anyway. The residence boards can revive it, he said, though Barb Slater interrupted to assure everybody that they wouldn't. The Ban Righ Board (which runs women's res, more or less) is especially conservative, Barb said, even though "my own mother is on it!"

(Barb asked only 17 questions Monday night. But then, it was a short meeting.)

Around this point somebody tried to resurrect the idea of investigating the WRC again, and it took another round of debate to squash that. The most useful comment anybody made was when Andy Pipe asked why the malcontents in residence didn't take their complaints to the WRC, and Terry Macli answered (not that he lives in women's res, mind you, but he seemed to know) that everybody thought it would be useless and it was the duty of the AMS to investigate.

Finally the AMS passed, unanimously, a pretty motion "that the AMS strongly urge the various residence boards to provide the alternative of integrated residences for first year students and upperclassmen for the fall of 1972."

Paul Kennedy, who was being speaker in spite of the usual procedural chaos from time to time, pointed out that the meeting was supposed to become a "theme meeting" and contemplate its collective navel, but for some reason everybody wanted to get down to business. So they ran through a great many pieces of business in short order:

They approved (first reading of three) some long and confusing amendments which allow the bands to elect their own officers, rather than having people appoint their successors. (This is to avoid ill-will and politicking, Doug Romans explained. He's manager of the Queen's Bands, besides being ringmaster of the coed residence show.)

They approved (first reading again) a by-law which specifies who can wear the Queen's coat of arms -- basically, everybody, except on faculty jackets where there are restrictions.

They gave the International Club a constitution.

They approved (first reading) a specification for the quorum of inner council, which is the AMS cabinet. The quorum would be six with the present size of the cabinet, and this could be a problem since inner council can't always raise the previous quorum of five, even.

They approved, with some head-scratching, giving $17.50 to the amateur radio people to set up something called a "phone patch" by which anybody who wants to can make long distance phone calls for nothing over the radio waves.

Marv Bloos reported that the concert committee is vaguely thinking of buying some sound equipment (that's amplifiers) since the equipment they have now is going to leave town soon. At least, I think that's what he said.

Pat Riley said he would look into the mud behind the art centre. Yes, he really did say that.

Wally Palmer said he might do something some time about enforcing the copyright of the Who's Where.

And everybody agreed that it was nice meeting outside the McLaughlin Room and they should do it again some time. (This was the occasion for Anne Merrick to put in a plug for McArthur Hall, and for Pat Riley to put in a plug for the theme meeting he wants to hold about the financing of higher education.)

The AMS approved (first reading) a constitution for Queen's Student Agencies, which Kennedy said had the distinction of being the longest-waiting item on the agenda, like since August. This item actually produced some discussion, mostly among people who wanted to know what QSA is or was.

Riley, who seemed to know, said it was the business and services side of the AMS; he described it as "a growth corporation" and looked embarrassed. The main reason for setting it up, this radical-gone-Bay-Street explained, was to keep businesses away from easy tampering by politicians.

Continued on page two

AMS meeting (cont.)

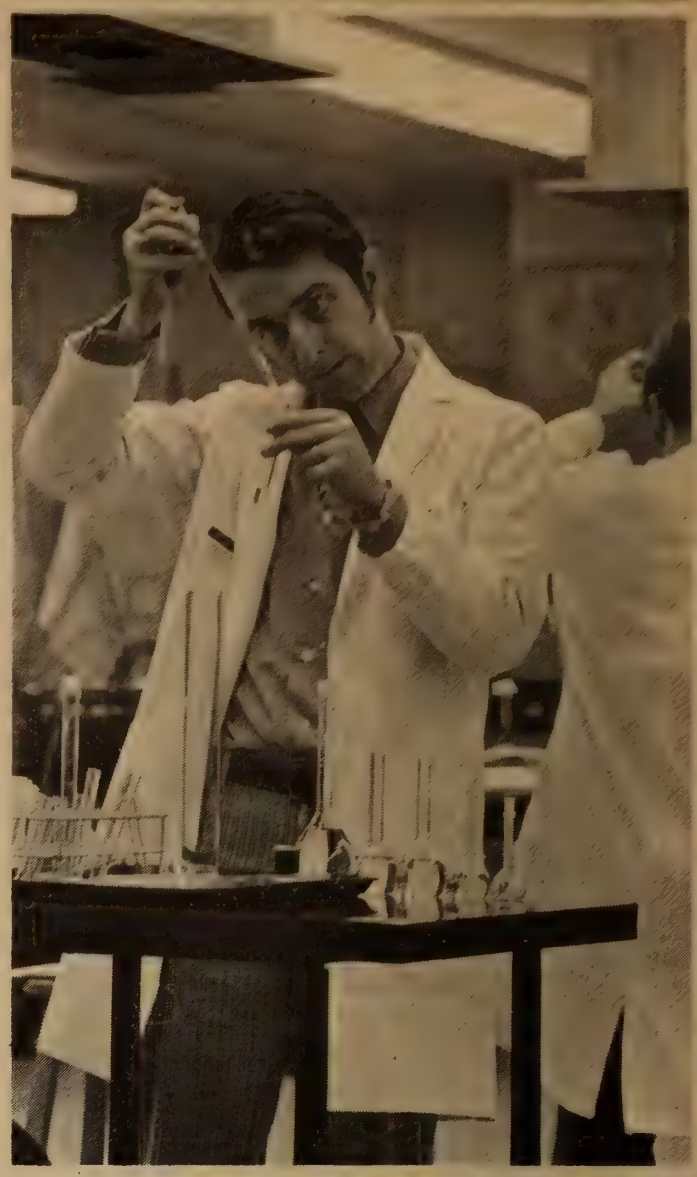
Later on, one of the QSA enterprises came under some fire. The Heffalump boutique wanted to borrow four grand from the AMS, apparently for Christmas stock, but this met with great scepticism and eventually the inner council was told to go and lend them up to $2000 if they thought it was a good idea.

The meeting proceeded to give third and final reading, almost by accident, to a pay raise for AMS constables. Kathy McSweeney, who is an artsci rep and has been known to be a constable (the one with long blonde hair and a wistful expression), wanted to know if the raise was retroactive, but Pat Riley said no.

Somebody asked whether the AMS hadn't agreed to have first year reps on the outer council, and if so where were they? Embarrassed, the management had to admit that that by-law never did get put into law. Pat Riley confidently predicted that it would be grounded in the shoals of the annual joint meeting again next February.



At this point it was twenty past nine -- the meeting started well after seven, so really it had only been going two hours and a bit -- and Kennedy announced with incredulity that the whole agenda was finished.

Oh, all but item seven: "Theme -- Why are we doing this?" To discuss this, everybody agreed it was necessary to adjourn the meeting and be informal. Pat Riley started the discussion off by wanting to talk about student organizations on a national level.

He seemed mostly to be worried about student aid again. Seems the government is beginning to tighten up on money for universities and for students -- well, we have already noticed that. He wants to get students organized to do something about it, and has agreed with the student presidents from Toronto and Western to try to start an organization.

There weren't a great many people left by this time. Outer council had had trouble getting a quorum originally, and wouldn't have had one left if anybody had counted. Just about all the spectators had left, too. And so did I.

Chris Redmond

- egger

ORIENTATION '72 — GAELS

You have time to submit your Gael Application form. Final submission date is today so get your application in now to the AMS Receprion in the basement of the Union. Interested people who have given thought to being a gael are earnestly wanted and needed. Please don't hesitate to apply if you want to be a gael. Short informal interviews with each applicant will be scheduled the week of January 10, 1972.

Aunt Lucy's Restaurant

Licensed of Course
STEAKS - SEAFOODS
PIZZA - SPAGHETTI
and
KENTUCKY
FRIED CHICKEN

Mont Ste-Anne

Skiing costs less and is more fun

- only gondola lift in Eastern Canada
- 2050' vertical drop
- 6545 hourly capacity
- 26 miles of trails and slopes (North and South sides)
- Season from November to May
- 5 or 7-day Ski Week Package

For free brochures and information, write to:
Mont Ste-Anne,
P.O. Box 40,
Beaupré,
Province of Québec
Toronto ski reports phone number (416) 483-4510

St. James' Church

UNION and BARRIE
KINGSTON

9 a.m. - Holy Communion

11 a.m. - Holy Communion - Guest Preacher, Rev. Stanley Osborne.

7:30 p.m. - Evening Prayer

ST. ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Reverend Max V. Putnam, B.A., D.D., Minister
Christopher C. Hunt, ARCO, Director of Praise

10.00 a.m. Young Adult Bible Study
11.00 a.m. Morning Worship

7.00 p.m. Evening Worship
7.30 p.m. "Radio Ministry" CKLC

8.15 p.m. Youth Fellowship

TUESDAY, 7.30 p.m.
Bible Study

ANNUAL CAROL SERVICE

Sunday, Dec. 5th
Grant Hall
8:30 p.m.

Copying and Duplicating

The 3600 III Xerox Duplicator provides fast, excellent, thesis reproduction, photographic reproduction, solids and halftone reproduction, sorting and collating, and background clearing. Quality book copying and transparency reproduction can also be provided by our 720 Xerox Copier.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

This Sunday
and every Sunday is The Round Table
The Roast Beef Buffet
Only $2.99
(a regular $3.99 feature)
All You Can Eat
- cold cuts,
desserts, salads,
and ROAST BEEF
EVERY Sunday - 5-10 at
The Round Table
Fully Licensed
Home of Mr. Bojangles Discotheque
542-7337

Bring anybody for dinner - great food from $2.99 - every night

Clip this coupon - your second cocktail only 25c - in any dining room

Elrond starts looking for members

Elrond College started its membership drive last night with a general information meeting in the Red Room. Application forms will be available Monday in residences and other buildings on campus.

The application form itself requires only basic biographic information, except that it asks students what needs they feel the Elrond community will fill for them. It will be accompanied by a basic pamphlet describing the Elrond building, facilities, accommodations, and so on -- it has 12 and 6-man units, four- and two-man units, and apartments for a variety of ways to live. The pamphlet also discussed " the Elrond community" and the meaning of cooperativism in that context.

Elrond is a 400-bed residence tower now nearing completion at the corner of Division and Princess Streets. Originally conceived by the AMS, it is now an independent student-run project.

The first question of prospective Elrond residents is usually about rents. The exact rent structure had not been announced at press time, but was likely to be "about commensurate with that of men's residence", according to project director John Blanchard.

The selection process to be used in choosing Elrond applicants will be "rather random", according to board members, largely because the number of people who will apply is still unknown. But the basic criterion is the goal of a mixed Elrond community. No fixed quota system for faculties and subjects will be used, and membership is not restricted to Queen's students -- St. Lawrence College students and student nurses from Kingston General Hospital and Hotel Dieu Hospital are eligible as well.

No interviews will be used in the selection process; but in most other respects it will be similar to that of the Science 44 Co-op, which is fairly flexible in its criteria, Blanchard said.

Elrond's life-style will revolve around the various living units. Since 12-, 6-, four-, and two-man units all have their own kitchens and living areas as well as bedrooms, they will constitute self-contained homes. However, several units share in each corridor and elevator stop in the high-rise building, and so it is hoped that a larger sense of community will develop.

Elrond's success as a community will depend on decentralizing responsibility to the house and corridor levels, Blanchard said. About two dozen members of the present Elrond users' committee will plan such internal administration this summer, and then divide themselves among the different living units in September, to help get organization started.

The only pre-appointed officers in Elrond, all paid from the operating budget, will be the general manager, a secretary, a bookkeeper, a maintenance man and a chef. General cleaning, dishwashing, serving in the dining room, and other minor work will be performed by residents as part of their weekly two or three hours of work duty.

Organization in Elrond will depend on committees and on house and corridor managers, all of which will be elected in the fall. Committees will probably include membership, education (for which a programme is already being designed), and communication. This group will be responsible for keeping residents and their committees in touch, and may publish a daily bulletin to keep people informed about Elrond activities and events.

Those plans are only a small indication of the communal possibilities of Elrond, Blanchard said. Facilities, activities and events will happen entirely through the efforts of the founding members who enter Elrond in 1972. And, Blanchard said, the college's development will be a direct result of the initiative and interest demonstrated in its first, most crucial year.

Ban Righ Board suggests small pilot co-ed project

The BAN RIGH BOARD held a special meeting tonight in the Chown Hall Board Room to consider the 1971 Report on Co-Educational Residences which they had officially accepted at the regular Ban Righ Meeting on Saturday, November 20, 1971. In addition to the Board members, there were also present the President of the I.R.C., Mr. Ian Nordheimer and the Chairman of the Co-educational Residences Committee, Mr. Douglas Romans.

The Board Members each had examined the full REPORT in detail and the views of the representatives of the I.R.C. and the Co-ed Committee were given careful attention.

Following a very lengthy discussion, the Ban Righ Board made the following motion to send to the Residences Board which meets on December 11th:

"Moved by Mrs. R.J. Irvine and seconded by Mrs. G.J.M. Aitken that the Ban Righ Board has received and carefully considered the documents submitted by the W.R.C. and the I.R.C. The Ban Righ Board does not see adequate support for the conversion to Co-ed living of any of the existing Women's Halls for 1972-73. However, the Ban Righ Board supports the principle of co-ed living and offers the opinion that it would be desirable to develop a smaller pilot co-ed residence project involving both first year and upper year students at Queen's University for September 1972."

The motion was passed unanimously.

No further details were available.

Nobel-winning novelist discussed

By Jennifer Grass

Dr. Gleb Zekulin, a professor of Russian at the University of Toronto lectured last Thursday evening on "Aspects of Alexander Solzhenitsyn's Craftsmanship." He gave a moving presentation of the works of this Russian author who has survived the Russian front, eight years in Stalin's camps, cancer and most recently the suppression of his identity as a writer.

Since 1962 Solzhenitsyn has published several novels, plays, short stories and the first part of a trilogy. His novels include One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich, Cancer Ward, The First Circle, August 1914 and most recently the Love-Girl and the Innocent. In 1970 he was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature and in the same year was expelled from the Soviet writers union.

Critics have accused Solzhenitsyn of being old fashioned. They label his writing moralistic and didactic. However, Zekulin said that these claims were not valid. To substantiate this he referred to Solzhenitsyn's narrative technique.

Characterization is a continuous process in the novel of Solzhenitsyn. The hero never changes, nor does he encounter a moment of crisis, commented Zekulin. And rather than leave them suspended in this process, their life is summed up with a moral at the end. This method of ending has given rise to the criticism that Solzhenitsyn moralizes too much.

COSMIC CLOCK
Different things for different people
HAVE YOU TRIED OUR PANTS?
Sweaters
Shirts
Jeans
Your friends have!
386 Princess St.
544-5755
Across from the Odeon

DOWNBEAT'S RECORD AND TAPES
CHRISTMAS
BONUS SALE

Warner Bros. Top Hit Albums

- STICKY FINGERS ... — Rolling Stones
- MASTER OF REALITY — Black Sabbath
- FIREBALL ... — Deep Purple
- MUD SLIDE SLIM ... — James Taylor/

Mfr's Sugg. Retail $6.29
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 3.79

Complete Selection of Record Accessories Needles, Cloths, etc., All at Low, Low, Bonus Prices for him...for her...

JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR
COMPLETE 2-ALBUM SET
Mfr's. Sugg. Retail 13.98
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 7.99

MGM ORIGINAL SOUND TRACK SHAFT
Mfr's. Sugg. Retail 9.98
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 5.99

RCA Albums -Top Artists- -Top Hits

- SO LONG BALLANTYNE ... — Guess Who
- GREATEST HITS ... — Steppen Wolf
- BEST OF THE GUESS WHO ...
- IN PERSON ... — Charlie Pride

Mfr's Sugg. Retail $5.98
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 3.99

for Father...for Mother...

Many More Unadvertised Record Buys In Store

MAJOR LABEL CUT OUTS
These include all your favorites in music. Country and Western, Rock, etc.
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 1.39

DOWNBEAT PICK HIT OF THE WEEK
STONE
NEIL DIAMOND
Mfr's. Sugg. Retail 6.49
4.23

COLUMBIA CHRISTMAS CUT OUTS
All Your Favorites.
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 1.47

We Reserve The Right TO Limit Quantities

for Sis...for Brother...for Everyone!

Items on Sale for 10 Days

RCA CHRISTMAS ALBUMS
Mixed Assortment.
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 3.49

TOP HIT 45 RPMs
Mfr's. Sugg. Retail 99c
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 76¢

BUDGET CUT OUTS
Excellent selection. Many of your favorite artists and hits.
DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 1.47

RCA and WARNER BROS. 8-TRACK STEREO TAPES
A Good selection including country and western.
5.99

CAPITOL RECORDS
TOP HITS - TOP ARTISTS

- Ram — Paul McCartney
- Image — John Lennon
- Live — Grand Funk
- Greatest Hits — Glen Campbell

DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 3.79

A & M RECORDS

- Carpenters — Carpenters
- Greatest Hits — Herb Alpert
- Joe Cocker — Joe Cocker
- Tea For Tillerman ... — Cat Stevens

DOWNBEAT BONUS PRICE 3.99

HOURS - 10- 5:30 Daily;10-9 Thurs., Fri.; 9:30-5:30 Sat.

DOWNBEAT

127 Princess Street Phone 544-9112

A statement

The Convocation Committee met on November 30, at the request of the Committee on Academic Procedures to reconsider its recommendations that 5 Convocations be held in 1972 in accordance with the following schedule:

Friday, May 26 p.m.
Faculty of Education	270
Theological College	20
	290
Saturday, May 27 a.m.
Faculty of Applied Science	200
School of Business (B. Comm. & M.B.A.)	125
	325
Saturday, May 27 p.m.
School of Graduate Studies	100
Faculty of Law	135
Faculty of Medicine	65
School of Nursing and School of Rehabilitation Therapy	35
	335
Saturday, June 3 a.m. & p.m.
Faculty of Arts & Science (B.A.)	690
Faculty of Arts & Science (B.Sc.)	80
School of Physical and Health Education	32
	802 +

+ To be divided between morning and afternoon sessions (average 401)

To assure that the students had an opportunity to voice their opinion, an invitation was extended to the Rector to attend and the President of the Alma Mater Society undertook to see that students from the various faculties and schools were present. The students in attendance, in addition to the Rector and Mr. Doug Romans, the A.M.S. representative on the Committee, were:

Muriel Holmes .....Commerce
Derek McLean ....Arts & Science
Doug Pritchard Graduate Studies
Lesley Cook .....Faculty of Law
Doug Bowering ...Arts & Science
Jonathon Tondeur .....Applied Science

The Alma Mater Society was invited to appoint a student representative to the Convocation Committee meeting early in the Fall and, several unsuccessful attempts were made through the Alma Mater Society office and by a letter to the President to have a student representative present at the meeting on November 8, when the change in Convocations was first discussed. Word was received only on November 26, that an A.M.S. representative had been appointed to the Committee.

The Chairman stated that it is unfortunate that Professor Lazier's memorandum concerning the timing of Convocation ceremonies was forwarded to the Senate and received such wide publicity without any accompanying explanation or expansion of the reasons for the Convocation Committee's recommendation. The report could be, and was, widely misinterpreted. A number who read it concluded that the Convocation Committee's interest was in an impersonal, computerized type of ceremony with the objective of convocating as many students as possible in the shortest time. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Convocation Committee believes that, as Convocation day marks the recognition of a student's academic achievements and is for most students, the day of final departure from Queen's, it should be marked by a dignified ceremony which will be pleasing to the Graduates and their friends and a credit to the University.

Many years ago, Convocations were held in the auditorium in Theological Hall. As classes increased, it soon became necessary to move to Grant Hall. Ten years ago, we were able to laureate the the graduating class in 3 convocations. By 1971, because of the limited seating capacity in Grant Hall, the number of Convocations had to be increased to 8. A recommendation to transfer the 1971 Convocations to the Jock Harty Arena was defeated because the A.M.S. Outer Council requested that Grant Hall be retained. However in the Spring, it became evident that the graduating classes preferred the Jock Harty Arena, so the Convocation Committee changed the location. If more time had been available and planning not so far advanced, it is likely that the Convocation Committee would have recommended a decrease in the number of Convocations in 1971.

In deciding to recommend that 5 Convocations be held in 1972, the following factors were considered:

1. Use of the Jock Harty Arena has removed any problem of seating for guests which was a major reason in the past for increasing the number of convocations.

2. A ceremony in a partially filled auditorium is not as attractive as when the majority of seats are occupied. In 1971, the arena was only half occupied for many convocations. A reduction in the number of convocations should result in a much greater seat occupancy and a more impressive ceremony.

3. There is a limit to the time that a Convocation ceremony should last. The Committee is of the opinion that a ceremony of 90 minutes duration is about long enough. To determine the size of graduating classes that can be accommodated during a 90 minute period requires a careful study of timing such as that conducted by Professor Lazier. ..The report indicated that without exceeding what has been the practice for a majority of Convocations for many years, namely laureating students in pairs, 350 graduates can be laureated at a convocation of 90 minutes duration. The largest graduating classes, which are in Arts and Science, could number 400 which would mean an additional 5 to 10 minutes at most.

In presenting his comments, Professor Lazier noted that the applause after each laureation extended the average time of laureation by a significant amount. In the past those on the convocation committee's plans

laureated during the early part of the ceremony receive substantial applause. By the time 200 have been laureated the applause becomes feeble and mechanical rather than spontaneous. In the case of some graduates, possibly because they have no special guests in the audience, there is a noticeable lack of applause. It was therefore the opinion of the Convocation Committee that the substitution of applause after each group of graduates is laureated was a preferable one to having individual applause after each hooding.

4. Although students and members of faculty may only be interested in attending one Convocation, there are many University Officials, such as the Chancellor, the Principal and the Rector who must attend all Convocations. We can not completely ignore the pressure that this places on people like Dr. Stirling.

Because of the increased number of ceremonies it is proving more and more difficult to obtain the necessary personnel to look after the many responsibilities of Convocations. Because sufficient university students are not available to usher, we have to seek assistance from the high schools. Reducing the number of Convocations to 5, to be held on one Friday and two Saturdays would make it far less exhausting for those who must participate at all Convocations, and should facilitate the obtaining of the necessary personnel.

5. The costs of Convocations are expected to be higher in 1972. A reduction in the number of Convocations will result in worthwhile savings, without any significant change in the quality of the ceremony. When we are in a period of financial stringency as we are now, these savings are important and cannot be ignored.

Taking these factors into consideration the Convocation Committee recommended to the Committe on Academic Procedures that 5 Convocations be held in 1972.

In the general discussion which followed, the Chairman noted that the students' major concern was what appeared to be the start of a trend towards impersonalization of the Convocation ceremonies. However, the Convocation Committee will do everything possible to see that our convocations do not lose the personal touch which the Committee regards as one of the important qualities of the present ceremonies. The Convocation Committee attempts to determine student and staff reaction to the Convocations and meets immediately after the Convocations to consider the views that had been expressed and to see in what manner the ceremonies can be improved. The Committee will be meeting again immediately after the 1972 Convocations and if it is evident that the holding of 5 Convocations has resulted in a less acceptable ceremony, the Committee will be the first to recommend a change. It recognizes that, as the size of the graduating classes increase. consideration will have to be given to additional Convocations in future years.

..The majority of the students present at the meeting stated that having heard the reasons for the holding of 5 Convocations, they would personally support the recommendation but, because they have not had sufficient time to consult with their graduating classes, they were unable to speak for them. Mr. Doug Pritchard representing Graduate Studies, opposed the decision but his objection was not based on the number of Convocations, but the use of the Jock Harty Arena rather than Grant Hall.

A question arose as to why a decision on Convocation times is so urgent. It was explained by the Registrar that a number of students are already inquiring about Convocation dates, so they can make advance arrangements for relatives and friends, to attend. Other students planning marriage around convocation time have a real interest in exact dates. The planning of examination time tables which is based on the available Halls is already in progress and information as to the times of Convocation is needed as early as possible. If the recommendation does not go to the Committee on Academic Procedures on December 6, it cannot be reported to the Senate until mid-January.

The Convocation Committee noted that there were no concrete alternatives presented which would warrant a change in the recommendation. The members expressed the view that it would have been desirable if the student delegates had more opportunity to discuss the recommendations with their faculties.

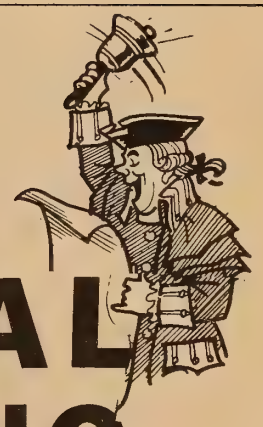
..It was therefore agreed that the recommendation to hold 5 Convocations in 1972 should be resubmitted to the Committee on Academic Procedures with the understanding that the student delegates will consult their faculties and if there is any significant suggestions by the majority these would be reported in writing together with alternate proposals to the Committee on Academic Procedures at its meeting on Decamber 6.

John W. Bannister.
Chairman of the Convocation Committee.

WANDERLUST II

IRC-WRC Semi Formal JANUARY 14th, 1972

TICKETS: Leonard Hall (Supper meal lines) - starting Dec. 1 Union (John Orr Room) starting Dec. 5, 11:30 a.m. - 1 p.m. daily
TICKETS $4.00 (before Dec. 14) $6.00 after Dec. 14



GRAD PHOTOS

A list of all the grad photos which will appear in Tricolor '72 will be placed in the AMS Outer Office next week.

IF you had your grad photo taken at Wallace Berry's before Nov. 12 AND IF you returned your proof before Nov. 22 and your name is not listed, please leave a note at the Tricolor Office. If your name, subject and-or degree is incorrect, please leave us that information also.

Public Notice

AMS GENERAL MEETING

TUESDAY, DEC. 7 STIRLING D, 7.30

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX Number 30,
Friday, December 3, 1971
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters:

Continuing: the battle of the bucks And what Is money?

Dear Editors:

When I checked the Journal's printing of my letter in the Nov. 26th issue for errors (and they were there), I was quite astonished to discover, at the bottom of the first column and delimited from the text by only a thin, parallel line above and below it, a one-line comment that was, by its position, inserted into the mainstream of my letter. This comment was unsigned, but, worse than this, its position might have led the unwary reader to assume that this comment was part of my letter.

Is it the Journal's policy to distort the meaning of letters written to its editor? And why was the comment left unsigned? Is its author afraid, for some mysterious reason, to reveal his identity? Or is ambiguity an upcoming feature of the Journal that is being test-run at present? Only the Journal's editors (who are responsible for the accurate reproduction of the ideas of such submitted articles and letters as they decide to print) know for sure.

That comment, by the way, was the following: "or, what's the medical practice for but to make money?" This, I presume from its position in my letter, was in reference to my defence of personal wealth and, as well, to the fact that I am a medical student, a fact which had not accompanied and was not relevant to that letter.

Well, what is the purpose of a medical practice? To a sick patient it is a source of highly skilled consultation about, and management of, a health problem. To the well patient, it is a means of assessing his health periodically and of guarding, or at least preparing for defence, against the onset of insidious disease.

To the proprietor of the medical practice, the physician, it represents his chosen vocation, his means of maintaining and furthering his life, i.e., his own happiness and well-being.

His purpose in practicing medicine, as is the purpose of anyone who truly loves his work, is his own enjoyment. The fact that his patients benefit from his work is of secondary importance with respect to his primary goal: his happiness.

(It should be unnecessary to add that the rational satisfaction of his patients is both a goal of the excellent physician and a requisite of the successful construction of a reputable medical practice. A physician's reputation as a competent practitioner is one of his most important assets, second only to the skills by which that reputation is earned.)

The justification for his medical practice is not the good of others, but the doctor's own existence and happiness. The right to exist for his own sake is all the justification any person needs in order to pursue the honest vocation of his choice.

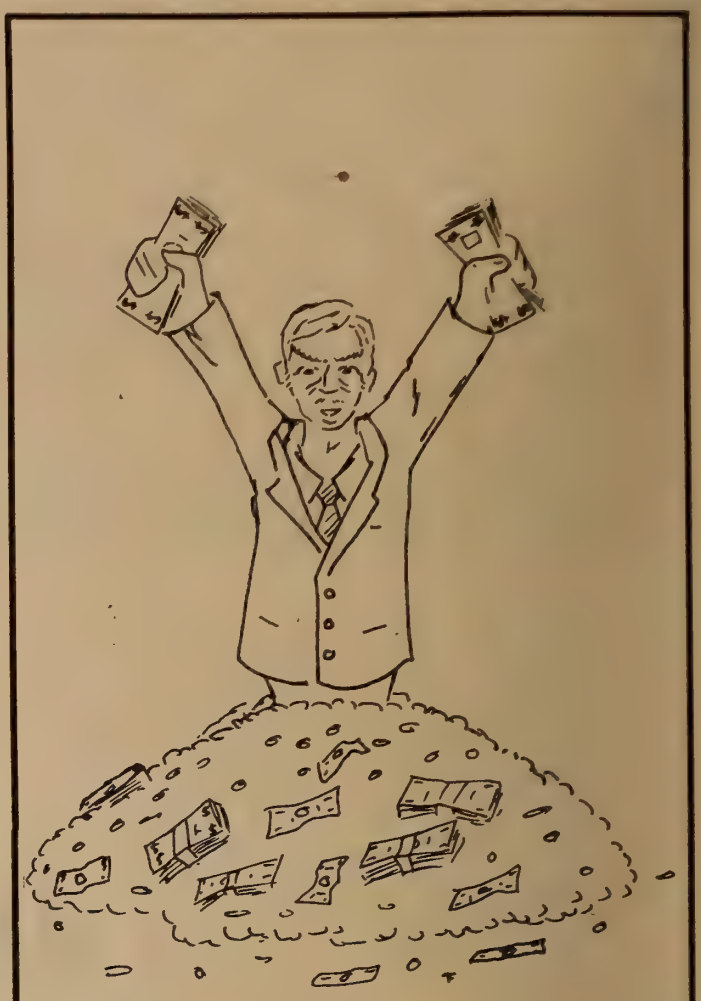
And what is money? The obvious answer is that it is a store of value and a tool of exchange; it is the material form of the principle that men who wish to obtain values from each other must do so by trade. (Trade is the exchange of values between men by mutual voluntary consent; its basis is the sanctity of property rights and the banishment of the initiatory use of physical force from all human relationships.)

The root of money, of all wealth, is man's mind. When a man of the mind, working toward the maintenance and furtherance of his own life and happiness, translates his ideas into material form, he produces values for which other men trade their values: either products or skills.

Money, therefore, is the material form of one's productive effort, the store of all the value that one has produced, the measure of one's ability to support one's life.

To make money is to function in the support of one's life, and the more one makes the more productive is one's effort toward that end. To value money is to know and love its nature; it is to love the fact of one's existence and to honour that which maintains that precious entity which is one's life: one's productive effort.

Now, what is the meaning of the aforementioned comment, "or, what's the medical practice for but to make money?" Judging from its context, it is a sarcasm, built upon the erroneous idea that money is somehow demeaning. (I have to engage in this deciphering of the comment because of the cryptic style of its author.)



In fact, that "somehow" is the divorce of money from productive effort (which means: from the mind), plus the idea that the former is an irreducible primary, i.e. something which has no prior cause.

Such an idea is a hold-over from the days when money was acquired by conquest, looting, "divine right", favour or inheritance; when to work for one's living was held to be ignoble and the merchant-class was regarded as second-class. However, when one understands the nature of money, such an idea is seen to be grossly inappropriate.

Of course a physician practices medicine in order to make money, but the money is an effect; the cause is his productive effort, the cause of which, in turn, is the love of his work and his life. This principle applies to every person who loves his work -- in every line of honest endeavour.

- Norman Eshoo

(Ed. Note: The comment, "or, what's the medical practice for but to make money" was supposed to have an asterisk before it, and the headline to that letter an asterisk after it, to tie the two together. It was an editorial comment written by Leslie Kaye, who wrote it "because I have acquired, from years of dealing with many doctors (few of whom have greatly impressed me), that money is one of their primary motivations. When doctors' responses to medical reforms change sufficiently to convince me of their much vaunted altruistic motives, I will retract the statement.")

"To value money is to know and love its nature; it is to love the fact of one's existence and to honour that which maintains that precious entity which is one's life: one's productive effort."

The Principle of Diminshing Returns

Dear Editors:

Mr. Eshoo will, I hope, excuse the little space I need to sneeze at his criticism of my proposal of a maximum income level.

I was well aware of the argument that a maximum income would destroy incentive to produce at the time I wrote my suggestion. The four columns of Mr. Eshoo's letter pointing this out were quite unnecessary. Indeed, they were less than unnecessary, for a little reflection will reveal this argument as nonsense, provided the maximum income level is set sufficiently high.

One does not have to go beyond the introduction of an elementary economics text, for example Loucks and Whitney's "Comparative Economic Systems", to find the Principle of Diminishing Utility postulated as a universal economic precept, in this case, (Ed. 8) on page 8. Conveniently ignored in capitalist economies is the corollary that monetary returns decrease in value, proportionately, as the salary increases. This is obvious -- what is $10,000 a year more or less to a millionaire. It is my contention that at some point on the salary scale further monetary reward becomes meaningless to a person whose sole motivating force is not greed.

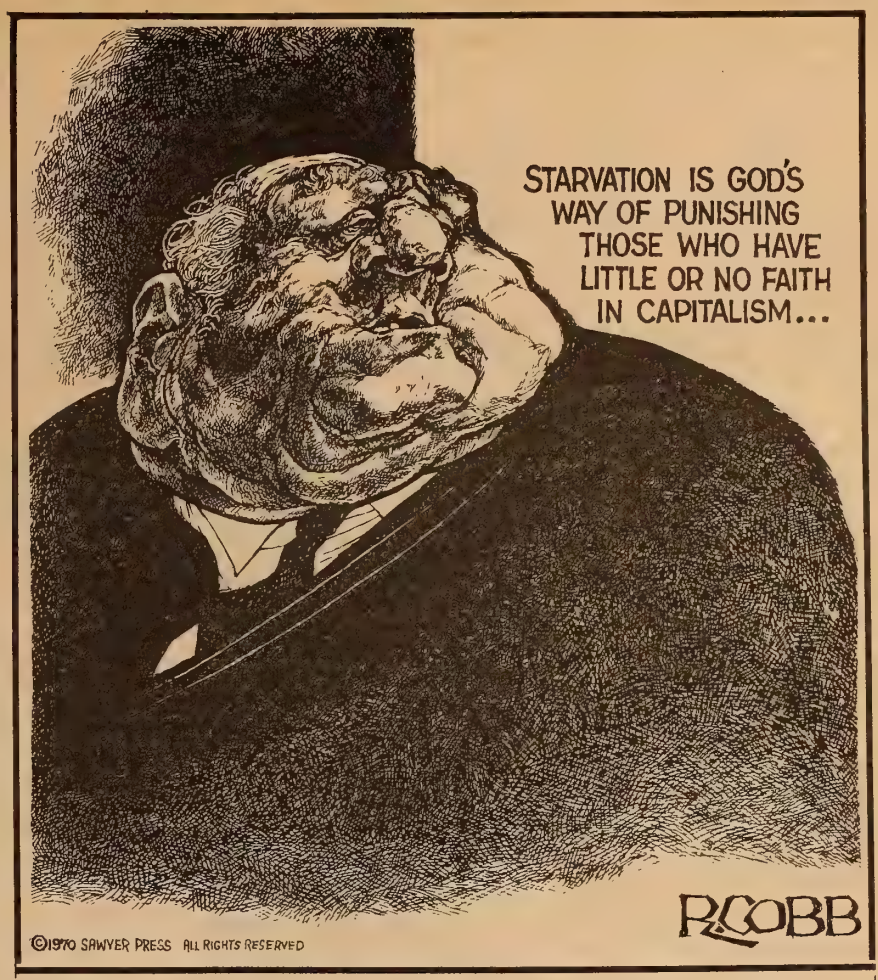
The argument may proceed from this point in economic terms -- not on the principles of Clark Kent, the Omega Man, or any other popular comic book.

However if Mr. Eshoo is looking forward to some personal insults of the sort he lavishes on others, I shall have to disappoint him. I have better uses for my toilet paper.

Walter G. Spundle.

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Managing Editors: John Solman, Charles Schwier
News Editor: Chris Redmond

Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass



Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547 5540.

Thanks this issue to news staff Bob Mutrie and Mary O'Rourke. For the last issue, thanks to Dave Vickers, Pat Spence, Pat Muldoon, Bob again, and Jennifer! who did all the work. Duty man: Jim Kirkpatrick.

Eschewing Norman Eshoo:

or,

refuting the right to become rich

(compiled from the writings of George Bernard Shaw by Lynette Hodgson)

Nothing hides the difference in merit between one person and another so much as difference in income. Take for example a grateful nation making a grant . . . to a great explorer, or a great discoverer . . . (I have to make my example a man: women get only statues after their death). Before he has walked half way down the street on his way home to tell his wife about it he may meet some notorious fool(s) . . . who are ten times as rich because they have never in their lives done anything but make money for themselves with entire selfishness, possibly by trading in the vices or on the credulity of their fellow-countrymen. It is a monstrous thing that a man who, by exercising a low sort of cunning, has managed to grab three or four millions of money selling bad whiskey . . . or providing silly newspapers and magazines for the circulation of lying advertisements, should be honoured and deferred to and waited on and returned to Parliament . . . whilst men who have exercised their noblest faculties or risked their lives in the furtherance of human knowledge and welfare should be belittled by the constrast between their pence and the grabber's pounds.

Great astronomers, chemists, mathematicians, physicists, philosophers, teachers, sociologists, and saints may be so poor that their wives are worn-out in a constant struggle to keep up appearances and make both ends meet; but the business organizers pile millions on millions whilst their unfortunate daughters carry about diamonds and sables to advertize their parent's riches, and drink cocktails until they feel so bad inside that they pay large sums to surgeons to cut them open and find out what is the matter with them.

Many people, especially those who are comfortably off, think that the industrious and sober and thrifty are never in want and that poverty is due to idleness, improvidence, drink, betting, dishonesty, and bad character generally.

They can point to the fact that a laborer whose character is bad finds it more difficult to find employment . . . and that a man of business who is lazy and does not attend to it becomes bankrupt. But this proves nothing but that you cannot eat your cake and have it too: it does not prove that your share of the cake was a fair one. It shows that certain vices and weaknesses make us poor; but it forgets that certain other vices make us rich. People who are hard, grasping, selfish, cruel, and always ready to take advantage of their neighbours, become very rich if they are clever enough not to overreach themselves. On the other hand, people who are generous, public-spirited, friendly, and not always thinking of the main chance, stay poor when they are born poor unless they have extraordinary talents.

The reason that lust for money and power prevail as they do against the nobler sentiments is simply that the people who want more money and more power have organized armaments to coerce those who desire to establish the kingdom of heaven on earth, and have also organized the Press and the public schools to persuade the masses that the pursuit of money and more power is virtuous, heroic and patriotic.

If by inequality of income you give your doctors, your lawyers, your landlords, or your rulers an overwhelming economic interest in any sort of belief or practice, they will immediately begin to see all the evidence in favour of that sort of belief and practice, and become blind to all the evidence against it. Every doctrine that will enrich (them) will be embraced by them eagerly and hopefully; and every doctrine that threatens to improverish them will be mercilessly criticized and rejected.

Which of us has not to provide rent for the landlord, interest for the capitalist, and wages for the labourer before we can spend a penny on ourselves? And why should the financier be paid more for the exercise of his particular faculty than we who have to co-operate with him by the exercise of our particular faculties before he can produce a loaf of bread or a glass of milk? Do you suppose that the char-woman, who has worked in her own necessary way all her life as hard as or harder than any financier, and in the end has nothing to leave to her daughter but her pail and scrubbing brush, really believes, or ever will believe, that (his daughter), inheriting a colossal income from her father the financier, has any moral right to her money?

It is no excuse for such a state of things that the rich give employment. There is no merit in giving employment: a motorist who runs over a child gives employment to an ambulance porter, a doctor, an undertaker, a clergyman, a mourning-dressmaker, a hearse driver, a gravedigger: in short, to so many worthy people that when he ends by killing himself it seems ungrateful not to erect a statue to him as a public benefactor.

The money with which the rich give the wrong sort of employment would give the right sort of employment if it were equally distributed; for then there would be no money offered for diamonds until everyone was fed, clothed, and lodged. There would be less ostentation, less idleness, less wastefulness, less uselessness; but there would be more food, more clothing, better houses, more security, more health, more virtue: in a word, more real prosperity.

We are bewildered by an absurdly unpractical notion that in some way a man's income should be given to him, not to enable him to live, but as a sort of Sunday School prize for good behaviour. And this folly is complicated by a less ridiculous but quite as unpractical belief that it is possible to assign to each person the exact portion of the nation income that he or she has produced.

The notion that our present system distributes wealth according to merit, even roughly, may be dismissed at once as ridiculous. Every one can see that it generally has the contrary effect: it makes a few idle people very rich, and a great many hardworking people very poor.

Equality of income is an obvious corollary. Though we differ widely in practical ability and mental scope, the same basic income, or ration, or minimum wage . . . will suffice for (everybody). We are all equally indispensible. An industrial magnate once wrote asking me did I realize that his army of labourers would be destitute and helpless without him. I replied that if he did not realize that without them he would be a nobody he was no gentleman.

When some inconsiderate person repeats like a parrot that if you gave everybody the same money, before the year was out you would have rich and poor again just as before, all you have to do is to tell him to look around him and see millions of people who get the same money and remain in the same position all their lives without any such change taking place. The cases in which poor men become rich are most exceptional; and though the cases in which rich men become poor are commoner, they also are accidents and not ordinary everyday circumstances.

Let us . . . dismiss the fear that persons of exceptional ability need special inducements to exercise that ability to the utmost. Experience proves that even the most severe discouragements and punishments cannot restrain them from trying to do so.

But what is to be done with that section of the possessors of specific talents whose talent is for moneymaking? History and daily experience teach us that if the world does not devise some plan of ruling them, they will rule the world. Now it is not desirable that they should rule the world; for the secret of moneymaking is to care for nothing else and to work at nothing else; and as the world's welfare depends on operations by which no individual can make money, whilst its ruin by war and drink and disease and drugs and debauchery is enormously profitable to moneymakers, and supremacy of the moneymaker is the destruction of the State. A society which depends on the incentive of private profit is doomed.

Property places the social value of the proprietor beyond question. Under such conditions we have lost the power of conceiving ourselves as responsible to society for producing a full equivalent of what we consume . . . On the contrary, every inducement to shirk that primary duty is continually before us.

To the mass of men, the intelligent abolition of property would mean nothing except an increase in the quantity of food, clothing, housing and comfort at their personal disposal . . . The total abolition of property, and the conversion of every citizen into a salaried functionary in the public service would leave (most) of the nation quite unconscious of any great change. They would still call their watches and umbrellas and back gardens their property.

Equal distribution is quite possible and practical. It is also simple and intelligible. It gets rid of all squabbling as to how much each person should have. It is already in operation and familiar over great masses of human beings. And it has the tremendous advantage of securing promotion by merit for the more capable.

Between persons of equal income there is no social distinction except the distinction of merit. Money is nothing: character, conduct, and capacity are everything. There would be great people and ordinary people and little people; but the great would always be those who had done great things; and the little would be persons of small minds and mean characters, and not poor persons who had never had a chance. That is why idiots are always in favour of inequality of income (their only chance of eminence), and the really great in favour of equality.

There is an eternal war between those who are in the world for what they can get out of it and those who are in the world to make it a better place for everybody to live in.

Lynette Hodgson

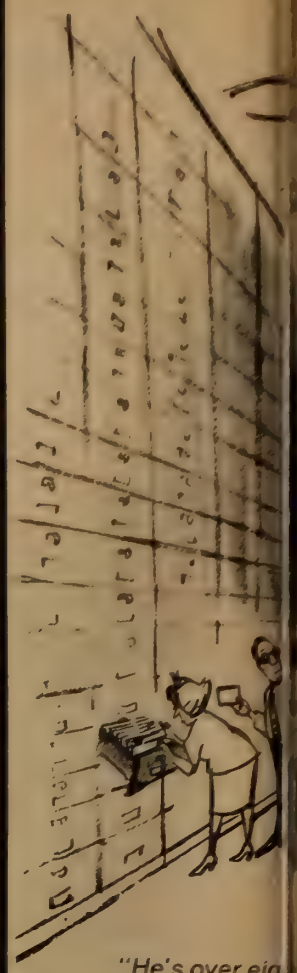
I'm Cheryl. Fly me.

I'm not just another pretty face
I'm a fresh attitude towards air travel. A bright look on the outside, a personal way of thinking on the inside.
Back in the old days (last year), everyone thought airlines were pretty much alike. So we decided to change a few minds.
Part of the challenge was to tell you who we are, why we're special, and what we're doing to be even better.
Here's who we are. We're Cheryl (me), Linda, Margie, Laura and Jo. And people you never see like Bob and Tommy and Ron and Lee. (They're not pretty faces, either.)
And here's what we're doing and why we're special. We're helping people go places. Like New York. We go all day every day to all three New York airports. JFK, LaGuardia and Newark.
We'll fly you to New York on the only 747 s. (And the only 747 night coach if you'd like to save 20% on your airfare.)
And this winter, we'll fly you to New York on this year's airplane, the great new DC-10. She'll be going to both Kennedy and LaGuardia daily.
Wherever we fly, we help people have fun getting there. The way we figure it, the more we like you, the more you'll like us.
So we're not just a bunch of people. We're an airline.
And you can call us by our first name. National.
(You can call us for reservations at 874-5000. Or ring up your travel agent.)

Fly Cheryl. Fly National.

Go fly yourself, National!

"I'm Margie," proclaims the ad, over a picture of a wholesome blonde stewardess. "Fly me to Miami and back this weekend. For only $100." The invitation is at least ambiguous, and what with Sharon, Karin and Cheryl chirping similar messages in print and on television in seven cities along the East, Gulf and California coasts, prospective customers may be pardoned for wondering just what the ads are selling. And sure enough, National Airlines' new $9.5 million campaign was barely off the ground when it ran into a storm of controversy. Women's liberation groups, charging that the ads are tasteless and degrading to women, have picketed the airline's ticket offices in Washington and New York (sample sign: "Go fly yourself, National") and the Miami chapter of the National Organization for Women is planning to file suit against the company.



National should be advancing women to higher levels, argues one NOW leaflet, instead of "using them as sexual 'come-ons' in a flying meat market." Moreover, according to NOW's Irma Diamond, a doctoral candidate in sociology, "ads like National's can cause real harm. We all see ourselves as others see us, and if women are portrayed by the media as children or sex bunnies, that is the kind of self-image they will form. And the stereotype image of women held by many employers will only be reinforced."

William Free, head of the ad agency that dreamed up the whole idea, denies that he was trying to put down women. "We're one of the few heterosexual ad agencies around," he protests. "We like girls." National advertising director Armand Arel explains that the "Fly me" slogan is just part of a "first-name campaign aimed at putting the person-to-person relationship back between the passenger and our personnel. We think it's a warm and friendly way of selling our product." The campaign even features two ads using men-one with cargo manager Oscar Foxworth growling, "I'm Foxy. Ship me." But women are emphasized, as Free puts it, "because girls are the product. Ninety per cent of a passenger's time is spent with the stewardess." Moreover, he adds, "being a stewardess is a crummy job, and this particular campaign is designed to improve their morale and thereby improve the service to the customer."

Some of the stewardesses in the spotlight do seem proud of all the attention, but others are refusing to wear the new "Fly me" buttons issued to all National employees.

In spite of the flak, the airline has no intention of cancelling its campaign. Workers last week were painting girls' names on the noses of all National planes, like World War II bombers, and company officials happily predicted that the cloud of criticism would probably have a silver lining. "We're pleased as punch by all the free publicity," said one of the admen. "National has a smaller advertising budget than its major rivals, and we had to have a noticeable campaign.

- Newsweek, Nov. 15

"He's over eig
and we don't
That's very s

INSIGHT - the news the others mis

By Richard Osler

An increasing phenomenon in North America today is the strikingly high birth and ensuing death rates of newspapers, be they big or small, radical or reactionary or even middle of the road. Specifically, many small time volunteer left or right wing "rags" are of an ephemeral nature.

In the public's stereotyped vision of them, they become blatantly hard sell and unable to maintain a balance between emotion and fact. Such papers die quickly, smothered by increasing reader apathy and failure to see the paper as anything other than an unpolished and crude "letters to the editor" section of a large, city newspaper.

When a small volunteer paper is deemed to have lost its integrity and when balanced fact is overrun by hysterical, almost sensationally fanatical, emotion, a paper loses its credibility and fails to be read by or to provide a beneficial service to the community.

The tragedy that is occurring today is that even honest small papers trying to provide, in an objective manner, a new or radical side to an issue, are looked on as biased and dishonest organs of "commies" or other riff raff in society.

Hence, the paradox. How does a group of dedicated people present a complete, exhaustive position on a topic without the readership immediately assuming the position is not valid or is supported only by emotion and half-truths?

In fact, the big city newspaper is accorded the privilege of being the only objective and truthful organ on most issues and the small paper is disregarded.

However, too many times, big papers in monopoly positions become a part of the "establishment and wealthy interests" in a city and therefore assume a conservative attitude designed to protect those interests.

They in fact become complacent and cease to examine issues with the insight required to give lucid and complete pictures of issues to readers.

Kingston is no exception to this problem, as the Kingston Whig-Standard, with its conservative and middle-class approach to local and national issues seems to be avoiding its journalistic obligations to Kingstonians through its apparent inability to give total and coherent coverage on important issues such as the waterfront development project and the case of Frontenac Park.

Motivated by the Whigs lack of activity in certain areas and unaffected by the early demise of This Paper Belongs to the People, a group of left-wingers (representing four groups in Kingston, the N.D.P., pro-Waffle students groups, the Community Information Service and some trade union locals) decided to create a unified forum of opinion. This forum, called Insight, was designed to bring the four groups together as a unified left-wing whole.

The resulting umbrella organization which manifested itself in August as a monthly "problems" newspaper was first conceived of in June by a small group of six to 10 NDP members in Kingston.

These people include a grad student in history at Queen's, a former alderman and NDP campaign manager, a trade unionist, a member of the Canadian Labour Council and a high ranking CUPE official.

Through private donations and some advertisements, the Insight staff has managed to raise the $200 they need to print 6,000 copies each month of the paper. They also have a subscription scheme (cost - $6 a year) which already has 50 subscribers to help raise more money.

The volunteer staff of 15 to 20 people decides what will go into each issue at the beginning of each month, and these stories are intensively researched before being submitted, ready for layout at the newspapers "office", the living room of one of the editorial board members.

The set-up of the paper is given to a co-operative union printing shop just outside of Windsor. After the week it takes to print the paper and to take it to Windsor and back to Kingston, 4,000 copies are distributed door-to-door, free of charge, in areas in the city where a majority of the working-class people live.

An additional 1,000 copies are placed in local plants and the final 1,000 go to public institutions, such as the hospitals, Queen's and St. Lawrence College. There is no charge for the paper, since this poses severe distribution problems, as was disvocered by "This Paper" and it would also limit the extent of community penetration of the paper.

Insight's views are primarily left-wing, if one regards getting to the bottom of an issue as being left-wing, and it tends to be partisan towards the NDP, a factor which is a hindrance to its acceptance in conservative Kingston.

It is not, however, an NDP organ, and until this is realized, it will not get the readership it deserves.

The following excerpt from an editorial in the first issue, represents Insight's aims and philosophy, which they seem to be maintaining after four issues which dealt with such varied topics as CUPE in Kingston, the Landlord vs the Tenant, the Wolfe Island Ferry, the Kingston Transit System, the waterfront development project, drug costs, Canadian natural resources and multinational corporations and many more:

"We are producing Insight because we in Kingston

In some wa successor t to the Peopl
the gap wh tried to fill.
a newspape an alternat
news to tha
Whig-Standa

"Insight's limited, but power we in an alternati issues affec viewpoint w but we ho comments carefully ar researched.

"We shal items whic tioned in th but which presented i distorted m ticular, we issues of g local people insufficient media."

It would serving a purpose in instance, b effect its waterfront had.

It is a left-than that, dynamic ap national pr

on him?

No jobs for students who use drugs

This warning to young U.S. jobseekers comes from George R. Wackenhut, president of Wackenhut Corp., Coral Gables, Fla., which provides clients with pre-employment security investigations:

"College students preparing to start careers may find that they have seriously damaged their chances by experimenting with and using drugs."

Wackenhut estimates that 80 per cent of medium-to-large companies have problems with employee drug abuse. As a result, pre-employment screening has intensified, with particular attention being paid to drug-use histories. One reason is the potential temptation for drug-using employees to sell proprietary information to raise money for buying drugs.

Many companies summarily reject applicants who have been on drugs. This policy is easier to enforce this year because companies have so few positions to fill.

Chemical and Engineering News

Wackenhut's firm, originally begun by three ex-FBI men, expanded rapidly since being formed about eight years ago and recently entered Canada by buying out a Canadian security company. By 1968, his company had amassed files on well over 8 million Americans, much of the information having been gathered by 'investigators' who merely seek opinions about people by questioning a job applicant's neighbours or friends. So, a person could find himself summarily rejected in seeking a job without there being any evidence of his drug use, and an arrest, even without a conviction, for possession could prove a fatal blow to your job chances.

Welcome to Canada, Mr. Wackenhut. We've allowed all the other American values into this country and now we've adopted paranoia.

amalgam

How to avoid a cleanup

Industrial polluters can keep government agencies "off their backs" for a long time by taking the trouble to remove obvious forms of pollution.

This advice was offered at the Conference on Plant Engineering in Montreal by James O'Rourke of Boston, a consulting engineer in the field of pollution control.

Dr. O'Rourke was answering a question posed by a member of the audience who said he was from a small company with a spraying operation which he admitted was contaminating the environment.

"How long will it be before we are forced by the government to do something about it?" he asked, without identifying his firm.

"You can keep them off your back for a long time by just taking care of the obvious," was the answer.

By the "obvious" he presumably was referring to such things as smoke discoloured water, odours and noise. Pollutants such as sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, fluorides, phenols and metallic elements, such as mercury, are colourless.

Since non-obvious pollutants are not easily detectable nor traceable, certainly not by ordinary citizens, industrial plants could, if they wish to take Dr. O'Rourke's advice, avoid public pressure and continue polluting the environment indefinitely.

(from the Montreal Star

Moral: Beware of the new-found "environmental consciousness" of companies which claim to be cleaning up. Their bullshit may still be bullshit even if you can't see or smell it.

New Health Insurance Plan

If you don't have OHSC, you won't be covered

On September 13, 1971, Prime Minister of Ontario, William Davis, announced important changes in the premium system of financing hospital and medical insurance for residents of Ontario. The new policy, to be called the Ontario Heallth Insurance Plan, will consist of four major changes: abolition of premiums for all pensioners 65 years of age and over, a general reduction in premium levels, improvement in the provisions for premium assistance, and most important, the replacement of the separate OHSIP and OHSC premiums with a single combined health insurance premium. The new programme, which becomes effective for the benefit period beginning April 1, 1972, will result in there being only one insurance plan to deal with, one two-rate premium structure, one identification card, and one insurance number which will be the present hospital insurance number. To be eligible for the plan, you must have registered for Ontario Hospital Insurance by January 1, 1972. For those who already have an OHSC number, the changeover to the new plan will be automatic.

The new rate structure, beginning with payments due in January, 1972 for the benefit month of April, 1972, will be:

$11.00 per month for a single person,
$22.00 per month for a family (two or more eligible persons).

These premiums will result in a savings of $4.80 per year for single persons, $9.60 per year for couples, and $45.00 per year for families, as compared with present OHSIP-OHSC combined premium levels. The revenue loss due to the premium reforms will be accommodated within the general provincial budget.

New identification cards bearing the old OHSC numbers will be supplied in advance of April 1, 1972. Should you not receive this card by that date, your OHSC card should be used for all hospital and medical benefits. OHSIP cards will continue to be used through March 31, 1972, for all medical benefits, however.

Students should keep in mind that they must obtain their own health insurance contracts when they reach the age of 21 (you are covered only through the end of the month you turn 21), if they marry, or if they accept permanent employment. You must also make certain that you have Ontario Hospital Insurance no later than January 1, 1972 to be eligible for the new Ontario Health Insurance Plan. Full information concerning premium assistance is not yet available. To determine if you are qualified for full or partial assistance, or if you require more information regarding health insurance, contact the Ontario Health Insurance Commission office at 797 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario, or phone 544-5778.

- Gary A. Gesell

And more, and more, and more

Does this ad bug you too?

Dear Editors;
(To Leslie)

For economic reasons, you can probably rationalize the presence of the Kinnear d'Esterre ad in your Nov. 23rd edition. However, its presence does lead to questions concerning the sincerity of the "does this ad bug you?" petition and your own conviction as author of "No thanks to 'women liberators.' "

Michel Gendron and a lot of people on the 3rd floor
(West Campus I)

Ed. note: 1. The "Does this ad bug you?" petition was actually a letter sent in from somebody. It was not my idea, although obviously I agreed with the idea of running it.

2. The picture in that particular ad has bothered us, and we have talked to our business manager about it. Kinnear d'Esterre has a series of ads that they run, that being one of them, and from henceforth neither that one nor any other of their ads that present stereotypes of women will be run if I can help it. The people at Kinnear d'Esterre seem reasonable enough, and I'm sure they will go along with this. I feel that the ad run Nov. 30, Tuesday, page 10, is passable.

3. None of the Kinnear d'Esterre ads have ever been as blatantly sexist as the Birks ads. Enough rationalizations.

- L. K.

Marv Bloos - WRC president

Dear Editors:

It appears that Marv Bloos wants to be president of the WRC. It is about time someone told him that he can not be president and chairman of every organization. In other words, it is about time he stopped meddling in the affairs of other organizations.

Now, let us get the facts straight. Last year Marv was elected president of the ASUS not because of intelligence or hard work but because he was poorly opposed. Not satisfied with this office, he has been searching for other positions ever since. The Arts Orientation Committee of 71 remembers him well! Everywhere that the Committee went, Marv was sure to go. It is strange that Marv could not trust his Orientation Committee to do a good job while the Commerce and Engineering faculty trusted theirs implicitly.

Now it appears he can not trust the WRC to exercise its own judgement. If he wants to be more than ASUS president, why doesn't he try for WRC president as well? But really, Marv, your pretensions as the mouth-piece of Queen's hardly fits your role as ASUS president. You are only a small fish in a big pond.

Gerhard Henkemans

Again - the Balcony

Dear Editors:

To Leslie Keith: In my article on The Balcony, I limited myself at the outset to only one theme in the play, the political one:

1) I wanted to react to what I construed as Trousdell's interpretation of what Genet was saying politically.

2) I wanted to write about what I thought Genet was, in fact, saying politically and I wanted to take him to task for leaving us with nothing substantial in the end - which is NOT the same thing as suggesting that the left has an adequate answer to the problems to which I addressed myself.

Given my concerns, your point about the politics of personal relationships, of male and female roles, etc., while central to the play, does not apply as criticism of the article. If you are agruing that I ought to have discussed these things, then that is a different matter.

As for Daniel Cohn-Bendit and Rudi Deutschke, I referred to them illustratively. I was interested in them as roles and symbols, as political actors, and in what the logic of events makes of these. I was not concerned directly with the ideological content of their positions and you wrongly suggest that I refer to "their theory" as such. Having said this, I do not have to reply to your criticism on that score. I will, nonetheless, make a few brief comments.

My reference to Cohn-Bendit was related to his role in the events of May, 1968, in France. Whether he was "thrust forward", as I suggested, or whether he "attained" (your word) his position is a question of semantics. You seem to suggest that he fulfils an educative function. Cohn-Bendit, in discussing his role, refers to himself as "megaphone" of the revolutionary forces.

Regarding Cohn-Bendit, I also had in mind the notion of "spontaneity" (which, in some sense, is similar to my use of "revolutionary ethos" in the article) that he discusses with Jean-Paul Sartre in their dialogue about the implications of May, 1968. It may well be, as you suggest, that Cohn-Bendit and his comrades used "one of the most assimilated forms of Marxism yet seen" (though I am not sure what you mean by that). I still would maintain that one cannot suspend the revolution in its spontaneous form, for psychological as well as economic reasons.

When questioned about the end-product, etc., Cohn-Bendit and others are understandably silent. They argue that the answer lies in the struggle itself. Well, I am not prepared to be a fellow-traveller on a roller coaster ride the final destination of which depends on how people on it and off it relate to each other. In the final analysis, patterns of political relationships have to take shape and authoritative decisions have to be made and I am skeptical about what the left has to offer us in this regard, in "context" or abstractly.

My reference to Deutschke was that of political symbol. He became known only after he was seriously wounded in the attempt on his life. Extra-parliamentary opposition coalesced around him as symbol and SDS, catapulted into the limelight in the aftermath of the assassination attempt, quite successfully exposed the Springer press in Germany. There has been a great deal of talk about the contributions of SDS to Marxist theory. Frankly, I am unclear about this.

I studied in England in 1968-69 (when most of these events was taking place) and I found SDS members who came over to lecture on these things stolid and unimaginative. Indeed, students in England who are knowledgeable about these things were unimpressed with what SDS members had to say at the Conference of the Left held in London in 1969.

If you are aware of substantial "critical bodies of Marxist economic thought", Leslie, one hopes that you will introduce us to them rather than force us into the position of politely giving you the benefit of the doubt that such original critical insight does exist. The tone of your letter suggests that you operate from a condescending elitism of the left - are we too dumb to understand?

As for your phrase "bourgeois academia", I do not know what you mean by it. If you are suggesting that I am interested in eliciting generalizations at a level of abstraction removed from the minute peculiarities of "social context", my reply would be that there is something to be gained by it. Finally, if my political skepticism disappoints you, Leslie, I am not going to apologize for it.

IVAN PEREIRA

father-daughter generation gap

Dear Editors:

This letter comes from a father whose daughter is at Queen's, and who just experienced the pain of the 'generation-gap' between himself and his daughter. I, the father, would like to bridge this gap, at least partly, if there is a gap at all.

The 'gap' relates to the following difference of opinion:

1. Is it wrong for me as a father (the 58 year old Mr. W.L.M. from Brockville) to send to my daughter (Mrs. Liz Hull, nee Miss Liz M., third year Psych., 21 years of age and married for about 6 months) a short letter addressed to Mrs. Liz Hull instead of Mrs. Frank Hull?
   I did so and my Liz (sorry I mean my daughter Liz), was very disgusted with me and my poor etiquette. (Believe it or not she is a member of Queen's Women's Lib.).
2. Is it "disgusting", of "very poor taste", etc., if a father asks his only daughter Liz to meet him for a dinner date when he will be visiting Kingston on business?

I have only been able to talk with my daughter by long-distance phone for several weeks, and believe me I do miss her, especially since she is the only girl besides my four boys. In order to show that it meant to be a father-daughter meeting without any offence to anybody in special, I worded my invitation like, " . . . I would like to take you out for dinner without your mother (who would also be in Kingston and visiting her mother there), without grandma, or your brother (both of whom live in Kingston too), or your Frank, the husband . . ."

Cross my heart but I do like Frank who is a clever, well brought-up and academic minded fourth year Psych. student. We have invited them both to our home and hope to see them again at Christmas.

Please tell me, do most of you young married couples agree with Liz' opinion which she expressed on the phone very strongly something like: Sorry Dad, I am married now, and Frank and I thought it is rather disgusting that you invited me without my husband. Dad, you will have to accept the fact that I am now a two-unit person and not just your daughter. Take me like some married friend of yours who you can't invite without the partner too.

I, an old father and married for many years, have never insisted to accompany my wife when she visits her mother, my dear mother-in-law. Good heavens, I think my wife has a right to visit her mother without having me sitting round there too.

Well that's the problem. Thank you for reading that far and, please, seriously if you would like to help to bridge this little generation gap between father W.L.M. and daughter Liz write your opinion in the form of a letter to Mr. W. L. M., C-O Queen's Journal. I would like very much to find out whether I am that much 'out of date'.

It may mean a small thing to you but it sure means a lot to me. I am willing to agree that today's young people may marry before they have achieved some goal in life - in my time we couldn't -, but now I would like to know whether Liz' opinion about above matter is her opinion only, or whether most of you think the same. Once you have left home and married, the father-child relationship is not more than the friendship with your next door neighbour?

Mr. W.L.M., Brockville, Ont.

Satire?

Dear Editors:

I submit this for "Feedback": it concerns the observations of Mr. Chapman and Robertson regarding the Amchitka situation.

Monthly Report:

The letters of Messrs. Chapman and Robertson have been received and praised by the Party; and it is my privilege to let them know our comrades and laissez-faire colleagues in China and the U.S. have chosen their applications for our next nuclear test. On Dec. 7th they will proceed to Station 15 where they will receive our new Spartan antiballistic warhead up their asses and be duly transported by TA 14 jets and dropped simultaneously on Peking and Washington.

Area Chairman,
Nicol Drysdale.

Upset over library's computer

Dear Sir:

I have just received my fifth erroneous notice of overdue books from the circulation desk of Douglas library. I should like to point out to the Director of Library Services that November 28 ends at 12:00 midnight. I had in my possession books due on November 28. I fulfilled my obligation by returning those books before midnight of the 28th.

Unfortunately, the absentee books list for the 28th was obviously fed to your new toy before I had returned my books and quite obviously, before November 28 had legally expired.

Would you gace students anticipate the computer's wrath by obediently returning their research material hours, or more conveniently, days before the date of obligation?

I am tired of the lame excuse that the computer system still has 'bugs' in it. If you cannot control your new technology, then scrap it. Universities possessing libraries of greater magnitude than the Douglas still manage to function with the old recording methods much to the gratification of staff and students alike.

It would be propistirous to instruct the Keepers of the Gate at the Douglas Library in methods used to indicate that a book has been duely signed out by the other libraries on campus. For example, the staff of The Law Library do not always find it necessary to use a stamp on their date stamp and instead rely on longhand. Recently, the sight of longhand on a dateslip on a book in my possession threw a sentry at the Douglas into a state of panic the likes of which any border guard at the Berlin wall would be proud to emulate.

Paul Wearing

A local speaks on students

Dear Editors:

I read in Thursday's Whig Standard that Queen's students have difficulty in relating to the local people. May I speak of an incident that occurred last summer.

We live on a farm twenty miles North of the city. The terrain is interesting geologically and last summer four students came to our house and asked permission to study the rock and earth formations on our land.

With memories of Dr. Rose and Geology I from my time at Queen's still in my mind I made them welcome and asked them to come up to the house if they need anything. They did come in to fill their water canteens.

In the afternoon I went down to shoot some woodchucks in the meadow East of the house. As I drew down on a 'chuck', after I made sure where the students were, one of them called out "killer".

Now in the first place I was doing no harm and these people were our guests. In the second place the woodchucks are a nuisance digging holes in the fields. Thirdly they present a real hazard to ourselves as some slap happy hunter may shoot at them from the road and towards the house.

Fourthly while I don't know for certain, I would bet two to one that the person who called out 'killer' would probably think it perfectly all right to murder unborn babies and call it abortion. As Chesterton once said "animal worship and human sacrifice often accompany each other".

A little more maturity and politeness from the people who are fortunate enough to have their way paid at University might help to bridge the local population-student gap.

C.F.D. Stewart

Thanks from the prison

Dear Sir:

On November 26, 1971, the Prison for Women opened its doors to a non-organization. It invited the Queen's University Faculty of Law to join inmates in the Annual Hallowe'en dance. The evening was a complete success.

The 40 male students were great gentlemen and beautiful dancers. But more then that, it was another step forward in the gradual changing process of the institution. Some of our future defenders of justice were pleasantly surprised to find us out of stripped uniforms, oxfords and straight hair.

It proved the point that the public touring the building do not derive the complete pitcture of the prison. They note mainly its construction, but miss the feeling, the way of life of the inmates.

Being able to converse like men and women on the same level boosted our morale. For a few short hours we were lifted away from the institution's way of life. We came in touch with the outside; became average ordinary human beings. We were women who were complimented by the opposite sex. A very normal procedure on the outside, a very rare occurrence at the Prison for Women.

This inmate sincerely hopes further activities will be planned. Both the students and the institution have stated they are in favour, but apparently are having difficulty in meeting. Perhaps, what we need is a representative from each side.

Thank-you Students of Queens Faculty of Law for making us feel and think like average women.

LORRIE

Don't be a blob like a thousand others

Dear Sir:

Today I saw written before me a poem in inertia - a class discussion in which only a few souls breathed. The rest like pulpless pumpkins stuffed from parasympathetic dominance sat not even nodding - one could only tell they were with us because of the occasional cigarette and yes, the pop of bubble gum.

One could, I suppose, justify this inertia if the subject at hand was of no interest to the majority present, however, the subject matter concerned the relevance of exams and course grading, which should have set their reticular activities system ticking.

Did it? NO. They sat in a stupor blinking now and again. Only 5 or 6 of 30 students bothered to speak. I am convinced if the matter had been life or death, they would have accepted either alternative without a PEEP!

One cannot really blame the individual alone. The social and educational system in which they were 'nutured' has allowed them to 'sprout' into bland organisims that differ only in physical appearance.

Their minds are a homogenous mass of nothing.--like a mixed blend or an assimilation of other people's thoughts -- they bear no originality of their own.

At the moment I am sinking in a sea of shit (inertia) and I don't like the taste so admittedly I may be being overly vociferous. However, this does not negate the meaning of this letter which capulized is - "Few people today deserve to be defined as individuals, most of us can be collectively identified as non-individuals and that brothers and sisters, is the sadness of our times."

Don't you think its time you melted away your inertia and started functioning as an individual and not like a blob of one thousand others?

KEN CLARKE
Psych 380

CLASSIFIEDS

FOR RENT

OFFSTREET parking available - University and Brock. 542-6019.

YOUNG married couple desired for modern basement apartment. 546-2957.

ONE-BEDROOM apartment. Married Students Complex. $141 per month includes utilities. Available mid-December. Call after 6 p.m. 542-1859.

AVAILABLE for one girl, fully furnished room in 2-bedroom apartment. Clean, cheerful. Ten minut walk from campus - right downtown. Available for occupancy after Dec. 13. Rent $75 monthly including utilities. Phone 544-5413.

FOR SALE

CORVAIR in nearly running condition. Radio, spare tire. $30 or best offer. Phone Peter 549-0196.

GIRL'S Afghani coat. Size 9. Call 544-3270 or 544-1709. Ask for Marty.

LOST

MONDAY or Tuesday -- a small silver circular case containing a pair of beads. Sentimental value. Please call Sister Marian at 544-4525.

PAIR of gold frame glasses. Mon., Nov. 29, in or around arena. Reward. Call 548-7975.

PAIR of boy's gold wire rim prescription sunglasses. Please phone 544-8569.

SMALL Black 5-month old pup with light brown collar. University and Brock. Call 548-3149.

FOUND

ORANGE Kitten with pink flea collar. Call 544-4645.

MESSAGES

TO Bill Spence and Tead Seath: From the back of the CNE stadium comes the cry 'Oh, no, Argos'.

MARG -- How's your flowred derriere?

PERSONALS

HOW many sheets of TP does the Queen use? What kind of deodorant does the pope use? Has Nixon ever had wet dreams? Has Trudeau ever farted in parliament? Does Shirly Temple Black wear falsies? Does Gardner Ted Armstrong Masterbate? For ansers to these and other stimulating questions: Phone 544-0008.

WE the undersigned, gladly take up your challenge, you MALE CHAUVINIST PIGS! Don't you think we get sick of you being on top all the time? Not only do we offer our services to those of you who are 'hard up' (so to speak), but we're also willing to take on you 'experienced' men. (Where do you think J got all her ideas for The Senuous Woman?) Our Motto? - Come one, Come All!

Juicy Jeanette - doesn't beat around the bush, gets straight to the point! 544-8713

Fire Cracker Freada - she's a real bang! 544-8719

Patriotic Priscilla - stand up for your cuntry! 544-8717

Coffe Break Camillia - in your coffee break, perks you up and won't ever let you down! 544-8713

Freaky Freshette - will keep you up tight, out of sight, in the groove! 544-8719

Josephine the Jock - drop in and have a ball! 544-8717

SWINGING young couple with Hurling Moose wishes to exchange letters and pix with same. No sickies, please. 544-0574.

Note; Classifieds cost $1.00 per insertion, payable in ADVANCE. Deadline for Tuesday's paper -- Sunday evening; for Thursday's -- Tuesday evening; for Friday's -- Wednesday evening.

Pizza Factory
OPEN 4 p.m. to 2 a.m.
544-1221
Free Delivery in City Limits and Fort Henry Heights
Open 7 Days a Week

Folkies, Okies, and Soul

marien

by Dick Loney

marien

If the planning committee for the Snoball Concert pays any attention to crowd response, then those august mentors of musical dictates will be at this moment contacting Buck Owens and the Buckaroos and the New Kingston Trio! Believe it or not, but Sunday's A.M.S. Concert at Grant Hall had all the earmarks of being a hybrid amalgam of an early Sixties folk concert and a meeting of the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville.

Kris Kristofferson and his well-oiled, lackadaisical troupe provided entertainment for some 2,000 country music devotees at each of two scheduled concerts (the second beginning at 10:15; advertised for 9:30 -- not bad!). There may be several members of the Concert-going masses who on principle abhor the title "country music devotee", but their enthusiastic, sustained applause for tunes such as "Help Me Make It Through The Night", "Okie From Muskogie" and "The Pilgrim-Chapter 33" would substantiate a suggestion that the psychedelic craze of 1967-1969 has given way to that element of musical afficianados who appreciate a little down-home rapport far more than the screeching maximum decibel-rating of a Marshall amplifier with volume knob locked in at the ten position!

The Grant Hall stage was dominated by Kris Kristofferson and his three sidemen for the greater part of each of the two shows. Their repertoire covered all of the numbers penned by their leader which appear on his two albums. They began the show with the Johnny Cash vehicle "Sunday Mornin' Comin' Down" and ended with the Kristofferson classic "Me and Bobby McGee".

Donnie Fritts, the yawning, bedraggled pianist and co-author of a few songs with the "man in black", helped out on vocal backgrounds to a lesser extent than did the lead guitarist (a la Red Shea) Steven Bruton, and well-travelled bassist Terry Paul (formerly 12-string guitarist with John Hartford and bassman for Johnny Rivers). They showed moments of well-defined harmony and moments when their voices were not quite in perfect blending.

Thanks to the ever-amazing recuperative properties of that "lively" intoxicant 50 Ale, Kristofferson's voice was delivered from the danger of sheering off into complete laryngitical whispers as he tried for some of his higher notes. At one point Kris made it through a particularly distressed and valiant attempt at a country tear-jerker by end-stopping the lines of his lyric with head tilted back in championship chug-a-lug form as he imbibed that golden bubbly with voice-restoring properties of amazing potency.

Except for a few freaky feed-back upsets, (which only Kris could hear, by the way) the concert was un-marred byanyextensive technical malfunctions. The informal atmosphere of allowing the audience to be seated without chairs on the floor of Grant Hall proved again quite successful as the crowd was in high-spirited readiness much as it was for the Paul Butterfield Blues Band Concert of last year.

The folky female, Miss Tannis Niemann who opened each of the shows with her own brand of entertainment was great if you dig a Joan Baezish nasal twang and songs about being lost in the woods, a farm near the Niagara River and the Hollywood Dream gone bad; all delivered with an accented voice which was at times hard to follow and tended to be rather whispy-light in texture. She displayed equally mediocre talents on piano, guitar and autoharp, while perhaps proving that her abilities, vocally and instrumentally would have found more suitable accomodation at the Bitter Grounds. The extremely ebullient reception she was accorded merely made one wonder what ecstacies a performer of the calibre of Lightfoot might have brought such an audience to.

There has been a tendency in the past four or five years to claim that the folk movement is dead and that university crowds are strictly oriented around hard rock groups, and at best the more tuneful soft-rock units. Certainly the Queen's welcome for Miss Niemann at once revealed a new spirit in audience exuberance and a not unwelcome return to the kind of evenings spent with the Brothers Four, Kingston Trio and Limeliters during the halcyon folk-days before the hard rock assaults of the previous decade.

But if the folkies and the duster-boosters had a pleasant evening due to the efforts of Kris and Tannis, what was the reception like when Kris called from the wings "a very soulful lady"? Soulful indeed! The entrance of Rita Coolidge was one of the highlights of the concert year for anyone who appreciates such sheer vocal proficiency as this pretty young lady commands. In the second show she sang her hit "I Believe In You" to the unbelievable piano accompaniment of what must have been one of her session men from her two A & M albums.

Poised on the seat of a stool she crooned another three songs to the appreciative cheers of the 2,000 fans, and then joined Kris for a two-part harmony version of his "Help Me Make It Through The Night", suitably interspersing some realistic fondling and patting with this suave guitar-man she has been accompanying for several months. A pop-star romance--and it happened in the stodgy confines of old Grant Hall--that seemed a fitting climax to an evening of such "good vibes" as the rock mags describe them. It was an evening for folkies, okies, and soul-enthusiasts to cherish--and all for two and a half or three bucks. Dear A.M.S. please let us help pay for Mr. Merricks '72 Cadillac; bring us some more cheapie concerts of this type.

tenserdays

7.30 & 9.00 p.m.: Chronicles XI, Gentlemen's Lib Two Comedies, presented by the Drama Dept. in the Studio Room. Tickets available at the Drama Dept.

8.30 p.m.: Collin's Bay Drama Club presents "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" at the Grand Theatre.

8.30 p.m.: The Cecilian Consort presents Music for Christmas in the Dunning Hall Aud. Tickets,$1.00 for children under 12, and $2.00, are available from consort members or at door. Proceeds to Angada Children's Hospital.

9.00 p.m.: Queen's Drama Guild presents two short one-act plays, "It's Called the Sugar Plum" and "Birds of a Feather" in Convocation Hall. Admission 50c.

Saturday, Dec. 4

12.30 to 5.00 p.m.: Women's badminton in the Ross Gym. Queen's vs Carleton and Ottawa.

2.00 p.m.: Exhibition Men's Hockey, Queen's vs Sir George William's in the Harty Arena.

6.00 p.m.: Women's Volleyball, Queen's vs Laurentian in the Ross Gym.

6.15 p.m.: Women's Basketball, Queen's vs Laurentian in the Bartlett Gym.

8.15 p.m.: Men's Basketball, Queen's vs Laurentian in the Bartlett Gym.

8.30 p.m.: Ski Club Bash in Grant Hall. Free admission Memberships, needed for all trips $1.00 and available at door.

9.00 p.m.: Queen's Drama Guild presents two short one-act plays, "It's Called the Sugar Plum" and "Birds of a Feather" in Convocation Hall. Admission 50c.

8.30 p.m.: The West-Indian Club invites all their friends to their Christmas party at the International Centre Lounge. For further information contact Ian McIntyre at 546-1364, or Debbi Hall at 544-8598.

8.30 p.m.: Collin's Bay Drama Club presents "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" at the Grand Theatre.

Sunday, Dec. 5

10.30 a.m.: Folk Mass at Dunning Hall. Coffee and doughnuts afterwards.

5.30 p.m.: Sunday supper ($1.00) in the International Centre, followed by a discussion with Kenneth Mufuka on "The Liberation of Mozambique". Sponsored by the African Liberation Movements' Study Group of the S.C.M.

7.00 p.m.: Folk Mass at Newman House.

8.30 p.m.: Grant Hall Carol Service

Monday, DEC. 6

8.00 p.m.: English D.S.C. Smoker in the Second Floor Common Room of the Union. Admission 50c, beer 25c.

Wed. DEC. 8

3.30 p.m.: Students in the B. Mus. programme will present a student recital in either chamber groups or as soloists.

4.30 p.m.: Biology Dept. seminar in Earl Hall, Room 111.

7.00 & 9.00 p.m.: The Drama Guild is showing the film "The Chase", starring Robert Redford, Marlon Brando and Jane Fonda, and directed by Arthur Penn, in the Convocation Hall.

8.00 p.m.: The African Club sponsors a guest speaker Dr. W. Umezinwa, of Laval Univ. whose topic will be "Modern African Literature". All welcome. In Jeffery Hall. Room 127.

Bars

401: Ray Smith
Commodore: Rose
Pub: Rembrandt
Manor: Larry Lee and the Chelsea Wind

At Agnes

December 1-5: Metaphor, an exhibition of a series of paintings by Herb Richardson.
December 1-12: An exhibition of works by artists from the Kingston area.

Theatres

Capitol: Carnal Knowledge
Odeon: The Organization
Hyland: Summer of '42 bonus is The Satan Bug

Winter of our Discontent made Glorious Summer of '42

by Paul Grompertz

As I settled in my seat, and slid my arm in one graceful fluid movement around the back of her chair, twining my fingers romantically (and as it proved later, inextricably) in her hair, I was expecting a combination of nostalgic and humour that would pleasantly divert me for the films' 103 minutes. For the days when one hit one's date in the eye while trying to put one's arm around her in the movies are, thankfully, long gone. (And if they aren't, one is definitely in need of a refresher course).

But Summer of '42 is more than simple nostalgia or contrived humour, though the ultimate depth of both rests with the individual. The effect of the humour is less variable, for the need for association in order to appreciate it is not so great. It is a 'younger' version of campus humour, mainly because most of it is sex-oriented, and there are some lines of which anyone could be proud. Even the BEST of friends can't go halves on a rubber. This is as it should be, for the film centres on the comradeship and sexual awakening of a group of three fifteen year olds on vacation on a summer colony-island off the New England coast. And as such, it is admirable, for it is aware of all the traumas and conflicts that such a sexual awakening brings. One (as long as 'one' is male) can not help but 'recognize' the painful scene in the drug store when Hermie attempts to purchase 3 dozen rubbers. And as with this scene, so with most of them: they are well presented, carefully chosen and humorous because the humour fits the characters.

So much for humour which in itself is enough to warrant a visit. Now the nostalgia. Friends and fellow ex-pubescent males, I can only exhort you, if you are a sensitive romantic at heart, to dump your dates, wives and other assorted concubines at the late showing of 'Face Off', buy a box of tissues (perhaps even put on your short pants) and go along. The female population will invariably enjoy this film; but they cannot hope to understand Hermie's passion for Dorothy; and their wry rejoinders 'how ridiculous, young boys don't feel like that...but dahling, it's so far fetched' will grate upon the sensitive ears of the emotionally vulnerable in our midst, who are reliving the ecstacy of pubescent agony. (It is also essential that the abandoned Mater Dolovosa should be waiting at home, so the fantasy can be continued later at your leisure).

The film will appeal even to the insensitive, but will really work for those who can 'feel' what it is saying. The film's climax, (and Hermie's) broke the spell for me, since it didn't seem logical that he should consummate his passion. There will however no doubt be those for whom it will work; though if they were adept enough to lay a beautiful newly widowed 22 year old at the age of 15, they are wasting their talents by going to the movies at all.

This is not a movie that merits close critical analysis, for it is an attempt at catching a mood. As such, there are faults which intrude as mood-breakers. My 'Golden Film Cliche' award goes to the 'Girl in slow motion with bouncing hair' trick; and though I could sit for weeks and watch Jennifer O'Neill not acting, her performance is unconvincing. My familiarity with the tune of 'Jingle Bells' saved me from being too annoyed when the editing missed out a few bars in the drug store scene; and I greatly enjoyed some of the very original and rather random changes in colouring.

Finally, Congratulations to whoever played the Adult Voice of Hermie in the Prologue and Epilogue; he wins my 'I can make the telephone directory sound intense and passionate' award, especially for his rendering of the powerful, original, lyrical, and overwhelmingly bathetic and anti-climactic closing lines 'In the Summer of '42 we raided the coast Guard Station four times; we saw five movies and had nine days of rain, Benjie broke his watch; Oscy gave up the harmonica and, in a very special, - I lost Hermie forever.' He is reported to be recovering well after a Dramatic operation in the Theatre of the National Hospital for Over-Acting.

EXTENDED HOURS

Typing and Duplicating Will be Accepted Days and Evenings (until 10:00 P.M.) as well as Sat. and Sun. Afternoon until Dec. 10. The Service will remain open Week days (8:30 A.M. - 4:30 P.M.) until Dec. 17.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

GENUINE CANADIAN CRAFTS,
CLOTHES, TOYS and
CANADIAN BOOKS
CANADIAN SHOP
OF KINGSTON
telephone: 542-1115
219 Princess St.
(next to the Capitol Theatre)

Bring anybody out for dinner -- Great food from 2.99 -- every night!
It's Time to Book Your Party
or dance or stag or excuse for a drunk
The Round Table
We've got rooms from 5 - 1500 and great food and drink.
Call us . . . Now
The Round Table
Fully licenced - 542-7337
Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

QUEEN'S HILLEL INVITES ALL TO HEAR
ON SUN. DEC. 5TH
RABBI YITCHAK KAGIN OF DETROIT, MICH.
SPEAKING ON
"CHASSIDISM"
A MYSTICAL APPROACH TO JUDAISM
8:00 P.M. HILLEL HOUSE
26 BARRIE ST.
Rabbi Kagin is Spiritual Leader of Temple Mishkan Israel. He was educated in London, England, and is Director of Chabbad, (a Chassidic Movement) in Detroit.
ON WED. DEC. 8TH
DR.L.J. SANDERS
"THE MACABEES"
A STUDY IN REVOLUTION
7:30 P.M. HILLEL HOUSE
Dr. Sanders was formerly Professor, Department of Classics at Queen's University, and presently resides in Toronto.
ATTENTION
1. Judaica Book Display and Sale, to be held on Sunday, Dec. 5th, 1971, at 8:00 P.M., 26 Barrie St.
2. Chanukah Kits for sale - Menorah Candles and Dreidels, $1.00. To place order for Chanukah Kits, please call 542-1120, anytime.

Coming Events

WOMEN'S INTERCOLLEGIATES

Badminton - Sat. Dec. 4 from 12.30 to 5.00 p.m. in the Ross Gym - OWIAA Part 1 vs Carleton and Ottawa
Basketball - Sat. Dec. 4 at 6.15 p.m. in the Bartlett Gym - Queen's vs Laurentian
Volleyball - Sat. Dec. 4 at 6.00 p.m. in the Ross Gym - Queen's vs Laurentian Ice Hockey - Fri. Dec. 3 - Queen's at Guelph - 8.00 p.m. - Sat. Dec. 4 - Queen's at York - 11.00 a.m.
Fencing - Sat. Dec. 4 - OWIAA Part 1 at Ottawa
Synchronized Swimming - Sat. Dec. 4- OWIAA Part 1 at McGill
Gymnastic Clinic - Sat. Dec. 4 - 9.00 a.m. to 5.00 p.m. - at Queen's

MEN'S INTERCOLLEGIATES

Basketball - Sat. Dec. 4 at 8.15 p.m. in the Bartlett Gym - Queen's vs Laurentian
Hockey - Sat. Dec. 4 at 2.00 p.m. in the Harty Arena - Queen's vs Sir George Williams (exhibition)
Wrestling - Sun. Dec. 5 - Queen's at C.M.R.
Gymnastics - Sat. Dec. 4 - Queen's at York at 7.00 p.m.
Squash - Sat. Dec. - Queen's at Trent at 1.00 p.m.

Comm-KGH Hockey

Sunday, Dec. 5, from 6.30-7.30 p.m., KGH nurses meet with the Commerce guys at the Queen's arena for a thrilling hockey game. Admission is free and all are welcome. Witness the Commerce defeat! Governing rules are:

(1) no equipment
(2) no checking!!

W.I.C. Bowling

This Sunday, December 5, will be the last chance for girls to compete in W.I.C. bowling. Taxis for free transportation will leave the gym at 6.45 Sun. evening, and bowling will be from 7-9 p.m. All girls are welcome! For more information call Laura 544-9273.

Relays and Diving

The meet was sanctioned as an official OUAA meet this past weekend, and OUAA crests were presented to the first place winners. Six teams came to Queen's for the meet, which was quite successful.

Queen's swimmers beat out U. of Toronto in the 4 by 100 individual medley and placed second to Weste[illegible]. In the 4 by 100 breast stroke relay U. of T. just barely defeated Queen's.

The Queen's swimmers placed fourth in the 3-metre and sixth in the 1-metre diving. Western broke last year's 400 medley relay OQAA record in the meet.

boag

Gymnastics

At Ottawa University this past weekend, Queen's Men's Gymnastics Team was edged out of a first place finish by the Ottawa team. The meet started with Queen's taking the lead but losing towards the end on the basis of two events: rings and vaulting.

Part of this weakness on these apparatus can be attributed to the absence of team member Tim Wasiliniuk.

Outstanding in performance were Drew Strickland; second overall by the margin of one point (42.5-41.5), with Dave Ross and Jamie Archibald not far behind in the overall place standings.

Fencing

This past weekend the Queen's-RMC Invitational Fencing Tournament was held at Queen's. The men tied for first place in the overall team competition on the basis of second place finished to RMC in foil and sabre, and a first place finish in epee.

The men appear well on their way to another successful season. Their next competition is the Carleton Invitational on Jan. 15 and 16.

ALMA MATER SOCIETY

Student Typing Service

Services ESSAYS and THESIS TYPING
Top Quality duplicating on the NEW 3600 III Xerox Duplicator.
720 Xerox and Ditto Copying.

Mon - Thu 8:30 am - 10:00 pm
Fri 8:30 am - 4:30 pm
Sat 12:00 am - 5:00 pm
Sat 1:00 pm - 10:00 pm

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

ENGLISH DSC SMOKER
MONDAY, DECEMBER 6
2nd Floor Common Room, Union
8 pm - Midnight
BR - 25¢ Admisssion - 50¢

Ski Club BASH
SAT. DEC. 4th GRANT HALL
8:30 pm. - 1:00 am.
Free Admission BR 3/$1.00

The Ideal Xmas Gift
QUEEN,S NIGHT SHIRTS
ON SALE THURS. DEC. 9, STUDENT UNION
10:30 am - 12:30 pm

ALL GRADUATING STUDENTS

A Master's Degree in Business Administration from McMaster University School of Business could help you to achieve your career objectives in the areas of management, administration, and education because the McMaster M.B.A. program offers a wide range of optional courses (that can be selected to your needs) as well as providing a core of basic knowledge and skills. Although admission is restricted to those who have proven that they have the potential and commitment required to complete a demanding program, graduates in any discipline may be accepted.

Academic standing is not the only entry criterion but, as a general rule, you can have a reasonable expectation of completing the McMaster M.B.A. program if you have maintained at least a second-class standing in the last two years of your undergraduate program and if you can achieve a satisfactory test score in the Admission Test for Graduate Study in Business.

Applicants for the McMaster M.B.A. who have taken relevant course work may be granted advanced standing in our program. If you are interested in exploring this challenging opportunity further, fill in and mail this form —

To: Assistant to the Dean
School of Business
McMaster University
Hamilton 16, Ontario

Please send me details about your MBA program

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ Province _____
University Attending _____ Degree Expected _____ When? _____

Sailors meet keen competition

Timme Angsten Memorial Regatta in Chicago

(By John Telgmann)

Temperatures never rose above 35 degress in Chicago as some of the best intercollegiate sailors in North America competed in the 25th Annual Timme Angsten Memorial Trophy Regatta. The Queen's team placed an unlucky thirteenth out of 17 schools represented in the Intercollegiate Yacht Racing Association Finals. Competing with such famous sailing schools as Southern Cal., Harvard, Navy, Stevens Inst., (New Jersey), Notre Dame, and M.I.T. proved very exciting and extremely tough for the Queen's sailors.

The Queen's team sailed in completely new and varied conditions in Chicago's Belmont Harbour. High-rise apartment buildings obstructed the wind which blew from the north-west, causing the wind to be very unpredictable unless one had sailed in Chicago before. Many of the teams were back after previous attempts. Perhaps with some valuable experience the Queen's team will have a much better chance in future years.

The team looked strong in buoy rounding manoeuvres but the unpredictable winds slowed the team down considerably in the heats against the wind to the weather mark. Often the team was in near last place at the first mark but with better than average downwind tactics and ability they worked their way up to place higher in the standings.

The regatta was run exceptionally well and was fair in every respect. There were 65 regatta staff members and officials running the races for 68 competitors. Never have the Queen's sailors seen such attention and professionalism in the running of a regatta. There was even a goup of boys who rigged the boats and put them in and out of the water. The competitors dressed for the cold weather in 80 degree locker rooms on a floating clubhouse in Belmont Harbour. The competitors simply stepped out a door and on to a landing ramp to board the waiting boats. Each school had two crews of two sailors to a crew. For example, skipper Bob Lewis and crew Sandy Goodall in Division "A" would sail a race then turn over the boat to skipper John Telgmann and Evan Swan of Division "B" for the next race. There were a total of 17 races for each crew, or a total of 34 races in the three days of racing. The boats were rotated to give everyone one race in every boat.

What happens if a boat dumps or turns over as landlubbers would say? With the water temperatures in the low 40's a person could not last very long. The Queen's team was lucky not to dump, but concern was aroused when the Forida State crew capsized. They had left 80 degree weather to come north and freeze. Standard procedure for a dump is for a crash boat to rescue the sailors and run them back to the locker rooms for a shower and a shot of whiskey. The boat was not towed in until much later.

The social aspect of the regatta included a dinner and dance Saturday night, and a presentation banquet on Sunday. Many girls accompanied the sailors to watch and cheer, however, the Queen's men felt this would cramp their style.

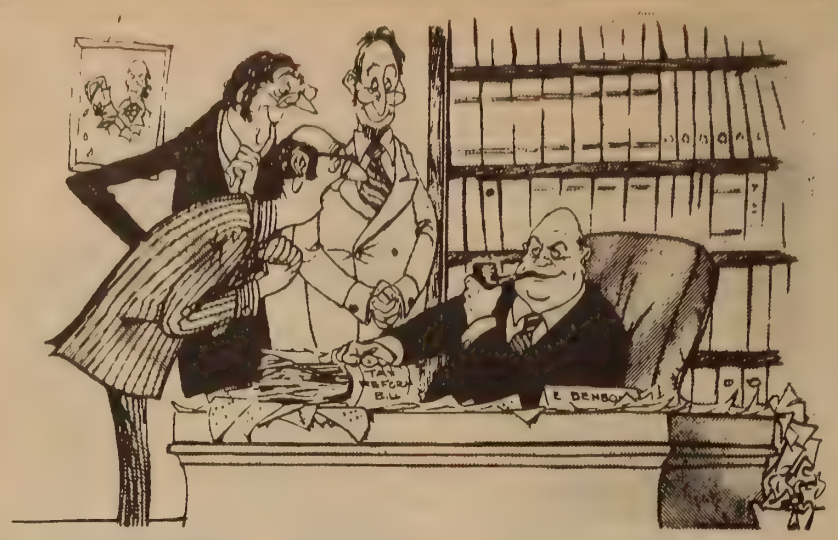
Queen's Sailing Team with J.L. Hudson Trophy-Detroit

RESULTS

(SCHOOL)	(POS.)
Steven's Institute New Jersey)	1.
Navy (Maryland)	2
New York Maritime	3
U. of Southern Cal	4
Oshkosh	5
Harvard	6
U. of Michigan	7
Michigan State	8
M.I.T.	9
Forida State	10
Ohio State	11
Notre Dame	12
Queen's	13
Purdue	14
Wayne State	15
Northwestern (Chicago)	16
Xavier	17

THE BEST THINGS IN LIFE AREN'T FREE

Like her engagement ring. Not free, but not out of sight expensive either. From our wide and beautiful selection of diamonds, we'll show you different cuts, different sizes. We'll help you choose a diamond well within your budget. It will be a dazzling gem to make life even more beautiful.



KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET.
KINGSTON. ONTARIO
CANADA

LADIES ELECTROLYSIS
Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call:
HARRISON SALON 542-5595

Monday thru Saturday
noon 'til 1 p.m.
its . . .
The Round Table
Mr. BOJANGLES ROOM a discotheque
Get in on a DIFFERENT Atmosphere!! Dance to the latest in top sounds!! A new image -- a lively spot -- Come to see Bojangles -- You'll like it!! AT
The Round Table
Fully Licenced
Home of the Sunday Roast
Beef Buffet -- 542-7337
Bring anybody out for dinner -- great food from 2.99 -- every night.
Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

JADE GARDEN RESTAURANT
Specializing in QUALITY Chinese Food and Canadian Dishes
TAKE OUT - and DELIVERY SERVICE
CALL 542-3033

For fashion that's eye OK
With a touch of gold,
these lightest-ever metal frames
of our exclusive "Boutique Collection" come in all the news-making shapes.
The type of fashion-firsts you find at 265 King St. E.
Shorney
542-1747

A magnificent political achievement sir . . . a tax system no one, not even you, can understand and therefore only you can explain.

Norris
The Vancouver Sun

OTTAWA — Edgar Benson has told the House of Commons that "tax reforms will come into effect January 1, 1972, no matter what," and numerous accountants, tax experts and businessmen are so alarmed by his attitude and by the complexity of the proposed legislation that they took out a full page ad in the Globe and Mail urging opposition to the bill.

The original revision of the Income Tax Act was put before the House in the summer and was 707 pages long. Last Thursday, Benson introduced amendments to this which added another 45 pages. The general consensus seems to be that the legislation is not only incoherent but nearly unreadable. Someone noted that if it had been a Broadway play, it would have folded first night.

The debate on the bill has now gone on for 38 days, and it seems the government has grown tired of the debate. The opposition expects them to make use of legislation which passed two years ago to cut the debate short. This legislation, Commons rule 75-C, permits the government to set a time restriction on debate on a bill. In fact, the only thing that could prevent the government from doing this would be if the opposition agreed among themselves to a time limit on the debate. At present, this appears unlikely.

CANADA

OTTAWA — The federal Government will probably make its long-awaited policy statement on foreign ownership before Christmas, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau said last Thursday.

TORONTO — The Toronto Star, having grown comfortable with its afternoon monopoly on the newspaper reading public in Toronto, brought about by the death of the Telegram in October, has announced its second price increase for advertising in two months.

In October, the Star announced that ad prices would go up 9 per cent. Tuesday, the Star announced that its ad prices would go up another 22 per cent.

The Star justified this second increase on the basis of projections of circulation increases for the Star which are expected to result, given the fact that the Star now has no afternoon competition.

TORONTO — So-called "soft" contact lenses are being investigated by the College of Optometrists of Ontario and the federal Food and Drug Directorate for possible dangers of contamination.

Dr. Irving Baker, registrar of the college, said Friday night that "providing both practitioners and patients follow cleansing instructions" the problems of contamination of lenses "seems to have been licked."

He estimated that between 7,000 and 8,000 Canadians wear soft contact lenses, which follow the contours of the wearer's eye and are said to be more comfortable than ordinary contact lenses.

OTTAWA — A major oil spill on the proposed U.S. tanker route from Alaska to Washington could cost Canada about $100 million, says a Canadian government document made public last week.

The estimate is contained in a diplomatic note opposing the tanker route presented Aug. 18 to the U.S. State Department by the Canadian embassy in Washington, D.C.

BACK PAGE

OTTAWA — MPs of all parties agreed Friday that something should be done to curb advertising aimed at children -- especially before Christmas -- but they effectively shelved a bill that would have cracked down on the practice.

James McGrath, Conservative MP for St. John's East and father of six children, sponsored a bill for more stringent control of such advertising and won permission to have it debated in the regular private members' hour.

Members of other parties agreed, at least in part, but they talked until time expired before a vote was taken. Mr. McGrath's bill thus drops to the bottom of a long list and is unlikely to emerge again soon in the Commons.

"Your wife will never forgive you for talking out this bill, Maurice," shouted Mr. McGrath, as Maurice Foster (L. Algoma), father of four, was talking as the 6 p.m. deadline arrived.

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau will go to the United States to discuss the U.S. 10 per cent surcharge on imports and relations between the two countries with President Richard Nixon before the end of this year.

OTTAWA — The Economic Council of Canada Monday called for a rapid expansion of the economy to create more jobs for young people and thus offset a threat of "serious economic and social strains in the 1970s."

It urged the government to concentrate particularly on creating 1,400,000 jobs by 1975 for workers 24 to 35 years old. who are expected to make up the biggest percentage of Canada's unemployed in the next few years.

OTTAWA — Canada will not protest against an underground Soviet nuclear test Monday morning, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said Monday.

Mr. Sharp told the Commons that Canada did not protest against a regular U.S. underground nuclear test in Nevada last week.

THE WORLD

LONDON — The British Government Monday welcomed proposals for talks that could lead to a united Ireland.

"We are perfectly prepared to enter into discussions," Reginald Maudling, the Home Secretary, told the House of Commons.

The Government's acceptance of the proposals, made last Thursday by former Prime Minister Harold Wilson, was a significant step forward in the delicate question of Irish unification. For years, the leaders of both major parties have maintained that the 50-year-old border, dividing Northern Ireland from the republic, was not an issue in settling the bitter religious strife in Ulster.

Mr. Wilson, however, put forward a plan that could lead to a united Ireland -- a plan that has been rejected by the Northern Ireland Protestant Government and greeted warmly by many minority Catholic leaders.

Mr. Wilson's proposals start with the formation of a constitutional commission with representatives of the British, Ulster and Dublin Governments. The commission would examine proposals for a united Ireland, with safeguards for the Protestants in the North.

CAIRO — Premier Wasfi Tell of Jordan, an unrelenting foe of the Palestinian guerrillas, was assassinated in Cairo Monday.

Police arrested three non-Egyptians carrying Syrian passports. The official Middle East News Agency reported the three said they were ordered to kill Tell by the Black Ilul (Black September) movement, formed to avenge the deaths of guerrillas during fierce fighting betweeen Palestinians and the Jordanian Army in September, 1970.

Tell was shot at the entrance to Cairo's Sheraton Hotel. The 51-year-old premier was representing his country at a 17-nation Arab League Defence council meeting called to plan joint strategy against Israel.

DALLAS — The newly created People's Party picked Dr. Benjamin Spock of New York as a stand-in presidential candidate Saturday night with the understanding that he would step aside if a "bigger national figure" can be persuaded to take the party's reins.

The noted baby doctor and peace activist received a standing ovation when he said there "are millions of Americans disgusted with the present political parties and in despair over seeing the country sliding toward disaster."

PARIS — Prostitution is a stagnant industry and its clients are aging rapidly, a Paris psychiatrist told a meeting here Monday.

Professor Marcel Sacotte, official adviser to the Paris Appeal Court attributed the relative decline of prostitution to the moral freedom of the 1970s, which confronts professionals prostitutes with unpaid competition.

He said prostitues may find a new market, however, in the tens of thousands of foreign workers who leave their families at home to earn a living in France.

OTTAWA — Agreement on changes in the auto pact between Canada and the United States has virtually been reached at the official level, and now it is a matter for heads of government, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau said Sunday.

External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp had said Friday the United States and Canada would reach agreement "reasonably soon" on contentious points in the 1965 pact.

The trade flow generated by the pact has been the major grievance held by the Nixon Administration against Canada. From a large deficit in trade in autos before the pact, Canada has managed steadily to gain a surplus trade position to the point that trade in autos under the joint arrangement accounted for a third of its $1.1-billion merchandise trade surplus with the United States last year.

The U.S. Administration wants the pact to become a completely free-trade arrangement so that individual Canadians, not just the car manufacturers, can import cars from the United States duty free.

Ottawa has clung to the safeguards in the pact which guarantee production levels, now greatly exceeded, in Canada. The Trudeau Government, if it is to give up the safeguards, has said it wants some protection against the danger that U.S. parent companies will make production decisions under influence from Washington that would favor creation of employment more in the United States than in Canada.

U.S and Canadian officials conferred on trade differences in Ottawa on Nov. 4 and 15.

Mr. Trudeau also said he hopes for a breakthrough on Canadian-U.S economic questions when he meets President Richard Nixon in December. He said officials of the two countries had taken things as far as they could and it was time for him and Mr. Nixon to try to bring matters to a head.

'What we need now is a car that'll last as long as the licence plates.'

Short courses on human problems are proposed

A proposal for a series of short courses on the problems of humanity will come to the arts and science faculty board on Friday.

The motion, to be introduced by mathematics chairman Dr. A. J. Coleman and politics professor Dr. Ned Franks, calls for such courses to consist of "six lectures in two consecutive weeks", all given in the evening and with a wide variety of time slots so that everyone can take part in one.

Each course should deal with "a major human or social problem bearing urgently on the survival in decency of the human race," the motion says.

For each such course, a "list of salient facts" would be prepared, and credit in the course would depend on passing an objective test based on the list.

The motion asks that credit in at least one such short course be a requirement, beginning in 1973, for graduation with any arts and science degree. But, Coleman told The Journal last week, this provision is likely to meet with "hesitancy" from faculty members. He said its purpose was "to try to shock people into taking the thing seriously" and show that the university "is really serious about it".

"Anyone with a grain of intelligence", could pass the course, he said, since the only requirement is passing the test based on the five-page fact list.

Coleman said the background for his proposal was "the visit of Gunnar Myrdal and his lectures about poverty". Myrdal, a Swedish economist, was at Queen's last month as the 1971 Brockington Visitor. Originally, he said, he had intended only a course on poverty, but after consulting Franks he decided the programme should be broadened.

The motion suggests that initially three courses be offered: on poverty, "man and environment", and conflict.

Coleman said Queen's must decide "whether we actually have a responsibility as a university for the promotion of decent human conditions".

He said, "It's not the duty of the university to promulgate more morality as such." But, "People should be forced to face the facts, not just sit around in our mutual apathy.

"It's so easy to drift around at Queen's -- with the lake, and the skiing, and the marvelous social life you all have."

The motion to be presented urges that "no pretence be made that such courses are definitive treatment of a problem".

-wilson

Rather, it says, "they should aim to dispel the grossest elements of ignorance and by the use of movies, vivid magazine articles and other means attempt to arouse informed awareness of a problem, of sources of further information, and of the radically new attitudes which may be necessary to solve the problem."

Participants in the groups should come from many different disciplines, Coleman said; but they should be "groups of students and faculty who have at least enough information in common that they have the basis for bull sessions all over the place."

The concept, he said, is based on discussions sponsored by the Student Christian Movement, in which he participated as a student. But they were often just "pooling of ignorance", he said, which is the reason fact lists and other information should be formally used.

Coleman said he still leads seminars for the SCM at Queen's, and "I had that paradigm in mind."

He mentioned that the plan was for the whole arts and science faculty -- and ultimately, as the motion suggests, for the whole university.

"It isn't a thing just for sociologists to do. Engineers, economists and so on can benefit as well."

If Coleman's motion, or one like it, is carried, these are the short courses that would be offered first:

"Poverty: the causes, extent and implication of poverty in Canada and elsewhere, and in particular, the responsibility of the developed for the underdeveloped nations.

"Man and environment: the relationship between human society and the world about us, the causes of environmental degradation and the possible ways of creating a better balance between man and nature.

Conflict: an examination of conflict and aggression in the world; of the causes of domestic and international violence and the means of limiting warfare."

Queen's
Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 31 Tues., Dec. 7, 1971

Take a break

There will be a general meeting of the Alma Mater Society at 7:30 tonight in Theatre D of Stirling Hall. All students may make motions, speak and vote at this meeting. The main item of business will be the use of theAMS's $3500 special reserve fund.

Coed res still could happen, perhaps in Morris Hall

Coed residence for 1972 is not dead. The residences board will meet Saturday to hear a cautiously favourable report from the Ban Righ Board (governing women's res) and an enthusiastic one from the men's residence board.

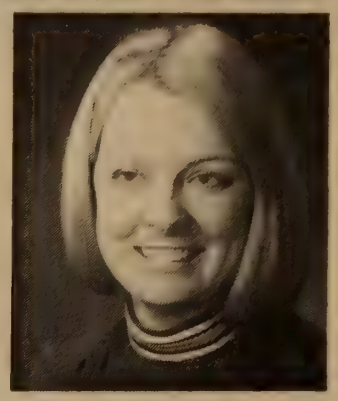
The Ban Righ board last Wednesday supported the principle of coed residence, and suggested that "it would be desirable to develop a smaller pilot co-ed residence project" for next year. But it turned down the idea of converting an existing women's residence into a coed building or men's residence, as was involved in the Chown-Gordon-Brockington plan earlier rejected by the Women's Residence Council.

Ian Nordheimer
IRC Chairman

Doug Romans
Wrote original plan

And Saturday the men's residence board said it felt that proposal could be successfully instituted for 1972.

But, the motion which was carried said, "the men's residences board is sensitive to the conclusions reached by the Ban Righ Board, and, therefore, to ensure that a co-educational residence involving first year students shall be available in the 1972-73 academic session, the Board would support, as an alternative, a pilot project restricted to Leonard Field."



This would be particularly possible, according to coed residence committee chairman Doug Romans, because there is no great pressure for accommodation on Leonard Field: at present 20 beds there are vacant.

The residences board this weekend will consider these two positions, and will be asked to call a special meeting soon after Christmas at which a proposal will be presented for a coed residence using only buildings under the jurisdiction of the men's residences.

The Women's Residence Council would be unable to block such a project even if it wanted to, Romans said.

It will probably be a proposal to make Morris Hall, now a men's residence, into a coed residence in which the sexes alternate by rooms. This would result in a loss of about 95 beds for men in the residence system; the capacity of Morris is 194.

There was some discussion at Saturday's meeting of installing carpet and other improvements in a Leonard Field building if it was to be made coed, Romans said.

Cindy Davidson
WRC President

Joan Delavigne
WRC rep on committee

CLASSIFIEDS

MISSING from study Carrel in the second stacks - notes for politics essay, copy of "Option for Quebec" and press clippings 1969-71 on Rene Levesque. The press clippings are the only existing set - the property of the Politics Department not me!!! Will the person who "borrowed" them on Saturday night please return them to either the Interim Admin Building or to Documents in the Library. BUT keep out of the second stacks - WE'RE WATCHING FOR YOU!! PS - If you'd like to throw in my essay with the clippings, I would be eternally grateful.

AVAILABLE January 1st, room in large 3-bedroom apartment, to share with three other girls. Laundry facilities. Quiet. Minutes from campus. 238 Victoria (near Union). $50.00 monthly plus utilities. 546-6752.

FOUND: Girl's white wooly hat (or equivalent) night of November 29 snowball fight outside Gordon House. Phone 544-7586 to claim.

IS Santa Claus really just Ralfe Clench?

COSMIC CLOCK

386 Princess St.
544-5755
Across from the Odeon

LADIES ELECTROLYSIS

Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call:

HARRISON SALON 542-5595

ALMA MATER SOCIETY

Student Typing Service

Services ESSAYS and THESIS TYPING
Top Quality duplicating on the NEW 3600 III Xerox Duplicator.
720 Xerox and Ditto Copying.

Mon - Thu 8:30 am - 10:00 pm
Fri 8:30 am - 4:30 pm
Sat 12:00 am - 5:00 pm
Sat 1:00 pm - 10:00 pm

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

International Centre invites Canadian students to participate in our program of Christmas visits: invite an overseas student to your home for the holidays for Christmas day, or for New Year's: Call the International Centre 547-2807.

WANTED
ACTION PEOPLE FOR
NEW YEAR'S EVE

The ASUS Other Events Committee is holding a New Year's Eve Party in the Queen's Pub (Second Floor of the Student's Union) for all Queen's students, faculty, staff, and guests on New Year's Eve.

Admission will be $1.50 per person (or $2.50 a couple) at the door. Starting time is 8:30, and entertainment, snacks, etc. will be provided.

Few students to help study teaching

There will be three faculty members for every student at the teaching and learning conference being held next month by the faculty of arts and science.

The meeting, on the Thursday and Friday before classes resume, is billed as the "first biennial conference on teaching and learning: Appraisal 72".

It is an echo of the Opinicon Conference in May 1969, in which 45 students and 45 faculty members met in three days of intensive discussions at Opinicon Lodge north of Kingston. The results of those discussions were a major factor in producing the report of the Principal's Committee on Teaching and Learning ("the Harrower Report"), whose recommendations on liberalizing regulations and broadening arts and science education have had great effect on the university since then.

One of those recommendations was for periodic appraisal conferences, like the one scheduled for next month.

All faculty members were invited to take part in the meeting. Student delegates were chosen by departmental student councils; each DSC chairman was asked to pick one student for every three professors from his department who would be attending.

The arts and science office said Friday the exact planned attendance was not yet known, but would probably be between 120 and 150.

The spokesman also said the three-to-one ratio between faculty and students was set deliberately. "Since they (students) are not teachers, it would be inappropriate to have them on a fifty-fifty basis."

The point of this particular conference is primarily about teaching, he said.

It is to be divided into four sessions with specific points of departure. The first is "objectives": "A set of suggested objectives will be presented for discussion as they apply to specialists and non-specialists in each discipline. These objectives will serve as a basis for assessing the adequacy of teaching methods, evaluative procedures and utilisation of time by staff and students in succeeding sessions; the consideration of methods, evaluation and time leading back in each case to a modification of objectives where necessary."

The second session will discuss the development of objectives into methods of teaching, and the relative benefits and purposes of lectures, tutorials, seminars and other forms of teaching.

In the third, participants will discuss "objectives into evaluation", -- methods and purposes of evaluation, and "Are our teaching methods inconsistent without evaluative procedures and purposes, and if so, which should alter?"

The final session is on "objectives into time" -- research, the division of effort between "elementary teaching, senior teaching, research, counselling and administration", and the demands on student time.

Participants are being invited to prepare very short "position papers" to stimulate discussion within the 12-member groups into which they will be divided.

Unlike the Opinicon conference two years ago, Appraisal 72 will be held on the Queen's campus. It is sponsored by a subcommittee of the committee of departments in arts and science; the committee chairman is Dr. Norman Brown of the philosophy department.

Orienteers are chosen

The commerce orientation committee for 1972 has been chosen. Dave McDougall, of Commerce 74, will be chairman; Murray McKay, Angela Biever and Richard Chown, all of Commerce 75, will be the other members.

McDougall said the goal of the committee this year will be to achieve greater integration with the artsci and engineering orientation programmes in planning more joint events.

He added that in past years the committee has been late in getting organized, and so were less able to participate in such joint plans.

The committee will be choosing the chief boss in January, McDougall said; application dates will be posted in Dunning Hall.

Political figure describes government's problems

Queen's political personality Flora MacDonald returned to campus from the National Defence College two weeks ago and, in a lecture sponsored by the Law Society, summarized some of the problems of current Canadian government.

She said decision-making in the federal government has become the function of the executive and the bureaucracy. "The result has been the emasculation of the House (of Commons)."

And the result may be apathy, Miss MacDonald said. She pointed to a recent survey of Canadians in which one-third of the population appeared to feel politically ineffective and therefore were on the way to being uninterested.

"I fear this will lead to apathy," she commented.

The remark was made to an audience of twenty people.

Miss MacDonald, a member of the department of political studies, is former secretary of the Progressive Conservative Party, and executive secretary of the Committee for an Independent Canada.

On leave from Queen's this year, she is taking the defence college course, designed to study the Canadian political system and its related economic and social problems. The students are men in the middle of their careers in government, business and the military; Miss MacDonald is the only woman in the 11½-month course (and recently shattered a rule by appearing in the mess in a pantsuit, the Kingston newspaper reported).

She told the audience at Queen's that smaller political units than now exist would be more responsive to the people. A member of the audience replied that such a proposal was a platform plank of the Liberal Party, under Robert Nixon, in the recent Ontario election, and "It is obvious from election results that people didn't feel very strongly about such a reform."

Mentioning other common dissatisfactions with the political system, Miss MacDonald touched on the occupational distribution of members of parliament and the difficulties which face female candidates.

"The bias towards lawyers," she said, "ties the House up in legal technicalities, rather than an examination of social problems." And because of social conditioning, lack of mobility, and difficulty in raising funds, she said, only .08 per cent of members elected have been women.

ALMA MATER SOCIETY GENERAL MEETING

*TONIGHT!
*7:30 p.m.
*Stirling D
*Every student welcome

AGENDA: Spending of AMS Reserve Funds, Honoraria, Bitch-In, Direction of Student Government

Come out and BITCH about the AMS!!!

Copying and Duplicating

The 3600 III Xerox Duplicator provides fast, excellent, thesis reproduction, photographic reproduction, solids and halftone reproduction, sorting and collating, and background clearing. Quality book copying and transparency reproduction can also be provided by our 720 Xerox Copier.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

Bring anybody out for dinner -- great food from 2.99 -- every night.

Monday thru Saturday noon 'til 1 p.m. its . . .

The Round Table

Mr. BOJANGLES ROOM a discotheque

Get in on a DIFFERENT Atmosphere!! Dance to the latest in top sounds!! A new image -- a lively spot -- Come to see Bojangles -- You'll like it!! AT

The Round Table

Fully Licenced
Home of the Sunday Roast
Beef Buffet -- 542-7337

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

DECK HER HAND WITH A HOLIDAY DIAMOND

This Christmas do something dazzling. Deck her hand with a diamond ring. We'll help you select a brilliant diamond to slip in her Christmas stocking. It will be a beautiful surprise. To sparkle on her finger like perpetual snowflakes. And be her most precious ornament for all the Christmases to come.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET
KINGSTON ONTARIO
CANADA

A letter from the AMS president about money -- and solidarity

Dear Fellow Students:

The time has come when some serious thinking must be done by students across Canada concerning the kind of system of Student Aid and Financing of Post-Secondary Education that we would like to see replace the current Federal-Provincial cost-sharing agreement.

This agreement (by which the Federal Government pays 50 per cent of the operating costs of all provincial post-secondary educational programs) expires in 1974. Technical negotiations between Federal and Provincial civil servants are already underway at this moment and formal negotiations between the Council of Provincial Education Ministers and the Federal Government will commence January, 1973. Therefore, we have only slightly more than one year to influence the positions that both these groups will take when they meet to reach a final agreement. After-the-fact reaction, although it does have a place in our strategy, will not be adequate to ensure the development of a new system which will be acceptable to students.

Before going into what we feel ought to be our "before-the-fact" strategy, we would like to quickly highlight some of the dangers inherent in the current decision-making climate. The first we feel is the growth of provincialism. Trends clearly evident in British Columbia and rumblings in other parts of the country indicate that the provinces are beginning to move towards sealing off their post-secondary systems to out-of-province students. The concepts of higher tuition and low quotas for transfer students are gaining ground with provincial governments. Tied to this reassertion of provincial autonomy in Education is the increased pressure on the Federal Government to withdraw completely from the financing of education. The provinces are beginning to move towards demanding tax points (handing back of taxes on a pro rata basis) instead of the current grants-in-aid scheme. Should the Federal Government yield to these demands, then any further attemps to redress regional disparities in the field of post-secondary education are doomed.

The second major danger is a product of Provincial reaction to the high costs of post-secondary education. There is reason to fear that in a rush to please the taxpayer the Provincial Governments will shoulder an excessive proportion of the costs of education onto students themselves. While we are not necessarily opposed to sharing some greater proportion of costs; we feel that the responsibilities of society as a whole, must not be forgotten in an attempt to deal with immediate political considerations.

A third point to remember when considering this whole question of financial aid to students concerns the broad perspective of government financial aid to all individuals. There is some danger that Student Aid will be dealt with in isolation from a number of related government programs. A new student aid scheme must be formulated in coordination with a review of unemployment insurance, welfare, manpower training aid and the guaranteed annual income concept. Independent development of a Student Aid scheme may result in discriminatory and inequitable treatment for students in the related programs.

Keeping these three considerations in mind we must now turn to determination of our strategy from now till January, 1973.

First of all, we have to start to get ourselves together and formulate our own views on what we want. We propose to do this by immediately writing a statement of values concerning Student Aid. This statement will deal with qualitative considerations only. We will attempt to state the goals and minimum requirements that we feel a student aid scheme must contain. A draft statement will be sent to all student councils by the end of term and hopefully, ratification of a preliminary Statement of Values by all student councils in Canada can be concluded by the end of January, 1972.

We have chosen this method of operation over that of setting up a National Task Force for a number of reasons. First of all, the logistics of organizing and financing a task force would postpone the development of even a preliminary value statement till the spring. We simply don't have that time. The value statement is needed immediately to focus student attention on the important questions which we feel are qualitative not quantitative. What is needed is soul-searching not research. We did approach several organizations to aid us in the formation of a task force but found a less than enthusiastic welcome. The Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada will not decide on our request till their January 4th Board Meeting. In addition to the fact that this is too late, they have no money to fund the task force and little influence to find any. The Federal Government can't and won't have anything to do with us because education is a "provincial matter" and they are afraid to step on the Education Ministers' toes. That leaves the Ministers themselves. We will approach the Council of Education Ministers this month out of good form but we have been warned not to expect much. However, we'll let you know what happens.

All right, so the Statement of Values is the first step in developing a national student position on Student Aid.

The second step is to start building legitimate and identifiable provincial student organizations and a legitimate and identifiable national student organization. In all our negotiations with people in the Federal Government, the Ontario Government and even the A.U.C.C., we were continually urged to form a national organization with which government decision-makers would have to deal. We feel the time has come to regain our self-confidence and rebuild a strong national lobby to protect student interests in all matters directly relating to our roles as students. Our past sins have been purged and it's time to come together again.

We feel, however, that the redevelopment of provincial or regional unions is a prerequisite to the formation of a meaningful national union. Accordingly, we will attempt to revive a formal Ontario Union of Students in the new year. The questions of per capita fees and secretariats are not at issue now. What we need are identifiable bodies that can legitimately deal with government. These do not necessarily entail all the paraphenalia of formal funding or office staff at this time. We urge students in the West, Quebec and the Maritimes to take the same initiative as soon as possible. To be frank, Ontario cannot, will not and should not fight your battles for you.

We propose to circulate a draft constitution for a national federation of students councils in the new year. Hopefully a final constitution can be ratified by all councils who wish to join by the National Conference at Windsor in May. At that conference, directions can be established or reaffirmed and further student aid strategy developed. It should be emphasized or reaffirmed and further student aid strategy developed. It should be emphasized however, that student aid is just one of many important problems facing us today. Higher education in Canada is at a major turning point in its development and we must get together and influence the changes that are taking place.

We welcome this opportunity to get together with other students and hope that you will seize this chance to participate in the reformation of a national student aid system, a national student organization and Canadian post-secondary education in general.

Thank you for your patient attention.

Patrick Riley
President
Alma Mater Society
Co-ordinator
National Student Aid Task Force

Rob McKenzie
President
University Students' Council
University of Western Ontario

Bob Spencer
President
Students Administrative Council
University of Toronto

de Gaetano

F.M.

A propos the de Gaetano concert in Grant Hall last Monday: first of all, to try to surpass in acuity or maturity of judgement the review by Dr. Graham George of the music faculty in "the second Kingston paper" would be a formidable, if not a well-nigh impossible task: it will not, therefore, be attempted here. What follows is merely a short list of comments, that to this reviewer seemed more or less trenchant at the time.

Let it be said at the outset that de Gaetano, though a pianist of almost overwhelming virtuosity and technical excellence, does not possess an extremely wide range either of feeling or of intellect. That the former is the case, Dr. George has already shown with reference to the first work, a late Beethoven sonata: and that de Gaetano is not pre-eminently an "intellectual" artist was evident from his notably non-ironic treatment of the scherzo section of the sonata by Samuel Barber. It is certainly true that the Brahms Variations was the best-played of the major works on the programme; but the highlight of the evening, for this writer at any rate, was the encore, a Scherzo by Chopin. So completely suited to the temperament and capabilities of the performer, it reminded one, with its framing of the delicately irridescent "run" passage with direct, masculine-sounding chords, of a painting by Turner placed between two Poussins at an art gallery.

All in all, then, a very rewarding musical experience.

. . . days

Tuesday, December 7.

7:30 p.m.: Discussion of farm problems in Ontario with Mrs. Stalker representing the Federation of Agriculture. Sponsored by SURVIVAL.

Wednesday, December 8.

3:30 p.m.: Students in the B. Mus. programme will present a student recital in either chamber groups or as soloists.

4:30 p.m.: Biology Dept. seminar in Earl Hall, Room 111.

7:00 & 9:00 p.m.: The Drama Guild is showing the film "The Chase", starring Robert Redford, Marlon Brando, and Jane Fonda, in the Convocation Hall.

8:00 p.m.: The African Club sponsors a guest speaker Dr. W. Umezinwa, of Laval U., whose topic will be "Modern African Literature", in Jeffery Hall, Room 127. The talk will concentrate on the "concept of negritude in Francophone Africa" and on a comparative analysis with regards to the Commonwealth. All interested welcome.

8:00 p.m.: The German Dept. is sponsoring a "Weignachts" party in the Red Room. Everyone welcome.

Thursday, December 9

6:00 to 7:00 p.m.: Christmas Fireside in Ban Righ Common Room. Poetry Readings by Joan Finnigan, with music, carols, cake, coffee. All are welcome.

7:30 to 9:30 p.m.: Dept. of Medicine sponsors a Medical Sciences Lecture in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

Friday, December 10.

The International Club presents their Christmas Party in the Lower Lounge of the International Centre. Admission is free and all are welcome. Contact Ian McIntyre (546-1364) or Heather Jonas (547-2807) for further information.

Bars	Theatres
Commodore: Bacchus	Capitol: Carnal Knowledge starting Wednesday, Blue Water White Dove.
Pub: Sands of Time	Hyland: Summer of '42.
Shamrock: The Jerry and Joanne Show	Odeon: The Organization.

The Queen's Drama Guild presents the film

The Chase

directed by Arthur Penn

Starring - Jane Fonda, Robert Redford, Marlon Brando

ADMISSION - $1.00

Wed., Dec. 8 - 7 & 9 p.m.

CONVOCATION HALL

off the record

by dick Loney

The Band is one of those groups which continue to extricate rock n' roll from the narrow conclaves which some detractors would have it relegated to. Who else could utilize an accordian backing on a Dylan tune and get away with it -- and what is more astounding make it sound like good country rock? Their fourth and latest production from the confines of Bearsville Studios in New York State is a polished, tuneful gathering of eleven songs -- eight by Robbie Robertson; one with the aid of Danko and Helm, and one in conjunction with Van Morrison -- the Dylan tune "When I Paint My Masterpiece" is typical of that tongue-in-cheek attitude of the retiring yiddish yippee:

Sailin' round the world in a dirty gondola,
Oh to be back in the land of coca-cola.

Band tunes are crammed with the finest in keyboard backings, harmonies and lightnin' riffs from Robbie R's guitar, but in addition, the lyric usually carries a "cute" level of chiding humour, as in "Shoot-Out in Chinatown", with its transformation of the formula-type western shoot-em-up to the streets of Frisco's "Imported from Hong Kong" Main St. where:

For about five dollars
Or one thousand yen
You could gamble or ramble in a brothel
Or take to the opium den.

Robertson's songs have a pleasant habit of posturing the narrator as a person easily identified with, whether he's someone "Thinkin' Out Loud" or the western flick buff in "Smoke Signal" -- but as in his civil war songs there is generally a relevance to today's world where: "Life is a carnival -- believe it or not". The credibility gap and the impersonal mod society come under the scope of Robbie's satire with:

You don't believe what you read in the paper
You can't believe the stranger at your door,
You don't believe what you hear from your neighbour,
Your old neighbour ain't even there no more.

This album (CAHOOTS, Capitol SMAS-651) will placate the myriad Band fans, plus bring a few more converts into the camp of this fine Canadian export.

In a departure from his practice of performing primarily his own well-written songs, Neil Diamond's newest collection of songs has but three of his own compositions and six additional tunes from a few of the finest songwriters around today. Neil does "If You Go Away", by Jacques Brel and Rod McKuen to an acoustic guitar background aided by the sweet-sounding strings of Lee Holdridge: he swings through an up-tempoed version of Cohen's "Suzanne" that takes it out of that veil of monotony that clouds the usually poignantly-chanted interpretations of what is basically a beautiful song, lyrically and melodically.

Everybody seems to be working one of Randy Newman's songs into their act, and Neil was complied by choosing the prettiest of them -- "I Think It's Gonna Rain Today". It's a song which fits in well with the autobiographical material that Diamond favours, such as "Brooklyn Roads" and "I Am...I Said", which is contained on this album--

A Tom Paxton song, one from Roger Miller ("Husbands and Wives") and a Joni Mitchell favourite ("Chelsea Morning") fill out the other three non-Diamond entries on this set, which is brought up to the required number of tunes thought standard these days (ten) by a reprise of "I Am...I Said".

"Stones", which as well as being the title tune, is Neil's top 40 contribution currently, and it's of the soft, sweet variety, while "Crunchy Granola Suite" is a rock offering with a semi-Brazilian beat, punctuated by the Neil Diamond guitar formula which has taken most of his material to the number one spot. A different kind of an album from Neil Diamond, but he's treated the material as if it was his own and it shows.

The title of Bob Hinkle's album is "OLLIE MOGGUS", which happens to be the lead song on a collection of twelve songs from Hinkle. Neither of these names mean much, as much, but the inclusion of Eric Weissberg's name as electric guitar-, straight guitar-, banjo-, steel guitar-, fiddle-, and dobro-player announces the presence of one of the masters of anything which is strung and plucked.

Hinkle just happens to look very much like Tom Rush (same 'stache, same hair) and the voice resemblance will never prove a handicap to him. His songs are delivered with the same folkie-feeling of Rush's, and Weissberg's virtuosity is stamped on each of them.

"St. Thomas Tombstones" and "All of His Children" are a couple of songs which show Hinkle at his best -- the latter, particularly turns into a foot-stomping spiritual, and it's a good warm-up for "Roll In My Sweet Baby's Arms" which seems to be a showcase for Eric Weissberg's "picking" on this traditional five-string banjo-breakdown.

"Unborn Lullabye" brings Bob's auxilliary female chorus in on the grand piano phrasings of Frank Owens and the flashy bass played by Russell George. There's a honky-tonk piano outing (or as they prefer to call it, tack piano) called "High With Your Wine" which is one of the better cuts on this album...OLLIE MOGGUS, Ampex A 10128.

With a trend lately toward firing together a couple of mediocre hits plus a bunch of filler second sides and calling it So-and-So's Greatest Hits, it's great to find that RAY STEVENS' GREATEST HITS are just that. An album with seven of Ray's classic hits, including the earliest "Ahab The Arab", and his latest "Everything Is Beautiful" which qualified him for the straight singer role for the first time. They're all here: "Gitarzan", "Along Came Jones", "Bridget The Midget", and "Harry the Hairy Ape"; and "Mr. Businessman".

Stevens, the master of about fifteen voices and engineering whiz that he is, has put out some of the funniest of the novelty records over the years. They are all gathered together in one pack now. RAY STEVENS' GREATEST HITS-Columbia-Barnaby Z-30770.

CLASSIFIEDS

The new policy on classified ads is: no ads may have a sex (or any other) bias. For example, a person submitting an ad offering stud service must be willing to offer this service to both sexes, or the ad will not be run.

BOO -- I love you -- X.

BOARD: delicious home-cooked meals served in a homey atmosphere. 3 meals per day, or just one if preferred. Apply 542-9156 or 319 Collingwood St.

WANTED -- energetic, intelligent, hard-working, supernatural woman (women) to help me examine WRC's conduct during co-ed residence referendum. Phone Terry 544-7855.

ASUS Other Events Committee holding New Year's Eve party in Queen's pub (2nd floor common room, Union) for all Queen's staff, students, faculty. Admission $1.50 ($2.50 per couple). 8.30 p.m. - Dec. 31

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 31
Tuesday, December 7, 1971
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters:

A paraphrase:

I would like to paraphrase Mr. Kort's letter (see below) in regard to a profession, probably the oldest, (no, not that one, I mean the job of being a mother, and all that that entails) which must be the most indespensible one in terms of being "integral to the pattern of society." Therefore, with a minor substitution, one can read Mr. Kort's letter thusly:

Why should a mother earn more than a doctor? I submit that the answer is easily ascertained. First, a mother goes through many years of training before she can practice her profession. Secondly, the functions she performs is more integral to the pattern of society. Finally and most importantly, the demands placed upon the mother, in the exercise of her profession, are infinitely greater than those placed upon the doctor....If all women (including mothers) withdrew their services from society, who could replace them? No one."

Think about it.

An aside:

Why is it that those letters supporting what I, and others, consider to be absolutely exorbitant yearly salaries are from students training for the two professions with the most notorious reputations for ensuring monopoly control over those exorbitant salaries - medicine and law? students training for the two professions with the most notorious reputations for ensuring monopoly control over those exorbitant salaries - medicine and law?

Why money?

It saddens me to think that there actually are people living in this world who feel that the best incentive for good (or excellent) work is money. I suppose I have known that people with this type of mentality do exist, but having to run the various letters that have come in has driven it home. I know that Bill and I are at least as intelligent as those people who support what I can only describe as mercenary motives. I have done social work, written, created works of art ')if you will allow me to call them that) and I have never been paid, directly, for doing any of it. I did them because I wanted to and people have fed me when I didn't have any money, or just been my friends, or expressed some appreciation for what I have done. I've always got by, and I've never had any money. My parents still support me ($100 a month) because they feel I'm worth supporting as a person.

Some day Bill and I will have jobs, of sorts, and we'll never make very much money, because we don't want or need it, and I have a sneaking feeling that we will be a hell of a lot happier than the philistines in this world.

Leslie Kaye

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Managing Editors: John Solman. Charles Schwier
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks this issue to news staff Bob Mutrie, Jennifer, and Pat Riley (?). Special thanx to Wilson for his pussy cat.

Yes, I am...

Dear Editors;
To Mr. Hartling:

Yes, I think I am worth $50,000, or as much or as little as I wish to earn. As you, I do not require a "fantastic salary" to pursue the occupation which I believe to be worthwhile. However, I submit that I have the right to harvest the fruits of my endeavours, and that others cannot arbitrarily pluck them away in the name of social responsibility.

Social responsibility entails only two things. First and foremost, one must earn his way through life and secondly, everyone has a moral responsibility to attain his greatest potential, whatever that may be.

Like Ayn Rand, I expouse to the philosophy of egoism. To assert that a man can lead a wholly altruistic life is hypocrisy. No man does anything without expecting a return of some sort; whether it be pecuniary or an inner glow of satisfaction.

If a ceiling of any kind were placed upon the returns of one's endeavours, then it would reduce his motivations for pursuing them. The greater the encroachment, the less will be the initiative, with the end result being lethargy and medoicrity.

To be taxed in proportion to your earnings is one thing, but to be taxed in such a way as to place a ceiling upon your earnings is another.

If, as you suggest, a man can get pleasure from engaging in a chosen occupation, what part does income play in the scheme of things? Why should a doctor earn more than a dockworker? I submit that the answer is easily ascertained.

First, a doctor goes through many years of training before he can practice his profession. Secondly, the function he performs is more integral to the pattern of society. Finally, and most importantly, the demands placed upon the doctor, in the exercise of his profession are infinitely greater than those placed upon the dockworker. Let me illustrate.

If all intellectuals (including doctors) withdrew their services from society, who could replace them? No one.

However, if all dockworkers, carpenters and labourers withdrew their labour, it would not be difficult or expensive to train new personnel to replace them. Today when these people go on strike, there is no great public outcry.

However, when the medical profession went on strike in Saskatchewan in 1960, Belguim in 1964 and Quebec in 1970, the public roar was deafening.

In fact, there was proposed legislation in the latter two cases to force the doctors back to work, and furthermore, they provided for a fine for refusal to work or for leaving the jurisdiction.

I submit, Mr. Hartling, that this is ample proof of the importance of doctors in particular, and the professions in general, to society. Furthermore, it is submitted that this is the reason why they have the right to earn ten times as much as a factory worker.

You do not have to be an intellectual giant to comprehend the magnitude of the problems which threaten the future. However, you do have to be an intellectual giant to uncover the means of overcoming these problems, and more important, of implementing them.

I, for one, would be loath to curtail the motivation of society's intellectuals by increasingly encroaching upon the fruits of their efforts.

- Kees W. Kort

No, you are not...

Dear Editors:

I wish to call into the question the latest sally of the medical professional into the social sciences, specifically Mr. Eshoo's letter which appeared in the November 26 edition of the Journal. I wish to question this letter because of its shoddy argument, ignorance of basic economic and social principles, and lack of any discernable ethical standards other than greed.

Mr. Eshoo bases his argument on several basic premises, some implicit and a few (very few) stated. They are, I believe:

(a) private wealth is better than personal wealth (denies "accumulation of wealth has detrimental effects")
(b) all private wealth is deserved (wealth is "the product of one's effort")
(c) private wealth is necessary to provide the incentive needed for the functioning of society ("A $30,000 regular income ceiling would stagnate, if not destroy almost every business in America.")

All these assumptions which Mr. Eshoo states or implies as unquestionable truths, are to say the least, debatable. Private wealth is obviously not any better than public wealth. What is at question is the distribution of wealth and the accessability to public wealth.

Since the economic system existing in Canada at present is based on private wealth and allows a vast number of people to exist in physical and mental misery, it is not only uneconomic in that it wastes human potential, but it is wrong. Most assuredly, Mr. Eshoo, you do not "have any statistics on hand" proving the "rags to riches" thesis. There are none.

What information that does exist indicates that in a technological society such as ours, unless one is born into the "in group" which begins in the income group of approximately $10,000 per year, one will not achieve anything resembling "riches."

While "research at the local library" will undoubtedly yield biographies of Goulds, Fisks, Thompsons, and Rhodes, these are only notable because they are exceptions. Moreover, these accounts of their rapacity and greed indicte that they were not called "robber barons" for nothing.

I would like Mr. Eshoo to prove that one "earns" the property one accumulates. This is a question of ethics. Is a plumber worth more than a physician? Happily, the ethics of supply and demand remove this nasty little problem and we are given the solution that because physicians can keep their services in shorter supply than plumbers, they indeed deserve to be paid more.

I, for one, do not agree that the present system for distribution of wealth is an equitable one. It postulates that our society is so structured so that each individual has freedom of choice.

If Mr. Eshoo had been born to a mother living on welfare, or in a low-income group, could he have "chosen" to become a physician? Of course, Mr. Eshoo deserves to be a doctor, after all, he made it into Queen's in ruthless competition against other like-minded individuals, but we need not discuss that here, Queen's being the thoroughly democratic institution that it is.

Finally, I do not agree that monetary incentive is necessarily the only method of inducing individual effort, much less with the patently ridiculous assertion that "a $30,000 a year income ceiling would stagnate, if not destroy almost every business in North America."

The military and civil service (not to mention the teaching profession at its higher levels) manage to attract first rate people without astronomical pay rates.

Studies conducted in Britain indicated that top-level executives work for the sake of the work itself, which they find stimulating, and the social status and prestige that goes with the job.

Money is purely secondary after certain limits (in the case of the study, about $25,000 a year) are met. I admit that incentives are necessary, but incentives that make an equitable distribution of wealth impossible are nothing short of institutionalized greed.

As for Mr. Eshoo's economic theories ("wealth is dynamic", et al), they are really quite simplistic. Wealth is, true enough, created by intelligence and labour (a factor of production conveniently forgotten by Mr. Eshoo who thinks it is "brought into existence by mental effort." Conceptualize me a pile of wealth, please, Mr. Eshoo).

But by "accumulation of wealth" I would mean (and I think Mr. Spunde means as well) that wealth is inequitably distributed. Another point neglected by Mr. Eshoo, who is going to be a doctor and earn his "fair" share anyway.

Mr. Eshoo also quite correctly states that part of profits are used to create jobs. He errs when he states that government cannot do the same thing. Socialized economies have been doing quite well during the past fifty years, Mr. Eshoo. They may not have political freedom in the Warsaw Pact, but they don't have unemployment either - and socialism and police statism have very little to do with each other.

I am gratified to note that Mr. Eshoo has drawn his final example from that film which represents the zenith of Hollywood's cinematic attainment, The Omega Man. With laissez-faire capitalism defended by such greats in the world of art and intellect, how can we lose?

Peter Kasurak

Athletics article erroneous

Dear Editors;

I'm sure you will recognize that very seldom is there any thought of "rebuttal" from the Athletics or the Physical Education people when it comes to accepting the occasional criticism from members of the school community. People who make mistakes should be big enough to accept a bit of a reprimand when that is the case, without any desire for rebuff.

Sometimes, though, there are things said or written that will be accepted as "truths" by the community unless there is some form of rebuttal. Such is the case of your Sports Editor's challenge that the "athletics administrators' sole job is to dispense red tape and screw people up." (Queen's Journal, Thursday, November 25.) This article was completely erroneous!

The case in point was that of our two eminent basketball players -- Bob Wright and Brian MacKenzie. Does anyone really think that the people responsible for intercollegiate eligibility are deliberately keeping these students from a legitimate season of participation? A letter from their former coach at Simon Fraser, John Kootnekoff, specifically states that these men earned their varsity letters through a number of years which, when added to the years they played at Queen's, now makes them ineligible for further participation in that sport.

The reference made to Alf Lane of York U. is also most misleading. A simple phone call to the Athletics Office at York would have verified the fact that, while Mr. Lane "was in the same system as MacKenzie," he did not don a uniform in the 68-69 season, and hence had one more year of eligibility than Brian.

As for "decisions not to fight about this eligibility," did it ever occur to the writer that there may be some integrity among athletics administrators? If there were a real "question" in this case, one can be assured that the athletic director as well as the Queen's executive member of the O.U.A.A. Board of Governors -- who happens to be a member of the "Eligibility Board of Reference" -- would have questioned it! However, it was felt that with the information we had at hand (which the sports editor obviously had not) we would not be representing Queen's honourably if we had pressed the issue of Brian and Bob being JV-level players; JV players don't play against National teams!

As for the sports editor's speculation that "starting next year, JV years WILL count in determining eligibility," we're not sure from where he got his information, because this has not yet been resolved by the rules makers. Our guess is as good as his, and we wager his speculation is incorrect.

The reference to our players being good, and our not wanting to do anything about it for fear of our getting "egg on our face" really doesn't make sense (?) If all this means that WE ARE NOT INTERESTED IN WINNING AT ALL COSTS -- INCLUDING CHEATING, he's right! There's nothing "rotten" about that!

Generally speaking, most misunderstandings in connection with athletics and physical education may be clarified by consulting with the appropriate executive officers at the Physical Education Centre. We would say: if it's a fact -- print it; if it's a rumour, please make reasonable enquiries.

-A.L. Lenard, Director,
Men's Intercollegiate Athletics.

Isn't anybody doing anything

Dear Editors;

The implications of hypocrisy you suggest with the picture of bundles of newspaper outside the Pollution Probe office in the Student Union Building (Nov. 23) I seriously cannot take as much more than a tribute to the ethic of superficiality so characteristic of today.

Kingston City Council last summer re-allocated $800,000 earmarked for expansion of the city's inadequate sewage treatment facilities into road reconstruction. Naturally, they were able to get away with such an addleminded decision because people will complain about the potholes in the roads which they can see, while they won't even peep about the raw shit in the St. Lawrence River off Macdonald Park after a rainstorm, which they can't see.

William Davis, with a platform of no change, got re-elected because the party has enough money to buy radio time for "This is what the people of Ontario are saying about Bill Davis" types of announcements. Robert Nixon lost the bundle because people would rather listen to such bullshit advertising than take the time out to read the Blueprint for Government and think a bit.

Ours is a time when governments would rather go to the moon than integrate because space flight is sensational. The age of TV dinners and paper dresses.

Why do people prefer not to think about the decisions which mould them? Why does the Journal consider litter in the Union a graver social ill than the fact that Queen's central heating plant burns high sulphur content fuel oil, or that the province's Air Management representatives are only able to spend three out of five days watching that apartment buildings don't incinerate their waste, or that the St. Lawrence is so abysmally weedy during the summer that you have to conclude that it, along with Lake Erie, is dying?

Forgive us our hypocrisy, O Holy Journal, for I somehow can't get excited about a few bundles of newspaper while Queen's Park continues to procrastinate in its suit against Dow, at this time when the United States Surgeon-General tells Nixon that phosphates aren't so bad after all -- just in the nick of time to grab the campaign dollars the Republicans otherwise would have lost to the detergent industry.

I think I'll get a life subscription to the Journal and join the Waffle, not necessarily in that order.

-Brad Sloan

the Dormouse

by alan broadbent

It's beginning to cost a lot like Christmas, everywhere you go.

I took notice of this fact the other day when I was walking down Princess Street. Quite involuntarily, my wallet jumped out of my pocket and began attracting crowds of local merchants. Before I could recover the leather fellow, he had traded a considerable chunk of his innards for some glossy trinkets, seasonally known as 'stocking stuffers'.

Of course, I could hardly blame the unfortunately tiny chap, for the efforts made by participating Christmas merchants would tempt the studs right out of snow tires. And it was partly my fault, for despite the fact that I normally keep a tight rein on the fellow, he leapt out while my attention was being diverted by a gaunt Santa Claus on the corner of the street.

After recovering my wallet, I decided to consult with this Santa Claus concerning my observations on the current Christmas trends. I approached the sallow saint, wondering at the miracle modern photography works with this weathered visage. He reminded me very much of the guy who stands in front of me in the Manpower Office line.

"Santa," I exclaimed, thinking exclamation to be the appropriate tone, "how was the trip down from the North Pole?"

"Ho, ho, ho," he wheezed. "Listen kid, I aint't seeing her anymore, so why don't you run off down the street," he suggested in a most un-saintly fashion.

Passing over what I considered to be a friendly jesting comment, I asked him why the Christmas season seemed to be coming earlier every year. I pointed out that the Kingston Santa Claus Parade had taken place before the Grey Cup game this year.

He paused for a moment, giving me a caustic once-over, and replied, "Listen kid, I spend ten months of the year collecting unemployment insurance, and the federal government does not get turned on by this. So they decide each year, particularly in this time of tight money, to employ me early rather than keep me on the welfare list."

I couldn't help but notice at this point a rather hefty jolt delivered to my person from behind, and turned around to see another Santa Claus, somewhat bulkier and heftier than the one before me.

"Is this guy bugging you Harry?" the newcomer queried of his colleague.

"Heavens no," I quickly interjected. "I was only trying to find out what had happened to the Christmas and the Santa Clauses I knew formerly."

"Well listen, buddy, us guys are only trying to do a job, and we don't need the likes of you rocking the boat. We are employed by the Downtown Merchants Association to boost the season, as it were, and we don't like all these anarchist questions."

"Yeah," a third voice chimed in, and I turned to see a third Santa Claus join the group. "If you don't like the way we run Christmas around here, then you don't have to take part in it."

At this point, four more Santa Clauses rounded the corner and crowded into the group, supporting their fellows and jostling me considerably. By this time a crowd was beginning to gather, liberally sprinkled with local store-owners.

"I was only asking some simple questions," I claimed, thinking that even a token defence was better than capitulating.

"Yeh, you long haired revolutionaries, always looking for something to knock," Santa Harry shouted. The merchants in the crowd cheered wildly, and the hefty Santa gave me a shove.

I was then treated to a game of volley-ball which I would have greatly enjoyed had I not been the ball. The merchants whipped the crowd into a frenzy, and the scene took on an eerie carnival aura. I was just beginning to fear for my life, let alone my sanity, which my friends tell me is a hollow fear.

Suddenly, a rather super-sonic sound rent the air, and the activity suddenly stopped. A sleigh drawn by a herd of reindeer swooped down Princess Street, bearing a jolly fat man in a red suit, with elegant white fur trim, and a great sack of wrapped goodies. The jolly fat man picked me out of mid air, preventing a potentially crippling fall, and set me on the seat beside him.

The crowd was aghast, and as they grew smaller behind us, my sleigh mate turned to them all, tightened the knot in his sack, and intoned the words, "And to all a goodnight."

Ontario (1901)

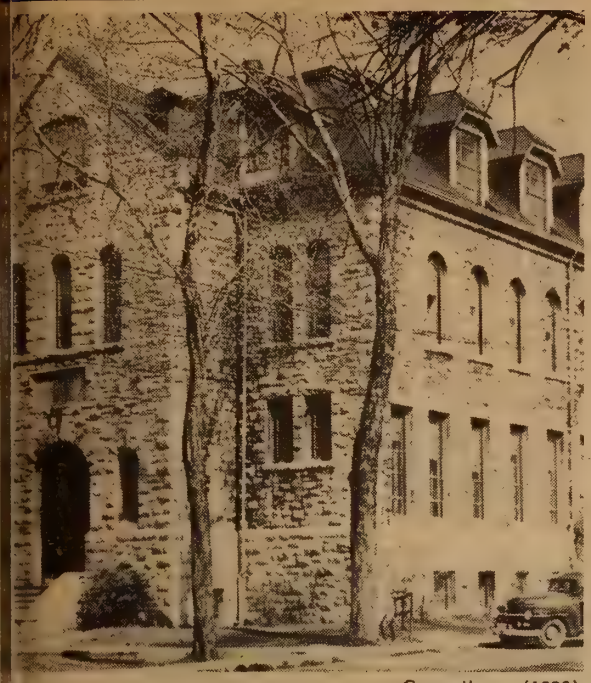
Fleming (1901)

Some old stone

Grant (1904)

by Margaret Angus

You can stand in one place on the campus and by simply turning your head see eight buildings whose ages total almost seven hundred years. Those buildings can tell the story of Queen's first sixty years. From the north east corner of Grant hall the oldest building in sight is Summerhill, the first building on campus, built 1836-1839 and bought by Queen's in 1853. Before that Queen's had no campus and the move from William Street to its new six acre campus was considered extravagant expansion. For five years Summerhill housed the whole University: library, classrooms, laboratory, offices and also provided living quarters for one professor, some students and the janitor. Archdeacon George Okill Stuart had built Summerhill as his country estate - Regency architecture in the grand manner, called by architectural historians one of the great Canadian houses of its time. Now denuded of its high portico, wide verandah and centre stairs, Summerhill should be restored. The Principal lives in the east wing, the Dean of Student Affairs in the west wing and the centre block contains, temporarily, the classrooms and offices of Nursing Science.



Just behind the west wing of Summerhill is Old Medical, Queen's second building, erected in 1858 to house the then four-year-old Medical School. There had been a suggestion that since building funds were so scarce the new building should be made of brick, but the Trustees voted for limestone and set the tradition for Queen's buildings. The new limestone building was a simple Georgian style with a handsome doorway, two stories with a peaked roof and a cupola. In 1901 a third story was added; then in 1924 fire destroyed all but the original walls and it was rebuilt as a two storey building. Extensive renovations were made in 1962 to put three floors inside the old walls and give additional space for the Department of Anatomy.

Old Arts, now officially called Theology Hall, Queen's third building, was the first in Principal George Munro Grant's campaign to make Queen's a nationally recognized liberal arts university. In June 1879, the cornerstone was laid by Princess

Kingston (1903)

Louise building
"The C end. no
the boo
Library
in Old meeting new bu were p afterno
ministra
forty-fo
Drama
Library
John years la at first by the Agricul
Faculty
establis Dupuis
the Sch
Queen's departm
Electric into Car Station
Princi building four yea
by capit
City an friends.
Sir San
Queen's to house
the east
first Que was exte
and rebu rear win for Elec
Ontari
Queen's, corner
Ministe
Geology
Romane great ar surfaces the exter synchrot
1950. In 1
Hall and torian int of Geogr
The la historic

Carruthers (1890)

Old Medical Building (1858)

of Queen's

arquis of Lorne and the d for many years simply The west, semi-circular lical Library, housed all een's until the Douglas in 1924. Convocation Hall the first large public Queen's. On the day the opened three sermons here - in the morning, evening. All the ad- es were in Old Arts for ... Now Theology and space with the Medical s Science Hall came ten 889-1891. It was occupied ience classes but mainly School of Mining and t part of Queen's. A actical Science was 94 with Prof. Nathan n and three years later Mining affiliated with the School became a e Faculty of Science. ering has now expanded nd shares it with Radio t's campaign for new four more in the first century, made possible from the Province, the om staff, students and Hall, named to honour ming, Chancellor of to 1914, was built in 1901, ourses. An extension at he building housed the ing plant. The building amaged by fire in 1933 n extra storey. In 1963 a ed to increase the space gineering.

the Province's gift to built in 1901-1902; the id by the Provincial ucation. Mineralogy, ysics moved into this val building with its rets and massive roof century architecture of marked contrast to the was installed there in s was moved to Stirling Hall, a castle with Vic- houses the Department ldings surrounding this e were opened after the death of Principal Grant in 1902. Kingston Hall, a gift from the City, was finished in 1903 and has been known generally as the New Arts Building. It was extensively renovated after a fire in 1931 and now is the main arts classroom building.

Grant Hall was dedicated in 1904, the money to erect the great hall raised by alumni, students, staff and friends to honour Principal Grant. For over sixty years convocations, dances, reunions and famous lecturers' have filled Grant Hall. During World War I it served as a temporary military hospital for wounded soldiers and in World War II it was an entertainment centre for men of the Royal Navy Fleet Air Arm who were being trained at the Norman Rogers Field near Kingston. It is still, perhaps, the best loved single building at Queen's and alumni remember Grant Hall filled by academic gowned staff and students and the sound of Oh, God Our Help in Ages Past. You might even hear an echo of it as you stand looking at some old stones of Queen's.

(Pictures (except Theology) from Campus Planner.)

Theology (1879)

Summerhill (1853)

What should be done with them?

The grounds of a university can add significantly to its character, its opportunities, and its pleasures. They can do more than complement the buildings. They can provide sites for outdoor concerts or plays; parkland and gardens for meditation and romance; rinks for pleasure skating; cafes for pleasant lunches and snacks. They can, and should, provide enjoyment at all seasons.

Queen's has many fine corners now. The courtyards of the new arts-social science complex, as those at McArthur Hall, provide one type of outdoor space. The delightful area around Agnes Etherington and Jeffrey Hall is heavily used in fine weather. But there are many areas of unrealized potential, the most obvious being that surrounded by the old Queen's buildings described by Mrs. Angus in the accompanying article. What could be a centre of life and beauty is partly wasted on greenhouses (now being removed), roads and parking. It has no coherence and few uses.

Over the course of several years (several, that is, unless some unforseen angel provides funds), the Grounds Committee hopes to remake this area. We want to preserve and enhance the buildings, create new life and new uses, and add beauty in appropriate ways wherever we can. We want your suggestions, however small or however large. Maps of the area can be obtained from the Office of the University Campus Planner, Room 229, Ellis Hall. Submissions should reach me in the Department of Chemistry by January 12. Please give us your ideas.

J.D. McCowan, Chairman

Volleyball Men Capture OUAA Crown

Queen's newest varsity team served notice of its presence Saturday by sweeping first place in the OUAA volleyball finals. Formed only two years ago, the neophyte Gaels captured the Forsythe Trophy with two strong games against an experienced Western squad.

Previously, the Gaels had survived a round-robin elimination with Ottawa U., McMaster, and UWO, losing only one game to Western. Queen's will compete in the Canadian Championships at Laval this February as a result of their victory.

The Gaels' only close call of the day came in the opening match with McMaster. The Queen's contingent arrived just five minutes before the game was due to start. After that, it was all down hill, as Queen's trounced Mac 15-4, 15-3 for a first-round victory.

Their second match, with Western, started shakily as the Gaels dropped a 10-2 decision in the first game before storming back to win 15-11, 15-7, then continued the sweep by dropping Ottawa U. in straight games, 15-7, 15-7.

This undefeated record earned the Gaels a by into the finals, while the three remaining teams fought it out for the other berth. The Mustangs managed to pull out a short-lived victory with two clutch wins over Mac, but the strain of so many games began to tell.

The well-rested Gaels continued their undefeated play by rolling up 15-5, 15-6 game wins, claiming the Forsythe Trophy and OUAA volleyball supremacy. If coach George Rada can keep the Gaels in tune, those Canadian Championships could be interesting. Not bad at all for a two-year-old team. Not bad at all.

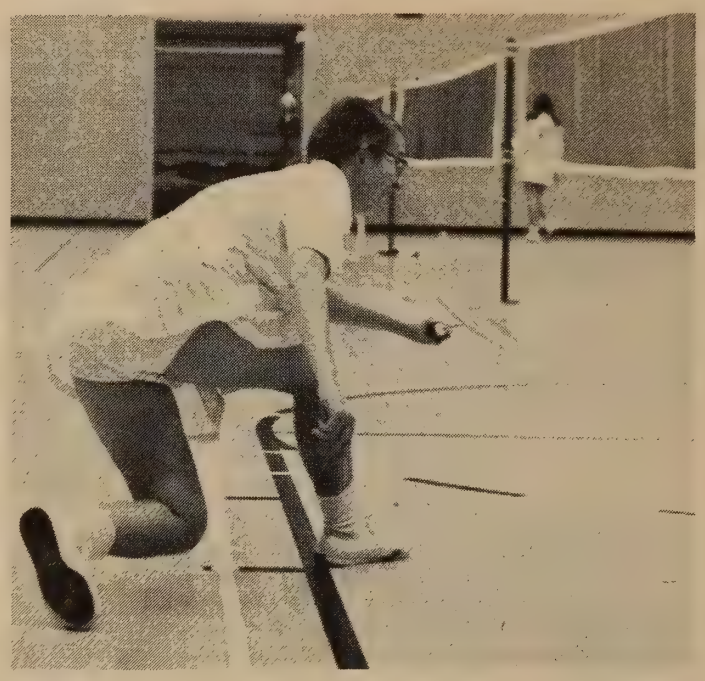
W.I.C. News

With the end of classes for this term, the W.I.C. is winding up its schedule. The final Ringette game was held last week and basketball and bowling are to be completed this week.

In the co-ed volleyball tournament, P.H.E. took first place, with Meds coming second. Paddleball, the only sport which will continue into the New Year, will probably not declare a winner until the end of January.

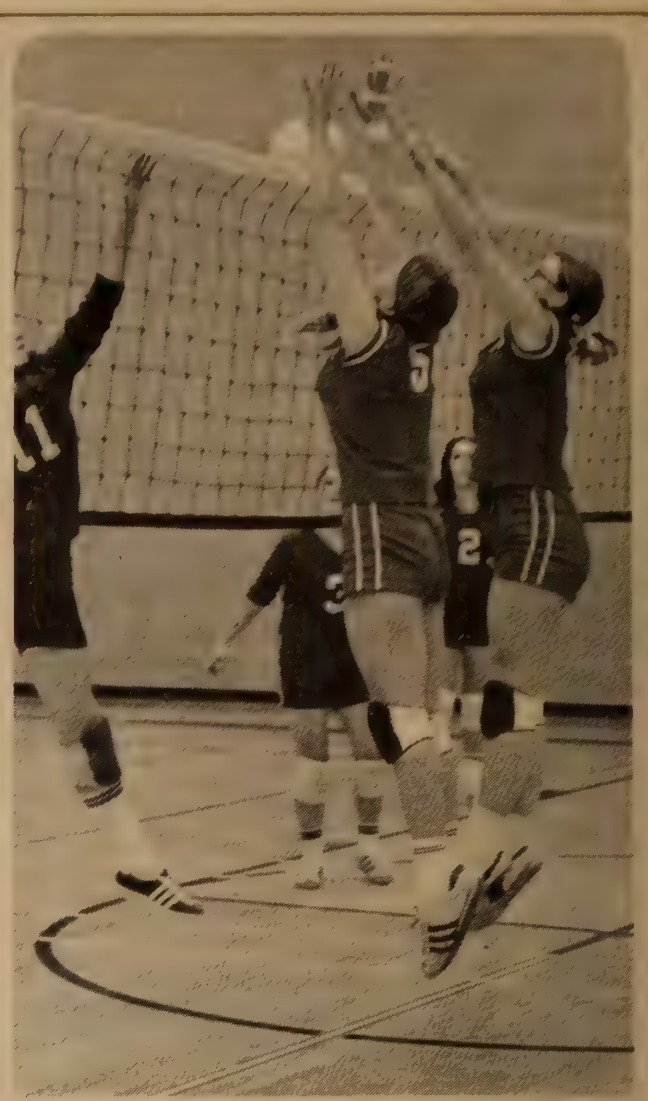
Faculty standings at this time have P.H.E. in first place with 6193 points, Arts '75 in second with 4763 and Arts '73 in third with 4272.

The remaining faculties have accumulated substantially fewer points and stand as follows: Rehab. - 1810, Arts '74 - 1787, Meds. - 1138, Grads - 1000, Arts '72 - 778, Law - 731, Nursing - 723, Education - 681, and Commerce - 112 (someone has to win the booby prize!).



The schedule for next term begins with Athletic Night on January 13 and includes a lot of fun sports such as squash, archery, volleyball, indoor softball, co-ed bowling and a run-a-thon.

The W.I.C. is working for increased and consistent participation and hopes that more girls will come out.



Badminton Women Win

Queen's was the walk-away winner of the badminton tournament held here this past weekend. The Queen's women won every match at every level to earn 18 points, as compared to 7 by Ottawa U. and 0 by Carleton.

Jan Whitten, Dianne Lougheed, Jane McMichael, Susan Howard, Mary Robbins, and P. McKimmie of Queen's took first through sixth singles. Whitten and Howard, Robbins and McKimmie, and Lougheed and McMichael won first through third doubles matches.

-reyno

-perry

Volleyball Gals Finally Start Winning

The Volleyball girls have finally started to come into their own with a win over the visiting Laurentian team Sat. They recorded scores of 6-15, 15-9, 15-13 and 15-11 in gaining the victory. The girls have been learning a 6 and 0 technique of play which is quite advanced and is used by only a few universities in Canada. It would seem that the Gals have now learned to apply this method effectively after a slow start in their season.

Bring anybody out for dinner -- Great food from 2.99 -- every night!

It's Time to Book Your Party

or dance or stag or excuse for a drunk

The Round Table

We've got rooms from 5 - 1500 and great food and drink.

Call us . . . Now

The Round Table

Fully licenced - 542-7337

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

OLD FORT HENRY — KINGSTON

Summer positions are available for those who enjoy challenging outdoor work. Become a member of a truly great group - The Fort Henry Guard. Complete a Fort Henry Guard application form obtainable at the Placement Office.

ON WED. DEC. 8TH

DR.L.J. SANDERS

"THE MACABEES"

A STUDY IN REVOLUTION

7:30 P.M. HILLEL HOUSE

26 Barrie St.

Dr. Sanders was formerly Professor, Department of Classics at Queen's University, and presently resides in Toronto.

ATTENTION

1. Judaica Book Display and Sale, to be held on Sunday, Dec. 5th, 1971, at 8:00 P.M., 26 Barrie St.
2. Chanukah Kits for sale - Menorah Candles and Dreidels, $1.00. To place order for Chanukah Kits, please call 542-1120, anytime.

EXTENDED HOURS

Typing and Duplicating Will be Accepted Days and Evenings (until 10:00 P.M.) as well as Sat. and Sun. Afternoon until Dec. 10. The Service will remain open Week days (8:30 A.M. - 4:30 P.M.) until Dec. 17.

The Student Typing Service

STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

CLASSIFIEDS

ANY girl wishing to live in women's residence for the spring term please call Kim, 544-8112. Single room available.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5 year warranty, 5 sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

CHRISTMAS reunion! December 22 at the new Dynes Tavern, 8:30 p.m., 337 Beach Blvd. Hamilton (on the beach strip between Hamilton and Burlington). In the ladies and escorts room.

AVAILABLE for one girl, fully furnished room in 2-bedroom apartment. Clean, cheerful. Ten minute walk from campus; right downtown. Available for occupancy after Dec. 13. Rent $75 monthly including utilities. Phone 544-5413.

REMEMBER
HELP YOUR RED CROSS
TO HELP

Guelph 2-2 York 4-3

Hockey Gals Remain Undefeated With Win, Tie

The ice hockey gals experienced two away games this weekend. Despite the long bus trip they were once again undefeated in their encounters with the Guelph and York teams.

Queen's met the challenging Guelph team at 8 p.m. Friday evening. The small ice surface resulted in congested play and poor passing. However, the golden gals managed a 2-2 tie with Wanda Gyde in goal. It was literally a rough game with no body contact called by the referees...Consequently, Guelph continued to dish out injuries to our team with no reprimands.

The Queen's gals were outshot 27-17 but the hockey gals obtained 4 penalties to Guelph's three; Cathie Black, Debby Gilmour and Marg Mutch sitting out for the Queen's team.

Guelph achieved the first goal of the game and in so doing renewed in our gals the desire to win. The Queen's retaliation came at 6:49 in the first period. Karen Howatson was technically unassisted in her backhand shot from the face-off.

However, the Guelph team accidentally confirmed the goal by putting the puck clearly past the line. The challenge continued but the game remained a tie until the end of the second period. Then Guelph charged ahead with a beautifully raised shot from left wing catching the far corner of the net. Near the end of the third period, the gals tied the game up permanently.

With one minute left, Marg Mutch took control of the puck in the defensive end, carried the puck past the opponents, and popped in the crucial goal.

The gals were up early Saturday morning and off to York to complete the weekend ventures. Although other teams had little competition with York, Queen's had to struggle to secure a 4-3 victory.

-perry

The tired gals outshot the opponents 25-12 and broke their record of two goals per game but played down to the level of the York team on the unusually huge ice surface. The strict and proper refereeing resulted in 6 penalties to Queen's and four to York. Yet Queen's was fairly effective in killing these penalties.

Defensive player Cathie Black netted the first goal at 4:29 in the first period. Yet this was followed closely by the opponents goal at 5:12.

Cathy Collins retaliated with the help of her linemates at 8:38 for a 2-1 lead at the end of the first period. Cathy was ready in the slot and flicked the puck past the unprepared goalie.

Queen's came back in the second period to achieve a further goal at 4:39 for a 3-1 tally. However the persistent opponents tied the game up with a goal in the second and the third period.

The final goal came at 10:34 in the third period. Receiving a pass from Helen Walko, Karen Howatson skated down the left side of the ice and sent a successful slap-shot into the net. This put the gals ahead to win 4-3. The goalie Cathy Wright chaulked up a second victory and valuable experience.

The undefeated gals hope their first place position can be maintained in the new year. The first weekend back sends them to play Toronto and McMaster in another double-header.

Swimmers Just Miss

The Women's Speed Swimming and Diving Team competed in a dual meet at York this past Saturday, coming away with a 46-37 margin in swimming, but an overall loss of 53-47. York won only on the strength of the fact that they gained 16 uncontested points as Queen's had no 3-metre divers.

The two relay teams won their events. Sue Derby earned two individual firsts as well as relay wins, Cathy Brace and Jane Kersell won an event each to go with their relay firsts.

Carla Lennox placed third in 1-metre diving, her first competition, with the win going to Pan-Am diver Kathy Lane of York.

Gaels Trounce SGWU 9-1

By Ron Pratt

The hockey Gaels got back into winning form Saturday afternoon as they scored a convincing 9-1 exhibition victory over the Sir George Williams University Georgians. The Gaels, who had dropped their last four starts, counted four goals in each of the second and third periods to subdue the stubborn Georgian squad.

The first period was a dull, close-checking effort that ended in a 1-all tie. Rick Moore gave SGW an early lead, but Mott tied the score on a fine wrist shot at the—8:21 mark. Mott also started the Gaels' explosion in the second period, blasting a shot past goalie Bernie Wolfe at the 1:20 mark.

Dave Nuttal sent Queen's into a two goal lead when he banged in Bill White's rebound a little over a minute later. Forward John Smith notched his first goal of the game after the Gaels pulled goalie Bill Minnes on a delayed penalty call.

Smith broke in off the right wing and beat Wolfe cleanly with a backhand drive. Smith's second goal came on a fluke; he attempted to pass the puck to Mott but hit Wolfe on the arm, and the puck fell into the net, to give the Gaels a 5-1 lead after the second period.

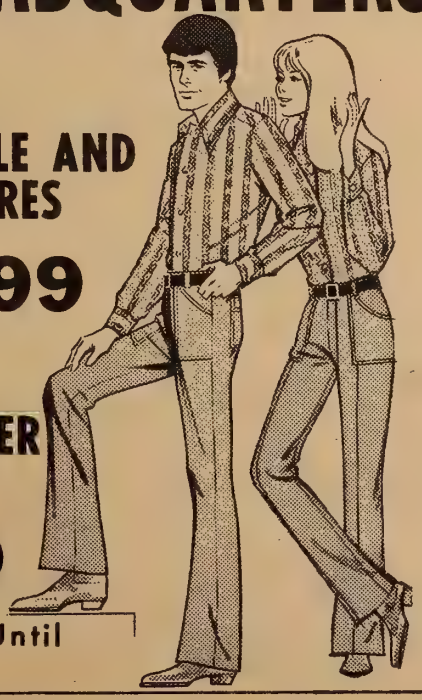
The third period saw more of the same, with Murray Douglas potting two goals and Norm Goulet and Colin Loudin adding singles. Goulet's goal broke a long scoring drought for the versatile performer; originally a centre, he has been shifted to left wing for the past two games in an effort to utilize his hard shot and aggressive play.

Goulet took the puck at the Georgian blue line and drilled a hard wrist shot into the upper right-hand corner, completely fooling the hapless Georgian goaler.

The Gaels' overall effort was impressive, as the whole team hustled and hit with authority. Minnes and Clyde Harris were steady in goal, while the Queen's powerplay came up with three markers. The biggest change was on defense, where the addition of Stu Lang and Raold Serebrin has put some muscle in the lineup.

Lang, especially, has shown signs of becoming the hard-hitting defenseman that the Gaels badly need. Also, the forwards have finally started shooting on the net again, and their passing was much improved.

The Gaels face a long layoff, until they host one part of the Hockey Canada tournament, with Guelph, Saskatchewan, and St. Mary's. This action is scheduled for Dec. 28 and 29. The first league game is Jan. 8 against Ryerson, and the Gaels' next home date is Jan. 14 with the McMaster Marauders.



S&R DISCOUNT DEPARTMENT STORE

YOUR CHRISTMAS GIFT HEADQUARTERS

LADY WRANGLER PIN WALE AND NO WALE CORDUROY FLARES
New fashion shades.
Sizes 8 to 16
REG. 8.95 and 9.95 SPECIAL 5.99
-Second Floor-

YOUNG MEN'S BRUSHED DENIM WRANGLER FASHION FLARE JEANS
In all the new fashion colors.
Sizes 28 to 36
Reg. 9.95 SPECIAL 6.99
-Main Floor-

Open Every Night Until 9 Now Until Christmas - Saturday Until 6

This Sunday and every Sunday is The Round Table
The Roast Beef Buffet
Only $2.99
(a regular $3.99 feature)
All You Can Eat
- cold cuts, desserts, salads, and ROAST BEEF
EVERY Sunday - 5-10 at
The Round Table
Fully Licensed
Home of Mr. Bojangles Discotheque
542-7337

Bring anybody for dinner - great food from $2.99 - every night

Clip this coupon - your second cocktail only 25c - in any dining room

Gaels Shock Laurentian 67-57

The basketball Gaels collected their second league victory here Saturday night, upsetting the Laurentian Voyageurs 67-57 in a game highlighted by rough play under the boards and one of the best team efforts from a Queen's squad in years.

Individually, several Gaels came up with their best performances of the year. Centreman Paul Howard, up against the taller, heavier and older John McKibbon, had a superlative game, blocking five of McKibbon's shots, rebounding aggressively in a game marked by rough work on the boards, and scoring 13 points.

He also managed to foul McKibbon out midway through the fourth quarter. Howard played good defense in the second half, batting down several fast-break passes, and making himself look like a good prospect for the defensive backfield.

Peter Gordon, playing regularly for the first time, has started to recover the confidence that a guard needs, and is beginning to play good ball. Saturday, he netted 17 points while controlling the flow of play, and making several steals.

Dave Smith, another second-year guard, is turning into a fine playmaker and an excellent defensive ballplayer. Smith had six steals against the Voyageurs, and may be the best passer on the team.

As usual, Andy Daugulis led all scorers, collecting 21 points and a good number of rebounds. Rob Smart, the other forward, had 7 points in the first half, and played an exceptionally tough game on the boards, while rookies Stu Bridgeman and Stu Beck made brief but effective appearances.

The game itself was a defensive struggle that the Gaels dominated throughout. The V's appeared tired and rather lifeless, possibly as a result of a loss to York Friday night.

Guard Guy Lavigeur was the only hustler on the Laurentian side, while Vetrie and McKibbon constituted better than half their offense, with 18 and 14 points respectively.

The Gaels led by 5 at the end of the first quarter, 36-27 at the half, and by as much as 15 in the final quarter before settling for the ten-point victory.

All was not sweetness and light, however. The Gaels displayed an unforgivable tendancy to overthrow the fast-break man. This cost them at least ten points in second half alone, and could be fatal against a hot-shooting squad.

Vetrie and Lavigeur were given free lanes to the basket on several occasions, mostly because of a lack of communication about pics and screens.

Finally, when there is a semi-stall on, twenty-five footers from the corner are not a good idea. However, we won, which is the main point in the exercise. And, as the man says, that's a lot better than losing.

-perry

Paul Howard crashes boards as Dave Smith looks on

But the Gals had their problems

The Queen's Basketball Gals hosted Laurentian on Sat. and went down to a 59-57 defeat. Play was very even, matched basket for basket, with Queen's up 28-24 at the half.

However, at the start of the second half Laurentian went ahead by leaps and rebounds. Queen's picked up their old form at about the three-quarters mark and closed the gap. While very close to taking the game away from Laurentian several times, the Queen's girls could not net the points they needed for the win.

The story of the game is in the shots. Queen's outshot Laurentian 93-58, but the shots were taken from the outside in a forced manner rather than working and cutting with the ball to get the inside shots.

Sue Higgins of Queen's was tops on rebounds for the host team with 17, 10 on the offensive boards. In the second half the visitors improved on their rebounding, a fact which helped their game greatly. Laney Marshall, netting 20 points, was again high scorer for Queen's with Karen Carson gaining 12 and Pat Patterson 10.

-perry

Sue Higgins picks off another 'bound against Laurentian

Recreation
Ski School,
Wed. Evenings
Jan. 19 -
Feb. 23
Friday
Afternoons
Jan. 21 -
Feb. 25
For further information, call
Howard Pearse,
P.E.C., 547 6984

Sport Shorts

The men's squash team picked up a victory Saturday, besting Trent 3 matches to 2. The difference came in the lower-ranked players. The Gaels' first and second players (Greg Thompson and Hugh Fisher) lost their matches, but John Mitchell, John Moore, and Rod Shooker bested their opponents to take the meet.

Queen's wrestlers came out on top in a Tri-meet with Carleton and Ryerson, held Saturday at Carleton. Led by Gary Brown and Bob Pesowsky, the Gaels downed Ryerson 32-16 and dumped Carleton 29-19. Carleton finished second.

An interesting rivalry came about in the Carleton matches. Former Queen's stars Bob Cazes and Rick Coutts are now at Carleton, and both were competing in the tri-meet. Unfortunately, they proved too much for the current competitors winning both their matches handily.

Part 1 of the OWIAA Fencing competition was held at Ottawa U. this past weekend. The Queen's girls placed third to Ottawa U. and McGill while leading Carleton.

The four girl team featured three novices, and reserve player Jane MacPherson was called upon when Gail Smith dislocated her shoulder and was unable to continue. Patty Manly lost only two of her 15 bouts to emerge as the top competitor for Queen's.

Annual P.E.C. Ski School has been enlarged to accomodate 140 people in two six-week sessions. The cost is $8.00 per student, and includes round-trip bus service to the Nacona Ski Hill in Napanee. The classes are Wednesday evenings 6.30 pm to 10 pm and Friday afternoon 1 pm to 4.30 pm. Registration will take place at the P.E.C. Athletics office window from 11 am to 4.30 pm daily until Jan. 12.

Course Evaluation Guide '72: A new perspective — give it a chance

The whole question of the role of students in the university community and their responsibilities for active participation in education deserves careful consideration before a student government embarks on a programme of course evaluation.

Students in Canada are beginning to take a new look at their role in the university community. While on many campuses, student government has been and still is considered a supervisory body of extra-curricular activity, an increased realization by students of their role as students is apparent. Embarking on a programme of course evaluation can be a very meaningful step toward the building of the educational community.

This year the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society is publishing a Course Evaluation Guide (CEG) which will include basic information and professor evaluations of every Arts and Science course offered this year at Queen's.

The four major objectives of the CEG are:

1. to aid the student in making a more informative choice of courses. At the present time, students must rely on the present Arts and Science Calendar and any personal discussion they might have with other students or faculty.
2. to provide instructors with some feedback measure of their teaching effectiveness, in the sense of helping them to discover whether or not they are 'getting through' to the student.
3. to foster an interest in maintaining a high level of university teaching.
4. to further develop the student's control of his educational institutions -- the nature of courses offered, and teaching and evaluation methods.

Perhaps William E. B. DuBois best expresses our feelings on the matter. "But the hushing of the criticism of honest opponents is a dangerous thing. It leads some of the best of the critics to unfortunate silence and paralysis of effort, and others to burst into speech so passionately and intemporately as to lose listeners. Honest and earnest criticism from those whose interests are most nearly touched -- this, is the soul of democracy and the safe guard of modern society." No one is implying that this university is or must be a democracy, but the analogy is sound.

In designing the procedure of the survey and the format of the CEG, the organizers will satisfy these aims within the bounds of the available information and resources. The cimpilation and dissemination of information is only the first step, however, in achieving these aims. The decisive factor in determining the value of the CEG is the use which is made of the information and this is the responsibility of students and faculty. The course guide can only be as valuable as you make it.

There are many limitations to the CEG. We must first realize that what results from such a study is not an objective ideal, nor even a construct of a good teacher which necessarily coincides with professional standards. We have instead, a reflecting device in which the instructor sees his image as drawn by his students, with the danger of distortions reduced to a statistical minimum by the size of the return.

A further limitation is the use which the individual can make of the CEG. In many cases, students in certain programs are required to take specific courses of which there may only be one section...(This, of course, represents but one of the objectives of the CEG).

The organizational committee is fortunate that it is not constrained by tradition in the publication of CEG...a formal evaluation of the academic environment is only one year old at Queen's. Last year, the CEG was less than 100 percent effective because the burden was largely carried by one person -- a horrendous task.

This year, the organizational committee plans to divest itself of much of the load by making DSC more autonomous in the creation of the CEG. Stemming from the committee's denial of a Universal Questionnaire applicable to all disciplines, each department will assume the responsibility of designing their own.

How the courses are to be written up will also remain within the jurisdiction of the DSC. Tentatively, they will utilize some combination of verbal and data printout (with a heavy emphasis on the former) in order to both make the resultant product more readable and to drastically minimize (if not eliminate) our reliance on the computer -- the course of certain anxieties in the past.

A further change will come in the restricting of published evaluations to upper year courses. The objection that first year students have neither the maturity nor the background knowledge to make a valuable evaluation is normative and paternalistic. However, rather than a course evaluation, it was felt that freshmen would prefer an introduction to each department explaining the facilities offered, etc. -- a function that will be provided this year by the Orientation Committee.

In short, CEG '72 will highlight change.

The approach to a program of course evaluation must be positive. Rather than being a search for faults, the program will try to contribute something useful to the university and to benefit both the students and faculty in the interests of making education as effective as possible.

CEG '72: GIVE IT A CHANCE!

John F. Bankes
CEG '72 Co-ordinator.

The ASUS Tale

Tuesday, December 7, 1971 | Kingston, Ontario | Vol. 3, No. 2

Little did they know! Shift in test timetable to the thirteenth week lengthens term--doesn't it?

Appraisal 72 - The First Biennial Conference on Teaching and Learning January 6 and 7, 1972

This conference is the direct result of a recommendation made by the Harrower Report in 1969. That report suggested that a committee be formed to set up the details of a conference relating to teaching and learning, to be held every two years. This first Committee has consisted of: Prof. N.J. Brown-Philosophy (Chairman), Prof. H.M. Good-Biology, Miss Nicole le Riche-Biology '73, Mr. Derek McLean-Mathematics '73, Prof. P. Platenius-Psychology, and Mr. P. Stokes (Secretary) - Faculty of Art and Science Office.

The aim of Appraisal '72 is to encourage teachers to re-examine, with the help of students, the objectives of university teaching, and to ask how far those objectives are consistent at present in use. It is hoped that the conference will lead both to a more critical consciousness of objectives and to a more effective realization of them. Students have been invited on a "one student to three staff" basis by D. S. C. Chairmen. The size of the Conference is expected to exceed 120 delegates.

Quickie culture courses to be proposed by Coleman

At the Arts and Sciences Faculty Board Meeting this Friday (December 10), Dr. A. J. Coleman, Head of the Department of Mathematics, will move that the Faculty of Arts and Science create a series of short courses dealing with relevant human and social problems of contemporary society.

The motion is in response to not only student's desire for discussion of relevant problems, but also to the idea as stated in his motion that, "the University has the duty to take initiative in dispelling the ignorance which prevents most North Americans from sensitive awareness to major problems which threaten truly human existence on our planet." Proposed course topics include poverty, man and environment, and conflict.

Each course would consist of six hours lectures held over a two week period, with enough different time slots in order to assure participation by students, faculty, and staff. The program would be conducted on a volunteer basis by the academic staff utilizing lectures, readings, and audio-visual aids.

This program, if passed by the Faculty Board on Friday, will be held on an experimental basis next term. If after this trial period, the program continues, the motion requests that "credit in one or more of these courses be a necessary prerequisite for graduation in the Faculty and that the Senate be asked to establish the same requirement for all Queen's degrees."

TO obtain credit, a student would be required to attain at least a 75 percent in an objective exam based on the course content as derived from the lectures and a brief "fact sheet".

The rationale behind the courses being compulsory, according to Coleman, is that there is "no other effective way in which the University can demonstrate to students and the general public that it really means business and really thinks that human life is worth preserving."

The motion requests the ASUS to finance the production of the "fact sheets" so that they may be provided to all participants without cost.

The program does not in any way pretend to deal with the problems extensively or to give answers to them. Instead, as Coleman said, "My hope is that if the courses are presented in a live way, there will be a basis for future discussion and questioning."

In this contest, Coleman sees the AMS, the ASUS, and the DSC's as the promotional agencies of discussion.

The course acts only as a springboard to such activity. Coleman welcomes any suggestions or comments on his program.

At present the Chemical Engineering Department of the Faculty of Applied Science is sponsoring a course entitled "Nature, Science and Man." The course is concerned with a basic understanding of man and his environment and the interaction between the two.

The one term course, which is a credit course for students in the Faculty of Applied Science, is also open to Arts and Science without credit.

NEWS BRIEFS

1971 ASUS Book Exchange

Well, it's all over! Finally! All the loose ends are tied up! Santa Claus, in the form of the local postman, goes galloping off in all directions with over $1,300 in cheques for the last of this year's Book Exchange patrons.

It was a very successful year financially. Sales totalled over $4,000., leaving the ASUS with a net profit of about $800. from their commission of 20 percent on the sale of each book minus expenses. We wish we could have sold all of the books that were brought into us but the inevitable course changes in some departments unfortunately cut the demand for several texts. Maybe next year!

To the 2,000 people who "shopped" in the 1971 Book Exchange-we hope you are getting good use out of your "better-than-new" textbooks. The thirteenth week is approaching very quickly!.

To the thousand or so students who brought books in to be sold-Pollution Probe will love you for your recycling efforts!

To all those who helped with this year's Exchange-and there were so many-a special thank you. Artsci '74 is out of the red now as a result of your efforts.

To all members of the university community -- start collecting those books for the "New and Improved" 1972 ASUS Book Exchange.

Constitutional Revisions Committee

Constitutional revision seems to be a yearly activity at Queen's, reflecting perhaps the changing nature of student interest. Once again, an attempt will be made this year to draft a constitution for Queen's largest faculty society, in order that the Society may better represent its members.

Interpretation of the present Constitution has been a major problem this year. Exactly what is the status and responsibility of a committee within the ASUS, to the parent body? What rights do such committees have? Is the Orientation Committee to be considered separately from other committees of the Society? And so on, ad infinitum.

Another area of concern for the Constitutional Revision Committee is the role of the D.S.C.'s in the management of the ASUS. With the creation of the Course Evaluation Guide last year, the importance of D.S.C.'s has increased tremendously. Should this change also be reflected in an increased representation on the governing body of the ASUS?

The seven members of the ASUS Constitutional Revision Committee will be brooding over these and other questions during the Winter Break. With the commencement of classes again in January, the Committee will be holding frequent meetings to hear views on any matters relating to the revision of the ASUS Constitution. Anyone who feels strongly enough about some aspects of the Constitution is encouraged to attend. Correspondence may be directed-to the ASUS JUDICIAL COMMISSION, c-o AMS OFFICE

Inter-Year Committeee Activities

The first term isn't over yet and the second hasn't even begun, so let's see what we will be doing, in the way of excitement for the next three months. Yes ASUS has some events planned for you to bitch or cheer about-preferrably cheer.

Anyway on Dec. 18, 8:30 at TORONTO CITY HALL is OTOS. Want to know what OTOS is? Well just cause we're great guys will tell you. Its Oil Thigh on Skates. - could be fun, should be fun, - since most people seem to have trouble doing it on two feet!

Another Super-Smoker-but under disquise (Slippery Smoker) GRANT HALL, Weekend Jan. 21. You realize that that is just warming us up for SNOWBALL week-pray for snow for Jan. 22-29. Snow, or no snow we will have a parade, dance with rooms decorated by each year, snowball fights, sculpting and all those other wintery things.

Well, good old Jan. is full up so on to Feb.

How does a MARATHON DANCE sound?-help support Camp Outlook-dance from sunset to sunrise pain eh? Neat eh? Probably Feb. 4-keep it open eh?

Now before you go home for ? week, (fill in your own blank) we hope to have Year Elections - so start thinking of who you want to be on your new year society executives.

Later on in the month say about Feb. 26th. there will be an Old Films Nite (nite where you watch old films, I bet) and for some action (if you don't get any in the films) there will be a sleigh ride and skating.

One last thing, Arts '73 is having a graduation dance, Mar. 10 at Pine Lodge Inn.

Come on, forget about books for awhile and enjoy the other half of university life!

The ASUS Tale (advertising supplant to the Queen's Journal) is published occasionally during the academic year by Marmot Productions, a sub-committee of the publications Committee, Arts and Science Undergraduate Society of Queen's University at Kingston. Opinions expressed here are not necessarily those of the University or the Society. Thanks to Debra and "Gurd" for immoral support, and a hug and a kiss good night to Pammi and Beth.

Queen's does have an employment service

Around this time of tests and examinations, there are two questions often heard on campus: "What am I doing here?" and "Where am I headed?" While the first question is mostly one to be solved personally, there is some help in the area of the second question.

If you look in your copy of the Who's Where, you will indeed see that Queen's does have a Career Planning and Placement Office which is located at 127 Queen's Crescent. Headed by Mr. David Wroe (an Artsman himself), the Career Planning and Placement Office has undergone quite a change in the last year. Expansion has created a better basis for student contact, and a change in approach to the contemporary employment situation.

On all the bulletin boards and desks in the main floor reception area are notices and pamphlets concerning job opportunities in industry and business. All of a sudden, questions start coming to mind "Does IBM want me? Or maybe Molson's -- I have experience!" The person to see at this point is Wroe's secretary, Miss Karen McAllen, located on this same floor...she's there with a friendly smile and an open appointment book.

In the first appointment, Wroe won't (and can't) tell you what to do upon graduation. Instead, after learning something about you, he can suggest general areas of interest. He might also suggest a visit to the Student Counselling Service on University Avenue. (By the way, that's where the new Birth Control Center is located, so if one can't help you, you can't lose by going to the other!)

Once your general direction is set, the Career Planning and Placement Office's job has just begun. With the aid of Wroe, a job strategy can be developed whereby a system of priorities is set up: applications to industry or maybe specialized schools.

While waiting for replies, other skills can be acquired such as learning how to compile a resume, how to secure a list of employers, and how to capitalize, in fact, on personal successes and minimize failures.

No, the Career Planning and Placement Office won't tell you what to do after graduation, but they can give you every assistance in finding a job or training when you finish. The best way to see what they can offer is to go to their office or call them at 547 2992.

The Career Planning and Placement Office is not just for Engineers! It is for all the University community, and thus, in a very big way, for all Arts and Science students.

The Career Story

Once upon a time, a happily married couple named Mr. and Mrs. William B. Fuddle had a baby girl and they decided that no matter what happened, this little girl was going to have the best of everything.

She had the best diapers and formula and babyfood. She had the best toys for toddlers, and the best books for beginners. She attended the best nursery school, the best primary school, and of course, the best girl's school. When it came to deciding which university was the best, her parents naturally recommended Queen's University and shipped her off with the best trunk.

OTHER EVENTS COMMITTEE

Below is a schedule of proposed events for the second term from the Other Events Committee. Many of the dates and places are tentative, so look for more information concerning these activities after the Christmas vacation.

December 31, 1971: News Year's Eve Party! It will be held in the Queen's Pub starting at around 8.30. Admission: $1.50-person ($2.50-couple) See story on this page and watch for more details.

January: A national Film Board Night with continuous showing of NFB films.

February: A Sensitivity Workshop Weekend is being planned for the end of reading week.

March: Discussions, demonstrations, and encounters with members of the Ottawa group of Hare Krishna

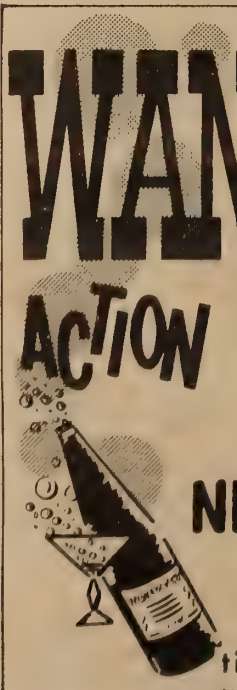
April 8, 1972: Regression Day! Celebrate the last day of classes with finger-painting, mudpies, marbles, lemonade, and peanut butter & jam sandwiches.

A Little Action My Friends

Wondering how to spend many of those hours you're presently wasting in Douglas Reading Room? Have you ever considered getting into student government? What's that you say? Speak up boy, speak up!

Listen, we've got a REAL DEAL for you this year....Just look at some of the heavy opportunities that will become available in February or so:

AVAILABLE IN February or so:



A.M.S. Seven representatives at large for Arts and Science

A.S.U.S Executive The positions of President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer.

A.S.U.S. Committee Chairman Suzie-Q, Formal, Clubrooms, Publications, Other Events, AND Judicial.

SENATE Senators for Arts and Science

YEAR SOCIETIES Arts 73,74 and 75 Executive Elections coming up also. Nothing to do? Interested? Great Caesar's Ghost just look at all these opportunities! Yes my little chickadees get in there and ruffle a few feathers...

WANTED ACTION PEOPLE FOR NEW YEAR'S EVE

The ASUS Other Events Committee is holding a New Year's Eve Party in the Queen's Pub (Second Floor of the Student's Union) for all Queen's students, faculty, staff, and guests on New Year's Eve.

Admission will be $1.50 per person (or $2.50 a couple) at the door. Starting time is 8:30, and entertainment, snacks, etc. will be provided.

UN-

CANADA

OTTAWA - While admitting the contentious and intricate tax-return bill is imperfect and denying it was resorting to closure, the Government Thursday used closure to limit debate on Bill C-259.

By a 121-to-80 vote the Commons accepted for the first time a "time-allocation" motion under controversial Rule 75 (c).

The Opposition parties voted together against the motion, although two New Democrats, Andrew Brewin (Woodbine) and Max Saltsman (Waterloo), voted with the Government majority. Neither spoke during the two-hour debate.

Closure will limit debate on the tax bill to four more days in the committee stage. It is likely to be used again next week to limit debate on third and final reading.

With the notable exception of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, many of the Commons heavyweights took part in the debate which featured some bitingly partisan exhortations, claims and counterclaims.

And at the same time he moved the closure motion, Government House Leader Allan MacEachen said the Government will introduce more amendments to the bill affecting co-operatives and credit unions. MPs of all parties, including Liberals, have critized provisions of the bill that deal with co-ops and credit unions.

These amendments will be on top of 133 amendments introduced at various times since the Commons began considering the 707-page bill in September. Some of the amendments altered earlier ones.

MONTREAL - The Quebec Federation of Labor Friday endorsed the principle of general strikes by all unionized workers across the province.

Described by union members as the "ultimate weapon," the idea of massive walkouts was adopted by representatives of the 250,000-member union meeting here for the QFL's biennial convention.

Approval of the controversial principle was given after several delegates had voiced reservations about general strikes because of the illegality of walking off the job while a labor contract is in effect.

Louis Laberge, president of the QFL reassured the 850 delegates that an order for a massive walkout would be given only after all union members had given their approval.

WINNIPEG - Two years ago, Reginald O. Lissaman won a personal battle and prevented condom vending machines from being installed in the washrooms of Brandon University.

This past week he fought the same battle again and lost, so he resigned as a member of the board of governors of this western Manitoba university.

Lissaman, 63 years old says the decision to install the machines is another step toward removing university responsibility for the behavior of its students.

OTTAWA - An embarassment in the House of Commons earlier this week has apparently put an end to the leisurely weekends enjoyed by the Liberal backbenchers known as the "T-toT" men.

T-toT stands for Tuesday to Thursday - which excludes Monday and Friday. It stands, too, for the three-day week enjoyed by many MPs who prefer to spend their weekends in their constituencies.

On Wednesday, a snap motion to adjourn the Commons by the Conservatives - which had to be voted on only by those MPs actually in the Commons at the time - was narrowly won by the opposition.

Although it robbed the Commons of only 20 minutes of normal debating time, the government was obviously embarassed at the minor defeat.

The embarassment explains the bulging Liberal benches Friday - including the presence of none other than Prime Minister Trudeau, who was supposed to be in Toronto.

QUEBEC - In these linguistically troubled days in Quebec, the last thing Premier Robert Bourassa must have needed this week was to have to state in the National Assembly that both French and English can be used in the province's courts.

Mr. Bourassa was put on the spot by Marcel Masse, the MNA from Montcalm who now sits as an independent after having bolted from the ranks of Unite-Quebec, formerly the Union Nationale Party.

The question of court language first came up in the Nov. 19 session of the assembly.

"Does the statement by Judge Maurice Rousseau," Mr. Masse asked, "in the Meloche trial in Montreal, some days ago, to the effect that it's not a right to be tried in French in Quebec, but a privilege, conform with the government's policy concerning French rights in Quebec?"

Mr. Bourassa, without the aid of Justice Minister Jerome Choquette, who was absent at the time, was taken by surprise.

"I'm astonished at such a statement," he said.

OTTAWA - Despite Prime Minister Trudeau's talk of a "breakthrough," Canadian officials were expecting no immediate dramatic results from his meeting Monday with President Nixon.

Federal sources are doing their best to cool expectations raised by the optimism of Mr. Trudeau last Monday when he was discussing his Washington visit.

A solution of the long-standing irritants in Canada-U.S. relations, they say, will have to wait until the whole picture of international trading arrangements is settled.

However, there is some optimism in Ottawa that the way is now being paved for a realignment of Western currencies and trading relations which could be settled by the end of the year.

THE WORLD

KARACHI, West Pakistan - Urging his people to deliver "a crushing blow to the enemy," Pakistani President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan said Saturday a state of war exists between Pakistan and India.

"War has been forced on us," he said in a nation-wide speech broadcast by Radio Pakistan. "We are prepared to sacrifice everything for our country at any cost. We must shine as a star. Go forward and attack the enemy. Allah is with us."

Yahya was confident this would be "the final war with India."

India's Prime Minister, Indira Gandhi, in a speech to parliament, accused Pakistan of launching "all-out war" but stopped short of declaring war herself.

"Mr. Speaker, this morning the government of West Pakistan declared war upon us," she said. "I have no alternative but to put our country on a war footing."

She claimed Indian forces were ordered into action in retaliation for Pakistani air and shelling attacks on 12 Indian airfields last night.

In Calcutta, Lt.-Gen. Jagjit Singh Aurora, Indian military commander on the eastern front, said he has ordered his men to force the surrender of the 80,000 Pakistani troops in the area and to establish an independent government of Bangla Desh (Bengali nation).

He said his jets had hit the airfield in Dacca in a bid to knock out the Pakistan air force and his men had advanced up to three miles inside East Pakistan.

"There has been good fighting," he said. "The Paks have fought well and my chaps have fought well."

BACK

BERLIN - Refugees from East Germany will get the right to travel overland to West Berlin in the traffic agreement now nearing completion, West German sources said Saturday.

This was hailed as a victory for the West and for Egon Bahr, Chancellor Willy Brandt's diplomatic trouble-shooter, who is negotiating a Berlin access agreement with East German State Secretary Michael Kohl.

The East Germans wanted to bar anyone who fled to the West since the wall was built on Aug. 13, 1961. But Bahr insisted they could not be excluded from travelling.

ROME - The United States has seized the initiative in the world monetary crisis by offering to consider a larger dollar devaluation than many of its trading partners expected, informed sources said Thursday.

West German Economics Minister Karl Schiller, speaking after the two-day meeting of the Group of Ten industrialized nations ended last night, indicated that the U.S. had offered to devalue the dollar by more than 5 percent.

PAGE

TRICOLOR GRAD PHOTOS

A list of all grad photos to appear in Tricolor '72 will be in the AMS Outer Office all this week. Please check that you are listed correctly.

To the Apolitical Intellectual

One day, the intellectuals of my country will be interrogated by the simplest of our people.
They will be asked what they did when their nation died out slowly like a sweet fire small and alone.
No one will ask them about their sterile combats with the idea of nothing.
They will be asked nothing.
about their absurd justifications
born in the shadow of the total lie.
On that day, the simple men will come and ask:
"What did you do when the poor suffered and when tenderness and light burned out in them."

(Written by a Latin American, quoted by Leandre Bergeron in the Montreal Star.)

Queen's
Journal
Vol. XCIX, No. 32
Thurs., Dec. 9, 1971

14 shopping days T 9

13 shopping days F 10

12 shopping days S 11

S 12

11 shopping days
Victor Bradley's birthday M 13

10 shopping days T 14

9 shopping days W 15

8 shopping days T 16

7 shopping days F 17

6 shopping days
Oil Thigh on Skates S 18

S 19

5 shopping days M 20

4 shopping days T 21

3 shopping days
Last day of first term W 22

2 shopping days T 23

Last shopping day F 24

X 25

holly

Calendar of events

6:00 to 7:00 p.m.: Christmas Fireside in Ban Righ Common Room. Poetry Readings by Joan Finnigan, with music, carols, cake, coffee. All are welcome.

7:30 to 9:30 p.m.: Dept. of Medicine sponsors a Medical Sciences Lecture in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

8:00 p.m.: Queen's pub will be featuring "Harvest".

Friday, December 10.

Noon to midnight: Queen's pub open. Surprises - dancing - featuring "Harvest".

The International Club presents their Christmas Party in the Lower Lounge of the International Centre. Admission is free and all are welcome. Contact Ian McIntyre (546-1364) or Heather Jonas (547-2807) for further information.

Saturday, December 18.

8:30 p.m.: Third Annual Oil Thigh On Skates. All Queen's men and women and friends in the Toronto area come to the Nathan Phillips Square Skating Rink, Toronto City Hall. Don't forget the blades!

Wednesday, December 29.

7:00 p.m.: Queen's Skating Party sponsored by the Toronto Queen's Alumnae for all Queen's students, and alumni family and friends, at the North Toronto Memorial Arena (Eglinton and Oriole Parkway). Skating is free but their is a small charge for refreshments beginning at 9:00.

Friday, December 31.

8:30 p.m.: ASUS Other Events Committee is holding a New Year's Eve party in the Queen's pub (2nd floor common room, Union) for all Queen's staff, students, and faculty. Admission $1.50 ($2.50 per couple).

Computing

All computing centre service areas will be closed from noon December 23 to 8 a.m. December 29, and from 5 p.m. December 30 to 8 a.m. January 3. (Users may retrieve jobs until 4 p.m. December 23 and until midnight December 30.)

The COPE terminal in Jeffery Hall will be closed from noon December 23 until 9 a.m. January 3.

Residences

Women's residences will close December 22 and reopen Saturday, January 8.

Men's residences serve December 22 dinner as their last meal for 1971; the buildings close the next day and reopen Sunday, January 9.

In Toronto

Oil Thigh on Skates is a "spontaneous" skating party for Queen's people at Nathan Phillips Square (City Hall Square) in downtown Toronto. It begins at 8:30 p.m. Saturday, December 18, and is sponsored by Arts 73. (Participants are "encouraged to arrange their own pre-post skating activities".)

Athletics

The phys ed centre will keep the following hours:
December 13 to 17: 8 am - 11 pm
December 18: 8 am - 5 pm
December 19: closed
December 20 to 22: 8 am - 11 pm
December 23 to 27: closed
December 28: 2 pm - 11 pm
December 29 and 30: 8 am - 11 pm
December 31 to January 2: closed
January 3 to 7: 8 am - 11 pm
January 8: 8 am - 5 pm
January 9: 2 pm - 11 pm

Queen's will host three other Canadian universities in a hockey tournament at the Jock Harty Arena December 28 and 29.

Health service

The Student Health Service will maintain its normal clinic hours throughout the holidays, except on days when university offices are closed (see above). Emergency service will be available 24 hours a day, every day including Christmas, at the usual number, 547-6106.

New Year's Eve

A new year's eve party, sponsored by the ASUS, will happen in the House of Commons (second floor of the Union) beginning at 8:30 December 31. Admission is $1.50 per person, $2.50 per couple.

The Union

The coffee shop in the Student Union will be closed from Friday, December 17, until Monday, January 10. During that time coffee shop service will be provided in Wallace Hall cafeteria upstairs, as well as the usual meal service there. Wallace Hall will be closed, too, on December 25 and 26. The tuck shop will be closed December 17 until January 10. The Students' Memorial Union itself will be open every day during the holidays.

Post office

There will be no mail service December 25 through December 28 (Tuesday), inclusive, and no mail service January 3 (Monday).

Administration

University offices will close at noon Thursday, December 23, and reopen at 8:45 a.m. Wednesday, December 29.

They will be closed Friday, December 31 as well.

There will be no issue of The Journal tomorrow. The final Journal for 1971 will appear Tuesday, December 14; deadline is Sunday evening as usual.- note b..8 x 25 ems..

days

Library system

Douglas Library

Wed., Dec. 22 (last day of classes): 8:45 AM - 5 PM
Thurs., Dec. 23 8:45 AM - 5 PM - Limited Service after 12 Noon
Fri., Dec. 24 (University holiday): CLOSED
Sat., Dec. 25 (Statutory holiday): CLOSED
Sun., Dec. 26 (Statutory holiday): CLOSED
Mon., Dec. 27 (University holiday): 8:45 AM - 5 PM - Limited service
Tues., Dec. 28 (University holiday): 8:45 AM - 5 PM - Limited service
Wed., Dec. 29: 8:45 AM - 10 PM - Limited service after 5 PM
Thurs., Dec. 30: 8:45 AM - 10 PM - Limited service after 5 PM
Fri., Dec. 31 (University holiday): CLOSED
Sat., Jan. 1 (Statutory holiday): CLOSED
Sun., Jan. 2: CLOSED
Mon. - Thurs. Jan. 3-6: 8:45 AM-10 PM - Limited service after 5 PM
Fri.-Sat., Jan. 7-8: 8:45 AM- 5 PM - Limited service on Saturday Noon -- 10 PM
Sun., Jan. 9 (Full service resumes):
Regular hours resumes Monday, January 10

Limited service means that only Circulation Desk, Stacks, and Reference Room will be open. N.B. Documents Department, Periodicals Room, Reserve Room, Archives, and Special Collections Department will not be open during periods of limited service.

Interlibrary Loan: Mail ILL service will be suspended between December 13 and January 3. This does not effect service via IUTS or QUILL from other Ontario and Quebec Universities.

Art history, biology, civil engineering, Dupuis Hall, education, electrical engineering, geology, local government, mechanical engineering, modern languages, music, physics, psychology and mathematics libraries:

Dec. 20-22	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM
23	8:45 AM - NOON
24-28	- Closed
29-30	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM
31, Jan. 2	- Closed
Jan. 3-7	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM

Chemistry library:

Dec. 20-21	- 8:45 AM - 11 PM
22	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM
23	- 8:45 AM - NOON
24-28	- Closed
29-30	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM
31, Jan. 2	Closed
Jan. 3-7	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM

Geography library:

Dec. 20-22	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM
23	- 8:45 AM - NOON
24-Jan. 2	- Closed
Jan. 3-7	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM

Health sciences library:

Dec. 20-22	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM
23	- 8:45 AM - NOON
24-28	- Closed
29-30	- 8:45 AM - 11 PM
31, Jan. 1	- Closed
Jan. 2	- 2 PM - 11 PM
3-7	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM

Law library:

Dec. 20-21	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM
22	- 8:15 AM - 1 AM
23	- 8:15 AM - NOON
24-28	- Closed
29-30	- 9 AM - 5 PM
31, Jan. 2	- Closed
Jan. 3-7	- 8:15 AM - 11 PM

Dunning Hall reading room:

Dec. 20-22	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM
23	- 8:45 AM - NOON
24-28	- Closed
29-30	- NOON - 5 PM
31, Jan. 2	- Closed
Jan. 3-7	- 8:45 AM - 5 PM

Agnes the art centre

The Agnes Etherington Art Centre will keep its regular exhibition hours (9 to 5 Monday to Friday, 7 to 9 Monday to Thursday, and 2 to 5 Sunday) through December 22. On December 23 gallery hours will be 9 am to noon; then the centre will be closed until December 26, when it will be open 2 to 5 pm. It will be closed through December 28, after which it will be open December 29 (9 to 5 and 7 to 9), December 30 (9 to 5), and in regular hours beginning January 3.

A display of the work of Kingston artists continues until December 12, beginning December 19 and continuing to January 16, the featured display will be gifts from the Douglas M. Duncan collection and the Milne-Duncan bequest, consisting of work by David B. Milne, 1882-1953, and Lionel LeMoine Fitzgerald, 1890-1956.

CFRC

Radio station CFRC (1490 AM and 91.9 FM) will broadcast as usual throughout the holidays. The regular schedule will be maintained except on Christmas and New Year's weekends; the special schedule for those days is given below.

Highlights of the regular FM schedule include The Baroque Programme (Thursdays 9 pm), The Spoken Word (Thursdays 10 pm), Emission Francaise (Saturdays 12 noon), and the Cleveland Orchestra (Sundays 5 pm).

The AM schedule includes The Goon Show (Thursdays 7:30 pm), Nocturne (10 pm Thursdays through Saturdays), and Music Round the World (Saturdays 7 pm).

Both AM and FM carry Music 010 (Thursdays 6:30 pm) and Classics by Request (Sundays 12 noon). CFRC is on the air Thursday and Friday evenings, Saturday afternoons and evenings, and Sunday mornings and afternoons.

Holiday weekend schedules for both AM and FM are as follows:

THURSDAY, December 23 and 30
6:30 Candelabra -- light music (6:55 Happenings)
7:30 The Goon Show
8:00 Let's Discuss It
8:30 Dec. 23 History of Operetta
Dec. 30 Belgian Carillons
9:00 Holiday Showcase
10:00 Nocturne
FRIDAY, December 24 and 31
6:30 Candelabra (6:55 Happenings)
7:30 Dec. 24 Christmas Eve stories
Dec. 31 Holiday Showcase
8:30 Dec. 24 Choir of Chalmers Church
Dec. 31 Living Classics
10:00 Folk Programme
12:00 Dec. 24 Sign-off
Dec. 31 Nocturne
SATURDAY, December 25, January 1
6:00 International Review
6:15 Soundstage
6:55 Happenings
7:00 Music Round the World
8:00 Masterworks
9:00 Jazz Forever
10:00 Dec. 25 Holiday Showcase
Jan. 1 Nocturne

The first issue of The Journal for second term will appear Tuesday, January 11, 1972. Deadline will be Sunday evening, January 9.

26 S A partridge in a pear tree
Feast of St. Stephen the Martyr

27 M Two turtle doves

28 T Three French hens
Hockey tournament

29 W Four calling birds
Skating party in Toronto

30 T Five Queen's rings

31 F Six geese a-laying
New Year's Eve party

1 S Seven swans a-swimming
New Year's Day

2 S Eight maids a-milking

3 M Nine highland dancers

4 T Ten lords a-leaping

5 W Doug Romans piping

6 T Twelve drummers drumming
Twelfth Night (Old Christmas)

7 F

8 S

9 S

10 M Classes resume

11 T

Aunt Lucy's Restaurant

Licensed of Course
STEAKS - SEAFOODS
PIZZA - SPAGHETTI
and
KENTUCKY
FRIED CHICKEN

BUS TOUR

We think we're Cupid. Special for two to the

QUEBEC WINTER CARNIVAL
Feb. 11-13

Contact: GRANTS TRAVEL SERVICE

(Limited space)

Wanted.

Bright, young women looking for exciting careers in fashion.

If you are about to make an important career decision — consider the fashion world and all the glamour and excitement that goes with it. The Nancy Taylor Fashion Merchandising Course offers you the opportunity of a lifetime. You'll receive specialized training . . . all the fashion know-how demanded by department stores, boutiques, designers, couturiers — all over the world.

Would you like to be a buyer? A fashion coordinator? A stylist? Maybe your future lies in fashion writing, editing, or promotion. Or would you rather be a publicity or ad director? A fashion reporter or a producer of fashion shows?

Write or phone now for the exciting booklet — Career Fashion Forecast.

-- DROP THIS COUPON IN THE MAIL --

Rush me more details about your "Fashion Career Course".

Name .....

Address .....

.....

School .....

Age ..... Phone .....

SHAW COLLEGES
2436 Yonge St.
Toronto 12, Ont.
481-6477
KO 12 71

St. James' Church

UNION and BARRIE
KINGSTON

9 a.m. - Holy Communion

11 a.m. - Holy Communion - Guest Preacher, Rev. Stanley Osborne.

7:30 p.m. - Evening Prayer

ST. ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Reverend Max V. Putnam, B.A., D.D., Minister
Christopher C. Hunt, ARCO, Director of Praise

10.00 a.m. Young Adult Bible Study
11.00 a.m. Morning Worship

7.00 p.m. Evening Worship
7.30 p.m. "Radio Ministry" CKLC

8.15 p.m. Youth Fellowship

TUESDAY, 7.30 p.m.
Bible Study

Women's Squash

Queen's may be unique

Queen's may be the only Canadian university with a Women's squash team. This fact came to light in the Canadian Women's Open tournament, held December 4 and 5 at Toronto's Badminton and Raquets Club. Seven teams, including the Queen's contingent, were entered in the competition, with players coming from as far as Lansing, Michigan, and Princeton, New Jersey.

Considering the rather high calibre of competition, the Queen's squad did quite well. Rosemary Fletcher, a member of the P.E.C staff, lost her first match to the top-seeded American woman, then went on to sweep a victory in the consolation round. The other Queen's girls, Cindy Riach, Louise Raycroft, and Kim Ball, did not fare as well, but the advanced competition should help their skills in later meets. Coach Rod Shooker indicated that the team would compete in the Ontario Closed tournament at Ottawa's Rideau Club in January, and in the Quebec Open later in the new year.

Notice

Managers must have all inter collegiate results in to Kathy Breck, P.E.C., no later than Sunday Evening for Weekend competitions.

Bews News

By George Smith & Ross Feldman

Standings as of December 3 were as follows:

P.H.E.	20,330
Commerce '73	16,067
Commerce '74	14,581
Mining	14,550
Law '72	12,160
Commerce '72	11,133
Mechanical	10,179
Chemical	10,076
Civil	9,200
Economics	8,392

Commerce '73 edged out PHE for the indoor softball championship Thursday, behind the great pitching of Ron 'the Arm' Antoine and the amazing fielding of George 'Babbles' Waters.

A well-informed source states that all the players will be seeking large contracts for next season. In the meantime, the squad will attempt to prove its true worth in an exhibition against the Pittsburgh Pirates — so watchout, Roberto!

Jock of the Week award goes to John 'the Elbow' Fallis for his work in the corners of the arena.

FESTIVAL '72
FOR THE ARTS IS COMING
FEB. 3,4,5 &6
STUDENTS MEMORIAL UNION
A GALLERY OF:
- PAINTING - SCULPTURE - HANDICRAFTS - PHOTOGRAPHY - FILMS - MUSIC - CLASSICAL, FOLK, BLUES, ETC
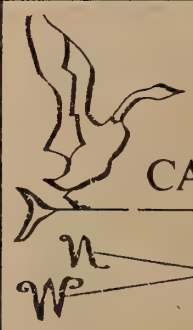
POETRY - CREATIVE DRAMA & DANCE



ALL TALENT
ENCOURAGED TO ENTER

WATCH FOR INFORMATION
DURING JANUARY

EXTENDED HOURS

Typing and Duplicating Will be Accepted Days and Evenings (until 10:00 P.M.) as well as Sat. and Sun. Afternoon until Dec. 10. The Service will remain open Week days (8:30 A.M. - 4:30 P.M.) until Dec. 17.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

GENUINE CANADIAN CRAFTS,
CLOTHES, TOYS and
CANADIAN BOOKS

CANADIAN SHOP
OF KINGSTON
telephone: 542-1115
219 Princess St.
(next to the Capitol Theatre)

THE CANADIAN MINERAL INDUSTRY EDUCATION FOUNDATION
offers
POSTGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS
in
MINING ENGINEERING
to GRADUATES in any branch of
ENGINEERING or APPLIED SCIENCE
$4,500 - 9 months
PLUS Planned Summer Employment
For information contact
The Chairman,
Dept. of Mining Eng. & Applied Geophysics,
McGill University, Montreal 110, P.Q.
CLOSING DATE 15 MARCH, 1972

THINK
Snowball
Jan., 24-30

AMS lacks quorum but does some business

A forty-minute AMS general meeting Tuesday night quickly passed two proposals from its executive, and spent much of its time discussing the rationale of AMS behaviour and its club budgeting.

Brian Magee, third-year metallurgy student and secretary of the sky-diving club, rose during the meeting's "other business" period to ask that the club's grant be increased to $225 from the $150 the AMS had previously promised.

The grant should be the same per club member as it was last year, Magee stated. He said the sky-divers have 60 active members this year--four percent of all the sky-divers in Canada.

AMS president Patrick Riley mentioned the background to financial grants to athletic clubs, saying the AMS had tried to persuade the recreational services office of the phys ed complex to provide the money. When they did not want to do so, the AMS reassumed the responsibility, he said.

Magee's motion carried easily.

Earlier, the meeting had approved a proposal from Riley on how to spend the $3500 accumulated "reserve fund": on refurbishing the AMS piano and publishing two pamphlets about housing.

The AMS piano is a grand which stands in Grant Hall and is used for a wide variety of events, vice-president Victor Bradley told the meeting.

Riley said one of the pamphlets would describe how students can find Kingston housing through the various available services; the other would tell landlords how to use the university's housing service. Both would be ready in January, Riley said.

"There is a perceived housing crisis," Bradley said when the suggestion was challenged. "Whether there is a real one is irrelevant." He said the booklets could also be distributed at registration or during the summer.

In most previous years the money intended for the reserve fund went into general AMS expenditures, he said, explaining why the 25c-per-student-per-year fund has accumulated so little.

The meeting also approved, without any debate, a routine motion, forgotten by the outer council earlier this month, to pay the fall half of AMS honoraria to the officers who are entitled to it.

Finally the meeting briefly discussed the purposes of the AMS and the different approaches it could take. Discussing use of funds, Bradley said he intends to ask for students to vote in February on continuation or change of four fees now included in the non-academic fee all students pay: the $3 concert fee, the $4 for Tricolor, $5 for the new university centre, and the $5.30 basic AMS operating fee.

At its fullest point during the meeting, Theatre D of Stirling Hall held only 46 people. Speaker Paul Kennedy told the meeting that under AMS rules, the meeting could continue even without the quorum of 200 people; its decisions would stand unless a written complaint was filed at the AMS office.

Employment Service offers more jobs

"The Student Employment Bureau will be drawing summer employment opportunities for students from 2,000 organizations this year," David Roe, director of Career Planning and Placement announced.

The bureau has an ongoing summer assistance programme for students who register with them and each registered student is given a number of leads in the area in which they wish to be located, he added.

"Of 1600 Queen's students who registered for jobs last summer, approximately 1300 were actually placed in a job," Roe commented.

This results from the fact that the bureau, in co-operation with Canada Manpower and other University Employment Bureau, has contacts all over Ontario and Canada.

The Student Employment Bureau also acts as a communicating agency for Opportunities for Youth. This is a government financed programme instituted to encourage student initiated summer projects. Due to the tremendous success of the programme last summer, it will take place again on an expanded basis.

Roe suggested that maximum salary levels will probably be instituted to avoid heirarchial pay structures within projects. "The average salary will be $1200 to $1300", he conjectured.

Approximately 400 Queen's students participated last summer in Opportunities for Youth. The average salary was $1100.

The Student Employment Bureau also acted as a staffing agency for Ontario Place last summer. Over 55 students were hired to work there and about 25 new jobs will be open at Ontario Place next summer.

The bureau also has facilities for placing students all over the world. About 70 Queen's students got overseas jobs through listings which the bureau has collected.

"We actually ran out of students to place last summer, Roe stated. "By June we still had job opportunities to fill but no one to fill them.

Students should still register early for jobs. And applications for Opportunities for Youth will be available in the next few weeks.

Orientation Committee starts making its plans

The arts and science orientation committee has made its allotment of responsibilities. Coordinator of the six-man committee is Jim Thompson; Rick Kingston will coordinate social events, Jackie Willson cultural, Marenca de Bruyn academics, Mary Macdonald information, and Ann Dillon communications.

The committee was chosen a month ago, but delayed dividing up specific areas until goals and policy were decided on, Thompson said.

In a report to the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society on November 25, the committee stated its policy on the hazing issue: "Hazing is a mock superior attitude of the gael which is clearly understood to be feigned by both gael and frosh. Therefore, in using hazing, the importance of discretion cannot be overemphasized."

The goals of orientation 1972, as outlined in the report, include making freshmen feel welcome, showing them what Queen's has to offer, and -- most importantly -- getting them involved.

There has been much discussion of how to increase faculty participation in orientation, Thompson said, but although it is generally desired details have not yet been worked out for making it happen.

The committee has recommended that a special first-year academic book, rather than the course evaluation guide, be sent to incoming freshmen before they arrive. If the faculty board approves, Thompson said, the faculty will pay the cost (about $2000) of producing the book, which will be like the one sent to freshmen in 1969 and 1970.

Gael interviews will be held during the first week of classes in January, and successful applicants will probably be announced the week after that.

Chief frec is chosen

The Chief Frec for Science Orientation '72, has been chosen. Dave Armstrong, of Science '75 was selected from among 11 other applicants at a closed session of the Engineering Council last Thursday night.

His committee has not been chosen as yet. Appointments will be made early next term.

Selection of a chairmen for the Engineering Welcoming Committee will also occur next term. This post is usually held by a girl in Science.

CLASSIFIED

OIL THIGH on Skates III - all Queen's people invited, Saturday, December 18, 8:30 p.m. Nathan Phillips Square Skating Rink, Toronto City Hall.

EXPORT "A"

Canada's Finest

FILTER

Cigarette

REGULAR AND KINGS

THE CANADIAN MINERAL INDUSTRY EDUCATION FOUNDATION

offers

UNDERGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS

in

MINING ENGINEERING

$1,500 - 9 months

Educational Summer Employment Arranged

to students wishing to enter the first or subsequent professional year of a degree course in Mining Engineering

For applications contact:
The Secretary
Canadian Mineral Industry Education Foundation
1600-44 King Street West, Toronto
or
The Dean of Engineering
Applied Science

CLOSING DATE 15 MARCH 1972

The 3600 III Xerox Duplicator provides fast, excellent, thesis reproduction, photographic reproduction, solids and halftone reproduction, sorting and collating, and background clearing. Quality book copying and transparency reproduction can also be provided by our 720 Xerox Copier.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

Monday thru Saturday noon 'til 1 p.m. its . . .

The Round Table

Mr. BOJANGLES ROOM a discotheque

Get in on a DIFFERENT Atmosphere!! Dance to the latest in top sounds!! A new image -- a lively spot -- Come to see Bojangles -- You'll like it!! AT

The Round Table

Fully Licenced
Home of the Sunday Roast
Beef Buffet -- 542-7337

Bring anybody out for dinner - great food from 2.99 - every night.

Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

LADIES ELECTROLYSIS

Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call:

HARRISON SALON 542-5595

MAKE HER HOLIDAYS BRIGHT WITH A WHITE CHRISTMAS DIAMOND

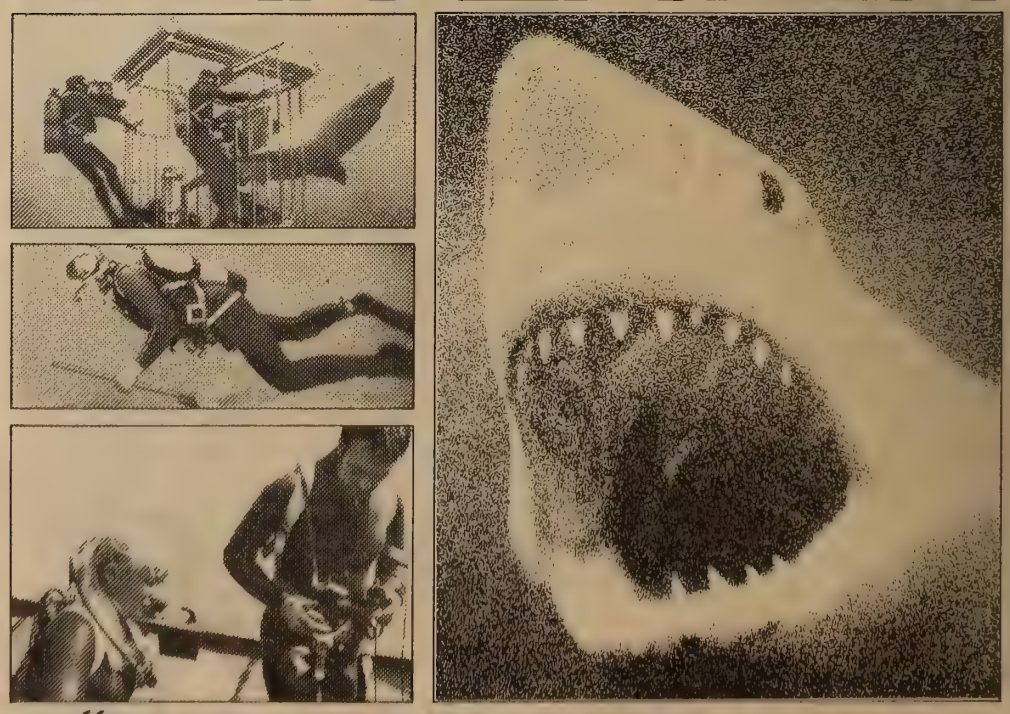
Come snow or come sun, the certain way to a bright Christmas is a gleaming diamond gift and it needn't cost a fortune. A ring, pin, necklace will cleam with icy fire. And burn bright for all the Christmases to come.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

S&R DISCOUNT DEPARTMENT STORES

HOLIDAY GLITTER



BETTER QUALITY EVENING ACCESSORIES

1/2 PRICE AND LESS

EVENING BAGS-GLOVES
EVENING STOLES
GLITTER PANTY HOSE

Open Until 9
Every Night
Now Until Christmas
Sat. Until 6

MAN-EATER

"BLUE WATER, WHITE DEATH"

"ABSOLUTELY BREATH-TAKING, GASP-PRODUCING!"
— Judith Crist, NBC Today Show

A CINEMA CENTER FILMS PRESENTATION · A NATIONAL GENERAL PICTURES RELEASE
Produced by PETER GIMBEL · Directed by PETER GIMBEL and JAMES LIPSCOMB · TECHNICOLOR® [G]

NOW PLAYING

233 PRINCESS ST.
546-5395

CAPITOL

Karlheinz Stockhausen in Ottawa

By Fergus Macdowall

It is generally assumed that aleatoric (i.e. "chance") music, of which Karlheinz Stockhausen, after John Cage, is perhaps the most idolized proponent, is in essence anarchic, proof of the existence, somehow, somewhere, of an unlimited and aimless freedom.

In this case as in almost all others, however, the popular view is hopelessly incorrect. Freedom, as any non-Bergsonian first-year philosophy student knows, is an illusion, and never has been, never will be anything other than an illusion.

We may, through an effort of will, become free from such things as the repressions imposed by parental or societal authority or the vicissitudes of egocentric passion, but we can never be free from ourselves. Determinism is the cornerstone of science; and 'aleatoric' music or art (for example, the work of Duchamp or the surrealists) is not protest but praise - howbeit unconscious - of the Western scientific tradition.

It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that Pierre Boulez, leader, in the popular view, of the opposing school of musical theory - that which advocates complete "control" over all works of art - names as his artistic and philosophical mentor Stephane Mallarme, whose well-known line "Un coup de des jamais n'abolira le hasard" seems, at firt glance, to be the poetic equivalent of an aleatoric manifesto.

Every bit as inane as the belief that personal freedom exists and that the artist can prove it is the conviction that there is such a thing as a "new music" or a "new art", having nothing to do with the mainstream Western tradition, but owing much, in some vague way, to Eastern and Primitive art, and to that most intransigent of bugaboos, "mysticism".

It is true that Stockhausen became interested, not many years ago, in Hindu thought, just as it is true that Picasso, immediately before the conception of the infamous "Desmoiselles d'Avignon", derived enormous inspiration from African art; but to say that Stockhausen has now thrown holus bolus overboard the theories of his teachers Messiaen and Boulez (and thus those also of Stravinsky, Schoenberg, and so on back down the branches of the musical family tree) is tantamount to suggesting that the later work of Picasso owes nothing to Cezanne or to earlier painters, such as Corot, which as art criticism is a painfully myopic view of things.

Having transfixed, therefore, with the single arrow of common sense two of the more absurd albatrosses of modern thoughtlessness, it will next be our task to find out what exactly took place at l'Eglise du Sacre-Coeur in Ottawa, where the concert was held last Thursday night.

Many of those in the audience had doubtless come owing to the triple lure of curiosity, free admission, and the chance to pass as members of the musical "in crowd": most of these noisily left, bored perhaps to tears, after a point halfway through the concert at which they had burst explosively into applause during what turned out, humiliatingly enough for them, to be merely a pause of unusually long (about three minutes) duration.

The work itself "Stimmung for Six Vocalists", was composed in 1968, and was here performed with near-miraculous control and understanding of the score. If score it may be called: for being left to a great degree to the whims of the performers, the basic material is subject, somewhat in the manner of a kalaidescope, to endless repatterning, the result of this being that the possibility of there taking place two identical performances of the work is virtually nonexistent.

Mention was just made of the basic material of the work. Tonally, this consists of a single low tone and its various overtones; textually, it comprises names of the days of the week, mythical names (for example, "Vishnu"), and poems, "as well as concrete and abstract derivations from these categories" (this from the programme).

This critic's knowledge of German being, to say the least, imperfect, the source of the aforementioned poems could not with certainty be identified. Taking advantage, therefore, of the composer's presence at the concert, he ventured to ask the maestro, after the concert - and after revealing to him his approbation, as well as, in all probability, his lack of understanding of the piece - just what this source was.

Stockhausen, towering formidably over this writer by about a foot, appeared, at this, bemused: first, perhaps, because his knowledge of English, like mine of German, was imperfect, and second - which is the more likely interpretation - because it seemed to him incredible that anyone could ask such a brainless question.

The poems, he stated plainly, were his own. At this, the reviewer tried again, boldly venturing to ask whether these poems were soon to appear in print. Upon finding out, to his unfathomable dismay, that they already had been published, he decided that the best course of action under the present circumstances would be to avoid striking out entirely by beating a hasty retreat.

In such a manner abruptly began - and just as abruptly ended - my acquaintance with a musical genius. For a genius indeed he is. My companion at the concert, a person whose critical acumen in matters musical I place above my own, remarked after the concert that the music had, so to speak, transported her, carried her beyond herself.

Though my own acquaintance with the abstrusities of aesthetics is extremely limited, I could not help thinking to myself that this might be the primary purpose of all art, this inducement of an epiphany of sorts, during which, as Eliot has it music (is) heard so deeply that it is not heard at all, but you are the music while the music lasts.

And since, I suppose, only the very best music can lead us to such a condition, I leave it to you to decide, in the light of this consideration, the value of Stockhausen's achievement, as represented by this work.

One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest

By Sandy Naiman

The Collin's Bay Penitentiary Drama Club presented at the Grand Theatre last week, a play based on Ken Kesey's boisterous novel "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest" and did an exceptionally good job.

To begin, the scripting of the novel was very nicely executed, highlighting some of the more hilarious incidents which take place in an Institute of Psychology, where a group of men are victimized by a rather dictatorial head nurse, Miss Ratched.

The real action begins when a new patient comes onto the ward. A swaggering, gambling, profane rebel, who decides that its about time someone victimized the victimizer, and so Randle P. McMurphy begins his revolution.

The twelve scene, two act play covers the week of events which lead ultimately to R. P. McMurphy's lobotomy and death!

Rocky Thibeault, as R. P. McMurphy, clearly stole the show, with his hilarious antics as the resident rabble rouser and instigator of mischief. Peter Blacklock, as Chief Bromden, through whose subconscious we are supposedly to see the action of the play, was powerfully portrayed. Beverly Stewart as Nurse Ratched was about as appropriately obnoxious as one would imagine the Head Nurse of an insane asylum to be.

The acting was exceedingly good on all accounts. Cookie Gilchrist, as the stuttering Billy Bibbit was particularly well played.

One interesting innovation was the way in which Director Nancy Helwig manouvered scene changes. Instead of having the traditional black out, she used three out-of-focus projectors and recordings of sloppy sentimental tunes, perhaps to depict for the audience the hallucinatory minds of the inmates.

The atmosphere of the entire evening was abbetted by a very loud and rollicking audience who seemed to enjoy every second of the production.

This spirit of support seemed to intrigue the actors who played for the laughs that they were getting and the total enjoyment of their theatrical situation.

I must admit, that this production was one of the liveliest I have seen at the Grand, and that perhaps it may not be a bad idea to consider booking the Collins Bay Penitentiary Drama Club for more shows, until Theatre 5 can bring itself up to their superior standards.

Keep up the good work, fellows.

Pizza Factory
OPEN 4 p.m. to 2 a.m.
544-1221
Free Delivery in City Limits and Fort Henry Heights
Open 7 Days a Week

RED CROSS
IS ALWAYS THERE WITH YOUR HELP

FROSH

If you are not listed in Who's Where as being in first year, and you want your frosh photo to appear in the frosh section of Tricolor '72, please leave your name and faculty at the Tricolor Office (in the basement of the Union), before this weekend.

CONTACT LENSES
MARC F RAYMOND
CERTIFIED FITTER
By Appointment At
265 King St. E.
KINGSTON
Shorney OPTICIANS
542-1747

GRAD PHOTOS
A list of all grad photos to appear in Tricolor '72 will be in the AMS Outer Office all this week.
Please check that you are listed correctly.

Bring anybody out for dinner -- Great food from 2.99 -- every night!
It's Time to Book Your Party
or dance or stag or excuse for a drunk
The Round Table
We've got rooms from 5 - 1500 and great food and drink.
Call us . . . Now
The Round Table
Fully licenced - 542-7337
Clip this coupon -- Your second cocktail only 25c in any dining room.

Beware! Christmas lurks

by Bill Johnston

Well over a billion dollars will be spent on toys for children in North America this Christmas season and many of these toys, intended to bring pleasure to both the children and their parents, could instead bring tragedy.

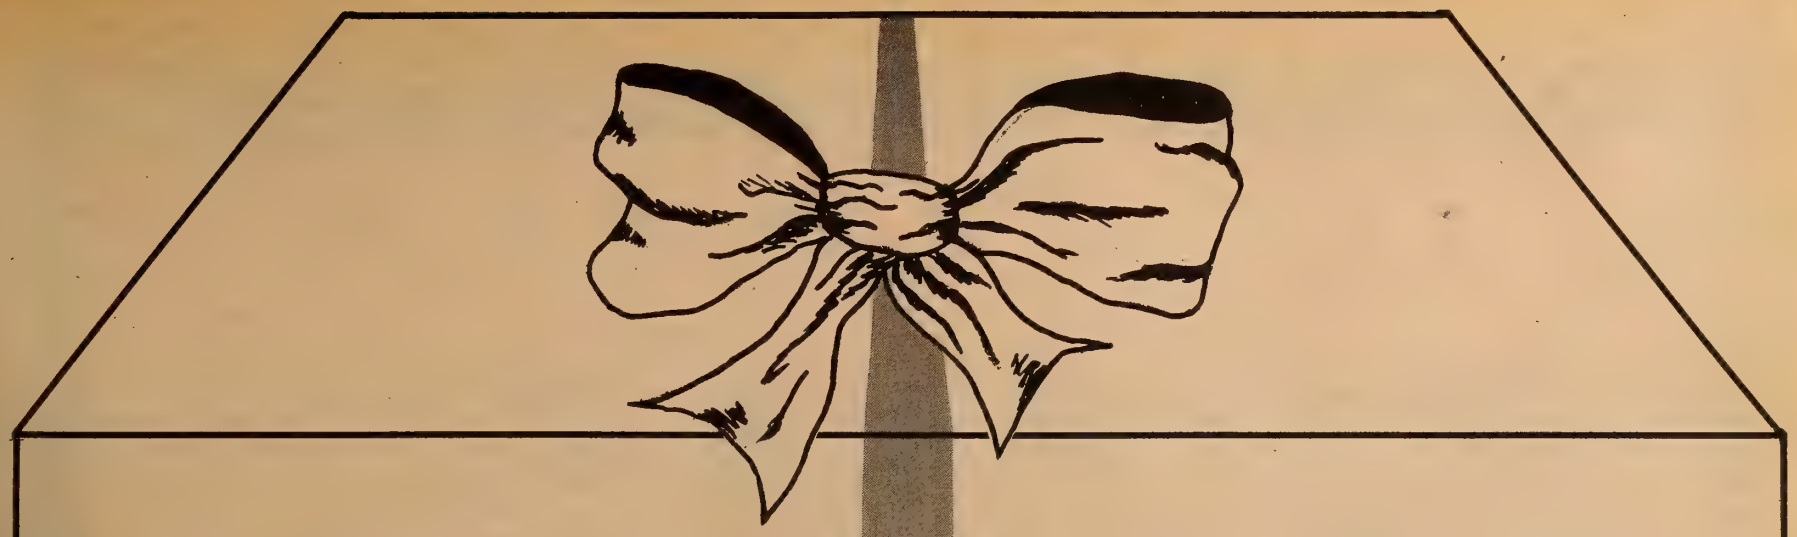
The danger posed by hazardous toys is not a small one, for every year in the United States over 700,000 children are seriously injured because of their toys (not counting such things as swings and slides which injure another 700,00 a year.) Given the fact that children between the ages of three and eight spend 60 percent of their time in play and with their toys and in light of the type of rough treatment they give them, one would expect that basic safety regulations would have long been applied by either the government or some regulatory body.

Yet, an abundance of dangerous toys which can burn, blind, electrocute, cut or poison children has come into existence because there has been no such control. In the United States, where $3 billion worth of toys are sold each year, there is still no legislation relating to the safety of toys. In Canada, where there are over 100 toy companies in an industry largely dominated by US-based conglomerates, the first legislation restricting the sale of dangerous toys, the Hazardous Products (Toys) Regulations, only went into effect last month.

These regulations deal with noise levels, heat restrictions, electrical safety, flammability and toxicity. They have resulted in the banning of a number of toys such as a rattle made of sharp piano wire; a child's lamp which can be easily dismantled, exposing two bare electrical wires; electric cars with faulty batteries; and wooden pull toys held together with sharp nails that can be pulled out.

They would, hopefully, also remove from sale such goodies as toy ovens which can reach temperatures of 500 degrees, or an eight-foot plastic tunnel, called Traffic Jam, through which children crawl in races, which was supposed to be nonflammable but in fact, burns well.

However, there seem to be a number of serious omissions in these regulations. They do not appear to deal with such things as darts or arrows which, with their rubber safety suctions caps removed, can stick into walls (and children); dolls which have long, sharp hatpins holding bows onto their heads; or toys that simply fall apart and then get eaten by babies.



The regulations do not even approach the problem of psychological damage which may be inflicted on children by such things as G.I. Joes and other war toys; ghoulish representations, in plastic, of parts of the human body which-according to the ads which say "An eye for an eye" - are supposed to be collected and traded; or many games which teach children unfortunate attitudes. Nor do the regulations prevent stores from selling toys, which might be quite safe for, say, a 12 year old, to a younger child for whom the toy might not be safe.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs contends that parents must bear a great deal of the responsibility in regard to toy purchasing and in determining whether a given toy is safe and suitable for their children, a not unreasonable idea (although it ignores the fact that one third of all toys are bought by children themselves) IF parents can get enough information about the toys to make reasonable decisions.

A year ago, the Department, with the Canadian Toy Testing Council, tried to supply some advice on toys in a 90 page booklet called Toys: A Guide for Consumers, which however, did not deal with the safety of toys but only with their suitability for various aged children. But even this timid venture has not been continued this year. The department last year gave the council $7,500 to help publish the book, but gave it no money this year ("It wasn't in our budget," one of the department's aides explained) and on top of this, the Canadian Toy Manufacturers' Association has withdrawn its support (free samples and a $500 grant) from the council in protest over the booklet. They claimed that it was discriminatory in that it only listed 600 toys. They may support the booklet next year if the council agrees to test any items that manufacturers send to them. It is also likely that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will supply funds again next year. In the meantime, anyone wishing a copy of the booklet for this Christmas season is out of luck, since the booklet has been out of print since at least last summer.

One could, perhaps, charitably conclude that, oh well, half measures are better than no measures at all (and we are ahead, after all, of the United States in this field, as if that country were any kind of a model), although it seems that the department has been content to employ that philosophy in nearly all its dealings.

And it will not be much consolation to those children and their parents, whose Christmas is ruined by some unsafe toy which should never have reached a store shelf.

The three wise guys

by Damon Runyon

One cold winter afternoon I am standing at the bar in Good Time Charley's little drum in West 49th Street, partaking of a mixture of rock candy and rye whisky, and this is a most surprising thing for me to be doing, as I am by no means a rumpot, and very seldom indulge in alcoholic beverages in any way, shape manner, or form.

But when I step into Good Time Charley's on the afternoon in question, I am feeling as if maybe I have a touch of grippe coming on, and Good Time Charley tells me that there is nothing in this world as good for a touch of grippe as rock candy and rye whisky, as it assassinates the germs at once.

It seems that Good Time Charley always keeps a stock of rock candy and rye whisky on hand for touches of the grippe, and he gives me a few doses immediately, and in fact Charley takes a few doses with me, as he says there is no telling but what I am scattering germs of my touch of the grippe all around the joint, and he must safeguard his health.We are both commencing to feel much better when the door opens, and who comes in but a guy by the name of Blondy Swanson.

This Blondy Swanson is a big, six-foot-two guy, with straw-colored hair, and pink cheeks, and he is originally out of Harlem, and it is well known to one and all that in his day he is the largest puller on the Atlantic seaboard. In fact, for upwards of ten years, Blondy is bringing wet goods into New York from Canada, and one place and another, and in all this time he never gets a fall, which is considered a phenomenal record for an operator as extensive as Blondy.

Well, Bondy steps up alongside me at the bar, and I ask him if he cares to have a few doses of rock candy and rye whisky with me and Good Time Charley, and Blondy says he will consider it a privilege and a pleasure, because, he says, he always has something of a sweet tooth. So we have these few doses, and I say to Blondy Swanson that I hope and trust that business is thriving with him.

"I have no business," Blondy Swanson says, "I retire from business."

Well if J. Pierpont Morgan, or John D. Rockefeller, or Henry Ford step up and tell me they retire from business, I will not be more astonished than I am by this statement from Blondy Swanson, and in fact not as much. I consider Blondy's statement the most important commercial announcement I hear in many years, and naturally I ask him why he makes such a decision, and what is to become of thousands of citizens who are dependent on him for merchandise.

"Well," Blondy says, "I retire from business because I am one hundred per cent American citizen. In fact," he says, "I am a patriot. I serve my country in the late war I am cited at Chateau-Thierry. I always vote the straight Democratic tickets, except," he says, "when we figure it better to elect some Republican. I always stand up when the band plays the Star Spangled Banner. One year I even pay an income tax," Blondy says.

And of course I know that many of these things are true, although I remember hearing rumors that if the draft officer is along half an hour later than he is, he will not see Blondy for heel dust, and that what Blondy is cited for at Chateau-Thierry is for not robbing the dead.

But of course I do not speak of these matters to Blondy Swanson, because Blondy is not such a guy as will care to listen to rumors, and may become indignant, and when Blondy is indignant he is very difficult to get along with.

"Now," Blondy says, "I am a bootie for a long time, and supply very fine merchandise to my trade, as everybody knows, and it is a respectable business, because one and all in this country are in favor of it, except the prohibitionists. But," he says, "I can see into the future, and I can see that one of these days they are going to repeal the prohibition law, and then it will be most unpatriotic to be bringing in wet goods from foreign parts in competition with home industry. So I retire," Blondy says.

"Well, Blondy," I say, "Your sentiments certainly do you credit, and if we have more citizens as high minded as you are, this will be a better country."

"Furthermore," Blondy says, "there is no money in booting any more. All the booties in this country are broke. I am broke myself," he says. "I just lose the last piece of property I own in the world, which if the twenty-five-G home I build in Atlantic City, figuring to spend the rest of my days there with Miss Clarabelle Cobb, before she takes a runout powder on me. Well," Blondy says, "if I only listen to Miss Clarabelle Cobb, I will now be an honest clerk in a gents' furnishing store, with maybe a cute little apartment up around 110th Street and children running all around and about."

And with this, Blondy sighs heavily, and I sigh with him, because the romance of Blondy Swanson and Miss Clarabelle Cobb is well known to one and all on Broadway.

It goes back a matter of anyway six years when Blondy Swanson is making money so fast he can scarcely stop to count it, and at this time Miss Clarabelle Cobb is the most beautiful doll in this town, and many citizens almost lose their minds just gazing at her when she is a member of Mr. Georgie White's Scandals, including Blondy Swanson.

In fact, after Blondy Swanson sees Miss Clarabelle Cobb in just one performance of Mr. Georgie White's Scandals, he is never quite the same guy again. He goes to a lot of bother meeting up with Miss Clarabelle Cobb, and then he takes to hanging out around Mr. Georgie White's stage door, and sending Miss Clarabell Cobb ten-pound boxes of candy, and floral horseshoes, and wreaths, and also packages of trinkets, including such articles as diamond bracelets, and brooches, and vanity cases, for there is no denying that Blondy is a fast guy with a dollar.

But it seems that Miss Clarabelle Cobb will not accept any of these offerings, except the candy and the flowers, and she goes so far as to return a sable coat that Blondy sends her one very cold day, and she is openly criticized for this action by some of the other dolls in Mr. Georgie White's Scandals, for they say that after all there is a limit even to eccentricity.

But Miss Clarabelle Cobb states that she is not accepting valuable offerings from any guy, and especially a guy who is engaged in trafficking in the demon rum, because she says that his money is nothing but blood money that comes from breaking the law of the land, although, as a matter of fact, this is a dead wrong rap against Blondy Swanson, as he never handles a drop of rum in his life, but only Scotch, and furthermore he keeps himself pretty well straightened out with the law.

The idea is, Miss Clarabelle Cobb comes of very religious people back in Akron, Ohio, and she is taught from childhood that rum is a terrible thing, and personally I think it is myself, except in cocktails, and furthermore, the last thing her mamma tells her when she leaves for New York is to beware of any guys who come around offering her diamond bracelets and fur coats, because her mamma says such guys are undoubtedly snakes in the grass, and probably on the make.

But while she will not accept his offerings, Miss Clarabelle Cobb does not object to going out with Blondy Swanson now and then, and putting on the chicken Mexicaine, and the lobster Newburg, and other items of this nature, and any time you put a good-looking young guy and a beautiful doll together over the chicken Mexicaine and the lobster Newburg often enough, you are apt to have a case of love on your hands.

And this is what happens to Blondy Swanson and Miss Clarabelle Cobb, and in fact they become in love more than somewhat, and Bondy Swanson is wishing to marry Miss Clarabelle Cobb, but one night over a batch of lobster Newburg, she says to him like this:

"Blondy," she says, "I love you, and," she says, "I will marry you in a minute if you get out of trafficking in rum. I will marry you if you are out of the rum business, and do not have a dime, but I will never marry you as long as you are dealing in rum, no matter if you have a hundred million."

Well, Blondy says he will get out of the racket at once, and he keeps saying this every now and then for a year or so, and the chances are that several times he means it, but when a guy is in this business in those days as strong as Blondy Swanson it is not so easy for him to get out, even if he wishes to do so. And then one day Miss Clarabell Cobb has a talk with Blondy, and says to him as follows:

"Blondy," she says, "I still love you, but you care more for your business than you do for me. So I am going back to Ohio," she says. "I am sick and tired of Broadway, anyhow. Some day when you are really through with the terrible traffic you are now engaged in, come to me."

And with this, Miss Clarabelle Cobb takes plenty of outdoors on Blondy Swanson, and is seen no more in these parts. At first Blondy thinks she is only trying to put a little pressure on him, and will be back, but as the weeks become months, and the months finally count up into years, Blondy can see that she is by no means clowning with him. Furthermore, he never hears from her, and all he knows is she is back in Akron, Ohio.

Well, Blondy is always promising himself that he will soon pack in on hauling wet goods, and go look up Miss Clarabelle Cobb and marry her, but he keeps putting it off, and putting it off, until finally one day he hears that Miss Clarabelle Cobb marries some legitimate guy in Akron, and this is a terrible blow to Blondy, indeed, and from this day he never looks at another doll again, or anyway not much.

Naturally, I express my deep sympathy to Blondy about being broke, and I also mention that my heart bleeds for him in his loss of Miss Clarabelle Cobb, and we have a few doses of rock candy and rye whisky on both propositions, and by this time Good Time Charley runs out of rock candy, and anyway it is a lot of bother for him to be mixing it up with the rye whisky, so we have the rye whisky without the rock candy, and personally I do not notice much difference.

Well, while we are standing there at the bar having our rye whisky without the rock candy, who comes in but an old guy by the name of The Dutchman, who is known to one and all as a most illegal character in every respect. In fact, The Dutchman has no standing whatever in the community Continued on page ten and I am somewhat surprised to see him appear in Good Time Charley's, because The Dutchman is generally a lammie from some place, and the gendarmes everywhere are always anxious to have a chat with him. The last I hear of The Dutchman he is in college somewhere out West for highway robbery, although afterwards he tells me it is a case of mistaken identity. It seems he mistakes a copper in plain clothes for a groceryman.

The Dutchman is an old-fashioned looking guy of maybe fifty-odd, and he has gray hair, and a stubby gray beard, and he is short, and thickset, and always good-natured, even when there is no call for it, and to look at him you will think there is no more harm in him than there is in a preacher, and maybe not as much.

As The Dutchman comes in, he takes a peek all around and about as if he is looking for somebody in particular, and when he sees Blondy Swanson he moves up alongside Blondy and begins whispering to Blondy until Blondy pulls away and tells him to speak freely.

Now The Dutchman has a very interesting story, and it goes like this: It seems that about eight or nine months back The Dutchman is mobbed up with a party of three very classy heavy guys who make guite a good thing of going around knocking off sales in small-town jugs, and post offices, and stores in small towns, and taking the money, or whatever else is valuable in these safes. This is once quite a popular custom in this country, although it dies out to some extent of late years because they improve the brand of safes so much it is a lot of bother knocking them off, but it comes back during the depression when there is no other way of making money, until it is a very prosperous business again. And of course this is very nice for old-time heavy guys, such as The Dutchman, because it gives them something to do in their old age.

Anyway, it seems that this party The Dutchman is with goes over into Pennsylvania one night on a tip from a friend and knocks off a safe in a factory office, and gets a pay roll amounting to maybe fifty G's. But it seems that while they are making their getaway in an automobile, the gendarmes take out after them, and there is a chase, during which there is considerable blasting back and forth.

Well, finally in this blasting, the three guys with The Dutchman get cooled off, and The Dutchman also gets shot up quite some, and he abandons the automobile out on an open road, taking the money, which is in a gripsack, with him, and he somehow manages to escape the gendarmes by going across country, and hiding here and there.

But The Dutchman gets pretty well petered out, what with his wounds, and trying to lug the gripsack, and one night he comes to an old deserted barn, and he decides to stash the gripsack in this barn, because there is no chance he can keep lugging it around much longer. So he takes up a few boards in the floor of the barn, and digs a nice hole in the ground underneath and plants the gripsack there, figuring to come back some day and pick it up.

Well, The Dutchman gets over into New Jersey one way and another, and lays up in a town by the name of New Brunswick until his wounds are healed, which requires considerable time as The Dutchman cannot take it nowadays as good as he can when he is younger.

Furthermore, even after The Dutchman recovers and gets to thinking of going after the stashed gripsack, he finds he is about half out of confidence, which is what happens to all guys when they commence getting old, and he figures that it may be a good idea to declare somebody else in to help him, and the first guy he thinks of is Blondy Swanson, because he knows Blondy Swanson is a very able citizen in every respect.

"Now, Blondy," the Dutchman says, "if you like my proposition, I am willing to cut you in for fifty per cent, and fifty per cent of fifty G's is by means pretzels in these times."

"Well, Dutchman," Blondy says, "I will gladly assist you in this enterprise on the terms you state. It appeals to me as a legitimate proposition, because there is no doubt this dough is coming to you, and by way of making a somewhat long story short, Blondy decides to go in with the Dutchman on this proposition and I, in my turn, decide to do the same. So we take ourselves a bottle of rock candy and rye whiskey without the rock candy and climb into the old can that the Dutchman is driving in these times.

So for several hours, we are driving and drinking and Blondy and myself are trusting the Dutchman's directions because he must know where he is going.

The Dutchman says,"I am following the big star you see up ahead of us, because I remember seeing this star always in front of me when I am going along this road before."

So we keep following the star, but it turns out that it is not a star at all, but a light shining from the window of a ramshackle old frame building pretty well off to one side of the road and on a rise of ground, and when The Dutchman sees this light, he is greatly nonplussed, indeed, and speaks as follows:

"Well," he says, "this looks very much like my barn, but my barn does not call for a light in it. Let us investigate this matter before we go any farther."

So The Dutchman gets out of the old can, and slips up to one side of the building and peeks through the window, and then he comes back and motions for Blondy and me to also take a peek through this window, which is nothing but a square hole cut in the side of the building with wooden bars across it, but no window panes, and what we behold inside by the dim light of a lantern hung on a nail on a post is really most surprising.

There is no doubt whatever that we are looking at the inside of a very old barn, for there are several stalls for horses, or maybe cows, here and there, but somebody seems to be living in the barn, as we can see a table and chairs, and a tin stove, in which there is a little fire, and on the floor in one corner is what seems to be a sort of a bed.

Furthermore, there seems to be somebody lying on the bed and making quite a fuss in the way of groaning and crying and carrying on generally in a loud tone of voice, and there is no doubt that it is the voice of a doll, and anybody can tell that this doll is in some distress.

Well, here is a situation, indeed, and we move away from the barn to talk it over.

The Dutchman is greatly discouraged, because he gets to thinking that if this doll is living in the barn for any length of time, his plant may be discovered. He is willing to go away and wait awhile, but Blondy Swanson seems to be doing quite some thinking, and finally Blondy says like this:

"Why," Blondy says, "the doll in this barn seems to be sick, and only a bounder and a cad will walk away from a sick doll, especially," Blondy says, "a sick doll who is a total stranger to him. In fact, it will take a very large heel to do such a thing. The idea is for us to go inside and see if we can do anything for this sick doll," Blondy says.

Well, I say to Blondy Swanson that the chances are the doll's ever-loving husband, or somebody, is in town, or maybe over to the nearest neighbors digging up assistance, and will be back in a jiffy, and that this is no place for us to be found.

"No," Blondy says, "it cannot be as you state. The snow on the ground is anyway a day old. There are no tracks around the door of this old joint, going or coming, and it is a cinch if anybody knows there is a sick doll here, they will have plenty of time to get help before this. I am going inside and look things over." Blondy says.

Naturally, The Dutchman and I go too, because we do not wish to be left alone outside, and it is no trouble whatever to get into the barn, as the door is unlocked, and all we have to do is walk in. And when we walk in with Blondy Swanson leading the way, the doll on the bed on the floor half raises up to look at us, and although the light of the lantern is none too good, anybody can see that this doll is nobody but Miss Clarabelle Cobb, although personally I see some change in her since she is in Mr. Georgie White's Scandals.

She stays half raised up on the bed looking at Blondy Swanson for as long as you can count ten, if you count fast, then she falls back and starts crying and carrying on again, and at this The Dutchman kneels down on the floor beside her to find out what is eating her.

All of a sudden The Dutchman jumps up and speaks to us as follows:

"Why," he says, "this is quite a delicate situation, to be sure. In fact," he says, "I must request you guys to step outside. What we really need for this case is a doctor, but it is too late to send for one. However, I will endeavor to do the best I can under the circumstances."

Then The Dutchman starts taking off his overcoat, and Blondy Swanson stands looking at him with such a strange expression on his kisser that The Dutchman laughs out loud, and says like this:

"Do not worry about anything, Blondy," The Dutchman says. "I am maybe a little out of practice since my old lady put her checks back in the rack, but she leaves eight kids alive and kicking, and I bring them all in except one, because we are seldom able to afford a croaker."

So Blondy Swanson and I step out of the barn and after a while The Dutchman calls us and we go back into the barn to find he has a big fire going in the stove, and the place nice and warm.

Miss Clarabelle Cobb is now all quieted down, and is covered with The Dutchman's overcoat, and as we come in The Dutchman tiptoes over to her and pulls back the coat and what do we see but a baby with a noggin no bigger than a crab apple and a face as wrinkled as some old pappy guy's, and The Dutchman states that it is a boy, and a very healthy one, at that.

"Furthermore," The Dutchman says, "the mamma is doing as well as can be expected. She is as strong a doll as ever I see," he says, "and all we have to do now is send out a croaker when we go through town just to make sure there are no complications. But," The Dutchman says, "I guarantee the croaker will not have much to do."

Well the old Dutchman is as proud of this baby as if it is his own, and I do not wish to hurt his feelings, so I say the baby is a darberoo, and a great credit to him in every respect, and also to Miss Clarabelle Cobb, while Blondy Swanson just stands there looking at it as if he never sees a baby before in his life, and is greatly astonished.

It seems that Miss Clarabelle Cobb is a very strong doll, just as The Dutchman states, and in about an hour she shows signs of being wide awake, and Blondy Swanson sits down on the floor beside her, and she talks to him quite a while in a low voice, and while they are talking The Dutchman pulls up the floor in another corner of the barn, and digs around underneath a few minutes, and finally comes up with a gripsack covered with dirt, and he opens this gripsack and shows me it is filled with lovely, large coarse banknotes.

Later Blondy Swanson tells The Dutchman and me the story of Miss Clarabelle Cobb, and parts of this story are rather sad. It seems that after Miss Clarabelle Cobb goes back to her old home in Akron, Ohio, she winds up marrying a young guy by the name of Joseph Hatcher, who is a bookkeeper by trade, and has a pretty good job in Akron, so Miss Clarabelle Cobb and this Joseph Hatcher are as happy as anything together for quite a spell.

Then about a year before the night I am telling about, Joseph Hatcher is sent by his firm to these parts where we find Miss Clarabelle Cobb, to do the bookkeeping in a factory there, and one night a few months afterwards, when Joseph Hatcher is staying after hours in the factory office working on his books, a mob of wrong gees breaks into the joint, and sticks him up, and blows open the safe, taking away a large sum of money and leaving Joseph Hatcher tied up like a turkey.

When Joseph Hatcher is discovered in this predicament the next morning, what happens but the gendarmes put the sleeve on him, and place him in the pokey, saying the chances are Joseph Hatcher is in and in with the safe blowers, and that he tips them off the dough is in the safe, and it seems that the guy who is especially fond of this idea is a guy by the name of Ambersham, who is manager of the factory, and a very hard-hearted guy, at that.

And now, although this is eight or nine months back, there is Jospeh Hatcher still in the pokey awaiting trial, and it is 7 to 5 anywhere in town that the judge throws the book at him when he finally goes to bat, because it seems from what Miss Clarabelle Cobb tells Blondy Swanson that nearly everybody figures Josephy Hatcher is guilty.

But of course Miss Clarabelle Cobb does not put in with popular opinion about her ever-loving Joe, and she spends the next few months trying to spring him from the pokey, but she has no potatoes, and no way of getting any potatoes, so things go from bad to worse with Miss Clarabelle Cobb.

Finally, she finds herself with no place to live in town, and she happens to run into this old barn, which is on an abandoned property owned by a doctor in town by the name of Kelton, and it seems that he is a kind-hearted guy, and he gives her permission to use it any way she wishes. So Miss Clarabelle moves into the barn, and the chances are there is many a time when she wishes she is back in Mr. Georgie White's Scandals.

Now The Dutchman listens to this story with great interest, especially the part about Joseph Hatcher being left tied up in the factory office, and finally The Dutchman states as follows:

"Why, my goodness," The Dutchman says, "there is no doubt but what this is the very same young guy we are compelled to truss up the night we get this gripsack. As I recollect it, he wishes to battle for his employer's dough, and I personally tap him over the coco with a blackjack.

"But," he says, "he is by no means the guy who tips us off about the dough being there. As I remember it now, it is nobody but the guy whose name you mention in Miss Clarabelle Cobb's story. It is this guy Ambersham, the manager of the joint, and come to think of it, he is supposed to get his bit of this dought for his trouble, and it is only fair that I carry out this agreement as the executor of the estate of my late comrades, although," The Dutchman says, "I do not approve of his conduct toward this Joseph Hatcher. But," he says, "the first thing for us to do is to get a doctor out here to Miss Clarabelle Cobb, and I judge the doctor for us to get is this Doc Kelton she speaks of."

So The Dutchman takes the gripsack and we get into the old can and head back the way we come, although before we go I see Blondy Swanson bend down over Miss Clarabelle Cobb, and while I do not wish this to go any farther, I will take a paralyzed oath I see him plant a small kiss on the baby's noggin, and I hear Miss Clarabelle Cobb speak as follows;

"I will name him for you, Blondy," she says. "By the way, Blondy, what is your right name?"

"Olaf," Blondy says.

It is now along in the early morning and not many citizens are stirring as we go through town again, with Blondy in the front seat again holding the gripsack on his lap so The Dutchman can drive, but finally we find a guy in an all-night lunch counter who knows where Doc Kelton lives, and this guy stands on the running board of the old can and guides us to a house in a side street, and after pounding on the door quite a spell, we roust the Doc out and Blondy goes inside to talk with him.

He is in there quite a spell, but when he comes out he says everything is okay, and that Doc Kelton will go at once to look after Miss Clarabelle Cobb, and take her to a hospital, and Blondy states that he leaves a couple of C's with the Doc to make sure Miss Clarabelle Cobb gets the best of care.

"Well," The Dutchman says, "we can afford a couple of C's out of what we have in this gripsack, but," he says, "I am still wondering if it is not my duty to look up this Ambersham, and give him his bit."

"Dutchman," Blondy says, "I fear I have some bad news for you. The gripsack is gone. This Doc Kelton strikes me as a right guy in every respect, especially," Blondy says, "as he states to me that he always half suspects there is a wrong rap in on Miss Clarabelle Cobb's ever-loving Joe, and that if it is not for this guy Ambersham agitating all the time other citizens may suspect the same thing, and it will not be so tough for Joe.

"So," Blondy says, "I tell Doc Kelton the whole story, about Ambersham and all, and I take the liberty of leaving the gripsack wih him to be returned to the rightful owners, and Doc Kelton says if he does not have Miss Clarabelle Cobb's Joe out of the sneezer, and this Ambersham on the run out of town in twenty-four hours, I can call him a liar. But," Blondy says, "let us now proceed on our way, because I only have Doc Kelton's word that he will give us twelve hours' leeway before he does anything except attend to Miss Clarabelle Cobb, as I figure you need this much time to get out of sight, Dutchman."

Well, The Dutchman does not say anything about all this news for a while, and seems to be thinking the situation over, and while he is thinking he is giving his old can a little more gas than he intends, and she is fairly popping along what seems to be the main drag of the town when a gendarme on a motorcycle comes up alongside us, and motions The Dutchman to pull over to the curb.

He is a nice-looking young gendarme, but he seems somewhat hostile as he gets off his motorcycle, and walks up to us very slow, and asks us where the fire is.

Naturally, we do not say anything in reply, which is the only thing to say to a gendarme under these circumstances, so he speaks as follows;

"What are you guys carrying in this old skillet, anyway?" he says. "Stand up, and let me look you guys over."

And then as we stand up, he peeks into the front and back of the car, and under our feet, and all he finds is a bottle which once holds some of Good Time Charley's rock candy and rye whisky without the rock candy, but which is now very empty, and he holds this bottle up, and sniffs at the nozzle, and asks what is formerly in this bottle, and I tell him the truth when I tell him it is once full of medicine, and The Dutchman and Blondy Swanson nod their heads in support of my statement. But the gendarme takes another sniff, and then says like this:

"Oh," he says, very sarcastic, "wise guys, eh? Three wise guys, eh? Trying to kid somebody, eh? Medicine, eh?" he says. "Well, if it is not Christmas Day I will take you in and hold you just on suspicion. But I will be Santa Claus to you, and let you go ahead, wise guys."

And then after we get a few blocks away. The Dutchman speaks as follows:

"Yes," he says, "that is what we are, to be sure. We are wise guys. If we are not wise guys, we will still have the gripsack in this car for the copper to find. And if the copper finds the gripsack, he will wish to take us to the jail house for investigation, and if he wishes to take us there I fear he will not be alive at this time, and we will be in plenty of heat around and about, and personally," The Dutchman says, "I am sick and tired of heat."

And with this The Dutchman puts a large Betsy back in a holster under his left arm, and turns on the gas, and as the old can begins leaving the lights of the town behind, I ask Blondy if he happens to notice the name of this town.

"Yes," Blondy says, "I notice it on a signboard we just pass. It is Bethlehem, Pa."

CLASSIFIEDS

FREE Apartment for 4 months for couple in return for caretaking. 6 miles from Kingston. Semi-furnished. Reliable car essential. Phone 546-4911 Sunday evening or Monday.

HAMILTONAREA STUDENTS Be a Yule Foor at a Queen's Christmas Bash at Paddy Green's. 8 p.m., Thursday, Dec. 23. Officially sanctioned by Santa.

AVAILABLE after Christmas, one HUGE corner double room in women's residence. Call 544-8303.

SINGLE ROOM available after Christmas. Occupants of house are all students. Very near campus. Call 542-4444 almost anytime.

OFFICIAL NOTICE: The conch hand is alive and well and will be in the mananas for Christmas. Jansel Court apts., Freeport.

SKI BOOTS: Henke and Kastinger buckle boots, sizes 8 and 9 respectively. Excellent condition. Phone 544-9739.

LOST a Queen's scarf in Queen's Gym locker room. Sunday night. Phone Dennis at 542-6166. Reward.

WANTED a two or more bedroom apartment suitable for four girls. Needed for January 1st. Phone 544-9718.

FOR SALE -- 1 pair Sumer Ttiff Lange standard size 9. 1 pair metallic skis 195cm. Make offer. Fight Inflation. Ski cheap. Phone 544-7110.

WANDERLUST needs desperately an accordion player to play intermittantly for about 3 hours on January 15. Also needs donations of empty wine bottles for decorating purposes. If you can help, please phone 544-8613.

FOR RENT -- January 1. 2-bedroom unfurnished apt. $145 per month. Phone 544-9509 or 544-0929 after 5 p.m.

MALE wanted to fill vacancy in 3-bedroom apartment. Available January 1. 12 minute walk from Union. Rent $50. Modern building, washer, dryer. Phone 546-5671.

PADDY GREEN'S -- Hamilton area Queen's students, on December 23, shall congregate at PADDY'S for an evening of good companionship and fine draft, from 9.30 on.

RENT-A-FAG Cheap and experienced. Please call Cutems. 544-6699.

ASUS Other Events Committee holding New Year's Eve party in Queen's pub (2nd floor common room, Union) for all Queen's staff, students, faculty. Admission $1.50 ($2.50 per couple). 8.30 p.m. - Dec. 31.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5 year warranty, 5 sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

CHRISTMAS reunion! December 22 at the new Dynes Tavern, 8:30 p.m., 337 Beach Blvd. Hamilton (on the beach strip between Hamilton and Burlington). In the ladies and escorts room.

AVAILABLE for one girl, fully furnished room in 2-bedroom apartment. Clean, cheerful. Ten minute walk from campus; right downtown. Available for occupancy after Dec. 13. Rent $75 monthly including utilities. Phone 544-[illegible]

OTOS III

OIL THIGH ON SKATES

Saturday, Dec. 18
8:30 pm.

Nathan Phillips Square Skating Rink, Toronto City Hall

All Queen's Students, Alumni, Staff, Friends etc. Welcome!

CASINO ROYALE

COMES TO QUEEN'S
JANUARY 10, 1972

A COMMERCE SPONSORED RAFFLE

Hoechst thinks ahead

Moving with the Times

This year Canadian Hoechst marks its eighteenth year of growth in Canada by moving into new custom-built Montreal headquarters. The Canadian expansion has been closely linked to the worldwide development of Hoechst, which is now among the world's top five chemical companies, with worldwide sales that last year totalled approximately 3.5 billion dollars.

In Canada, sales have almost doubled in the past three years. The new St. Laurent head office and warehouse buildings will provide space for a 100% increase in the company's head office staff, and have been designed for expansion to accomodate increased Canadian production.

Research: Window to the Future

Today's research creates the products of tomorrow. One-third of Hoechst's current sales come from products which did not exist 10 years ago. And with worldwide sales approximating close to 3.5 billion dollars last year, Hoechst spent close to 100 million in pure research, and on laboratory buildings and equipment. The results of this investment decide Hoechst's position in future markets, including Canada.

Helping Build Canada

Products and ideas from Hoechst have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. As an affiliate of the worldwide Hoechst organization, Canadian Hoechst has a full century of research and achievement to draw upon. In Canada, Hoechst is an autonomous company employing Canadians to serve Canadian needs.

This new building is just one of the more visible indications of Canadian Hoechst Limited's continuing investment in Canada.

Hoechst in Canada concerns itself with supplying both the present and future needs of Canadians. The range of products and services covers the spectrum through industrial chemicals, dyestuffs, plastics, human and veterinary medicines, pharmaceuticals, and textile fibres. Hoechst products and services, Hoechst techniques and know-how in these fields, combined with a large international fund of experience, have given the Company a reputation for expertise which takes constant striving to live up to. Hoechst likes it that way. So do their customers, here and around the world. Hoechst thinks ahead.

REG. T.M. HOECHST
HOECHST

Canadian Hoechst Limited
4045 Côte Vertu
Montreal 383, Quebec

40 Lesmill Road
Don Mills, Ontario

701-1-1

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 32
Thursday, December 9, 1971
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Managing Editors: John Solman. Charles Schwier
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks this issue to all the above and others who have helped this term. To them, and everyone else who's interested, Merry Christmas and Happy New Year, if you are so inclined.

"If you got something, it's 'cause you're good; if you got nothing, it's 'cause you're bad; just ask Santa Claus."

Idea by Cobb

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Santa Claus swooped down in a helicopter Saturday at a local shopping centre and was mobbed immediately by about 600 youngsters who knocked him down and emptied his goodie-bag.

"I thought I was going to be killed," said Lee Garen after he had been rescued by police. "They broke down the barriers and rushed me. I got knocked to the ground and couldn't even move.

"I finally managed to get up and yelled, 'Get back! get back!" and kept most of them off me until the police could get through.

"One of the kids who got me down was about 14 years old," Garen said later. "He should have known better, but I did manage to kick him in the knee."

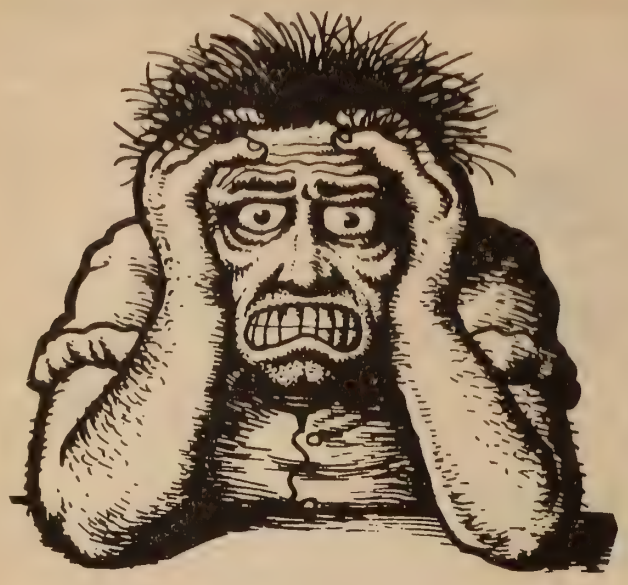
Canadians are about to toss half a billion dollars into the annual spending spree that takes place at the time Christians celebrate the birth of the Saviour. The money will be lavished on food and drink, greeting cards and gifts -- toys, gadgets, knicknacks and assorted "luxuries" of dubious value.

Many Canadians will gain nothing from this outlay but indigestion, hangovers and a household of unwanted and soon-broken junk. It's a poor bargain for $500,000,000.
— W. E. Mann, Maclean's, Dec. 17, 1960.

This part of Christmas is still a bad bargain, and it probably costs twice what it did when the above was written.

The sad thing is that all this -- encouragement of greed in children, the superfluous spending, the "politics" of Santa Claus (cartoon above right) -- should have ever become part of Christmas, a season which is meant to celebrate the best in people -- their generosity, their love, their friendliness, their willingness to sacrifice, even their lives, for the good of all (this last being the original reason for the celebration.)

It is easy to be cynical about the whole season, faced with the way that Christmas is used by so many -- the booze merchants, tinsel pushers, retail-chain junk peddlers and others who play on people's guilt that they might not give enough. But to do so would be to become as superficial as those who are rightly to be despised for nearly destroying this beautiful season.



For, in the end, Christmas is a personal thing, a time for sharing with close friends and a time when a person can withdraw from the world for even a few quiet hours of self-renewal.

Christmas is what you let it be or make it become.

Peace.

Celebrate!

It's nearly over!!!

Commerce boys try to break even

Once again the boys from Dunning Hall are venturing forth from their calculators to sponsor another campus-wide function. Another one, you say? Well, in case you missed the last two (which is highly probable), we presented the Judy LaMarsh Banquet and the Commerce Barn Party.

Despite the low turnout, the Judy LaMarsh Banquet (she was delicious: we sauteed her hands and feet, pickled her head and rumour has it that Padre Laverty got the pope's nose) was a ultural success. However, we ost money.

Undaunted, we reached further nto the abyss of financial ruin by olding a barn party. When the results were in, the organizers ought asylum in Theology Hall.

Needless to say, another such display of financial wizardry and the School of Business will be relocated in the Scott Mission. The Commerce Society does not give up graciously, however. The Dunning Whiz Kids are now going to hold what they affectionately refer to as a "break-even raffle". Lest we seem too mercenary, we decided to call it the Casino Royale Raffle.

First prize will be an all expense paid week (reading week) for two in Las Vegas (including round trip airfare from Toronto or Montreal, accommodation at the Sands Hotel, a Mach 1 Mustang for the week and $500 spending money.) Second prize will be a $300 stereo and third prize, 20 single albums of your hoice.

Leaving nothing to chance, the society is bringing the Vegas Viceroy to Queen's for the raffle. V.V. is a guy who has the touch of gold. He's never lost anything in his life (card games, roulette, his virginity, etc.) He arrives on January 10 and will be here until the draw on Feb. 11. Rumours are spreading that he will be followed here by Casino Cal, whom the Viceroy wiped out playing Old Maid last month. We'll have to wait to see if this rumour is true.

Anyway, if you think that reading week in Las Vegas wouldn't be too hard to take, why don't you buy a ticket? After all, they're only a buck and what the hell, it's only money.

Notice: Mr. W.L.M.

at Brockville
We have lost the letter with your address, and, as we have a letter to send to you we would appreciate your sending us your address again. Sorry for the inconvenience

letters:

Hurrah for our constables

Dear Editors;

As an observer at the Square Dance held at Wallace Hall on Saturday evening I would like to congratulate the conduct of the two A.M.S. Constables who were on duty.

I was appalled by the aggressive and provocative manner of a graduate student who, having not paid the admission fee, entered the Hall and when approached by a constable gripped hold of the constables' lapels and indicated that he was to be left alone or...The student and his friend, both of goodly size, did eventually leave without trouble.

The question is do we ask too much of our student police? Can we expect them to put aside their normal reactions when dealing with the unpleasant 'few' of the University population?

I doubt if Kingston's Police would inhibit their normal reactions when dealing with a technical assault on police! The 'few' are well aware of the difference in power and effect between the two 'Constabularies' and use the difference to advantage. Are we asking our student constables to endure provocation and insult when we know our civilian police would not.

-R. Boagie

Money, not doctors

Dear Editors:

During the last couple of weeks I have been reading with "amusement" the exchanges between Norman Eshoo and Walter Spunde concerning their ideologies on money. However, my "amusement" has since turned to mild distress due to the gratuitous and sarcastic interjections by editor Leslie Kaye.

Firstly, you took to addending vitriolic comments to Eshoo's first letter. You concede an error on the part of the Journal in the omission of the asterisk, but fail to apologize to Eshoo for this mistake. Come now, this should have been done for the sake of common politeness!

Instead, you chose to use the space to add further to your disdain for doctors. Furthermore, even though I heartily disagree with Eshoo's philosophy, I think that he is entitled to his opinion, and deserves to have it published in the Journal without the "benefit" of your addenda and accompanying "cartoon" (which, by the way, I think uses a quote from him out of context with his philosophy! -- Do you really understand what he is saying?).

Secondly, I fully understand that it is necessary and useful to generalize in certain situations, but one must be careful in doing so. I can only speak for myself and a few of my medical friends, but I can guarantee you that there are doctors, and doctors-to be, around for whom money is not "one of their primary motivations".

I would suggest Leslie, that you look a little deeper and a little longer than your "years of dealing with many doctors" (how many years; how many doctors?) before you make a blanket condemnation of us all.

Some of us in the medical profession are not primarily motivated by money, nor hold the philosophy of Norman Eshoo. It is indeed unfortunate that you, and a lot of people in our society feel this way about all doctors based on a few experiences and on what we read or are led to believe.

Don't take me wrong, I am not defending the medical profession, or the attitudes of some of its members, because I do not feel in a position to assess it properly as yet.

What I am saying is that making statements like you have made, based on the evidence that you present in your Editor's Note, is uncalled for, and out of context with the material that it was addended to.

You too are entitled to your opinion, but I do not believe you should use your position as editor to deride and castigate others and their opinions.

If you want to write an Editorial on the medical profession, do so, but add a little more credibility to it than just your personal feelings. Furthermore, I do not feel that it is the right of an editor to add things to letters, or any other material, that changes the essence of that material. Eshoo and Spundle were discussing their philosophy on money, not the motivation of doctors.

Finally, maybe the next time you are in need of medical attention you will realize that there are other "purposes" involved.

-John Bardsley

American-trained Canadian economists

Dear Editors:

Get a Canadian economist who is a product of an America graduate school to pronounce on U.S. investments in Canada - the outcome will be fairly predictable.

This observation was nicely illustrated by the informal panel discussion (Fri., Nov. 22) involving two economists defending, a political scientist and a psychologist against, the view that U.S. investment in this country is a benefit for which Canadians should have sufficient good manners to show more appreciation.

To give economists their credit, they have undergone hard years of training in order to achieve the intellectual eminence they tell us they possess. There are repositories of expert knowledge on the economy, that can't be denied.

So why do they sound so absurd? Perhaps the answer lies in those hard years spent busily digesting "value free" concepts, concepts having only a marginal life. Well, value free by American standards anyhow.

The economist, by a process of reptitious chant heard throughout the American Cathedrals of learning, eventually realizes that perfect competition is perfect holiness and government is perfect hell. International borders are a blessing only if they conform to the "optimal currency area," otherwise they serve only to interrupt the free flow of capital and labour throughout the best of all possible worlds.

In view of our understanding of the economist cast in the American mold, we can better appreciate Dr. Prachowny's de-emphasis of the problem of foreign ownership and control of a sizable chunk of the Canadian economy, and his deep concern over the monopoly form U.S. direct investment takes.

Not questioning that monopolies may have a more natural existence on this present-day earth than ethereal perfect competition - how can he - Dr. Prachowny seems to imply that Canadians should just worry about the presences of a population growth in monopolies and take their minds off that other problem, which really isn't a problem anyway.

Is this the therapeutic prescription for a simply psychosomatic illness? Under this treatment you will no longer be aware of absorption by economic osmosis into the Republic, or the fact that you have been drafted to defend the vast empire of multi-national corporations against the current Viet Cong. And if one is not aware, there is no problem.

There has been a startling amount of takeovers of Canadian firms by foreigners recently (see From Gordon, to Watkins, to You, U. of T. Press). How does this fact square with the Good Economist Prochowny's claim that American investment in this country is declining in importance?

I don't see many Japanese or German speaking directors of multinational corporations in downtown Toronto or Montreal. Perhaps the branch plants print their own money? Of course, the explanation is perfectly simple. The branch plants reinvest their retained earnings - Canadian dollars!

Now, if the economist would not admit a nontrivial role for government we might see how the osmosis might be stopped and even reversed.

Firstly, a vast amount of Canadian capital is portfolio investment in the United States, often because of institutional barriers imposed on Canadian trust and insurance companies. Their investment freedom has been restricted precisely because they can't be trusted.

If private financial monopolies can't be trusted then the country can't do any worse than to operate public financial monopolies, particularly if the government were a little more open and accountable to the wider public than it is at present. At least private corporations don't have regular open elections based on a universal franchise.

Secondly, foreign investment does not have to be of the direct kind used by multinational corporations to gain control over their investment and by which natives of the host country are denied buying stocks and shares.

British investment was responsible in part for the growth of U.S. railroads in the 19th century, through portfolio investment. The Americans managed to get the capital they needed without any loss of control. Is there a lesson here?

Thirdly, if Canada did have satisfactory control over her economy - and by this I mean more than merely tinkering with the money supply - would our pattern of investment be different and less capital intensive, would we have the unemployment problems experienced now, would regional disparity be so great?

And if then investment were less capital intensive, would our need for foreign capital be so intense? These and a host of other questions are worthy of settling, especially questions relating to dynamic public enterprise.

But I have yet to hear a Canadian economist, who at the same time graduated from Chicago or MIT, raise these questions.

-G. Warskett

P.S. Apologies to Martin Prachowny, who here was made to bear the full burden of my despair for the U.S.-Canadian economist.

Loudmouth ruined hockey

Dear Editors;
To Loudmouth (Arts '74)

We thought we had chosen good seats for Saturday's hockey game, but to our disappointment you, had taken it upon yourself to give us (and everyone else in Jock Harty Arena) a play by play commentary of the game.

Your heckling was bad enough when directed against the opposition (poor Mike MacNamara!!) but when you started on the Gaels, we thought you were carrying your enthusiasm a bit too far.

We would like to suggest that if you think you can do any better, please show up at the next practice - 5:30 each week night. (Please bring your "blades", if you have a pair, and a jock strap, Jocks wear them you know).

Drunk or sober we found your conduct a bit over zealous and it distracted from our enjoyment of the game.

-Ronnie Rahrah,
Olive Oilthigh,
Gord & Gail Gogaels.

A disgusting exhibition

Dear Editors:

On Monday evening (Nov. 29), I witnessed a most disgusting exhibition of student government provided by the AMS at McNeill House.

A motion presented by Terry Macli and seconded by Vicki Wilgress was presented and it read: "that the AMS examine the conduct of the WRC (Women's Residence Council) in respect to the WRC's handling of the issue of co-ed residence."

The motion was co-sponsored by 100 students in residence, and it was moved by Terry Macli who is first year rep to the ASUS and seconded by Miss Wilgress, a member of Artsci '75's executive.

The motion was simple and straightforward, but the members managed to misread it, despite Mr. Macli's, Marv Bloos' and others' statements.

The motion was defeated 10-9. Attention was then turned to another motion, asking the AMS to re-consider the co-ed question with a view to coming up with a new and more realistic proposal. After brief discussion, the AMS decided that a new motion would be out of order since it would exceed AMS jurisdiction in the matter.

What was needed was an examination of the WRC, the reps decided, and Mr. Macli's motion was re-introduced. The debate ensued and Mr. Macli re-stated the purpose of the motion: "We're not asking for a condemnation," he said. "We feel that perhaps a situation has been handled poorly (not his exact words) and we're asking for an examination. If a committee discovers that the WRC acted properly, fine; if they acted improperly, that's fine too. Settle the question once and for all.

The AMS is the only body that can objectively look into the matter." But the idealism was lost in politics. Time and again, co-ed residence was brought into the matter. Time and again Mr. Macli, Mr. Bloos or Patrick Riley would re-state the purpose of the motion.

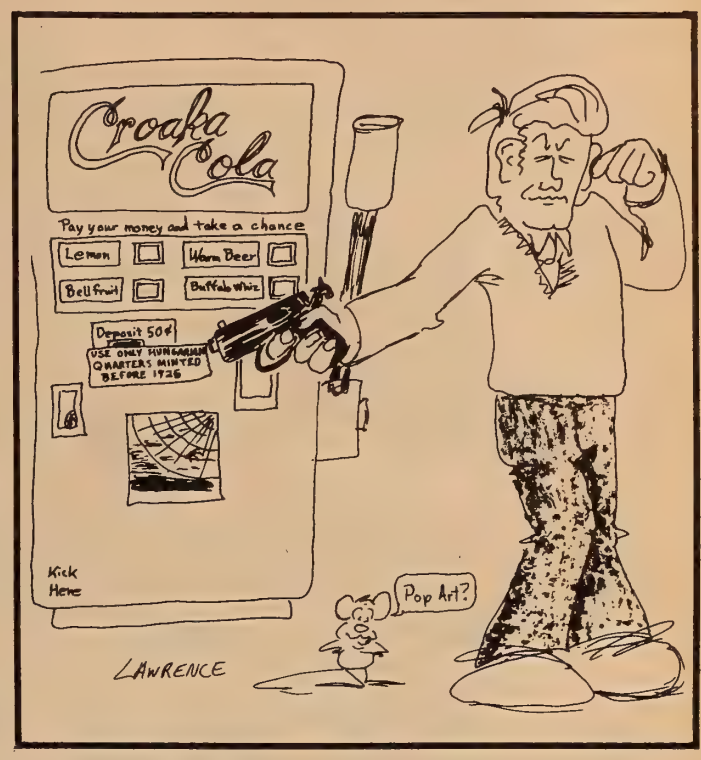
"I voted against co-ed," Mr. Macli stated, "but it should have responsible government."

Time and again, the motion was mis-read and people thought that the AMS would be criticizing the WRC by examining them.

This view was most strongly held by IRC reps who seemed more concerned with preserving residence council political power than with the motion. "Co-ed isn't dead," they said. "Co-ed doesn't matter," according to Macli, who just wanted an objective examination.

It apparently was too much to ask or too complex an issue. In order to pass, it needed two-thirds of the AMS vote. It didn't get two-thirds, it passed 12-7; it needed 13-6.

I'm a freshette. I don't know anything about student politics. I wouldn't recognize Marv Bloos, Terry Macli, or Pat Riley if they were standing beside me now. I guess that Mr. Macli, and Mr. Bloos should have known better - they are both ASUS executive members and I know that ASUS is a political body and has probably seen some foul play in its day.



But why did the AMS have to disgrace itself in such a manner?

I mean, what was the point of alienating so many (100) people? Pat, Marv, Vicki and especially Terry, keep on fighting for your examination.

I'd like to help but I don't know how. It would be a shame to see all that enthusiasm go to waste. I guess I am a typical "apathetic student" but still I want to see an examination of my residence council just maybe to re-assure me one way or the other.

I don't know why this wasn't done by the AMS. I guess there are at least 114 people on campus wondering the same thing. Maybe if one of the AMS reps who voted against the motion is reading this, he or she will explain in a Journal letter why he or she voted against the motion. I guess that's really all that I want.

-M.S.

Cowardly anonymity

Dear Editors:

The people who have expressed their opinions in letters to the editors during recent months but who have failed to sign their full names to those letters are cowards. Initials, first names only, pseudonyms and other "Dear Abby" devices are as identity-revealing as blank spaces.

These people may argue that it is their right to remain anonymous, but will they also argue that their opinion is so invincible that it has no need to be identified? Every opinion will encounter criticism whether or not its author believes it to be invincible, and for that reason it should have at least a name to defend it.

By withholding their full names, the authors are refusing to attach an identity to their opinions. Such a refusal indicates a cowardly desire to avoid personal criticism. Why do they wish to avoid validity of their argument and their ability to defend it. Are they afraid that a controversial opinion wil in stigate a rash of viscious phone calls and letters? Or could they be afraid that people will laugh at what they have to say? Are they ashamed of their opinions?

Or do they delight in keeping their identity a mystery to their acquaintances? (Clark Kent enjoyed the concealment of his true identity from his friends on the Daily Planet.)

Anonymity neatly separates the opinion from its author. The cowardly people who employ it avoid personal criticism because they do not allow their names to be connected with their opinions.

-Nola Goodman

First Snowflake

The first snowflake always has the longest, loneliest journey.

A million comrades watch on a night of shivers,
as it casts off from Mother Cloud and flutters, slips and slides away all very much down.

When, after several eternities,
the watchers see their brother touch some part of earth, it's as if a giant string were pulled with dark inside out,
and all white now, all shine,
and falling falling falling.

Raymond Souster

The National Gallery of Canada, Ottawa

Untitled (Yard, Winter No. 2)
Lionel LeMoine Fitzgerald
Canadian, etching
At Agnes Etherington, Dec. 19 to Jan. 16

Queen's
Journal
Vol. XCIX, No. 33 Tues., Dec. 14, 1971

U Thant is coming to Queen's

U Thant, secretary-general of the United Nations, will be the Brockington Visitor at Queen's for 1972.

He will be here in October or November, according to Duncan McDowall, fourth-year history student and chairman of the Brockington Visitorship committee.

While on campus, U Thant will deliver the Brockington Lecture and meet with students and faculty at several seminars and meetings.

He holds an honorary degree from Queen's, awarded in 1965. At that time he was unable to come in person because of the Dominican Republic crisis, but his address was read to the convocation.

The Brockington Visitorship honours the late Leonard W. Brockington, who held the office of rector of Queen's for seven consecutive three-year terms. A distinguished broadcaster and prominent Canadian orator, Brockington was a great benefactor of Queen's; Brockington House is named in his honour.

The 1971 Visitor was Swedish economist Gunnar Myrdal, who was here last month.

Human problems courses rejected by faculty

by Bill Johnston

The idea of holding a series of short courses on the problems of humanity is now dead, at least so far as the faculty of Arts and Science are concerned.

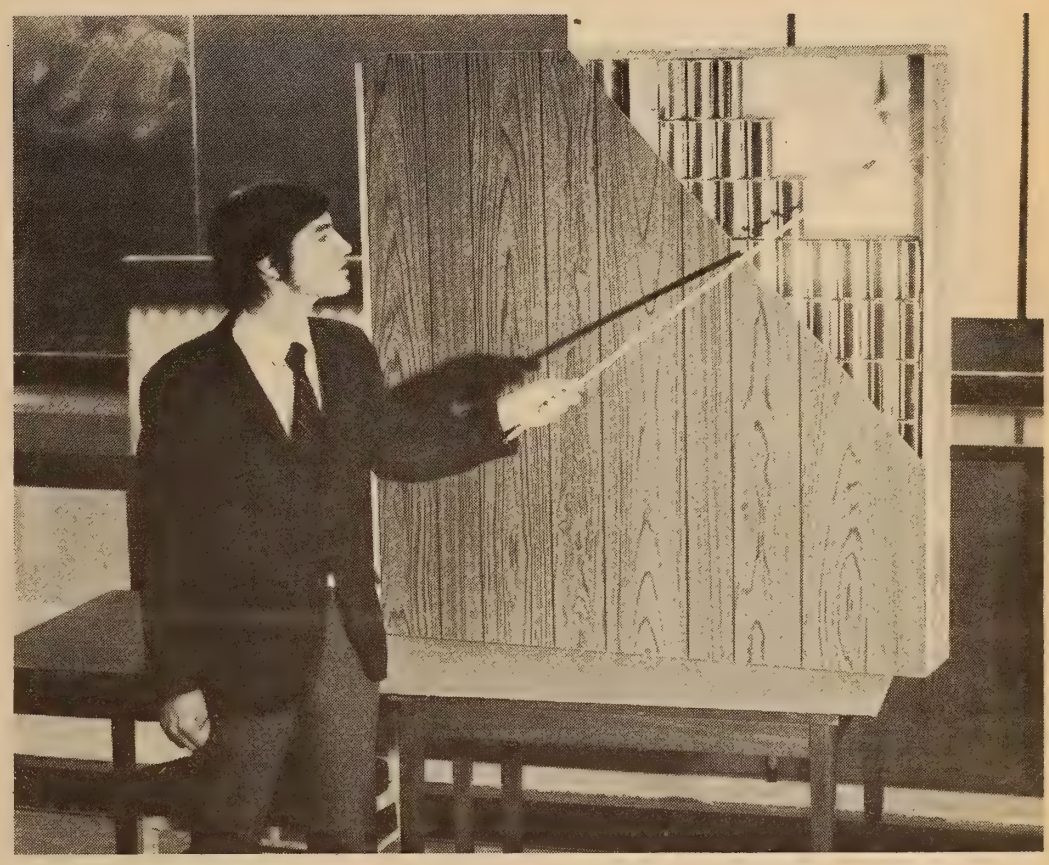
A motion, introduced by mathematics chairman Dr. A.J. Coleman and politics professor Dr. Ned Franks, which would have resulted in such courses being offered next term on an experimental basis, was defeated last Friday at the meeting of the Faculty Board by a vote of 43-31. Nearly all the 15 to 20 student members of the board voted for the motion, so the faculty turned it down by a margin of about 3 to 1.

Most of the students at the meeting were disgusted by the faculty decision and the way in which the motion was handled, and Dr. Coleman was so upset that he considered resigning as head of the department of mathematics.

Coleman noted that "two out of three of my motions are defeated, so to have another motion defeated was no big surprise. But the grounds on which this motion was defeated were mostly nit-picking irrelevancies. I was physically sick for two days out of shame to belong to such a body."

Much of the debate on the motion was hurried and confused. After originally deciding to consider the motion at the meeting rather than referring it to the curriculum committee, as would be normal procedure in the case of a request to establish a new course, the board had just over half an hour in which to push through with the debate.

Moreover, many of the members appeared to be somewhat confused about what exactly they were voting on, since the motion which Franks and Coleman presented to the meeting was somewhat different from the original motion which had been presented about two weeks earlier. That motion would have had the question of whether or not to establish the course, and the question of giving credit for it, considered at the same time and as part of one motion. As introduced Friday, the Board was simply to decide whether or not to give approval to the idea of holding three courses, one on poverty, one on man and the environment and one on conflict, on an experimental basis, during the next term. The question of giving credit was to be considered later.



The courses would consist of six lectures in two consecutive weeks with every lecture being conducted (for the spring only) by volunteers, and with the courses being offered in the evening and in a sufficient variety of time slots such that nearly every member of the university community could attend. A committee appointed by Dean R.L. Watts would plan and supervise the course, and at the end of the programme, it would be determined whether or not to continue with the idea.

The courses were not expected to "solve the problems" discussed but merely to dispel the grossest forms of ignorance about the subjects.

Although the majority of the members of the board responded with loud no's and denials when Dr. Coleman suggested that to vote against the motion would indicate a lack of concern for the big problems of the world, there were few good reasons given for opposition to the motion.

It was suggested that the idea was too idealistic, and also that the problems being dealt with could not be solved in six lectures, although this was clearly not the intent of the motion. Others objected to the idea of holding only six courses, but no alternate suggestions were forthcoming about how to organize the courses. Dr. Peter Platenius suggested that since the Chemical Engineering Department was already offering a multi-disciplinary course on man and the environment, it might be better to allow Arts students credit for that rather than set up a new course. (This had been suggested to the Arts faculty earlier but had not been accepted.)

Whatever the real reasons for opposition, the motion was defeated. However, Coleman indicated that he and Franks, along with a few other volunteer faculty members and with the financial support of the ASUS, would attempt to off the courses next term without the approval of the faculty. He also noted that Norman Alcock, head of the Peace Research Institute of Canada, is being brought to Queen's by the AMS to lecture on Feb. 9, to help overcome the lack of an approved course dealing with human conflict.

- chippiur

One of several designs for wall panels made out of soft drink cans.

Anything engineers can do . . .

by Anne Stalker

Imagine a new house with recycled walls.

Walls, that is, made of used, undamaged soft drink cans, a waste product very common and rather difficult to reuse, but here performing a long-term duty, holding up the roof and keeping out the cold, after the contents have been drunk.

It's all part of a second-year mechanical engineering course given at Queen's by Dr. Dick Brown. A group of engineers displayed the results of their experimentation in making walls out of used cans last week, and the results seemed to be successful.

In looking for a project to give the engineering students practice in engineering and some of its subsidiary studies, Brown hit on the idea of using cans to build four-by-eight-foot wall panels, which had to satisfy all the requirements normally demanded of wall materials.

The class was divided into nine groups, each of which organized itself and designed a prototype. Three of the groups presented their results in McLaughlin Hall last week -- construction "companies" headed by Don McPherson, Leslie Kissel and Jack McJannett.

The presentation was attended by the presidents of the American Can Company of Canada and the Continental Can Company of Canada, as well as by the dean of applied science.

The presentations by the three class groups, or "companies" -- Walcan Co. Ltd., Hakit Co. Ltd., and Gibraltar Walls -- were informal and sometimes funny, and presented such new concepts as "walls that eat garbage". None of the models actually gulped down a significant amount of garbage, but all managed to use a fair number of cans.

Each upright can support a weight of between 1000 and 1500 pounds. As a result, each model could easily support a roof and an average Canadian snowload, and was as capable as the average house wall of holding in heat and keeping cold out.

Various methods were used to held the tins together and provide insulation -- and a vapour barrier, to keep the cans from rusting. Exterior and interior materials gave the panels life expectancies of more than twenty years.

With automated manufacturing systems, the students declared, building walls out of cans would be feasible; and panels might cost less than half what ordinary wall panels now cost.

Merry Christmas

Exams ... sleet ... essays ... sick and tired of it ... last Journal for 1971 ... going skiing ... family ... tree with presents with mistletoe ... enough's enough ... see you January 11.

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX. Number 33.
Tuesday, December 14, 1971.
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

Arts faculty votes to opt out of human race

An Editorial by Bill Johnston

Does Queen's, as a university, have a responsibility for the promotion of decent human conditions? The Faculty of Arts and Science considered that question last Friday and decided No.

For numerous reasons never made explicit, the faculty turned down a motion by Dr. Coleman and Dr. Franks to establish experimental courses for next term which would have attempted to dispel "the grossest forms of ignorance" (in the words of the motion) on the subjects of human conflict, poverty and the environment. The defeat, by a margin of at least three to one among faculty members, followed the overwhelming decision of the faculty board not to refer the motion to the curriculum committee, as would be the normal course to follow with requests to establish new courses. The decision to ask that referral not be employed in this instance was made by Coleman and Franks in order that a decision on the courses could be made in time to implement them next term. But the fact that the faculty was so decidely in favour of deciding the motion at this meeting indicated that they wanted to kill the idea and kill it now.

Throughout the debate on the motion, the faculty made it clear that this was their intention, since no good reasons were ever presented for opposition to the idea. Most of the opposition to the course, at least as stated during the debate, rested on questions of the practicality of trying to do anything useful in six lectures, and on questions of whether or not the courses should be offered as credit courses, and of whether or not they should be made compulsory, an idea suggested by Coleman and Franks in a motion which was to be discussed if their first motion about setting up the courses was passed. However, those objecting on the first grounds failed to offer any alternative ways of setting up such courses, which might have indicated that they were concerned about the problems which the courses were to deal with. Those objecting on the second grounds were simply confused by the fact that Coleman and Franks had originally suggested that both questions (setting up the course and making it a credit, compulsory course) be considered together, but in presenting the actual motion, had split the two questions.

One could charitably conclude that the confusion caused by the change in the motions, and the short time that there was for debate blinded the faculty to what was really at issue, or that many had arrived at the meeting determined to vote against the motion, as it had been originally presented, because of disagreement with the way it was to be credited, and that they simply ended up voting as they had originally intended.

But it is also apparent that the faculty has grown far too fond of the status quo and far too rigid when it comes to making changes or to coping with the real world outside of their ivory towered, departmentalized existences. Having become comfortable in their securely tenured positions, the faculty has grown insensitive to the problems of those less fortunate than they (which constitutes the vast majority of people in this country and the world), and are content to stick to the narrow fields in which they are knowledgeable without concern for the social relevance of what they are doing.

Faculty members are always quick to object to any governmental moves which might threaten the "autonomy" of the university. It would be encouraging to see some evidence of an equal concern for the relevance of the university, which alone

Laurentian Out of OUAA Football

In a move prompted by budgetary difficulties, Laurentian announced Friday that it was withdrawing from OUAA competition in football, golf, and several women's sports.

Faced with the need to pare almost $1,000,000 off this year's budget, the 2200-hundred student school decided football was one of the things to go. In some ways this is not at all surprising.

The problems of travel from Sudbury to other cities, and the cost of supporting a large squad on the road are rather heavy for a small, rather remotely-situated school. The marked absence of success probably influenced what went, also.

It is much easier to can a team that has never won more than a single game in a season than to cut back on winning squads. The effect of this decision on the OUAA alignment for football is not yet obvious. With only five teams in the Eastern Division, several possibilities suggest themselves.

Toronto, York, Ottawa, Carleton and Queen's could play each other home-and-home, with no interlocking game, and the top two teams advancing to the playoffs; alternately, there could be a rotating home-and-home with three of the teams, a single game with the fourth, and one interlocking game, with the top two again proceeding.

The other possibilities are a complete realignment, the possible admission of another school (R.M.C. is a lot closer to the rest of the OUAA East than it is to Quebec, and it's doubtful they could be much worse than Laurentian) or (hope, hope) the prospect that somebody else will also drop football -how about it, Knobby?

Anyway, it will be interesting to watch the juggling act that the OUAA admin will be performing between now and September.

Wrestler Wins

Queen's Rob Beamish, wrestling in the 142-lb class, swept all seven bouts last Sunday to win that section of the Ontario Novice Meet, held at the University of Guelph. Beamish pinned three of his opponents, and beat two more by margins of 15 points or more.

What's Happening Over The Holidays

Both the Hockey and Basketball Gaels will be in action over the Christmas break this year. The B-Ball squad returns to the Carleton Invitational Tournament as the defending champion; other teams include Brock, Carleton, and York. Queen's meets Brock in the opening game December 28, with the finals held on the 30th.

Anyone in Ottawa for the holidays can see some good basketball and help out the Gaels by dropping in to the Raven's Nest to help drown out the Carleton rowdies.

Meanwhile, Queen's will be hosting one segment of the Hockey Canada University Tournament, with St. Mary's Guelph, and the University of Saskatchewan competing with the Gaels. Dates for this are December 28 and 29.

In addition, Gaels' captain Morris Mott has been invited to the tryouts for the team to represent Canada in the World University Games next March. Mott was the only Queen's player invited.

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Managing Editors: John Solman, Charles Schwier
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass
Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Festival '72

Festival '72 is the third edition of the now annual event which is geared to expressing the artistically creative talents of the students and friends of Queen's U.

This gallery of the Arts at Queen's will focus on activity and displays within the Students' Memorial Union - from Thursday, February 3rd to Sunday February 6th. In conjunction with Festival, organisations on campus will be active.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre is holding a three day experimental art workshop. As well, Creation 2, a Toronto-based theatre group will be on campus to supervise theatre workshops and to present a series of plays.

Specifically, Festival '72 will offer a programme centring on art and craft workshops, creative drama, dance, and writing presentations, and visual and sound arts displays and exercises. Organisers of Festival '72 hope to involve many Queen's students.

Meetings in and around the week of January 10th will be held - Queen's students and friends will hopefully submit or volunteer their creative works and-or talents at these gatherings. Keep your eyes and ears open for further Festival information!

LADIES
ELECTROLYSIS
Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call:
HARRISON SALON
542-5595

BUS TOUR
We think we're Cupid. Special for two to the
QUEBEC WINTER CARNIVAL
Feb. 11-13
Contact: GRANTS TRAVEL SERVICE
(Limited space)

Borborygmi

It may seem strange to be recounting an event almost a month after it has taken place, but "Borborgymi" (a rumbling or gurgling produced by movements of gas in the bowels, audible at a distance), this year's Medical Variety Night, was certainly worthy of comment. The second of what The Aesculapian Society hopes will be a long line of shows, Borborygmi attracted a near capacity crowd to the McArthur Hall auditorium on November 17.

They did not leave disappointed. Brief around the talents of Nursing, Rehab, and Medical Students Borborygmi was a variety, show in the truest sense of the word. (Sobriety and Snowball take note. Meds Variety Night has made it!) There were 2½ hours of solid entertainment, with never a weak spot or a dragging act in the night's performance. Such seeming diversities as two Brahm's intermezzi (skilfully interpreted by Merv. Whelan) and the "roll them in the aisle" approach of the 'enzymes' was blended most professionally in this program.

Music? There was lots of it; ranging from the "first sounds" of the fourteen piece pit orchestra, through the "wail of the pipes and the beating of the drums" as Doug Romans (who?) led his pipes and dancers on stage to open Act II, to the lithely crooning "Kitty Tamponade and the Heartbeats".

Of particular note was singer Pat London, a first year Rehab student, that this girl could fill the auditorium with such sound and warmth was just ... amazing! (A fact that didn't escape the audience).

Comedy? It covered the spectrum, beginning with the light hearted banter on emcee Andy Pipe (...obstetricians are always at your cervix") and moving through such cleverly written numbers as "Dramain in the O.R. (starring Hamlet: the Surgeon Prince). The rollicking good times that accompanied Chris Shoemakers interpretation of a gourmet had to be seen to be believed ... almost as unbelievable were Matron Honeyhutch and her Girls - a group of Nursing Science students who showed that nurses have bodies and know how to use them! (Rumour has it that a certain young lovely suffered a mammary collapse during this number!)

A cleverly produced and technically excellent show combining much more than the prerequisite amounts of excitement, spontaneity, wit and music, Borborygmi looks as though it just might become an institution at Queen's.

Kobitz

Chris Shoemaker getting ahead with his meal!

Coming Events

The LCVI Drama Club will be presenting the play production of David and Lisa on Thursday, December 16, and Friday December 18 at 7:30 p.m. in the Loyalist Auditorium.

The Dept of Obstetrics and Gynaecology will present a clinical evening in the Auditorium of Hotel Dieu Hospital, Tuesday, December 14 at 8:00 p.m.

CLASSIFIEDS

CLASSIFIEDS

Festival needs your talent - be prepared to volunteer it in January - keep your eyes and ears open for Festival Information early next term.

LOST - One black collapsible umbrella at the English Dept. Smoker Monday. Night, Dec. 6. Call 548-4672.

WANTED - Ride to or near Fredericton, N.B. anytime colours mauve, pressed into pleats, used to tie-up hair in a ponytail. Found Wed. afternoon on Division near Johnson. Call 544-8051.

POOH BEAR - The peace of the elves be always with you and may the stars always shine on your face. Have a good trip, Merry Christmas, EEYORE.

WANTED - Ride to Toronto or

BIKE WANTED - 350 cc or over, preferably older model (like, under $500) Call Gino at 549-2615.

PADDY GREEN'S HAMILTON - Come to a Yule tide celebration at PADDY'S for all HAMILTON area QUEEN'S students on Thursday Dec. 23 from 8:00 pm til ... 'Christmas'. Help crock the first of many kegs with good company and the finest of draft. Officially sanctioned by Santa.

FOUND on Clergy Street over weekend, one GM car key. Apply at AMS office.

Campus social nudity colour photos for international magazine publication. Spontaneous activities, students appearing nude in public - protest marches or demonstrations, frolics in fountain, at campus love-ins and rock festivals co-ed dorms, communal bathing or Agency, Ltd. CPO Box 4, Stn. F., Toronto 285, Ontario.

ASUS Other Events Committee holding New Year's Eve party in Queen's pub (2nd floor common room, Union) for all Queen's staff, students, faculty. Admission $1.50 ($2.50 per couple). 8.30 p.m. - Dec. 31.

CORNWALLIANS - There will be a Xmas Beer Bash in the Glengarry Room (Cornwallis Hotel) on Wednesday, Dec. 22. A real hoot!

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5 year warranty, 5 sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

AVAILABLE for one girl, fully furnished room in 2-bedroom apartment. Clean, cheerful. Ten minute walk from campus; right downtown. Available for occupancy after Dec. 13. Rent $75 monthly including utilities. Phone 544-5413.

ASUS Other Events Committee holding New Year's Eve party in Queen's pub (2nd floor common room, Union) for all Queen's staff, students, faculty. Admission $1.50 ($2.50 per couple). 8.30 p.m. - Dec. 31.

happenings at- Round Table

FOOD -- now Kingston's finest eating spot nightly for Faculty and Students.
Try 'The International'
Filet mignon and our special shrimp only 2.99

SUNDAY -- The Roast Beef Buffet
Beat the Sunday Starvation Blues and drop in. Roast Beef - Cold Cuts - Salads - Desserts - all you can eat - a student special only 2.99

PARTIES -- 5 to 1500 persons in one room -- a great addition for formals, class parties, stags, dances, etc
Now OPEN

AND NOW -- Mr. Bojangles Room is closed forever -- (wrong crowd) so try a new adult thing in our redecorated pub it's CALLAGHANS an Irish place.
Sing along and dance to our own Irish Group -- it's a lot like Flanagans

OPENING TONIGHT --
it's CALLAGHANS

Gentlemen are asked to dress respectably -- no jeans or t-shirts.

Do it all at Kingston's 'Everything Spot.'
The Round Table
542-7337

Fully Licenced - Bath Rd. at Frontenac Mall

Wanted
Persons wishing to read and/or have published their poetry for Festival '72
February 1972

Contact Mr. Barns, English Dept. or Lynette Hunter - 546-1921

THINK

Snowball

Jan., 24-30

UP TO 50% OFF - XMAS DISCOUNTS - HALF PRICE FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS

PLAYBOY		NEW REPUBLIC		ECONOMIST		MANCHESTER GUARDIAN
7 mos.	$ 6.00	NEW YORKER		1 yr.	$33.60	1 yr.	$12.00
1 yr.	$ 8.50	EBONY		TIME		READER'S DIGEST
2 yrs.	$16.00	1 yr.	$ 7.00	25 wks.	$ 2.97	1 yr.	$ 1.99
3 yrs.	$22.00	NEWSWEEK		1 yr.	$ 6.00	COMMENTARY
ESQUIRE		34 wks.	$ 4.75	2 yrs.	$12.00	HOROSCOPE
8 iss.	$ 3.00	1 yr.	$ 7.00	SPORTS ILLUSTRATED		PSYCHOLOGY TODAY
1 yr.	$ 4.33	2 yrs.	$14.00	1 yr.	$ 7.50	SKY DIVER
14 iss.	$ 5.00	U.S. NEWS & W.R.		APARTMENT IDEAS		1 yr.	$ 6.50
VOGUE		23 wks.	$ 2.75	ATLAS		ATLANTIC
SKIN DIVER		1 yr.	$ 6.00	BETTER HOMES & GARDENS		9 iss.	$ 4.00
1 yr.	$ 7.50	2 yrs.	$12.00	GOLF DIGEST		1 yr.	$ 5.25
COSMOPOLITAN		SATURDAY REVIEW		HOUSE & GARDEN		HOT ROD
CONSUMER REPORTS &		34 wks.	$ 4.00	VILLAGE VOICE		SEVENTEEN
CANADIAN CONSUMER		1 yr.	$ 6.00	1 yr.	$ 5.00	TRANS-ACTION
1 yr.	$10.00	2 yrs.	$12.00	RAMPARTS		1 yr.	$ 5.75
NURSING OUTLOOK		HARPERS MAGAZINE		3 iss.	$ 4.75	HOCKEY NEWS
1 yr.	$ 9.60	1 yr.	$ 4.25	1 yr.	$ 6.00	TV GUIDE
CAVALIER		BAZAAR		NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC		1 yr.	$ 6.00
1 yr.	$ 9.50	1 yr	$ 6.25	1 yr.	$10.25	MECHANIX ILLUSTRATED
PENTHOUSE		CAR & DRIVER		GRADE TEACHER		1 yr.	$ 2.50
1 yr.	$ 8.00	HAIR DO & BEAUTY		1 yr.	$ 8.50	ROLLING STONE
2 yrs.	$14.00	MOD-POP PHOTOGRAPHY		CANADIAN FORUM		SWIMMING
CHATELAINE		MOTOR TREND		1 yr.	$ 2.50	1 yr.	$ 8.00
MACLEANS		SPORT				NEW STATESMAN
SATURDAY NIGHT		SUNSHINE				1 yr.	$17.00
1 yr.	$ 1.50	1 yr.	$ 3.50
CYCLE
LADIES HOME JOURNAL
McCALLS
SKI
1 yr.	$ 3.00
AMERICAN HOME
MODERN BRIDE
SKIING
1 yr.	$ 2.00
BRIDE'S MAGAZINE
GLAMOUR
MADEMOISELLE
REDBOOK
SKATING
1 yr.	$ 4.00

PLUS MANY, MANY MORE - JUST ASK. RATES SUBJECT TO CHANGE. CIRCLE CHOICES. ENCLOSE CHEQUE OR M.O. MAIL ORDER TO: L.C.C. INTERNATIONAL AGENCY, LTD. C.P.O. BOX 4, STN. "F", TORONTO 285, ONT.

NAME _____ (please print)
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ ZONE _____ PROV. _____
COLLEGE _____ Class Year _____
SIGNATURE _____
GIFT CARD MESSAGE _____

Faculty Of Arts And Science
Proposed Experimental Intersession
May/June 1972

The proposed Experimental Intersession Program within the Faculty of Arts and Science has received Senate approval. (See Queen's Gazette, December 8, 1971, pp. 6,7). The Departments of Psychology, English, Sociology, Mathematics, Drama, Film, Economics, History, Biology, Geography, Computing and Information Science have been asked to participate in this experimental program which will take place between May 10th and June 23rd. 1972. The offering of courses within this program, however, will be conditional on the number of students who register before January 31, 1972. Further details, including admission requirements, fees, registration procedures, and a list of proposed courses, will be published early in January.

AOSC TRAVEL
Nassau, the Bahamas

Reading Week (Feb 19-27)

Return Jet Fare (Air Canada) & Accommodations, Approximate Cost - $190.00.

Interested?

Leave name and phone with AMS office

Open hours in January

Weekday evenings will be open hours in women's residence when students return to campus in January.

The addition of the period between 5 p.m. and 11 p.m. daily to the open hours time was approved Saturday by the residence board, after earlier approval by the Ban Righ board and support in a student referendum.

(Broader extensions -- noon to 11 p.m., or 24 hours a day -- were turned down in that referendum. The noon to 11 p.m. proposal had a majority of votes, but not the necessary two-thirds; the 24-hour idea had only about 40 percent support.)

At present open hours extend from noon Friday to midnight Sunday; this will continue, along with the week-day evening periods.

Women's residence council president Cindy Davidson said the extension would not go into effect until January because during an exam period is a poor time to institute new regulations. Some students have no more exams, and their activities might disturb those who are still studying, she said.

She also pointed out that the present regulations about open hours will stay in effect. This means that a male guest must be escorted by a resident whenever he is upstairs in the residence, and that the one-to-one ratio of visitors to escorts must be maintained.

Women guests are allowed upstairs in the residences at any time.

Doctors, lawyers discuss the ethics of transfusions

A doctor should give a blood transfusion when it is needed, regardless of the law, a Queen's law professor said Thursday at a symposium about transfusions.

"If you can't get an order from the court in time, or the judge refuses the order for medical treatment, and you've decided it's needed, you should probably go ahead anyway," associate law dean Lyman R. Robinson said.

He was discussing cases in which a parent refuses permission for a transfusion to be administered to his child. Such cases arise chiefly when the parent is a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses, a Christian sect which believes that blood transfusions violate the biblical injunction against the eating and drinking of blood.

In one case, in April 1970, an infant suffering from hemolysis (a condition which destroys red blood cells) was carried off from Kingston General Hospital after her Jehovah's Witness mother refused permission for a transfusion and pediatrician Dr. J.J. Delahaye tried to perform the transfusion anyway. The child survived and is in good health.

Under Ontario law, if a parent refuses to allow treatment which a child needs, guardianship of the child can be transferred to the Children's Aid Society after a court hearing. Anyone who knows of a child in need of "protection" is legally required to report the matter to the CAS or the crown attorney, on penalty of a $500 fine or a jail sentence of six months, or both.

A court hearing can be held on short notice, Robinson said, mentioning a 1962 case in which a court convened in Kingston General Hospital and awarded temporary wardship of a baby to the CAS.

But, he added, the parents must have "reasonable notice" of such a hearing, and "the real hang-up is the reasonable notice."

Robinson said that in an urgent case the doctor should go ahead with whatever treatment is necessary. "In fact, you probably would be liable if you didn't."

He said that "if a doctor goes ahead without an order and is sued civilly, I don't think that any court in Canada would award against the doctor."

But "my advice is not to proceed without a hearing if there's time for it."

Physician Dr. Leo Stern explained the necessity for transfusions in some cases, saying that 30 percent of all newborn infants have jaundice, and that this condition sometimes makes transfusions necessary to prevent brain damage.

"Doctors consider transfusion a very serious thing, to be treated as such, and it is," said Dr. A. David Ginsburg, a haemotologist and medical professor at Queen's. Delahaye, the pediatrician who handled the 1970 case at KGH, agreed, saying that in a severe case, "I wouldn't have waited" for legal permission.

Robinson pointed out that a doctor is legally required to give what treatment is needed, pointing out that under the Criminal Code of Canada any responsible person is required to "provide the necessities of life to a child under 16".

He also mentioned the Child Welfare Act, the provincial law under which wardship of a child can be transferred to the Children's Aid Society. It does not apply to a fetus, but only to a born child, Robinson mentioned.

Dr. Donald M. Mathers, principal of Queen's Theological College, said that from an ethical view the giving of transfusions against the will of the patient or his guardian "is not an easy situation."

Mathers said, "You do not force treatment -- speaking as an outsider and recipient of medical treatment -- on a patient against his will."

He said children should be protected, but that the responsibility should rest on the state rather than on the doctor.

"Cautious laws intensify the doctor's moral problem. A lot of responsibility in this matter rests upon the Jehovah's Witnesses."

He added, "It seems to be a problem of respect for minorities."

Queen's Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 33 Tues., Dec. 14, 1971

Board suggests coed plan for Morris

The residences board Saturday approved the principle of coed residences for next fall, and asked the director of residences to figure out how to integrate Morris Hall.

The Gordon-Brockington-Chown proposal which has been discussed by subsidiary bodies for weeks was formally presented and defeated by the board.

The motion which carried asked residence director Gerald McGrath to consult with the presidents of the residence student councils, and with the vice-principals for administration and finance, and to present a proposal for the integration of Morris Hall.

It would have to deal with such matters as room allocations, washroom facilities, admissions policies, the ratio of first-year to upper-year students, and student government in the building.

Morris was one of the buildings considered earlier this year when the coed residence study committee, headed by medical student Doug Romans, was doing its work. It was proposed at that time that Morris be an all-women residence, balancing the number of men who would have lived in two integrated wings of Victoria Hall.

There would be no other changes in central campus residences, so that integrating Morris on a 50-50 basis would mean a loss of about 95 beds for men on Leonard Field.

But, Romans pointed out, several beds are empty there now, and expansion of the west campus residences and completion of Elrond College in 1972 will reduce the demand further.

(By contrast, women's residences are full, and vacancies are generally filled at once.)

Romans also said he did not know what improvements would be made in Morris if it were to become a coed residence. The amount of money available for renovations, he said, is much smaller than had previously been thought; carpet probably could not be afforded, for example, he added.

McGrath's proposal on how the integration should happen is to come to the residences board "early in January", according to the motion. But board chairman G.D. de Re said the board probably would hold its meeting on January 22.

This would give students time to consult on the project, inter-residence council chairman Ian Nordheimer pointed out.

(Romans, who wrote the previous integration plans, said he was glad it was McGrath, not him, who had to work out the details of this proposal.)

Women's residence council president Cindy Davidson, who like Nordheimer is a member of the board, told The Journal that the WRC had had little to say about the Morris proposal.

It is the result of discussion last week in the men's residence board, which supported the former Gordon-Brockington-Chown proposal but agreed that if that proposal could not happen, a pilot project on Leonard Field should be tried.

Fund target is missed

Queen's fell short of its $45,000 target in the United Fund drive last month.

Total Queen's collections were $41,745 as of late November, the public relations sheet Campus 1971 says.

Politics fellow is chosen

The Skelton-Clark Fellow for next year has been chosen; he will be Escott M. Reid, former high commissioner, ambassador, and deputy under-secretary of state in the department of external affairs.

Queen's invited a Skelton-Clark Fellow in alternate years. He spends a year in the department of political studies or a related area, generally doing research. Reid will spend his year preparing his book, External Affairs 1939-1962.

In the official announcement of Reid's appointment, principal John J. Deutsch said, "He is an eminent Canadian with a distinguished career as a senior diplomat, international civil servant and college principal."

Reid was the first national secretary of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs. He has also been director of the South Asia and Middle East Department of the World Bank, and for four years principal of Glendon College at York University.

He represented Canada at the founding meeting of the United Nations in 1945 and that of the Colombo Plan in 1950.

Training table system to be studied

A special committee is studying the question of training tables for athletes -- the system by which intercollegiate athletes get some free meals, at a total cost of about $10,000 per year.

The committee was set up by the university council on athletics after the Alma Mater Society outer council voted to ask that training table be abolished.

The committee is chaired by athletics officials Al Lenard and Miss Anne Turnbull.

It has invited comments from anyone in the university, either in writing or orally at its open hearing, which is to be held at noon this Friday in the theatre of the phys ed centre.

After procedural confusion, the AMS council passed its motion opposing training tables three weeks ago. President Patrick Riley, speaking for the motion, said then that the training table system unfairly favours athletes over students who benefit the university in other fields such as drama, government and journalism.

He said an exception could be made for students who miss meals they have already paid for -- such as those in residence -- because practices extend over meal hours.

Happy New Year

This is the last Journal for 1971; we return January 11, 1972. Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. By the way, this is not the front page.

Queen's
Journal

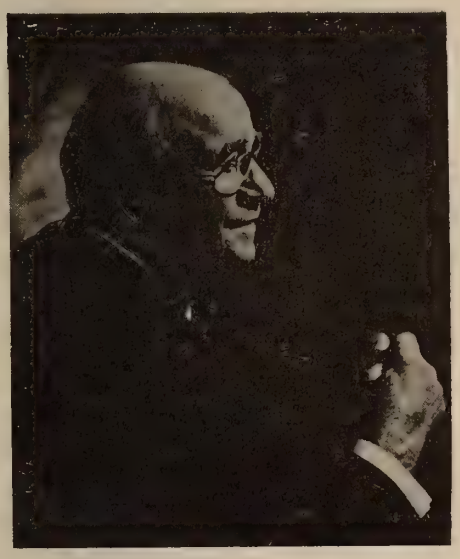
Vol. XCIX, No. 34 Tues., Jan. 11, 1972

Victor Bradley

Marney Cousins

BRADLEY SEEKS AMS PRESIDENCY

Colonel Sam dies at 100



by Chris Redmond

Colonel Sam is dead.

He lived for a century. When he was born, John A. Macdonald was prime minister, and Queen's was snuggled in two buildings -- Summerhill and the Old Medical. When he died, the science centre the old carriage mechanic had helped to endow was showing children how men had landed on the moon.

Colonel R. Samuel McLaughlin, the greatest benefactor Queen's has ever had, died Thursday, aged 100, at his home in Oshawa.

He was chairman of the board of General Motors of Canada.

He was a Companion of the Order of Canada.

And, says the Toronto Daily Star, "he was the grand old man of the grand old men."

McLaughlin gave Queen's two buildings -- McLaughlin Hall, home of the mechanical engineering department, and Adelaide Hall, a women's residence, named for his wife.

In addition, he donated much of the money that built the present Students' Memorial Union; the McLaughlin Room there is named in his honour.

He gave Queen's the McLaughlin Fellowships and Scholarships for graduate students. He gave Queen's the John Buchan Collection, pride of Douglas Library. He gave Queen's the Brockington Visitorship, which brought Gunnar Myrdal here last fall and will bring U Thant this October.

Elsewhere, McLaughlin's contributions built the Oshawa Public Library and the YM-YWCA there. He gave the University of Toronto its world-famous McLaughlin Planetarium. He endowed the McLaughlin Foundation, which for twenty years has financed overseas postgraduate education for Canadian doctors. He gave the University of Guelph its McLaughlin Library.

In 1946 McLaughlin, who left school at 16 to work in his father's carriage-shop, became an honorary graduate on the stage of Grant Hall.

He built the McLaughlin Carriage Company into the leading Canadian automobile manufacturer. Its motto: "Only one grade, and that the best." Early in this century he sold the firm to General Motors, becoming a director of the international firm and chairman of the board of its Canadian subsidiary. He was still active in that chairmanship in his hundredth year.

At the first of the 1971 Queen's convocations, special tribute was paid to the old colonel, who was too frail to visit Kingston in person. A flourish of trumpets was heard, and the convocation programme for graduates in business, theology and graduate studies noted that 304 McLaughlin Scholarships and Fellowships had been awarded at Queen's in the nineteen years of their existence.

Last week, the flag on Theological Hall flew at half-staff in his memory, and the principal's office announced that principal Dr. John J. Deutsch and chancellor Dr. J. B. Stirling would be honorary pallbearers at the funeral Saturday. Queen's chaplain Dr. A. M. Laverty and an Oshawa minister presided jointly over the service.

McLaughlin's generosity to Queen's began in his father's time. "When Queen's was under the Kirk," he once pointed out, "the Governor and I always did more for Queen's than Knox."

Knox College became a fragment of the University of Toronto, and Presbyterian control of Queen's ended, but McLaughlin's interest continued.

In recent years, it has been no secret that both Queen's and the University of Toronto counted on substantial bequests from the McLaughlin estate. The size of that estate is not known, the Canadian Press said last week, partly because of the enormous gifts made by McLaughlin to universities, charities, and such other institutions as the Ontario Science Centre. But the McLaughlin fortune has been estimated at more than a hundred billion dollars.

The colonel's interest in Queen's was personal as well as financial. Expressing his respect for the principals who have guided Queen's in recent decades, he once said, "Men make the place -- Wallace, Mackintosh, Corry, and the new boy."

And, in a statement issued Thursday by principal Deutsch, the "new boy" said this:

"His vision and generosity opened doors of opportunity for many Queen's men and women who now serve with distinction this country he so deeply loved. His monument is not just stone and mortar but the character and capacity of these men and women.

"For all that he was and all that he did, we are deeply grateful."

AMS Vice-President Victor Bradley will run for president of the student government in next month's election.

His vice-presidential running-mate will be second-year drama student Marney Cousins.

The Bradley-Cousins team is the only announced candidacy to date for the leadership of the Alma Mater Society. Nominations close January 28 and the election will be held just before reading week.

Bradley is presently a final-year chemical engineering student. He said he may be in a graduate programme in computing science next fall, but added that his platform will include a proposal that the AMS president be a full-time employee of the AMS during his year in office. (Queen's is the only large university in Canada which does not now have a paid student president.)

The major emphasis in his campaign, and in his policies if elected, will be on educational affairs and relations with governments and other universities, Bradley said.

The decision for Bradley to run was made during the Christmas holiday -- the traditional time for student politicians to plan their futures.

Bradley's first association with the AMS was in 1970-71, when he was senior engineering representative on the outer council, and took a keen interest in the financial affairs of the student government. Finances have taken a major part of his attention during his term in office with president Patrick Riley.

Riley will not be returning to Queen's in the fall.

Bradley has been a controversial figure at times: some students involved with government have claimed that he is dictatorial, and others have maintained that his strong personality has been necessary for management of the large business which the AMS has become.

Such AMS activities as Queen's Student Agencies, including Job Bank and the Heffalump boutique, have been largely Bradley's creations.

Miss Cousins is presently an artsci representative to the AMS outer council. She was a member of the artsci-nursing-rehab orientation committee for 1971.

At least three widely rumoured candidates for the AMS presidency have said they will not be running. Internal affairs commissioner Jim Richardson told The Journal he was content to influence student government "from the outside" and work informally with active committees of the AMS and the senate.

Artsci rep Gary Gannage said he would not run; it is believed that Bradley wants Gannage on outer council again and will make him a member of inner council, perhaps as external affairs commissioner, if both are elected.

And Inter-Residence Council chairman Ian Nordheimer said his ambitions were confined to the AMS constable system.

Besides Gannage, Bradley is trying to pick out suitable commissioners and help them get elected in their faculty societies. In the past, commissioners have been chosen after elections, from whomever faculty societies sent to outer council.

Nominations for president-vice-president teams will be accepted until January 28; they require the signatures of 200 AMS members (intramural students).

Balloting will be held in mid-February, probably during a three-day period February 8 to 10. (The longer voting period will be suggested to outer council by Bradley next week; he has said it will increase the number of students who vote. In the past elections have only been one day long.)

An advance poll will be held February 3 for education students, who leave campus February 5 for practice teaching across Ontario.

A number of referenda will probably be held along with the presidential election. They will include votes on retention or abolition of the $3-per-student concert fee and the $4 Tricolor yearbook fee. A proposal to raise the AMS operating fee from its present $5.30 will probably also be included.

Boo-Hoo is just around the corner: see page three

Some of the things that have happened over the holidays

Elrond rents

Elrond College has set its rental rates for 1972-73.

Single rooms in co-operative units in the building will range from $760 to $1075 for the eight-month academic year; doubles will range from $680 to $995 per person over the same period.

One-bedroom apartments will range from $135 to $160 per month, and two-bedroom apartments from $180 to $200.

Elrond, the 300-bed cooperative residence going up at Division and Princess Streets, is to be open in the summer of 1972.

Rental information and application forms are available from Elrond House, 137 Collingwood Street. The application deadline is January 24.

Leonard locked

Leonard Hall will be locked from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. every night this term, Inter-Residence Council chairman Ian Nordheimer has told The Journal.

Residents in the building will have keys to the outside doors.

The experiment is being tried to curb the disappearance of common-room furniture, Nordheimer said, and to keep outsiders from wandering through the building.

The night lock-up was proposed in November by IRC vice-chairman Val Karpinsky. Its effects will be reviewed in the spring, Nordheimer said. He added that all Leonard Field residences probably will be locked at night next year.

Geography head

Two students, six faculty members and an "outside consultant" will make up the committee to search for new geography department chairman.

The committee will be headed by arts and science dean Dr. Ronald L. Watts.

The student members are James Malcolm of Arts 72 and Mike Williams, a graduate student.

Faculty members of the committee are Dr. J. E. Hogarth (associate dean of graduate studies), Dr. H. M. Love (associate dean of arts and science), Dr. B. Riddell (geography), Dr. R. I. Ruggles (geography), M. C. Urquhart (economics), and Dr. H. R. Wynne-Edwards (geology). The outside consultant is Dr. L. J. King of McMaster University.

Diploma style

Arts and science students are being asked to say what kind of diplomas the university should give its graduates.

A proposal is before the university senate to unify the style of diplomas, and a letter from the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society asks artsci students to examine three styles of diplomas now on display in the Red Room of Kingston Hall and say which they like.

The ASUS wants students to comment on size (large or small), format (old or new), and language (Latin or English).

At present B.A. diplomas are in Latin; others are in English.

The letter to students is signed by "Marv Bloos and Nancy Hoey, Presidential Team ASUS". Previously, Bloos has identified himself as president, and Miss Hoey as vice-president.

Dunning Trust

Dr. R. P. Baffour of Ghana will deliver a Dunning Trust lecture February 16 on the role of education in developing nations.

Born in Ghana, Baffour received his engineering degree from the University of London and returned to Ghana to work on the Gold Coast Railway and spend five years lecturing on engineering.

From 1953 to 1960 he was a major figure in the civil service of Ghana, and then became principal of Kumasi College of Technology, which in 1961 became a university. Baffour was a delegate to the Association of Commonwealth Universities until 1966, and is now working in industry. He holds an O.B.E.

Baffour will be at Queen's February 14 to 18, and the Dunning Trust committee is inviting suggestions for seminars and social events which he might be asked to appear.

Requests for his presence should be sent to the committee in care of the manager of special events at the division of concerts office in Theological Hall.

Senate openings

Now is the time to get involved in the budget committee of the university senate.

Two students and three faculty members are needed to fill vacancies on the committee, for two-year terms beginning April 1.

Also needed are one faculty member for the senate committee on fine arts and public lectures, one for the Ban Righ Board (the governing body for women's residences), and a student for the campus planning committee.

Students and faculty members are invited to make nominations, which should be sent to the secretary of the senate in Richardson Hall. Names suggested need not be those of senate members, but should be those of "persons who have worked, or are working, or who have a special interest in particular problems relating to the responsibilities of the committees concerned".

Sponsors should list the nominee's qualifications and be sure he is willing to serve.

Nomination forms are available at room 225 of Richardson Hall, and must be returned by Friday.

Kingston zoning

The city of Kingston has approved a zoning bylaw change to let Queen's build the 16-storey apartment tower planned for the west campus.

The amendment also removes a technical illegality in the construction of Richardson Stadium.

The zoning restrictions for that area of Kingston had limited building height to six storeys, and set 50 feet as the minimum distance between a building and the rear property line.

City council approved in December an amendment reducing that distance to 35 feet -- which is the rear yard space planned for the tower and which now exists west of the stadium.

The Kingston planning board approved the change, despite objections from planning director George Muirhead, who said, "I don't like the building. I'm not enthused by it at all."

PLEASE RETURN the questionnaire which is on page 186 of your Who's Where.

A LITTLE BIT OF PURPLE PROSE ABOUT LEARNING TO SKI.

A lot of people will give you this thing about the courage of the first man who ate an oyster.

We would respectfully suggest that he had nothing on the first guy who strapped himself to a pair of oak staves and headed for the nearest mountain.

Whoever he was, wherever he roamed, anyone who's learned that same old way will tell you that if the first skier had nothing else, he had guts.

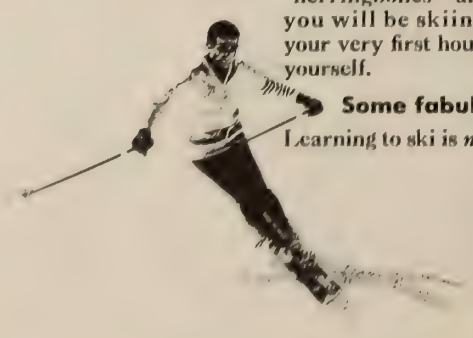
In fact, until quite recently, guts was the most important single ingredient in learning to ski.

A dramatic development.

Recently, within the last 9 years, a new method of ski instruction has been developed and perfected at Killington.

It is called the Accelerated Ski Method™ (formerly known as GLM). If you have even a shred of desire, plus enough coordination to have picked up this newspaper, you can learn to ski the Accelerated way.

Guts is no longer the pivotal requirement.



A great idea.

Instead of strapping you onto a pair of 6 or 7 foot skis and sending you onto the hill, the Accelerated Ski Method works you up to full-size gradually. Your first lesson is on 39 inch instruction skis. If you can walk you can get around on these.

Once you've mastered the rhythm and gained confidence you move up to 60 inch, mid-length, training skis. When you have them conquered, you move on to skis which are standard for your weight and height.

Instead of struggling for days with "herringbones" and "sidestepping" you will be skiing, unassisted, in your very first hour. You will amaze yourself.

Some fabulous plans.

Learning to ski is not impossible.

It's also not as expensive as everyone's told you.

At Killington we've put together amazingly inexpensive learn-to-ski vacations, which include everything but your "long-johns." The finest metal skis, mounted with the most advanced release bindings. Top quality buckle-boots and poles. Hundreds of dollars worth of equipment better than most beginners buy for themselves.

All this, plus lifts, plus lessons costs $40 for a 2-day introductory weekend.

For 5 days mid-week, we throw in a few extras and charge $70.

Don't expect any miracles with the weekend plan unless you can put together three or four weekends back-to-back. But if, at the end of a 5-day mid-week vacation, you're not a proficient skier, then you are very probably unteachable.

Some terrific skiing.

Once you learn, you'll find that Killington won't bore you. There are four mountains to ski. Among the more than four dozen trails, you'll find the longest one east of the Rocky Mts.

Of our eleven lifts, one, the new Killington gondola, is the longest ski lift in the world! And, as you might expect, there are a great many places to rest your bones and pick up your spirits when the lifts have closed.

Foster (he's our marketing director) Chandler will send you the facts.
Foster Chandler
5400 Killington Road
Killington, Vermont 05751

If we know old Foster he'll absolutely bombard you with brochures, pamphlets and all that.

NAME .....
ADDRESS .....
CITY ..... STATE ..... ZIP .....

KILLINGTON, Vt.

World's capital of learning to ski.

Things are good but not perfect, conference decides

Delegates to last week's appraisal conference on teaching generally agreed that "lectures aren't as bad as they seem to be" and that present evaluation systems basically do what they should.

But they looked at a number of alternatives to both and suggested them for discussion in the university.

About 130 faculty members and 40 students from arts and science departments met in small groups during the two-day conference to discuss the objectives of university teaching and the consequences of those objectives.

The conference, titled Appraisal 72, was sponsored by a committee of the faculty of arts and science.

After the small groups -- each containing about nine faculty and three students -- met for a day and a half, "rapporteurs" collected the general opinions and summarized them at a Friday afternoon plenary session in Ellis auditorium.

English Professor W. J. Barnes reported on the conclusions delegates had reached about the objectives of university teaching. He listed five major ones.

(One student delegate, generally agreeing with Barnes' summary, said, "In our group we got seventeen objectives! Before the conference I couldn't have thought of two.")

The first objective Barnes listed was transmission of the intellectual heritage of mankind -- information, ideas, and methods. The second was to stimulate the capacity for thought and expression in students.

The third was to stimulate intellectual interest.

Fourthly, Barnes said, the university should try to communicate "human values and wisdom" -- but in a spirit of freedom, not of indoctrination. He noted that many scientists strongly dissented from the idea that professors should pass their world-views on to their students, claiming rather than science is aloof from opinion. On the other hand, Barnes added, scientists often are more concerned than "humanists" with such problems as ecological survival and nuclear warfare.

The fifth objective Barnes mentioned was preparation for the professions, which he said include graduate study and teaching as well as traditional "professions" such as engineering, medicine and law.

Dr. David Holden of the department of sociology reported on the delegates' findings about methods of teaching.

Lectures can be useful, Holden pointed out, but they need supplementing and perhaps a reduction in number. He mentioned other teaching methods such as discussions and seminars, and said some delegates had suggested "fallow periods" in which students could reflect on course material and assimilate what they had come into contact with.

Much more freedom for students in their third and fourth years would be desirable, Holden said. Along the same line of flexibility, he said many delegates had supported an increase in team teaching and the use of guest lecturers to provide a viewpoint which one professor might not be able to give.

Graduate students are useful in some aspects of teaching, according to Holden's summary; but they need training, as do younger faculty members, delegates agreed.

Holden touched on the problem of redundancy -- between lectures and readings, between two courses in a department, and even between courses offered by different departments. He said it was a luxury in which the university should not indulge.

Touching once again on lectures, Holden said one of their most important functions is to convey a professor's enthusiasm for his material.

Dr. P. S. Day of French spoke on methods of evaluation as they relate to the objectives of teaching. He said about three-quarters of the delegates had agreed that present evaluation systems do aid those objectives.

But there must be more flexibility, Day added.

He said delegates thought evaluation by grading is useful because the student can acquire confidence through it, the university can certify his competence, a professor can assess the student's potential for further work, and the student has an incentive to work hard.

The numerical grading system was generally supported, Day said, but there was agreement that written and oral comments from the professor are needed as well. The final examination should be part of the learning process, he commented.

He said delegates and groups had suggested other methods of evaluation as substitutes or supplements to numerical grades. One possibility would be a "student profile" to go with the student's mark transcript, or a "letter of recommendation" from one of his senior professors.

A number of delegates called for pass-fail grading, at least for some courses, or a modified pass-fail system such as pass-fail-proceed or A-B-C-D-F.

There must be recognition, Day summarized, that numerical grades are only a shorthand, not a full measure of the student.

Biology professor P. Colgan reported on the delegates' findings about use of student and faculty time. He said delegates agreed that all teachers should be involved in research to some extent, but often could not agree on just what research meant.

An explicit statement of how professors should divide their time would be unpopular with many, Colgan said, though others would welcome such a guide.

He said the delegates thought faculty should spend more time tutoring and supervising individual students; there was disagreement about how much attention they should give to lecturing.

And Colgan said the delegates agreed that while administrative work is unpopular with members of faculty, it is essential that they have an input into the university's administration, especially in matters of policy -- not mere "shuffling of papers".

One possibility to relieve time pressure on faculty members and students alike, Colgan said, was to make two hours per week, rather than three, the standard for most courses. He said this would give more time for independent work, reading and individual tutoring.

Delegates, both students and faculty, agreed that students are under great time pressure, Colgan said. He added that there was general agreement that too much time must be spent on formal requirements, and not enough on individual exploration.

Reading courses have largely failed as a solution to this problem, Colgan said.

The delegates passed resolutions asking faculty board committees to investigate how students can learn from their final exams; how a student's formal workload might be reduced; what the objectives and methods of grading should be; how interdisciplinary studies can be encouraged; and whether students might be able to get credit for courses they did not formally take by passing a year-end "challenge examination".

Other resolutions favoured a reduction of the number of faculty members on university committees; a document on research facilities, to be produced by the library; a pilot scheme of individual counselling; and a possible multi-disciplinary intensive seminar by students and faculty during reading week.

A detailed report from the conference will appear in a few weeks, according to Derek McLean of Arts 73, one of the students on the committee which planned the conference. Its chairman was philosophy professor Dr. Norman Brown.

Boo-Hoo rides again

Snowball, the iciest winter carnival of them all, comes week after next; and Snowball buttons (representing admission to most events) are on sale, along with Snowball programmes, for $1.25 in meal lines and in the John Orr Room of the Union.

The Snowball mascot, as always, is Boo-Hoo the bear, shown here in three versions. Top: King Boo-Hoo V, second-last in a series of black bear mascots, with a group of 1950-51 cheerleaders. Left: Boo-Hoo as he was for Snowball 70. Right: Boo-Hoo 72, a.k.a. Otto, as he appears in this year's Snowball book.

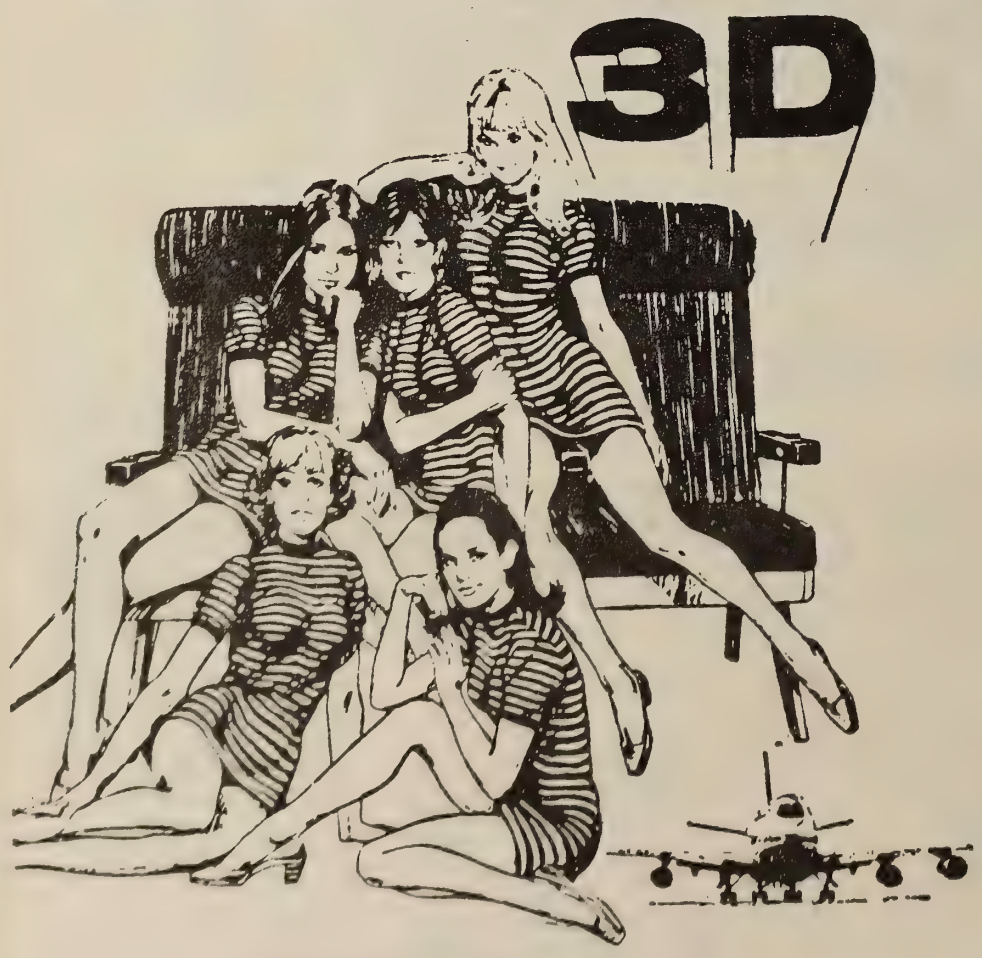
Queen's Ski Club Sponsors...

Mont Ste. Marie Trip

Sunday, Jan. 16th

Cost - $8.50, bus and tow

Tickets on sale in Union
Thurs. Jan. 13, 7 pm



Bus leaves Victoria Hall at 6:00 am

TRICOLOR NOMINATIONS

Nominations for admission to the Tricolor Society are now being received.
Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be limited to postgraduates, and to students in the second term of their final year, who, maintaining a satisfactory academic standing during their course, have rendered valuable and distinguished service to the University in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities, for example:- (a) service in one of the ma¡or fields of student government, ¡ournalistic work, debating, dramatics, or (b) a significant contribution in a wide range of activity.
Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be granted by decree of a Special Committee for this specific purpose.
Any member of the Alma Mater Society may submit nominations to the Tricolor Society. Names of such nominees shall be submitted to the Selections Committee through the Alma Mater Society Office, together with a list of those services the nominee has performed. No nominations will be received later than January 25, 1972.

The Stewardesses

EASTMAN COLOUR STEREOVISION

The unpublishable novel is now
America's most controversial film

CAPITOL
223 PRINCESS 546-5395

Admission RESTRICTED to persons 18 years of age or over
PROOF OF AGE REQUIRED.

Play down some fields, artsci report proposes

Some academic fields in the faculty of arts and science will have to be reduced or phased out over the next few years: that is the hesitant conclusion of a development report just released by a committee of the faculty.

Written by eleven faculty members constituting a "development sub-committee", the report says it is not a policy statement but a "preliminary delineation of issues" to provide a basis for discussion.

It points out the pressures within which the faculty of arts and science must operate; steady enrollment (about 4450 artsci students after 1974, compared with 4030 this year) and government financial stringency mean the faculty cannot continue expanding what it does.

"The main problem of a policy of steady enrollment," the report says, "will be to avoid becoming locked into a steady state. We must give high priority, therefore, to policies directed deliberately at providing a continued capacity for change and innovation."

One reason this flexibility is needed, the report points out, is that students' preferences change from time to time. In recent years the trend has been toward social sciences and fine arts, it says; this year "There is a new surge of interest in the sciences and particularly the life sciences."

Flexibility, and the effective use of limited resources, will mean that expansion in some areas implies reduction in others, the report says.

"On this basis no areas in the present teaching of the faculty should be immediately eliminated" – but, it continues, economies should be achieved by inter-departmental cooperation and some reductions.

The most expensive departments, it indicates, are the smallest: classics, Spanish, Russian, computing, art history, drama, film, and music. "In some of these cases, particularly Russian and film studies, economy may be achieved either by expansion to a more viable level of activity or by a radical reorientation of the academic programme." Perhaps, it suggests, the Russian department should "be reoriented to the development of an intense programme of language study involving an immersion approach" rather than continuing to offer a major in Russian literature.

Cooperation between language departments should be the approach used to set up a programme in comparative linguistics, the report says. Similarly, life science departments should offer combined, not separate, programmes as much as possible.

The report says the proposed new programmes leading to a Bachelor of Social Work degree, a Ph. D. in geography, an M.A. in sociology, and an M.Sc. in exercise physiology and kinesiology should not be implemented unless government financing of them is guaranteed. It says the B.S.W. should be entirely set aside for the next five years.

And, it says, no department of anthropology should be established. "Only a few basic courses in anthropology where needed to strengthen existing programmes should be instituted."

The report makes mention of tension between departments in arts and science. There must be ways of avoiding duplication between departments, it says, through inter-departmental cooperation.

But "it is unlikely that we would seriously wish to abandon the present discipline-department organization within the faculty."

The arts and science faculty has a higher percentage of senior men than do most Ontario universities, the report says: 62 per cent are full professors or associate professors. As a result, "deliberate efforts must be made to encourage and give greater responsibility to younger members of the present academic staff."

Also in the interests of flexibility, "A certain number of places should be reserved for visiting professors and sessional or term appointments in order to encourage the presence of men with new ideas." And sabbatical leaves should be encouraged, it says. At present Queen's is giving very few sabbatical leaves because of financial stringency.

A preface to the report, signed by arts and science dean Dr. Ronald L. Watts, says the committee hopes "that all members of the faculty will make known their comments and view either by participation in the discussions in the faculty board or by direct communication to the sub-committee."

It makes no mention of asking for student opinions

The bad news

1. There will be no Journal Thursday. The paper will publish Friday as usual.
2. It costs more to write home for money now. The first-class letter rate is eight cents within Canada and the United States, effective January 1.
3. You put the wrong date on your lecture notes this morning. It's 1972.

New Queen's computer will be bought from Burroughs

The computing centre has announced the purchase of a new main computer to augment the present IBM 360-50, which has been the main computer at Queen's since 1967.

The new machine will be a Burroughs 6700 system, a much newer and larger machine.

It will be installed in February, and will become operational in May of this year.

The machine has two processing units (which do the actual computing), each of them more powerful than the one processor on the 360-50. In addition, there is another processor to handle input-output operations.

With the new system the computing centre expects about a fourfold increase in computing power, but centre director Bill Jenkins pointed out that this can be increased, if necessary, by the addition of more equipment to the system.

Many of the present system's users will be able to run their jobs on the new system with little or no change. This will include almost all student jobs.

The IBM 360-50 will be kept to process jobs for which the Burroughs 6700 is unsuitable, and to preserve a connection with IBM, whose machines and expertise dominate large sections of the computer industry.

The Burroughs system will have six terminals in various buildings around campus. These terminals will be able to accept any jobs for the system, including student jobs.

The present terminals to the 360-50 -- one in Jeffery Hall and one in the basement of the computing centre -- will be kept, at least for the foreseeable future.

The Burroughs system was chosen over bids from most other major computer manufacturers by a committee of centre staff, students, faculty and other users. This committee examined all the bids last summer and fall, and recommended the Burroughs system on the basis of its growth potential and cost-performance figures.

The Burroughs 6700 is a relatively new system, the first units having been installed about two years ago. There are presently about thirty 6700 systems installed.

The new machine is expected to serve all of Queen's needs at least through the 1970's, and for this reason is being purchased rather than rented, as has been the policy in the past.

The purchase price has not been revealed, but Jenkins pointed out that because of the state of the economy, computer manufacturers have been reducing prices, and also that educational institutions usually receive fairly large discounts. As Queen's is the first university in Canada to purchase a 6700, and computer manufacturers are trying to get toeholds in the university market, it is likely that the price was very much less than the list price of almost three million dollars.

The computing centre will soon be holding seminars for users to make the transfer to the new machine as easy as possible. A certain amount of information is available in the reference room of the computing centre.

Law professor sentenced for murder

Queen's law professor Keith Latta, 43, was convicted of the non-capital murder of an Edmonton travel agent in an Alberta Supreme Court trial during the Christmas holiday.

He was sentenced to a mandatory term of life imprisonment. The thirty-day period during which he may appeal has not yet expired.

Latta was charged with the June shooting of travel agent and separate-school trustee Robert Neville. Latta and Neville had been partners in Neville World Travel Services, Ltd.

The crown presented evidence that Latta stood to gain $75,000 from the death of Neville, as each held a life insurance policy on the other. Crown prosecutor W.J. Stainton told the jury that Latta had tried to collect on the insurance policy immediately after Neville's death.

Other evidence showed that a detective of the Edmonton police department had received a call on June 14 from a person who identified himself as Latta and said there had been an attempt to blackmail Neville.

The crown attorney said that Latta had told a friend in Edmonton that Neville was being blackmailed, and that he (Latta) had stopped in Edmonton to help Neville. Neville supposedly had been told to supply ten thousand dollars or have his wife told of his affairs with other women. The friend had been told by Latta that Neville must pay or be killed, the crown continued.

In his summation, the prosecutor said he felt the blackmail story was part of falsehoods the accused had laid in the case.

Defence attorney Cameron Steer said hate created by Neville's relationships with other women could have prompted a blackmail attempt and the murder. He said that someone connected with a woman who had had social and sexual contacts with Neville may have been involved in a blackmail attempt.

Earlier evidence showed that palm-prints of Latta were found in a newspaper and map found in a bus depot locker by police, after they found the locker key in the travel agency office where Neville's body had been discovered.

Latta has not taught at Queen's this academic year, but continues to be carried on the faculty list as a tenured professor of law.

Public relations director Larry Moore and personnel director Bill Wright said they could make no comment on his future status with the university. The university will take no action at least until the appeal period expires, Wright said.

UP TO 50% OFF - SPECIAL DISCOUNTS - HALF PRICE FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS

PLAYBOY		NEW REPUBLIC		ECONOMIST		MANCHESTER GUARDIAN
7 mos.	$ 6.00	NEW YORKER		1 yr.	$33.60	1 yr.	$12.00
1 yr.	$ 8.50	EBONY		TIME		READER'S DIGEST
2 yrs.	$16.00	1 yr.	$ 7.00	25 wks.	$ 2.97	1 yr.	$ 1.99
3 yrs.	$22.00	NEWSWEEK		1 yr.	$ 6.00	COMMENTARY
ESQUIRE		34 wks.	$ 4.75	2 yrs.	$12.00	HOROSCOPE
8 iss.	$ 3.00	1 yr.	$ 7.00	SPORTS ILLUSTRATED		PSYCHOLOGY TODAY
1 yr.	$ 4.33	2 yrs.	$14.00	1 yr.	$ 7.50	SKY DIVER
14 iss.	$ 5.00	U.S. NEWS & W.R.		APARTMENT IDEAS		1 yr.	$ 6.50
VOGUE		23 wks.	$ 2.75	ATLAS		ATLANTIC
SKIN DIVER		1 yr.	$ 6.00	BETTER HOMES & GARDENS		9 iss.	$ 4.00
1 yr.	$ 7.50	2 yrs.	$12.00	GOLF DIGEST		1 yr.	$ 5.25
COSMOPOLITAN		SATURDAY REVIEW		HOUSE & GARDEN		HOT ROD
CONSUMER REPORTS & CANADIAN CONSUMER		34 wks.	$ 4.00	VILLAGE VOICE		SEVENTEEN
1 yr.	$10.00	1 yr.	$ 6.00	1 yr.	$ 5.00	TRANS-ACTION
NURSING OUTLOOK		2 yrs.	$12.00	RAMPARTS		1 yr.	$ 5.75
1 yr.	$ 9.60	HARPERS MAGAZINE		8 iss.	$ 4.75	HOCKEY NEWS
CAVALIER		1 yr.	$ 4.25	1 yr.	$ 6.00	TV GUIDE
1 yr.	$ 9.50	BAZAAR		NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC		1 yr.	$ 6.00
PENTHOUSE		1 yr.	$ 6.25	1 yr.	$10.25	MECHANIX ILLUSTRATED
1 yr.	$ 8.00	CAR & DRIVER		GRADE TEACHER		1 yr.	$ 2.50
2 yrs.	$14.00	HAIR DO & BEAUTY		1 yr.	$ 8.50	ROLLING STONE
CHATELAINE		MOD-POP PHOTOGRAPHY		CANADIAN FORUM		SWIMMING
MACLEANS		MOTOR TREND		1 yr.	$ 2.50	1 yr.	$ 8.00
SATURDAY NIGHT		SPORT				NEW STATESMAN
1 yr.	$ 1.50	SUNSHINE				1 yr.	$17.00
CYCLE		1 yr.	$ 3.50
LADIES HOME JOURNAL
McCALLS
SKI
1 yr.	$ 3.00
AMERICAN HOME
MODERN BRIDE
SKIING
1 yr.	$ 2.00
BRIDE'S MAGAZINE
GLAMOUR
MADEMOISELLE
REDBOOK
SKATING
1 yr.	$ 4.00

PLUS MANY, MANY MORE - JUST ASK. RATES SUBJECT TO CHANGE. CIRCLE CHOICES. ENCLOSE CHEQUE OR M.O.
MAIL ORDER TO: L.C.C. INTERNATIONAL AGENCY, LTD.
C.P.O. BOX 4, STN. "F",
TORONTO 285, ONT.

NAME _____ (please print)
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ ZONE _____ PROV. _____
COLLEGE _____ Class Year _____
SIGNATURE _____
GIFT CARD MESSAGE _____

TO: ALL ARTS & SCIENCE STUDENTS

RE: DIPLOMAS

Presently, there is before the Senate a proposal to unify the various diplomas which the Senate grants to students upon completion of the various degree requirements.

As a result of this proposal, Dean Watts of the Faculty of Arts and Science has asked that members of the ASUS be consulted on this matter and that we report to him by JANUARY 19TH, 1972.

On the wall above the fireplace in the RED ROOM, Kingston Hall, you will find posted three types of diplomas.

Number 1 is an example of that now given to successful candidates in the Bachelor of Science Programme.

Number 2 is an example of that now given to successful candidates in the Bachelor of Arts Programme. (This one is in Latin)

Number 3 is a draft copy of the proposed uniform diploma. It is all in black ink on the mock-up, but the actual one will have red ink and a proper Queen's seal at the bottom.

Students in the ASUS are requested to go to the Red Room and indicate their choice after viewing the three diplomas, on the forms provided before January 19.

THE VAGAS VICEROY

The Commerce Society Presents...

CASINO ROYALE RAFFLE

FIRST PRIZE - Eight Fantastic Daze in Las Vegas for Two
- During Reading Week (Feb. 19-21)
- All Expenses Paid - $500 Spending Money
- Accommodations at the Sands Hotel
- Mach I Mustang for the week
- Guest Passes to Ceasar's Pallace
- Etc, Etc, Etc.

SECOND PRIZE - $300 Stereo

THIRD PRIZE - Twenty Albums of YOUR Choice

WATCH FOR THE VAGA$ VICEROY AND CA$INO GAL
AND FOR THE COMMERCE CAMPUS CASINO, TICKETS $1

New Hours

Your on-campus typing service will be open to handle all of your typing and duplicating needs at these new hours:

Monday - Thursday: 8:30 am - 8:00 pm
Friday: 8:30 am - 4:30 pm

The Student Typing Service

STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

ELECTIONS: ASUS

On February 7th, 8th, 9th, the ASUS will hold elections for the following positions:

1. Presidential team to head the ASUS executive
2. Secretary and Treasurer of the ASUS (separate positions)
3. Nine members to represent the ASUS on the AMS Outer Council
4. Three senators to take office in September; one for one year, two for two year terms.

Nominations will be received until 7 p.m., January 30th

Nominations must be accompanied by 25 signatures of members of the ASUS. Complete nominations should be put in sealed envelopes and given to any member of the ASUS Executive, the Judicial Chairman, or left in the ASUS mailbox in the AMS Outer Office addressed to the Judicial Chairman of the ASUS.

1971/72 Career Seminar Series

presents

Careers with the Ontario Government

...a pre-interview discussion on career opportunities with the Government of Ontario

Guests will include:

Mrs. A. Kerr
Liaison Officer
Colleges and Universities

Time and Place:

Monday January 17th at 7 p.m.

Students' Memorial Union
(small common room, 2nd floor)

The Ontario Civil Service Commission will be recruiting on campus on February 7th and 8th, and all students interested in a career with the Government of Ontario should attend this career session.

NOTICE

SNOW REMOVAL
QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
PARKING REGULATIONS

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY PARKING REGULATIONS STATE IN PART.

"FROM DECEMBER 1, 1971, TO MARCH 31, 1972 INCLUSIVE, VEHICLES PARKED ON THE CAMPUS BETWEEN MIDNIGHT AND 7.00 A.M. WILL BE TOWED AWAY IF THEY IMPEDE SNOW REMOVAL OPERATIONS"

Opportunities for Youth continues

Opportunities for Youth will operate again in 1972, career placement director Dave Wroe has announced.

Wroe said that because of the success last year of the federal government's programme to encourage student-initiated summer projects, it would exist on a greatly extended basis this year.

Although the detailed programme is not known yet, Wroe said, it appears that OFY will be better organized than it was last year.

But Opportunities for Youth is only one source of summer jobs, Wroe pointed out. He said the Career Planning and Placement Service at Queen's will draw summer employment opportunities for students from more than 2,000 organizations this year.

The service has an ongoing summer assistance programme for students who register with them, he added, and each such student is given a number of leads in the area in which he wants to be located.

"Of 1600 Queen's students who registered for jobs last summer, approximately 1300 were actually placed in a job," Wroe said.

The service has contacts across Ontario and Canada, he added, in cooperation with Canada Manpower and other university employment bureaus.

Last year Opportunities for Youth was very successful at Queen's, Wroe said. About 400 Queen's students took part, earning an average salary of $1100.

The average OFY salary in 1972 will probably be between $1200 and $1300, Wroe said. He added that the maximum salary allowed will probably be specified by the government, to avoid a hierarchical structure of pay within a project.

The placement service will be a staffing agency for Ontario Place again this summer, he said; more than 55 Queen's students got jobs there in 1971, and about 25 new jobs will be available this year.

The career placement service actually ran out of students to place in jobs last summer, Wroe said. "By about June, we still had job opportunities to be filled, but no students to fill them."

And Job Bank, a Queen's Student Agencies project which works with Career Planning and Placement in finding jobs in the Kingston area, was forced to close down for lack of students.

Students should register with the placement service early, Wroe suggested, since they are served on a first-come-first-served basis.

Application forms for Opportunities for Youth will be available within a few weeks, he said.

Career Planning and Placement is located in Goodwin House across from Ban Righ Hall.

Two students killed

Two graduate students were killed in one-car accidents near Kingston during December.

Riku Nakagome, Ph.D. student in metallurgy, died December 11 from injuries received when his car went off Highway 401 east of Kingston on the afternoon of December 6.

His car went out of control on slippery pavement after a shower and struck a concrete support at the Joyceville overpass east of Kingston.

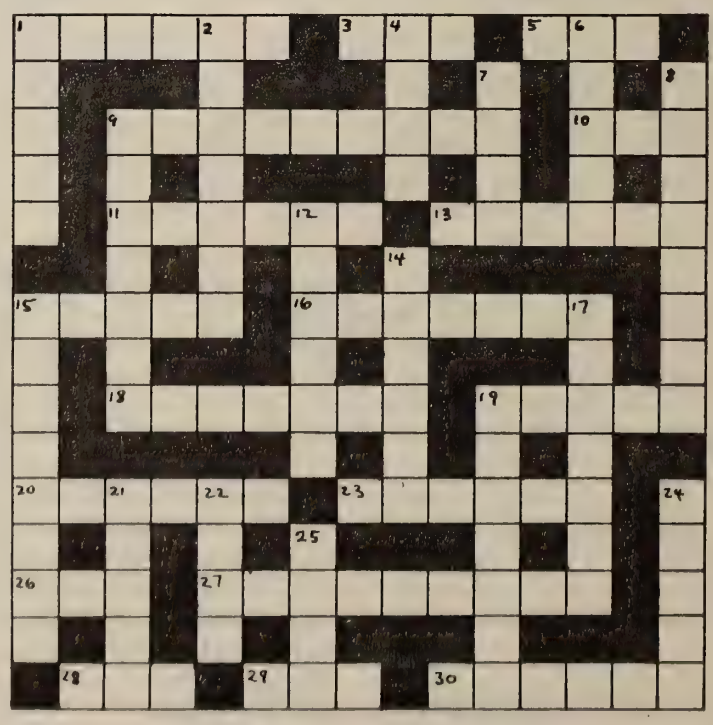
Ryuji Sakamoto, Japanese consul-general in Toronto, said Nakagoma's body would be cremated in Canada and the ashes shipped to his family in Tokyo.

Graduate English student George Bowden of Ottawa was killed December 16 when his car left the 401 near the Cataraqui River bridge west of Kingston.

Bowden's car went out of control, rolled over several times, and landed in the ditch of the opposite lane on the freeway.

Bowden, 23, was chairman of the English departmental student council last year. He was working for his M.A. this year.

Chief frec is chosen



Dave Armstrong of Science 75 will be chief Frec for the applied science initiation this fall.

He was selected from among 12 applicants at a closed meeting of the Engineering Society executive December 2.

A chairman for the welcoming committee, which governs science orientation, has not been chosen yet. The position has been held by a female engineering student for the past several years.

Journal crossword puzzle of the week

1. Sausage? Baloney!
2. Asked after name and address.
5. Enquire.
9. Kind of country Canada is.
10. Fish eggs.
11. They stick to letters.
13. The Great Train had several.
15. Palm fringe.
16. Part of equipment with a kilt.
18. On edge.
19. Not smooth.
20. Baltimore bird.
23. Daze.
26. Long, long time.
27. Member of the upper classes.
28. Hast thou finished the painting?
29. A common, if not vulgar, word.
30. Wreath which the winner gets.

DOWN

1. Done in bed, or sometimes in class.
2. Type of duck.
4. Insect; or what is eaten.
6. Clean with a brush and energy.
7. Classification of voice.
8. Party with lots of noise and lots of drink.
9. Wind instrument.
12. Minister.
14. Coddle.
15. Everyone in a parade, except the majorettes.
17. Particle without a charge.
19. Exact model.
21. Opposite of outer (this is the easy clue).
22. Run with an easy stride.
24. About a birth -- or, a country in Africa.
25. State with Mormons.

$26.8 million budget for Queen's this year

Operating Revenue - Ten Months - 1971-72	12 month Budget 1971-72 ($,000)	% of Total	10 month Budget 1971-72 ($,000)	% of Total
Student Academic Fees
Winter Intramural	4,080	13.3	3,904	14.7
Prof. & Exec. Courses	106	0.4	106	0.4
Extension Department	696	2.3	696	2.5
SUBTOTAL	4,882	16.0	4,706	17.6
Endowment Income
Unrestricted	167	0.5	152	0.6
Restricted	59	0.2	59	0.2
SUBTOTAL	226	0.7	211	0.8
Government Grants
Ontario - operating	24,927	81.2	21,157	79.4
- special	201	0.7	201	0.8
SUBTOTAL	25,128	81.9	21,358	80.2
Gifts and Grants	240	0.8	216	0.8
Sale of Services	13	0.0	12	0.0
Miscellaneous	189	0.6	169	0.6
TOTAL Operating Revenue	30,678	100.0	26,672	100.0
TOTAL Operating Expenditure	31,169		26,861
Surplus/(Deficit)	(491)		(189)

Money is tighter than ever: that is the unsurprising central thrust of the senate budget committee's annual report, presented at the December senate meeting.

For the ten-month budget year ending April 30, 1972, Queen's University will have an operating deficit of $189,000, the report says.

It points out that Ontario government grants represent an increasing share of the revenue Queen's has to spend -- 82 per cent in 1971-72.

For the ten-month 1971-72 budgeting year, revenue will be $26,672,000, and expenditures $26,861,000.

The budget year is ten months because previous fiscal years have run from July 1 to June 30; the university is switching so that the year will run from May 1 to April 30.

Operating Expenditures - Ten Months - 1971-72

	12 month Budget Expenditures 1971-72 ($,000)	% of Total	10 month Budget Expenditures 1971-72 ($,000)	% of Total
Faculties and Schools
Arts and Science	11,193	35.9	9,596	35.7
School of Business	907	2.9	764	2.8
Prof. & Exec. Courses	107	0.3	94	0.4
Medicine	3,634	11.7	3,091	11.5
Applied Science	2,792	9.0	2,380	8.9
Law	861	2.8	734	2.7
School of Nursing	193	0.6	164	0.6
Dept. of Extension	539	1.7	507	1.9
Other Schools	185	0.5	130	0.5
SUBTOTAL	20,411	65.4	17,460	65.0
Central Academic Services
Library	2,401	7.7	2,106	7.8
Computing Centre	1,267	4.1	1,066	4.0
Sundry Academic	976	3.1	900	3.4
SUBTOTAL	4,644	14.9	4,072	15.2
TOTAL Academic Expenditures	25,055	80.3	21,532	80.2
Nonacademic Expenditures
Administration	2,042	6.6	1,736	6.4
Physical Plant	3,413	10.9	2,942	10.9
Municipal Tax	201	0.6	201	0.8
Miscellaneous	458	1.6	450	1.7
SUBTOTAL	6,114	19.7	5,329	19.8
TOTAL Operating Expenditures	31,169	100.0	26,861	100.0

May-June session courses set

A tentative list of courses for the experimental summer inter-session has been announced.

The inter-session will run from May 10 to June 23. Students may take up to two full courses in the session; as in the regular July-August summer session, courses will normally be two hours a day, five days a week.

Registration deadline for the inter-session is January 31. Present intramural students can register at the arts and science office at 131 Union Street; others, at the department of extension, 25 Union Street. A deposit towards the tuition fee is required with registration.

The fee for each full course is $115; for each half course, $57.50.

Further information is available from the arts and science office.

The following are the tentatively scheduled courses. They will be offered only if enough students register for them before January 31.

Biology 201.
Computing 101,102.
Drama 240,320,330.
Economics 210.
English 211, 221.
Film 310.
Geography 440.
History 260,276.
Mathematics 111,162,323.
Politics 210,310,423.
Psychology 021,100.
Sociology 122,274,352.

AOSC TRAVEL

Nassau, the Bahamas

Reading Week (Feb 19-27)

Return Jet Fare (Air Canada) & Accommodations, Approximate Cost - $190.00.

Interested?

Leave name and phone with AMS office

TRANSCENDENTAL MEDITATION
AS TAUGHT BY
MAHARISHI MAHESH YOGI

Transcendental meditation is a natural spontaneous technique which allows each individual to expand his mind and improve all aspects of his life.

Introductory Lecture
By Gregg Wilson
Wednesday, January 12, 8:30 p.m.
Stirling Hall — Room 412C
Students' International Meditation Society of Queen's University
For further info — 542-4693

AMS NOTICE

PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS

will be received in the AMS office, Student Union, until 5 p.m. Friday, January 28, Presidents and Vice-Presidents must run as a team. Nominations must be supported with 200 signatures of AMS members.

CLASSIFIEDS

GOOD PERMANENT or summer jobs are found more easily with a well-written resume. Call Page Resumes, 549-1384.

CHRIS BOON is now residing at 80 Wellington St., Apt. 2 Phone 546-2564.

WANTA JOIN the Journal staff? Give us a call. No talent necessary.

CUSO

invites you to apply now:

- 1st priority: Medical personnel (must have 2 yrs. experience)
- also needed: teachers of most subjects, maths & science in particular, (experience preferred)

Contact K. Pold, 547-2807

International Centre.

Student Affairs Centre

They named it 165 University because that is what it was called* 165 University, run by Jim Whitley (of the Math Department), is not a middleman operation where students can air their beefs. If you have a beef go to The AMS or the office in question for that. But, if you need a job, are just plain afraid of this campus, your marks, etc., or even need furniture Jim has become something of an expert in this field), you can go to 165 for someone to talk to.

If you really need to get away from all that campus life is, Jim may send you home to his four kids, assorted animals, and "amiable wife" for fine home-cooked meals from Liz Whitley.

The whole thing began as a pilot project in student counselling, specially funded so as to make it non-departmental. The original idea was the result of a Senate recommendation. Dave Clark, from Psychology, looks after such programmes as speed reading, correcting study habits checking into whether or not a student is in the right academic programme, vocational counselling, an extensive testing service, academic counselling, and a "pseudo-psychiatric" service, much of which is self-applied.

Part of the pseudo-psychiatric service involves "relaxation therapy." Jim said that he "cast a jaundiced eye" at this programme at first, but, after way-laying several students who had been through it, he found that they all reported that it is very beneficial.

Another aspect of the programme is "group encounter." A student must qualify to get into this programme, for his own mental well-being, more than anything. They "apparently do each other a world of good." There is a "completely different attitude than at the Psychology Department. People can get emotional, cry" - be human.

George offers a service that is closer to the usual image of psychological counselling. "We need that type around, not everybody can be emotional," said Jim. Students seem to be happy self-administering the mechanical sections (taped sensitivity exercises, and so on) of that programme, which seem to be proving valuable.

Abortion referral, contraceptive information, and Birthright (a non-abortion approach to unwanted pregnancy) information are all available at 165. Mary Ellen Marus and Chuck Reuben are the major directors of this section. Adoption procedures information is also available for those girls who plan to go full term but not keep their babies. People with troubles in these areas (or any other) can telephone 165 in the evenings (547-6995). The abortion etc. information service may eventually become a part of QSA (Queen's Student Agencies).

All the people involved in this programme (about 80 people) are volunteers, and all are becoming educated themselves in the process of obtaining all the necessary information. Dr. MacKenzie, a "tremendous young doctor" from the Hotel Dieu, assembled the birth control information. Sub-committees of two people each, a man and a woman, went through the drill of getting an abortion, or mechanical birth control devices, or adopting through the Children's Aid Society, so that they could tell inquirers exactly what such procedures are and what the experiences are like.

There is no moralizing re abortions, although not all the volunteers believe in abortion on demand. They will suggest alternatives and guide you through whichever choice you make.

165 is not really just a student activity. Everybody, including Jim and Trisha (the secretary) is as much a part. Liz Whitley is too, and sometimes her home care part of the programme can get a little crowded. She doesn't seem to mind, though. The student rector, Alan Broadbent, is also often available there - "because of free coffee and 10 cent cokes," says Jim.

"Student Affairs", the original name of the project, was rejected as being paternalistic. Students who already know of this service call it "165 University" or just "165", so that will probably be its official name - because that's what it's called.

-by Leslie Kaye

Jim Whitley

* Headline stolen from "She Named It Canada Because That Is What It Was Called," a book.

The

The old gentleman in the picture with the perpetual sparkle in his eyes is Gordie Harker. He was 81 on his last birthday and has lived in or around Kingston almost all his life. If you're a dedicated beer drinker you may recognize this rather remarkable old fellow.

Think for a minute what it might be like to be 81. His parents left the United States after the American Civil War and bought a farm near Sydenham in the 1880's. From what I gather it must have been a comparatively prosperous farm because Gord conveyed no impression of hardship and even enjoyed the 'luxury' of getting ½ way through high school. And in the days before W.W. I that's further than most people in Canada got.

Gord has had many jobs in the area. He worked for many years at the Kingston Whig-Standard. Sometime before that he spent 6-8 years working for an undertaker - w surprisingly, the worst
He's retired now and
Steve Amey's Lakev
Manor is most freque bad beer, good wai
drinkers, but, in additi infamous functions, it rents out some 20 roo
of the sillier regulatio
Licensing Board of On roomette on a perman has its own washroo
kitchen up there so he'
uncomfortable.

Who could ask for than Gord enjoys? He Manor's kitchen and h
full of drinking buddie chef at the Manor
there with the Gallopi
it's a hell of a lot bette some of the institutio around Kingston. If a

Vaginal deoder

Five years ago nobody had ever heard of a feminine hygeine deodorant. We all had our hands full keeping our underarms and feet smelling sweet. Then somebody decided that there was money in vaginas and so the feminine hygeine deodorant was born.

And for five years major drug-cosmetic companies like Johnson and Johnson and Alberto Culver have been raking it in. Projected sales for 1971 will run to $53 million according to the Wall Street Journal. This represents a market of almost 24 million women.

However, the bubble may be about to burst. The deodorants are now under attack by some doctors.

A recent issue of the Medical Letter, a drug-evaluation newsletter for doctors, stated. "It is unlikely that commercial deodorant feminine hygeine sprays are as effective as soap and water in promoting a hygenic and odor-free external genital surface."

"Expensive perfumes", is the description used by gynecological expert Dr. Bernard Kaye of Highland Park, Ill. Quoted in the Wall Street Journal, the doctor continued, "There's never been any proof that the sprays are effective to anything except make money for the companies. There's no reason for the damn things."

Dr. Kaye reports that he gets a "couple of calls a day" from women complaining of a rash or an itch, many of which can be traced directly to the sprays.

Today's Health, a publication of the American Medical Association warns women not to use the sprays directly before intercourse because such use had resulted in a "number of cases of genital irritation on both men and women."

The FTC is concerned with the advertising campaign -- a massive one by any standard. Recently television has been inundated with those discreet, low-key ads about feminity, the ne vaginal odour.

-Brunswic

"There has been a spon against those awful com
you why. In the first plac isn't really a problem. I lying around overcome b
And I don't think deodora way to cope with such existed. If a woman doesn attention to her sexual ap thinks she's going to
"nice" by squirting chemical suspended in an she's wrong. It doesn't m all, any more than goin room and squirting aer smell. It just makes it than ever. So, if a woma odour, she has it because excretions in the vagina would be simpler to wash day. But the main point deodorants are sold as fucking, with the impli
don't sleep with your Tedd you're a big girl and y
you're going to need a v before you fuck. The fact however, that if you deodorant before you f
undue irritation - which,
can imagine, must reall cunt. So the manufacture off a bit and admitted, w shouldn't use it just bef
When should you use it,
not before you go to the nobody's been lurking
"God, that girl's cunt sme
all bullshit. The whole th making women buy ye modity, and it's connnecte and low esteem."

-Germaine Greer, Januar

amalgam

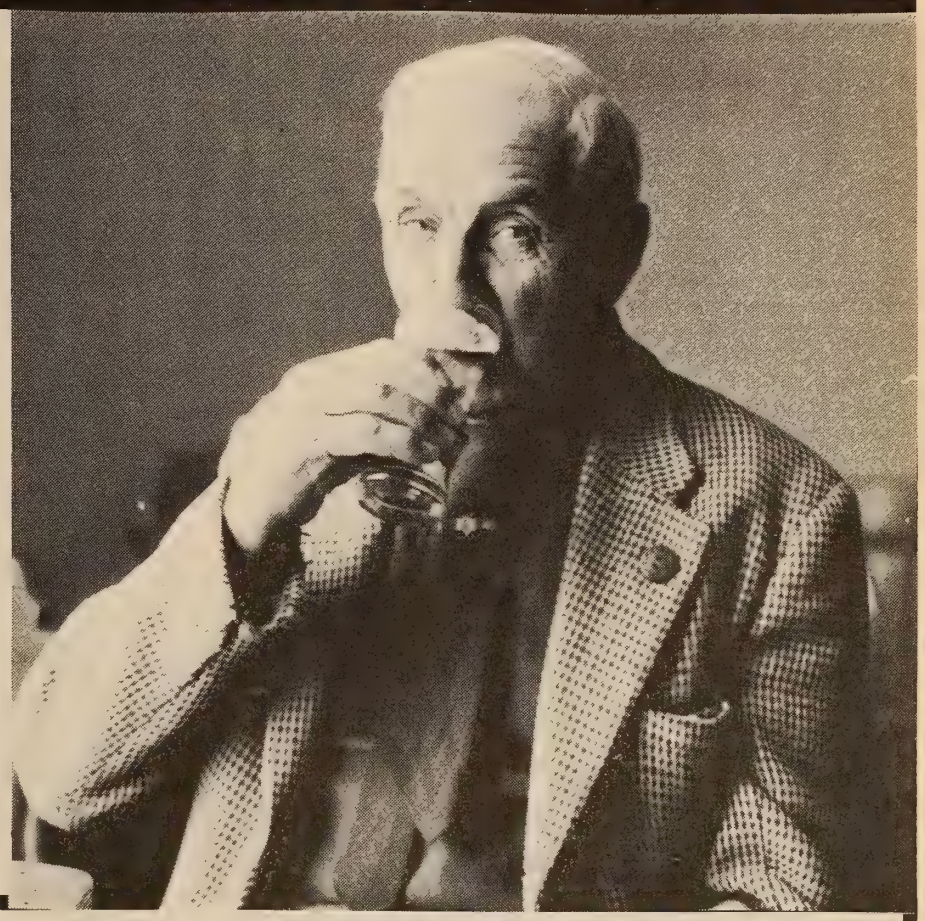
emarkable Manor resident alls, not his life. stairs at or. The l for its d lousy se more otel and rs (one Liquor ents his now. It small icularly his age l at the g room'. irs. The ank up net but food at hink of u have endured the privilege of eating in a Queen's residence you may know what I mean.



Gord has little family left now and seems to enjoy himself at the Manor. Although he was engaged once (at least once, from what I gathered) he was never married. He has two older sisters still alive near Kingston but they are in senior citizens homes. When you get to be Gord's age many of your old friends are gone.

But far from being without friends, I swear that Gord knows at least half the people who are drinking in the draught rooms at the Manor at any given time. If you've been there more than once, chances are that you may have seen him or perhaps talked with him. He really enjoys making friends with the students. In his own small way Gord is as much a part of Queen's tradition as are limestone, oil thighs, and the Manor itself.

He still enjoys his beer but lately he's been drinking less. I suppose he knows that he's not as young as he once was and his arthritis sometimes bothers him now. On his 80th birthday however, he was in fine form. He went into the Centennial Room for the Saturday afternoon amateur show and danced a few jigs for the fans. Rumour has it that he continued the celebration afterwards with a few beers.

The day the picture was taken Gord as 'nattily' attired. He prides himself on being rather dapper and was wearing a royal blue shirt, a flaming red tie, and a gold tie chain. (I only wish I had had colour film to do him justice.) You really can't help admiring someone like that. All things considered, he enjoys life more than most people his age. I hope I'm as hale and hearty, and as full of his enthusiasm when I'm 81.

-R.J. Benson

The trouble with our economic policy is that we don't have one

(Ed. note: Canada will have to make some fundamental economic changes in the near future if she is to survive as an economically viable nation. Dian Cohen, in this excerpt from an article in Saturday Night, examines the options open to Canada.)

What options does Canada have? We can continue our present policy of reaction and response, and hope that someone or something will bail us out of our present crisis; we can negotiate with the United States towards a goal of economic integration; or we can follow a policy of total isolation from the United States, with or without retaliation.

On the basis of economic criteria alone, economic integration is a logical option. A compelling case can be made to show that Canadian efficiency and living standards would be raised substantially through closer economic union with the U.S. Indeed, compelling cases have been made to that effect by a growing number of Canadian economists. Integration, they maintain, would not, as has been suggested, turn Canada into a supplier of raw materials. On the contrary, Canada's smallness means that we need compete successfully only in the production of a small number of manufactured products in order to improve significantly the performance of our secondary manufacturing industry.

As for maintaining our political independence, there are impressive arguments on both sides. In any event, there is one every practical problem in speculating about the impact of full economic integration with the United States. The option may no longer be open, not only because of the political, social and other non-economic costs it would threaten for Canada, but because the U.S. may have turned inward to such an extent that it no longer cares about Canada's particular needs. We have always assumed the Americans wanted us to join them. They may not.

Canada's options are rapidly disappearing. In terms of other markets for Canadian exports, the timing of the U.S. initiatives couldn't be worse. Where can we possibly sell manufactured goods, apart from the U.S.? Canada is essentially a high-cost producer. This is true by virtue first of our short-production runs, and second in terms of our high wage rates. Even our markets for raw materials are drying up. Japan provides a good example. A slowdown in the Japanese economic growth rate, due both to restraints on exports and to a weakening of domestic demand, will reduce that country's demand for Canadian raw materials to be used in Japanese production.

The entry of Britain into the Common Market is not significant for this year or maybe even next. But it is another sign that the world trend is increasingly towards the formation of regional trading blocs. Not only does this trend pose a negative element for an important segment of the non-United States trade of Canada, but it also suggests how rapidly Canada's future economic options are being foreclosed.

The final negative factor in the outlook for Canadian exports is that during Nixon's Phase 2, prices are likely to rise more rapidly in Canada than in the U.S. To the extent that we inflate faster than the U.S., our floating exchange rate will fall. But it won't necessarily help to sell more goods.

In searching for alternatives to the heavy reliance on trade with the U.S., Canada finds itself odd man out in the process of regional bloc formation. Some flexibility may still exist, but Canada's high wage rates and the strength of the Canadian dollar, resulting from strong resource exports, offer little promise for a substantial increase in secondary manufacturing sales outside North America.

But even if Nixon had not made his economic moves, we wouldn't have been all right. Canada has been an economic invalid for a long time. But the disease is just now entering the stage where the pain is severe. The nature of the country and the people has presented successive governments with fundamental and long-term problems.

Most of Canada's problems have been aggravated by home-grown economic policies. We have a history of inaccurate and inappropriate responses to economic situations dating back at least to the postwar period. The latter half of the 1960s provides us with a classic illustration. Following several years of rapid industrial growth and low levels of unemployment, the government embarked on restrictive economic policies designed to curb spending, production and jobs. They did this knowing full well that the Canadian labour force was growing at a phenomenal rate, and that massive numbers of jobs would have to be created to absorb the people entering the job market. They succeeded not in curbing inflation but in creating a recession. And when they decided to reverse their restrictive policies, they chose the incorrect route of massive government spending rather than tax cuts. The government had failed to recognize that too-high taxes were a major cause of inflation in the first place.

The result of a three-year series of inappropriate economic policy decisions was that in the first weeks of last August, the Canadian economy was in jeopardy of remaining in a stagflation rut. Unemployment was high and rising. Inflation was high and rising. Between 1967 and 1971, some 120,000 jobs failed to materialize in the manufacturing sector.

Finance Minister Edgar Benson has stressed that increased employment and growth in the 1970s will have to come primarily from manufacturing. Yet a recent Science Council study points out that "employment is now being lost in the very industries in which most jobs were created in recent years..." Canada's problems were "made in Canada" long before August 15. That's where they're going to have to be solved.

Canadians must now start deciding what we want to be. And we must do it fast, because events are rapidly boxing us into a position where all our options are unattractive. Our freinds no longer have the patience to put up with our vacillations without any clear and consistent long-term objectives. Lip service to the motherhood goals of growth, full employment, price stability are no longer enough. It is time for Canada to embark on a major new policy direction - one that involves active, long-term objectives, and commitments not to deviate from them.

That means recognizing that policies, whether monetary or fiscal, which are biased against the goods-producing industries, are not in the best interests of all Canadians.

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 34
Tuesday, January 11, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

The beliefs which we have most warrant for, have no safeguard to rest on, but a standing invitation to the whole world to prove them unfounded.

-John Stuart Mill

This is a non-editorial (read, plug)

Which is hardly news. But the beginning of a new term does give a lot of people, especially first year students who never quite got around to joining that club or organization they had planned on joining back in September, a sort of second chance to get involved in things.

Most of the clubs, organizations etc. on campus have never got enough keen people and are always glad when someone new turns up. (They might not show it at first, but they really are glad.)

So now, in these first few weeks when you haven't any really pressing assignments or anything like that due, why not get out of residence for a night or two a week and take part in the many activities here? It makes life a lot more interesting than drinking, sleeping and trying to catch up on some course.

And, speaking of organizations that are always glad to have new people turn up, if anyone is interested in working on the Journal (typing, writing news, features, sports or entertainment articles, doing layout) or if anyone has any ideas on how to make the paper better (and we know there are about 8,000 or 9,000 of them on this campus), we would be glad to have them drop into the office to talk to the editors about their ideas. There is someone in the office every Sunday, Tuesday and Wednesday night, and at irregular hours most of the rest of the time, too.

Letters

The letters below and on the opposite page were all received before our last issue last term (with the exceptions of the ones from Mr. McLay and Mr. Stayer). We regret that, because of the large number of letters we received last term, we were unable to fit them in at that time.

Fie, Mr. Johnston!

Dear Editors;

As one of the members of the Arts and Sciences Faculty Board who spoke and voted against the Coleman-Franks motion, I feel obliged to express regret about Mr. Johnston's incomprehension of the views of the majority of the Faculty Board (cf. the article and editorial in the Queen's Journal of December 14).

The defeated proposal was for a series of two week courses in the memorization of a list of "salient facts" about the environment, human conflict, and poverty, aimed at "dispelling the grossest forms of ignorance" on these subjects.

Had it been accepted, Messers. Coleman and Franks would have moved to make these courses a degree requirement for students - and it was their original intention that "enthusiastic" participation by faculty in such courses be considered as a factor in all subsequent promotions.

The proposal must be taken as a whole, since Mr. Coleman himself admitted that the separation of the two motions was but a matter of tactics. As a whole the proposal was messianic and authoritarian.

In essence it suggested that everyone in the university community be coerced in one way or another into learning a list of "correct answers", as we do in a driver's exam. Few subjects are more in need of discussion and analysis than these - the environment, human conflict, and poverty - about which it was suggested we subject ourselves to a community indoctrination program.

The points that were to be inculcated were, no doubt, regarded by the proposers as common sensical and axiomatic, what all right-thinking persons would agree to be necessary knowledge. More because than in spite of this purity of motivation, the stress in the proposal was on indoctrination, coercion and coerced "enthusiasm".

Those of us who opposed the Coleman Franks motions had thought that, on whatever else we disagreed with student "activists", we emphatically agreed with them in our opposition to indoctrination and coercion in higher education. The main point of the recent curriculum reforms has been to move away from the sort of regulation and requirement that the Coleman-Franks proposal would have reintroduced.

The authoritarianism and messianism of the defeated proposal is of a type peculiar to professors. It contains the ancient "Socratic fallacy", the suggestion that the major cause of human problems is ignorance, that knowing the good we will do the good. If this were so, the university could indeed become the world's "Salvation".

The fact is, though, that anyone at Queen's who is in a state of gross ignorance about the environment, poverty and aggression has so many opportunities for information that he must have chosen to be ignorant on these subjects.

Knowledge is not a substitute for religious or ethical commitment. To repeat Marx and Robert Kennedy, the point is not to understand the world but to change it.

But there is a subsidiary point very important to us as members of a university community, a point that tends to get lost in sneers about our "ivory-towered existence". The university can do nothing to change the world, outside of its unique and proper function of trying honestly and competently to understand it.

We must do nothing to contribute to the delusion that the university is a "Super Church" which can fill the void left by the disappearance of religious and ethical absolutes. The only contribution the university can make to basic human problems is to think about them - even though that is not enough.

Unfortunately, the Coleman-Franks proposal was not to think, but to "do something" - namely to coerce, to indoctrinate and to evangelize. It contained both the implication that the university can do more than it really can and the suggestion that it betray its proper function.

It is a symptom of the malaise of our time that professors make such proposals and that students are impressed by them. The Coleman motion and what it represents are part of the problem, however, not part of the solution.

-James M. Stayer
Assistant Professor
of History.

Dear Editors;

The lead article and the scurrilous editorial accompanying it in the Queen's Journal of December 14 are classic examples of the smear tactics used by the yellow press. Why is it that people who run into opposition to their pet projects resort to vilification and misrepresentation of their opponents?

I suggest that it is this type of emotional polemics which when applied to existential issues leads to genocide, to lynchings and to mob rule.

I resent very deeply the suggestion that my opposition to the motion of Mr. Coleman and Mr. Franks indicates a "lack of concern for the big problems of the world" and that I have "grown too fond of the status quo and far too rigid when it comes to making changes or to coping with the real world outside of (my) ivory-towered, departmentalized existence."

Why do those who have suddenly become aware of problems that have been concerning most of us for decades become so self-righteously critical of those who honestly disagree with them?

Several years ago, thanks to the iniative of the External Affairs Commission of the A.M.S., some of us participated in a series of "Counter-Courses" on the very sort of topics proposed by Mr. Coleman and Mr. Franks.

In one of these on Science, Technology and Society, the reading list involved booklets by Barbara Ward, Paul Goodman, Michael Polanyi, George Grant, Jacques Ellul, Norbert Wierner and Marshall McLuham. The most faithful members of the group and the ones who did the most reading and thinking about the topics were the faculty members and not the bulk of the student participants.

That is why I am opposed to the proposal of Mr. Coleman and Mr. Franks. In addition, I think that there is too much danger of salving the consciences of the bourgeoisie with superficial treatments of great social issues. The types of courses proposed might do just that.

-David B. McLay.

Fie, Miss Kaye!

Dear Editors;

In an attempt to discredit writers she does not agree with, Miss Kaye has found it necessary to resort to slanderous attacks on the legal and medical professions. But by confining her attacks to these two professions, she has underestimated the number of people on this campus who are fed up with the altruistic nonsense that she continually throws at them.

I should state that I am a laissez-faire capitalist. I support Mr. Kort's position as stated in his letter. (Ed: In which he defended his right to make as much money as he could, although he claimed that he himself did not want a large income.)

I would be interested to see Miss Kaye present us with a rational rebuttal of Mr. Kort's arguments. But her editorial of December 7th, which blindly attacks the legal and medical professions, is not a good example of rational thought.

May I remind you, Miss Kaye, that emotion is not a substitute for reason.

-Murray Saul, Arts '72

Dear Editors;

I was amused to see that Ron Hartlung had dragged Motherhood into a discussion of wage ceilings and capitalism. (Thinking about it, as Ron suggests, I can only conclude that it is a shame that so few people are really qualified to become parents!)

The debate itself is intriguing, for what appears to be a discussion of an economic principle has been covertly transmogrified and is now an affront on the medical profession; ie, physicians practice a form of free enterprise in a capitalistic market, although it offends our sensibilities to have them make their fortune at the expense of the sick. And those that work hardest tend to accumulate wealth.

As a medical student and a future physician, or as an erstwhile factory labourer, I feel justified in accepting reasonable remuneration for my services. As a citizen in the Canadian government, I am responsible for the present economic situation in Canada, and share responsibility for initiating changes in it.

But I did not create this situation alone, and I am not alone in its perpetuation. While I can only speak for myself, I do not feel that money is my prime motivation, nor is it for any of my colleagues.

I ask only to be accorded the rights of a free individual, and the privilege of practicsing my chosen profession. I also hope that you can admit to your responsibility for the situation as it now stands.

-Dennis Seguin

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman.
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Letters on the WRC, Christmas exams and mothers

Dear Editors;

I realize you are all sick of reading letters to the Editor complaining about the WRC. I'm sorry but here we go again...

The WRC, in general, is a poor group of people to do business with. Their handling of the Co-ed Residence issue is but one of their worst showings of bad faith this year. May I cite another example:

The ASUS executive has attempted to maintain friendly relations with the WRC but this is most difficult to continue doing when they persist in telling us (and the rest of the world it would appear) to screw off...In October the ASUS granted funds to the WRC to assist them with Candlelighting.

Our Oct. 13 minutes read, "...the ASUS has no responsibility for Candlelighting at this time and is making the grant as a good-will gesture". Fine. Since last April planning for a semi-formal on Valentine's Day has gone forward. This event was planned not to benefit the ASUS but the students of this university community, especially those women in residence. It had been hoped that Victoria Hall could be used with dates on a "girl-ask-guy" basis.

On consulting Miss Davidson, our committee chairman and she agreed it was a splendid idea. However, as you may have guessed, Miss Davidson has since changed her mind, telling us the WRC could not allow the ASUS to use its facilities. She apparently was worried about damage and drunken men running about the building...

Let us consider this for a moment. First, the Residence buildings are not the sole property of those women living there. They are financed and maintained by a much larger group of people (the alumni, the government, etc.).

For this reason the university community has the right to use those facilities on various occasions. Second, drunks, thefts and damage can be held at a minimum by a simple proliferation of AMS constables. Being a semi-formal these activities would not likely occur at any rate. Third, residence already has fully open hours on weekends.

Let's put it this way: I am not satisfied with the answers we're getting (on this and virtually every issue the WRC gets into). A great number of those 65 percent who voted for Co-ed Residence must feel the same way. Further I can't believe that the majority of women in residence are satisfied with the manner in which WRC is handling their affairs.

For those of you who are interested the Valentine's Semi has been re-scheduled to occur at the Holiday Inn. It's too bad, Vic would have been fun...Do any of you have something to say? If you do , write me c-o ASUS, Student's Union.

A little action my friends...

-Clay Rubec, Secretary
ASUS

Dear Editors;

I would like to express my discontent with the recent actions concerning the scheduling of exams of the students and teaching staff of the Arts and Sciences Faculty. About four weeks ago a couple of my professors mentioned that Christmas exams were not very far away and that we ought to decide when to hold them.

A proposed schedule programmed by computer, according to time slots, was issued but for the most part ignored. Students were then asked when they would like to have their exams and most people opted for the week before exam week.

What I cannot understand is why professors even gave their students such a choice when they knew that the Departments had already specifically requested that exams be held during exam week and not before. In a community whose purpose is to help people learn how to make responsible decisions, such actions were completely against its own principles.

The students must also be blamed for what happened, however. They should have had the convictions to stand up against our professors' lack of co-operation with their Departments; but, of course, as humans tend to do, they acted in their own self-interest. But why is an extra week of holidays so important? - Queen's already has one of the shortest academic years in Canada. I do not believe those extra few days are worth having two weeks' work crammed into one.

Luckily the Departments came to our rescue by issuing an ultimatum saying that they would take drastic action against any prof who held tests or whatever during the week of Dec. 6. Although this ultimatum was effective in that most profs either cancelled or postponed exams or "transformed" them into assignments, I am disappointed that the Departments had to wait until the last minute to clamp down.

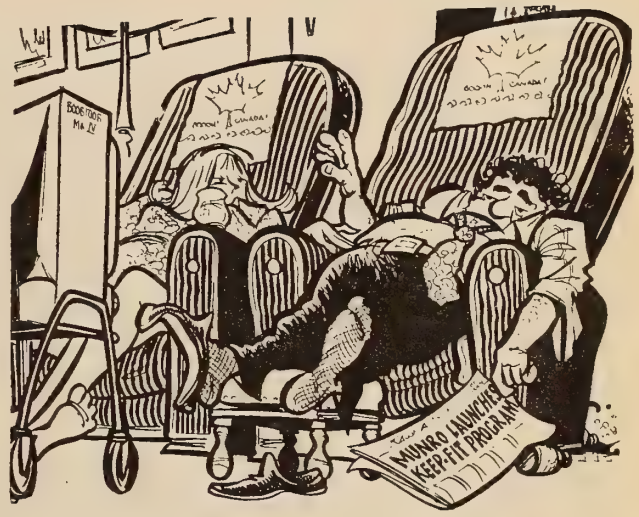
Many of us were inconvenienced in that we had to change travel arrangements (and, as everyone knows, it can be difficult to get or change a reservation at Christmas) and shuffle our exam time table so as not to be writing two exams at the same time. As it is some wrote three in a row.

All this hassle could have been avoided if the teaching staff and students had co-operated with their Departments at the beginning. Hopefully, next time everyone will know better how to make a responsible decision on this and other important matters.

-Susan Bunting

Dear Editors;

I read with interest the debate about the value of a man's labour. Now that doctors' labour and mothers' labour are compared, let me set my economics straight. Would I pay just any mother to doctor around with my vitals?



-Dennis Dubetz

Danger - school grad

A pamphlet issued by the New York Chamber of Commerce, which warned businessmen about the dangers of hiring returning US veterans from Vietnam because of the danger that they might be addicted to drugs (as described in the Nov. Ramparts), contained an ominous warning for all companies who might have to hire workers in the future.

The pamphlet noted: "With the spread of drug abuse in schools and among members of the armed forces in Vietnam, it would be unrealistic for business to assume it could recruit from these markets and not risk bringing abuse, narcotics addicts and pushers into companies, despite all sophisticated screening available."

What an ironic situation! After all these years of pushing to establish compulsory education for everyone, it now appears that businesses would be stupid to hire anyone who has attended that wasteland of drug addiction, the schools. This could put tremendous pressures on day care centre operators and nursery schools, as businessmen descend on these pre-school institutions to recruit those still untainted by school.

"No, no. I'll get up for the beers - I need the exercise."

the Dormouse

by alan broadbent

Politics are usually a mystifying matter for me, but I had the happy fortune of having a great web of political manoeurves illuminated for me recently.

The light in my darkness was a source close to the Alma Mater Society presidency, namely Patrick Riley. In pointing out the issue of the forthcoming increase of the student role in the financing of the universities in this country, Mr. Riley made the whole matter clear.

As avid readers of the Journal may have noticed, Mr. Riley's open letter pointed out that the federal government is attempting to get away from the financing of the universities, leaving the provincial governments to pick up the tab. At the same time, the provincial government is finding the universities to be bloody expensive, and is looking for a way to decrease the financial burden on themselves. This is happening because they do not see the universities as being a particularly kosher issue, politically that is, and they find the whole matter of education to be less than pragmatic, in fact, rather ethereal.

So they think that the best way to get out of major financing is to have students pay more for their education. That means an increase in student fees. This, of course, is an ideal solution for the government, a rather simple solution to a big problem.

However, for those more concerned with the ideals of education, rather that the ideals of politics, it seems to be a perniscious scheme. It presents major problems which may be greater than those of financing. It will eventually mean that students will be paying in the neighbourhood of two-thousand, five hundred dollars a year for tuition. Seeing that students consider themselves fortunate to earn half that in the summer, this will mean that only the wealthy or those willing to incur large debts will be able to go to university. In short, it will further insure that the university is the sanctuary of the wealthy, and that we will have a stable class structure in this country.

I can understand Mr. Riley in his concern on this matter, for I do not wish the university to become an incubator for the Spitfire-bellbottom set. Perhaps, however, Mr. Riley has failed to see this intention of the government in the proper light.

This effort by the government also seems to be a strike for student power in this country. If students were to pay a fee of $2500 per year, then 8000 students at Queen's would be putting an even twenty million dollars into the university coffers. Just two years ago, which is the most recent set of figures offered by my Who's Where, the government put up $20.4 million to Queen's. All the students would have to do is find 160 more students willing to pay out $2500, and that would eliminate any governmental voice in the running of Queen's.

If we then could find 2240 more rich people, we could match the entire budget. This would make a total of 10,400 students, which is close to the Queen's forecast for 1975. At $2500 per head, this would come to $26 million, or the total budget.

Now, given that the students were paying the total budget of the university, it is only reasonable to assume that they would decide what would happen at the place. They would control the salary of the teaching staff, and of the administrators. They would decide whether to hire or fire certain people, they could abolish the old bourgeois standard of tenure, they could penalize professors who taught poorly, or who missed a class. They could make all decisions concerning the university, even to the extent that they might allow token faculty representation on the governing bodies of the university.

I am sure that Mr. Riley sees these developments as having beneficial results at the university. I am certain that he has investigated the possibility of having faculty and administrators pay fees for the privilege of working at Queen's, once the students have assumed control of the university.

But I am also sure that Mr. Riley is right in not being a proponent of such a scheme. I sense that lurking in the confines of his prose, Mr. Riley has a fear that he will associate with the same kind of people all his life. The wealthy will have a 'fortunate' childhood, go off to university without a thought, leave the university and go to work or some more noble pursuit without a thought, and will have the super special funeral. The less than wealthy will have an 'unfortunate' childhood, will not even think of going to university because of the prohibitive cost, will find work, and will die.

And the two groups may never come into contact, because they just won't be able to afford it.

W.I.C. NEWS

by Marcy McGill

Jogging Judy and Running Rachel are madly digging through the closet to find their Rapido running racers and their Jumping Jolly joggers. They pull them out from last year's pile of laundry and madly put on. But wait girls! The Jogathon doesn't start until THURSDAY JANUARY 13th. Oh well, they'll have time to repair their laces and contemplate the loss of the first ounce and the feeling of accomplishment at the end of the first lap.

Details of the Jogathon:

- Jogathon starts on Thursday January 13 and ends on Sunday January 23
- Jogging is to take place on the Queen's Indoor Track in the Arena in the P.E. Centre
- Jogging is to be done on your own time and you are to sign up on the chart on the track
- Each person checks off her laps on the chart
- Please see the notice board in the Women's Locker room for further information

Remember this Jogathon is for fun!
Jog for yourself as well as for your faculty.

CLASSIFIEDS

WANTED DESPERATELY: house for at least four for next year, close to campus. Contact Sue 544-8649; Chris 544-8650; or Sally 544-8654.

BOO-HOO NEEDS HELP. Anyone interested in set design for Snowball Variety Night please contact Barb Brown, 544-8708.

JOB HUNTING? Let Page Resumes help. 549-1384.

BUS TOUR

We think we're Cupid. Special for two to the

QUEBEC WINTER CARNIVAL
Feb. 11-13

Contact: GRANTS TRAVEL SERVICE
(Limited space)

NEEDED: Apartment for four boys for this term. Call 544-1530.

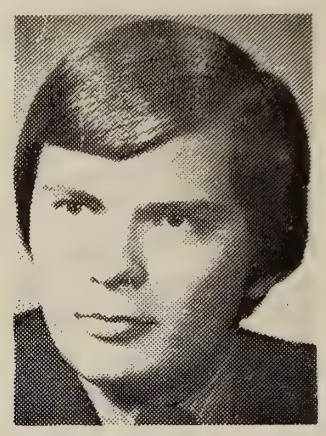
FURNISHED ROOM in 3-bedroom apartment with two other girls. Rent $50 month plus utilities. 238 Victoria, call 546-6752.

WANTED: Two engraved invitations. Reader will understand.

WATED: A walk home!

GOT: Forget it!

WANTED: Any person, student or faculty, previously involved in a telephone distress centre. Please contact Scott (544-0931) or Doug (544-1928) between 7 and 10 p.m.



AUSTRALIA NEEDS teachers now! Sick of hassling smog, unemployment? Growing needs. All subject areas. For full info send $1 to Intl. Teachers Placement Bureau, PO Box 19007, Sacramento, California, 95819.

Synchro Swimming

A Synchronized Swim skills clinic for teachers and coaches will be held on Saturday January 15th from 8.30 A.M. - 6.00 P.M. at the Queen's University P.E. Centre. Instruction will be given in beginning skills and some advanced skills.

Registration must be completed before 5.00 P.M. on Tuesday January 11, and the fee is $3.00 per individual. Registration will take place at the Athletic Office window in the P.E. Centre between 9.00 - 12.00 and 1.00 - 5.00 daily.

GRADUATING ?
GETTING MARRIED ?
TALK TO THE GUYS FROM SUN LIFE, REPRESENTING THE LARGEST CANADIAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Peter S.Scharf B.A. (Hon.)
Arts '70

Terry J. Brady, B. Comm.
Comm. '71

SunLife OF CANADA

Phone 546-1117 275 Ontario St.

Boo - Hoo Wants YOU

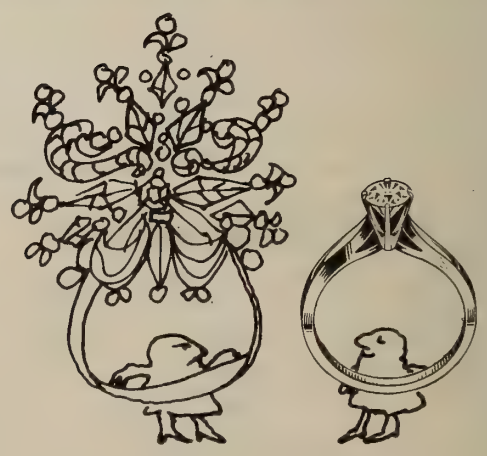
FOR

SNOWBALL'S
VARIETY NIGHT ON ICE
AUDITIONS

SKITS — Wed. Jan. 12, 9:30 - 11 p.m., Arena
Friday, Jan. 14, 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Arena
Contact Debbie Pepler - 544-1468



MUSICIALS — Thurs, Jan. 13, 1 - 5 p.m. Grant
Contact Colleen Greer, 544-9412

THERE ARE STILL TICKETS AVAILABLE FOR

WANDERLUST II

IRC – Semi – Semi Formal
FRIDAY, JANUARY, 14th

Student Union_____11:30 am - 1:00 pm daily
Residence Meal Lines_____4:30 - 6:00 pm daily

BIGGEST IS NOT ALWAYS BEST

It may be big. But not necessarily best.
The cut and color of a diamond affects its brilliance.
Sometimes brilliance is sacrified to get the greatest yield from the rough stone. This kind of diamond may seem like a bargain, but it's only bad news. We'll sell you a diamond as big as you want. But it will be brilliant, expertly cut. And best.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

school days

Wednesday, January 12.
3:30 p.m.: "The Evolution of a Composer", a lecture by Prof. I. Anhalt on Electronic Compositions, in Earl Hall, room 114.
8:30 p.m.: Division of Concerts will present the Warsaw Quintet in Dunning Hall.
9:30 to 11:00 p.m.: Auditions for Boo-Hoo skits for variety night on ice in the Arena.
Thursday, January 13.
1:00 - 5:00 p.m. Auditions for musicians for Snowball in Grant Hall.
7:00 p.m.: Bridge Club meeting in the McLaughlin Room of the Union.
7:00 p.m.: Tickets on sale in the Union for the Mont Ste. Marie trip taking place on Sunday January 16. (Cost $8.50)
7:00 and 9:30 p.m.: Campus movie of the week is Fellini's "Satyricon" in Dunning Hall Auditorium.
7:30 p.m.: Medical Science Lecture in Auditorium of Etherington Hall.
8:00 p.m.: The History Dept. will be presenting Mr. Robert Garaudy, a leading figure of France's intellectual left, in Dunning Hall Conference Room. His lecture will be on "Le Structuralisme et Marxisme en Critique Litt'eraire".
8:00 p.m.: Last information Nite about Elrond College in the Red Room.
Friday, January 14.
10:00 a.m.: Mr. Roger Garaudy will present a lecture on "The Conditions Necessary for Dialogue between Christians and Marxists" in Jeffery Hall, room 128.
12:30 to 2:30 p.m.: Auditions for BooHoo skits for Variety Night on ice in the Arena.
8:30 p.m.: The Toronto Dance Theatre in McArthur Aud. Students tickets $1.00 at the Division of Concerts.
Algebra days at Queen's in room 101 at Jeffery Hall.
Saturday, January 15.
10:30 a.m.: Folk Mass in Dunning Hall. Doughnuts and coffee afterwards.
7:00 p.m.: Folk Mass in Newman House.
Monday, January 17.
8:00 p.m.: Italian movie "Teorema" in Dunning Hall.
Tuesday, January 18.
7:00 p.m.: Tickets for Tremblant Weekend sponsored by the Queen's Ski Club March 3-5th (cost $38.00 for bus accommodations, tows, meals) on sale in Union.
8:30 p.m.: Drama Dept. sponsors Theatre I, from Montreal, in the Convocation Hall. Admission free.
Wednesday, January 19
3:30 p.m.: Lecture by Professor Istvan Anhalt on the "Evolution of a Composer".

Bars
Pub: Muriel Day and the Night Squad
Commodore: Classical Revival
Manor: Debbie Lori Kaye
401: The Entourage

At Agnes
Jan. 11 - 16: Exhibit of the works of David B. Milne and Lionel Lemoine Fitzgerald.
Jan 16: Venetian prints of the 18th Century
Jan. 16: Exhibit of Modern African Makonde carvings
Jan. 16: concert by S. Bristow and Culbreath at 3:00.

Theatres
Capital: The Stewardesses
Hyland: The Go-Between. Dollar starting Wednesday
Odeon: Diamonds are Forever

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, I Love You

By Sandy Naiman

I take great delight in congratulating the members of Theatre 5 for their enjoyable and considerably well executed production of Tom Stoppard's vivacious play, "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead", playing now, at the Grand Theatre.

Mr. Stoppard's quick repartee, his flashes in to and out of the classical and the contemporary realms of rhetoric, his hilarious dumb show are all performed with finesse and an aire of professionalism which I have yet to see Theatre 5 achieve until now. For the first time this season the company was together, the casting was perfect, the pacing of the play was lyrical. And, the actors, particularly Mr. Don Johnston as Rosencrantz, (or was it Guildenstern?) and Mr. Daniel Buccos as Guildenstern, (or was it Rosencrantz?) played acutely to the audience, relating disarmingly to each other, aware of the other's emotional presence, sympathetic and empathetic to all elements of the surrounding circumstances.

Each complimented the other. Guildenstern, the quasi-cultured, logical, probing, and dominant gentleman, whose polish seemed to blind Rosencrantz, rather slow, at first glance, but having an innate common sense, an earthy slant to humour and a charmingly childlike nature, were excellently portrayed by Messrs. Buccos and Johnston.

Mr. Buccos has been in previous productions of the company, and has been, perhaps, the most consistent strength in the company. He is a studied performer, his diction is clear, his projection emmaculate, he is energetic on stage and he has the ability to command the attentions of his audience. His forte seems to be the witty, poignant, elusive comedy of Stoppard as opposed to the hard edged psychological puzzles of Pinter.

Mr. Johnston, has not appeared with Theatre 5 but I certainly hope that he will continue to light up their stage. His performance was terrific, a delight to the eye and ear. The plasticity of his face, lent so much dramatic substance to his characterization and indeed, to his relationship with Guildenstern.

Mr. Gordon Robertson, as The Player, was superbly cast, he was confident on stage and in his role. His timing was minute and perhaps most important, he seemed to enjoy himself. He was comfortable and relaxed, for the first time.

However, the surprise package in this production was Art Hagar, as Alfred, the young Tragedian who recreates in mime, the role of the Queen, hilariously, in the dumb show, with such precision and sensitivity that I doubt it could have been bettered by anyone else.

The classical sequences were perhaps the weakest in the play, but since they were minimal, the overall unity was not broken by them.

The set, simple and versatile, was used with imagination and it contributed to the clarity of Mr. Stoppard's prankish almost facetious treatment of the characters and the dramatic circumstances lying on the periphery of Shakespeare's "Hamlet".

The play operates on a series of lateral planes which slowly converge towards the end, but which never quite meet on an obvious level.

The almost overworked theme of illusion versus reality is examined, however, in such a variegated manner, by both playwrite and player, that it assumes a totally clean, fresh garb. We can see different angles and curves in the dilemma, we can feel it out with a new sixth sense, for the stereotypes are broken, the roles are reversed and we are caught unawares. We must recreate another set of values to fit the mold and examine them from another source of perception.

The Tragedians, the comic simpletons with their raw edged approach to reality, we can enjoy, laugh with and almost patronize, on a lower level.

The classic Shakespearean here, Hamlet, we gaze up at with puzzlement and confusion. His lot is not explored directly but only through the experiences of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Theatre 5 has begun the new year on sound footing. And I certainly hope that this new beginning is an optimistic indication of what the future will bring. I take sincere pleasure in being able to praise their first venture for 1972 and wish the members of the cast and crew a good year filled with the inventiveness and spontaneity which they have shown in this delightful production.

I urge you to see it. It's the best yet and I'm glad of it.

jan. 16 at the art centre

ART CENTRE CONCERT at 3 p.m.
sophie bristow piano, and edward culbreath, cello, play works by bach, brahms, debussy and wheelock. Introduced by michael davies, publisher of the kingston whig standard, sponsored by music associates and the art centre.
LAST DAY: GIFT FROM THE DOUGLAS M. DUNCAN COLLECTION AND THE MILNE-DUNCAN BEQUEST a study in depth of the works by two major canadian artists, david b. milne, 1881-1953 and lionel lemoine fitzgerald, 1890-1953, donated to the national gallery of canada.
FIRST DAY: VENETIAN PRINTS OF THE XVIIIth CENTURY etchings by canaletto, tiepolo, piranesi, on show until february 15.
circulated by the national gallery of canada.
open monday to thursday 9-5 and 7-9; friday 9-5; sunday 2-5; admission to all events free.

Dunning Hall Concert Series #2
Warsaw Quintet performing Boccherini, Bacewicz, Dvorak
Wednesday 12 January
8:30 p.m.
Tickets - $2.50 Division of Concerts
Theological Hall
Queen's University
547-6194

Department Of Film Studies
Cinema Subscription Series
Ellis Hall Auditorium
The Department of Film Studies announces its Cinema Subscription Series for the second term. Evening Screenings are held in Ellis Hall.

European Classics Series
Series begins January 11, '72
12 films from England, Sweden, and Spain such as:
Odd Man Out, A Kind of Loving, If . . ., Summer with Monika, Miss Julie, The Virgin Spring, Simon of the Desert, Le Journal D'Une Femme De Chambre.
TUESDAY EVENINGS
9:00 P.M.
STUDENTS $3.00

American Screen Masters II
Series begins January 13, '72
12 films of interest such as:
Notorious, The Little Foxes, Tarnished Angels, Man of the West, Psycho, Exodus, Hatari!, The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance.
THURSDAY EVENINGS
9:00 P.M.
STUDENTS $3.00

Tickets and further information can be obtained from the Department of Film Studies, Room 5, 154 Stuart Street, between 10:00 A.M. and 5:00 P.M.

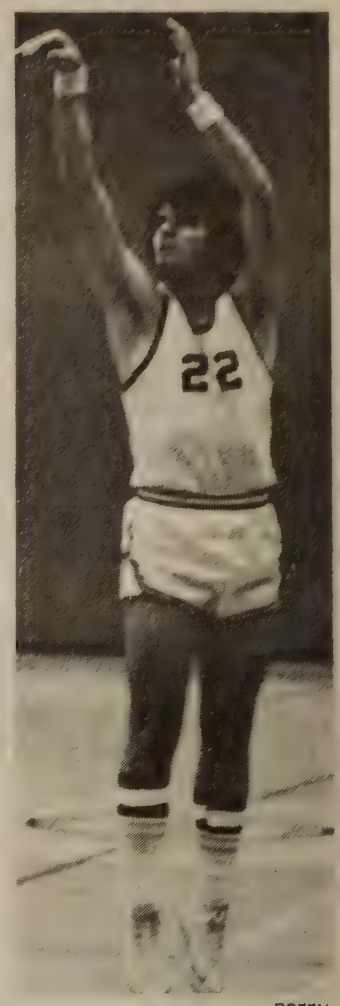
B-Ball Gaels Take Tourney Consolation

-perry

Now, this is a reverse triple-twist armlock...

The basketball Gaels managed to salvage the consolation title in the Carleton University Christmas Tournment after suffering through a home-court humiliation at the hands of Brock, the eventual tournament champions.

Playing without the services of leading scorer Andy Daugulis, who failed to show for either game, the Gaels fell behind early to the quick, pressing Brock squad, and never really recovered. Between Daugulis' absence and the usual Christmas toll on players, the Gaels had only 9 men dressed for the game.



The Gaels trailed by 16 points at the half, 39-23, and never threatened as the well-disciplined Brock squad, led by former McMaster Marauder Walt Spilziewski, pulled away to a 77-49 triumph. Centre Paul Howard finished with 14 points to lead Gael scorers, and pulled down 18 rebounds. Unfortunately, he didn't have very much help. Even the refereeing was atrocious, with a good dozen calls that were just impossible. Coupled with the unexpected and unexplained absence of Daugulis (not the most inspiring example for a team captain to set) and the rusty play of most of the Gaels, there was just no hope.

Against Bishop's the next night, the Gaels showed some sparks of life. Guard Peter Gordon found his shooting touch and hooped 18 points, including three critical buckets late in the game, after Bishop's had started to surge. The Gaels jumped out to an early 9-point lead, and appeared to have things well in hand throughout the first half, leading 38-29 at the break. Howard and Rob Smart kept good control of the boards, aided by rookie Ian Rawes, who had been unable to make the Brock fiasco. Gordon and Dave Smith were hitting well from outside, and the Gaels' man to man defense was working reasonable well.

About midway through the third period, things began sagging. Gordon and Smith cooled off, Howard and Smart got into foul trouble, and Bishop's started to hit from outside. On offense, Queen's was just standing around, waiting for somebody else to do something--and nobody was. The Gaiters came storming back to tie the game at 54-all with about four minutes left.

Then the heroics started. Little-used guard Joe Davidson, noted for his aggressive gambling defense, got into the act with a steal that seem-to awaken the lethargic offense. Back-up centre Bruce Hemming added four big points. Gordon found the range again, as did Paul Howard, who added his only points of the second half with a driving hook shot down the right side of the foul land. Howard also blocked several shots to upset Bishop's offensive rhythm. Final score 68-64 Queen's, and a little bit of pride had been regained.

The Gaels open a three-game home stand this week, meeting Carleton Thursday night, MacDonald College on Friday, and Bishop's Saturday. All games are at 8:15, and big crowds would be very welcome.

-perry

Peter Gordon - 18 points

Commerce Orientation Committee

CHIEF BOSS and BOSS

Applications are now available outside Room 121 Dunning Hall

Now that you can fly to Europe for peanuts, here's how little you shell out to get around:

$130 for Two Months of unlimited rail travel in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland.

You shell out $130, and get a Student-Railpass. All you need is the bread and something to show you're a bona fide student between 14 and 25.

Our Student-Railpass gives you all that unlimited rail travel on the 100,000 mile railroad networks of those 13 countries. For two foot-loose months. So with low air fares and Student-Railpass you've got Europe made.

Our Student-Railpass gets you Second Class travel on our trains. You'll find that there's very little second class about Second Class. Besides being comfortable, clean, fast, and absurdly punctual, the European trains have some other advantages for you. They take you from city center to city center, so you don't have to hassle airports. And the stations are helpful homes away from home, with Pictograms that give you information in the universal language of signs, and dining rooms, bookstores and other helpful facilities.

Now, here's the catch. You can't get your Student-Railpass or the regular First Class Eurailpass in Europe—you have to get them before you leave the country. So see your Travel Agent soon. Meanwhile, send in the coupon for a free folder, complete with railroad map.

Prices quoted in U.S. dollars.

STUDENT-RAILPASS The way to see Europe without feeling like a tourist.

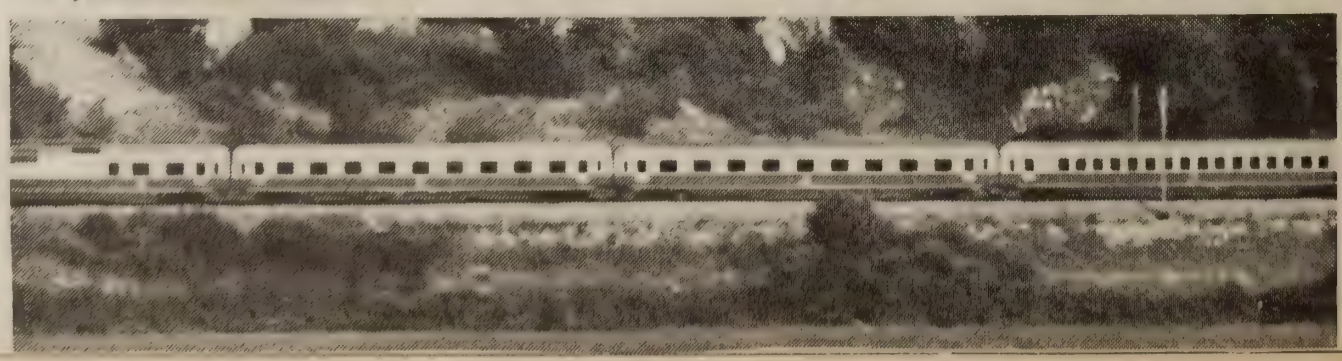
Eurailpass is valid in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland.



193. - Jan. 72

Eurailpass, Box 2168, Toronto, 1, Ontario

Please send me your free Eurailpass folder with railroad map. ☐ Or your Student-Railpass folder order form. ☐

Name_____ Street_____

City_____ Apt._____ Zone_____ Prov._____

Mott, Gross Tourney All-stars

Husky Goalie Blanks Gaels

Queen's Golden Gaels, after more than a two week layoff, skated their way to the championship round of the Hockey Canada Tournament here Wednesday night only to finish second best as they were defeated 4-0 by the St. Mary's University Huskies.

The Tournament was one section of a nation-wide tourney sponsored by Hockey Canada and played in six different Canadian cities. Gaels' competition in the Kingston segment included Guelph, St. Mary's and the University of Saskatchewan.

In the well-organized tournament, Queen's and St. Mary's emerged from Tuesday night's action with convincing victories. The power-laden St. Mary's squad throttled Guelph 8-0, while the Gaels subdued Saskatchewan 7-3.

In their victory over Saskatchewan, Queen's jumped off to a 4-0 first period lead and never looked back although they tired considerably in the last two periods.

Colin Loudon opened the Gaels' scoring on the power play when he picked up John Smith's rebound, skated behind the net and came out in front to jam the puck past goalie Lauren Shmyr. Queen's surged ahead 3-0 on two quick goals; the first by John Smith on the power play and the second by Loudon whose backhander beat Shmyr. Morris Mott completed the Gaels' first period onslaught when his slapshot whizzed by Shmyr.

The Gaels outshot Saskatchewan 24-8 and were hustling and skating with surprising zest considering the length of their layoff.

However, the Gaels began to show the effects of this layoff although their victory was never in doubt. Bill White and John Smith with his second tallied in the second period and Dave Melloy completed the Gaels' scoring. Saskatchewan goals were scored by Ken Cross, Doug Mitchell and Rick Jackson. Queen's outshot Saskatchewan 40-35.

In the championship game Wednesday night, St. Mary's showed everyone why they have been Canadian college finalists in the last two years.

Huskies' goalie Chuck Goddard put on a fantastic display robbing the Gaels at every turn. Goddard was particularly effective in the first period blocking 13 shots including some certain goals.

While Goddards stand-up goaltending kept the Gaels at bay, the Huskies' forwards and defense combined to force the Gaels into mistakes. The first Queen's error came at 8:52 when the defense gave the puck away to Huskies' Bob Mullins who walked in and deked Harris.

St. Mary's jumped ahead 2-0 early in the second period when Ray Monette's extra effort in the corner gave Ken Martin a chance to score and the Huskies' centre made no mistake as his low drive beat Harris cleanly.

Huskies' Bob Reid put St. Mary's ahead 3-0 at the 9:08 mark as his low wrist shot beat a screened Harris. At this point, St. Mary's was clearly outskating the tired Gaels and controlling the play at will as their defense led by Tim Ripley kept the Gaels' scorers in check.

Richie Bayes completed the scoring late in the third period when his backhand drive went into the net over Harris' shoulder and St. Mary's became the tournament winners.

-perry

Tourney MVP CHuck Goodard makes skate save on Gael Norm Goulet.

St. Mary's also won more than their share of the tournament's individual awards. Goaltender Goddard was named all-star goaltender and also captured the tournament M.V.P. award.

Gaels resume their O. U. A. A. action this Saturday afternoon in Toronto.

GRADUATING IN 1972?

ARTS AND COMMERCE STUDENTS INTERESTED IN CAREERS IN

● SALES AND SALES MANAGEMENT will be interviewed at the Placement Office

Tuesday January 18, 1972

Metropolitan Life

We sell life insurance
But our business is life

Panel Discussion
"What's Happening Now? Status of Women Report"

Wed., Jan. 12 - 8 p.m. – Ellis Hall

Moderator:
Flora MacDonald
Administrative Assistant, Political Science Dept.

PANEL: Nancy Cooper, Women's Editor, Whig Standard; Marion Buttle, District Office Manager, Dept. of Labour; Sister Helen Pickett, Co-ordinator, Adult Education, Archdiocese of Kingston; Eveline Flint, Secretary, Queen's University.

SPONSORED BY THE KINGSTON BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN'S CLUB

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN

requires for its

FIVE SUMMER CAMPS

Strategically located throughout Ontario the following personnel:

PROGRAM DIRECTORS
WATERFRONT COUNSELLORS
(Red Cross Instructors)
CHAUFFEURS (Males - 21 years)
SENIOR COUNSELLORS
MUSIC & DRAMA COUNSELLORS
ARTS & CRAFTS COUNSELLORS
SECRETARIAL ASSISTANTS
REGISTERED NURSES
KITCHEN COUNSELLORS

for further information apply to:

SUPERVISOR OF CAMPS
Ontario Society For Crippled Children
350 Rumsey Rd., Box 1700, Postal Station "R"
Toronto 17, Ontario

Phone 425-6220

A "Mini Course" can make your degree worth more

Get a head start on success. Qualify for a better career by combining practical business training with your academic studies.

Shaw "Mini Courses" are keyed to your time table and individual needs.

DROP THIS COUPON IN THE MAIL

RUSH me more details about your "Mini Courses"

Name .....

Address .....

..... Phone .....

I'm interested in

.....

SHAW COLLEGES

2436 Yonge St.
TORONTO 315
481-6477

"For 75 years, we have specialized in Total Business Training."

KQ-1-72

BACK PAGE

Wring out the old! Wring in the new!

CANADA

OTTAWA - The Commons finished its marathon discussion of Finance Minister Benson's tax legislation just in time to allow the Senate three days to discuss and approve the 700 page bill before taking a break for Christmas. The new tax bill went into effect January 1, but does not apply to the income tax you will be paying this April.

OTTAWA - The Commons sitting did not end until early on the morning of December 30, but MP's have until Feb. 16 before they must return to complete this session.

Before quitting for the year, the Liberals managed to push through a bill to set up the legal framework for a national marketing system for farm products. The bill provides for establishments for agencies to control marketing of certain products, other than grain and dairy products, which are already regulated. The agencies would have the power to set prices and to set production quotas for each farmer. However, the agencies could only be set up if the majority of the producers of a given type of product agreed to it.

TORONTO - Sam McLaughlin, the founder of the Canadian automobile industry, is dead, but a couple of University of Toronto professors may soon be producing a Canadian made car, the first in over half a century.

A couple of dozen of their pollution-free battery operated cars are expected to be produced this year in Scarborough. The prototype of their car has a range of 50 miles per battery charging and has a top speed of 60 mph.

The cost for the first run of the cars will be about $6,000 per car, but they hope to have the price down to about $2,500 when it is in regular production. The running cost per car would be about 1¼ cents per mile, cheaper than the 2 cents per mile it costs to run a conventional gas driven car.

OTTAWA - Federal Government spending on special summer programs for youth will rise to at least $80-million this year

The flagship of the youth package, to be announced next Thursday, will be an expanded Opportunities for Youth Program

Although some final details remain to be settled by the Cabinet, the new OYP is expected to cost between $30 million and $5 million out of an over-all total of between $80 million and $85-million.

MONTREAL - Owning the Montreal Canadiens "is not just a business, it's a public trust in this province and I feel it's in good hands."

Senator Hartland Molson said that in 1968. On December 30, just in time to escape Finance Minister Benson's new capital gains tax, the Molson family sold its major interest in the Montreal Canadiens. The major interest is now held by a group headed by Jacques Courtois and John Bassett, who last fall grew tired of owning a newspaper (the Telegram) and has been increasing his sports interests lately, has purchased a minor share.

DAUPHIN, MANITOBA - A sex discrimination case - believed to be the first in Canada - will go to the courts here on Jan. 17 over this small town's policy (applied over the past 25 years) of firing women once they marry.

The provincial attorney general's department is seeking a court injunction under the Manitoba Human Rights Laws to prevent the town from acting under a clause in a union contract (with a CUPE union) which allows the practice.

WINNIPEG - Winnipeg is now the third largest city in Canada after legislation came into effect at midnight, Dec. 31 which amalgamated the 12 municipalities which used to make up Greater Winnipeg into one.

Winnipeg, whose population is now 535,000, is surpassed in the size of its city proper by only Toronto and Montreal, Montreal being the biggest.

ALBERTA - Legislation has been introduced in Alberta which requires that a minimum of 2 cents be refunded on all glass and metal containers in which carbonated beverages are sold. British Columbia is the only other province to have introduced mandatory refund legislation, but the legislation in both Alberta and B.C. makes no provision for reuse of containers, through recycling, which would allow for conservation of non-renewable natural resources, instead of simple anti-litter campaign.

BROCKVILLE - The president and half the executive of the Liberal association in Leeds riding are expected to resign from the party this month because they are fed up with Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and "what's going on in Ottawa."

"We're all Liberals," association vice-president George Fulford, a former MP and MPP said Friday night. "I just say this fellow in Ottawa is not a Liberal."

KINGSTON - The $15,000 to be allotted by the city for the creation of a Princess Street mall this summer is intended to stir the downtown merchants into action on the proposal, said Mayor Valorie Swain.

Mayor Swain said the city has expressed its approval of such a mall in the past but has left the proposal in the hands of the downtown merchants and the Chamber of Commerce.

"We are still waiting," declared Mayor Swain. "I am personally prepared to push and steer this project through the appropriate committees." However, he warned the mall, which could cost $50,000 should not be created at the expense of the taxpayer.

ONTARIO - Ninety percent of Ontario doctors are still sending their bill directly to medicare, despite pleas from the organization which supposedly represents them, that they bill their patients instead.

These figures were produced by the medical branch of the Ontario Health Services Insurance Plan last Tuesday.

TORONTO - In a ceremony so anti-climactic that even Premier William Davis failed to show up, four super-ministers were designated by Lieutenant-Governor Ross Macdonald last Wednesday.

They are: - Allan Lawrence, 45, the Attorney-General, who becomes Provincial Secretary for Justice;

—Robert Welch, 43, the Education Minister, who becomes Provincial Secretary for Social Development;

—Bert Lawrence, 47, the Health Minister, who becomes Provincial Secretary for Resources Development;

—Darcy McKeough, 37, the Treasurer, who becomes Minister of Financial and Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. Davis defeated all four men for the party leadership last February. They have held major portfolios since March 1 and these appointments had been expected.

PEKING - Representatives of the Canadian Amateur Sports Federation are returning to Canada with China's agreement to exchange two sports teams this year. Other exchanges of teams may follow later.

The surprise of the agreement is the Chinese commitment to send a team of swimmers and divers to Canada for a nation-wide tour, probably in May or October. It will be the first time the Chinese have sent an aquatic team overseas.

WINNIPEG - Health Minister Rene Toupin said Thursday his department is considering the abolition of medicare premiums in Manitoba, possibly within the next six to 12 months.

Mr. Toupin said the proposal, designed to fit in with the NDP Government's philosophy of offering further tax relief to low-income groups, is being studied by his department but has not gone to the provincial Cabinet for approval.

If the idea is approved, he said, the $28-million collected in annual premiums would be made up from the general tax base and levied on the general public through income taxes.

KINGSTON - About 300,000 fewer passengers rode Kingston buses in 1971 than in 1970.

A total of 2,268,198 riders were counted in 1971, compared to 2,570,365 in 1970. This represents a drop in patronage of 11.6 per cent.

THE WORLD

VIETNAM - The United States Army celebrated Christmas by conducting its longest and heaviest air campaign against North Vietnam in more than three years between the 25th and 30th of December. Last Thursday, U.S. bombers carried out their heaviest bombing of the entire war.

A week ago was also the first week in seven years that no American ground troops were killed in Vietnam, largely due to the fact that most of the American war effort is now being devoted to the air war. Two American pilots were killed during that week.

It is now 11 years since the first American was killed in Vietnam, and over 16 years since the United States forced the cancellation of the elections which would have resulted in a united Vietnam and have prevented this drawn-out pointless war.

TOKYO - North Korea said South Korean troops fired "hundreds of large-calibre machine-gun bullets" at a North Korean post south of Mount Osong-san in the central sector of the demilitarized zone Thursday. Pyongyang's Korean Central News Agency said the incident happened at "the very spot" where the South Koreans "had penetrated armed provocations on the previous two days."

INDIA - After months of having millions of starving Pakistani refugees within her borders (following a civil war in Pakistan), India declared war on Pakistan and defeated her before Christmas. India immediately recognized the new state of Bangladesh (formerly East Pakistan.)

UNITED STATES - Senator Edmund Muskie and New York City Mayor John Lindsay officially announced their candidacies for the Democratic nomination for president over the holiday. Opposing them are, among others, George McGovern of South Dakota, Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, Vance Hartke, Henry Jackson of Washington and Alabama's George Wallace and Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota. Ted Kennedy still contends that he doesn't want the nomination.

Meanwhile, in Republican circles, Representative John Ashbrook of Ohio said that he will run against President Richard Nixon in two Republican primaries unless (is it possible?) Mr. Nixon adopts a more conservative platform.

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union announced Tuesday a major advance in its nuclear energy program with the end of construction of the world's first large commercial fastbreeder reactor. Installations of this type, producing more nuclear fuel than they consume, are expected to be the mainstay of atomic power generation by the year 2000.

The 350,000-kilowatt-hour power plant, situated in the new town of Schevchenko on the desert coast of the Caspian Sea, will produce commercial electricity and the energy needed to convert 30 million gallons of salt water from the Caspian Sea into fresh water.

SPAIN - Any liberalizing of the authoritarian regime of Generalissimo Franco for the next few years appears unlikely following a speech by the Spanish ruler, in which he reaffirmed the authoritarian principles which he has used for the past decade

Welcome to 1972

Queen's
Journal

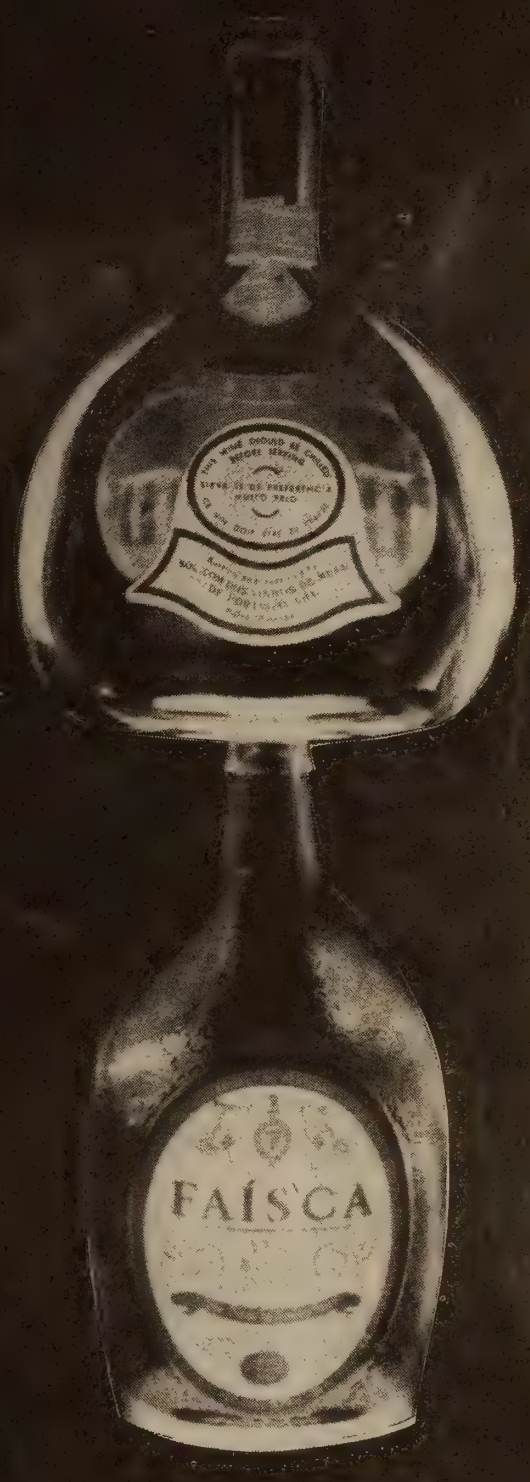
Vol. XCIX, No. 35 Fri., Jan. 14, 1972

Graduate grants continue

Ontario Graduate Fellowships will be continued in 1972-73, the Ontario government has announced.

The total amount to be spent on them "will not exceed that granted in 1971-72, namely $3.5 million", the government's announcement said.

It continued, "The terms and conditions under which these awards will be given in 1972-73 will be essentially the same as in 1971-72, pending a complete review, and on the understanding that a major change in graduate student support may be anticipated by 1973."



A government study of the support of graduate studies in Ontario is not finished yet.

The number of graduate fellowships available for this fall will be announced later, the statement said, when the government knows more accurately how much is needed and how much it can afford.

Ontario Graduate Fellowships are the major source of financial aid for graduate students at Ontario universities.

Application information will be distributed "in the near future", according to the government announcement. Application forms will be distributed from the school of graduate studies office at 131 Union Street when they are available.

Canadian economy page eight

Tricolor Society names wanted

Nominations for membership in the honorary Tricolor Society are being accepted until January 25.

Society memberships, known as Tricolor Awards, are the highest award given for "valuable and distinguished service to the university in non-athletic extra-curricular activities".

Those eligible are students in their final undergraduate year and postgraduates.

Nominations will be considered by a special committee which is to be appointed by the executives of faculty societies. The awards will be announced late in the spring.

Any student may nominate any eligible person for a Tricolor Award. Nominations should be submitted to the AMS office in the Union, accompanied if possible by a list of what the nominee has participated in and done for Queen's.

WRC replies page six

Fine arts and public lectures: their position at Queen's

..The following position paper was received by the Senate on December 16, 1972. It is hoped the paper will elicit a response from the University Community on the subject of the Place of Fine Arts and Public Lectures at Queen's. Members of the University are invited to send views and comments about the paper to the Office of Division of Concerts, Theological Hall, Old Arts Building. An open meeting of the Committee to discuss this matter will be announced early in January.

The rapid expansion of the University in recent years, as well as the social and cultural developments which account for it, has required the Committee on Fine Arts and Public Lectures to make a critical re-examination of its terms of reference:

"To recommend to the Senate policies for the encouragement and development of University activities in the fields of the Fine Arts and Public Lectures, including the University Radio Station and the University Concerts;

to choose lecturers in accordance with the policy of the Board of Trustees determined under the Chancellor Dunning Trust;

to be responsible through appropriate subcommittees, for the administration of the George Taylor Richardson Memorial Fund."

Do the terms of reference call for re-definition? Are they sufficiently wide? What new measures might be adopted to enable the Committee to meet its responsibilities in the present circumstances and in the likely circumstances of the future?

At this stage, the Committee wishes to report briefly on some matters which have been under review, and by doing so, to invite all interested members of the University to contribute oral or written submissions during the period which will elapse before a final report is brought to the Senate in May, 1972.

A survey of what may be conveniently described as "cultural events" at Queen's during the year of September 1, 1970 to August 31, 1971 reveals a striking quantity and diversity of public activities. This is as we would expect and hope. The events reported or announced are the natural forms of expression and communication within a lively academic community.

Many of them may be interpreted as extensions of academic programmes, or as course enrichment, and are the result of individual or group initiatives taken by student societies, departments, schools and faculties. We support the view that diversity of events of high quality which hold appeal for both majority and minority tastes is desirable in a large academic community such as ours. The survey confirms the impression that an increasing number of outside organizations are sponsoring on-campus activities.

Art forms, with the exception of Dance, are well represented. The Committee raises the question as to where the responsibility lies for initiating programmes which are not already included within its area of responsibility.

As might be expected, there is a heavy concentration of events within the months of November, February and March. Can, or should, anything be done about this? Do those who hold or attend events during these months experience any problems or conflicts? On the other hand, the comparative lull which occurs in May and June suggests opportunities of which regular Queen's students in new academic programmes might take advantage.

While the events reported are organzied primarily by and for students and faculty, it might be argued that the University has a responsibility to publicize "open" events more regularly and systematically in the public press, or through a wider distribution of Queen's Gazette, and that the general public has the right to be informed of the variety of events which they are entitled and welcome to attend. Are there better means of informing a wider audience on a regular basis of events on campus?

The committee assumes the responsibility to receive suggestions and make recommendations for new directions and programmes on the basis of them. It has recently received suggestions to the effect that the former custom of newly-appointed full professors and department heads giving inaugural lectures might be re-instituted. We welcome suggestions of this kind, but it is not our intention to put forward specific recommendations in this paper.

While the committee does not see itself as a primarily co-ordinating agency, it is prepared to make recommendations likely to promote the successful planning and holding of events. It is becoming increasingly obvious on an expanding campus that any public event must be planned with greater regard for the overall programme of events. Unless events are planned well in advance in consultation with the appropriate offices of the Department of University Services, it is very difficult for that Department to fulfil its function as a facilitating agency.

Moreover, the possibilities of conflict of events will increase to the disadvantage and disappointment of planners, and frustration and embarrassment result from uncoordinated attempts to occupy the same space at the same time. We have in mind not only the inconvenience and discomfort of conflicting events, but also the danger that individuals may enter into contracts as agents of the University and unwittingly become legally and financially liable. It is likely that faculty and students are not yet completely aware of the difficulties which may be encountered when events are planned independently.

This committee, following consultation with the Department of University Services, is preparing for the Queen's Handbook and some other publications a statement of recommended procedures to be followed by those who are planning public events.

While central co-ordination serves the interests of planners, we do not favour a centralized location for the arts and public lectures, but rather, as at present, a widely distributed variety of locations each of which possesses its distinctive character and advantages.

We note, however, that there are exceptions to the general policy of central co-ordination, that events at the Jock Harty Arena, the Art Centre, and Convocation Hall are planned and held without reference to, for example, the office of Room Reservation and Timetable Scheduling. It may be that exceptions to a general policy lessen its effectiveness.

The committee seeks for ways in which the traditional Queen's respect for close personal relations, as well as spontaneous and informal events, may be reconciled with all the circumstances of a university [illegible] community of close to 10,000 members. It may take further time and experience before the advantages of present arrangements are fully [illegible] the meantime, we invite and welcome the views of all interested persons as to the measures which might be adopted to meet current and future needs in this area of the University's life.

Views should be directed (preferably in writing) to the office of Division of Concerts, Theological Hall (Old Arts Building), Queen's University. Telephone 547-6194.

FILM STUDENTS:

The future of film at Queen's is in your hands.

Do you care?

SCIENCE 73
Year Meeting
Election of Formal Committee
Tuesday, Jan. 18
Dunning Auditorium
(not Dupuis)
7:30 pm
WE NEED YOU ! ! ! !

Boo - Hoo Wants YOU FOR SNOWBALL'S VARIETY NIGHT ON ICE
AUDITIONS

SKITS
Wed. Jan. 12, 9:30 - 11 p.m., Arena
Friday, Jan. 14, 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Arena
Contact Debbie Pepler - 544-1468

MUSICIALS
Thurs, Jan. 13, 1 - 5 p.m. Grant
Contact Colleen Greer, 544-9412

THE CANADIAN MINERAL INDUSTRY EDUCATION FOUNDATION
offers
POSTGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS
in
MINING ENGINEERING
to GRADUATES in any branch of
ENGINEERING or APPLIED SCIENCE
$4,500 - 9 months
PLUS Planned Summer Employment
For information contact
The Chairman,
Dept. of Mining Eng. & Applied Geophysics,
McGill University, Montreal 110, P.Q.
CLOSING DATE 15 MARCH, 1972

TAPES $3.98 - $5.98
ROCK - SOUL - BLUES - FOLK
We repair and buy and sell used tape. We have a complete line of 8-track stereo tape players for car and home as well as casset players. Service and installation.
MUNTZ CENTRE
61 Princess at King 548-7113
OPEN 10 p.m. Daily

Two students chosen for Peru trip

Two Queen's students are heading for Peru this summer to take part in a seminar sponsored by the World University Service of Canada.

Don MacDougall, a second-year law student, and Edward Rayner of third-year history will be joining five faculty members and forty students from 34 universities across Canada.

The seminar is one of the major projects of WUSC and has been held every year since 1948. The students will go to Peru for four to six weeks this summer to study the political, historical, sociological, educational, scientific and economic aspects of the country.

The students are divided into groups; under the leadership of a professor, each group studies a specific aspect of the country. Reports from each group are then compiled and later a book on the findings will be published.

The main purpose of the seminar is to provide Canadian students with an understanding of the Latin American country, gained through firsthand experience.

The students will travel in Peru and meet with representatives of government and education and other citizens of the country.

Since the seminar is to be held in Peru, the two Queen's representatives are setting about learning Spanish. MacDougall said the students chosen for the seminar must pass a Spanish test before they leave for Peru.

The seminar is supported financially by WUSC, but each student must raise $500 to help cover the expenses. This money usually comes from student governments and other service organizations.

World University Service is an international voluntary association of people in more than sixty countries working for the advancement of the world university community.

Life sciences students organize

There is a need to orient first and second-year students to the possibilities available in life sciences departments, physiology professor Dr. D.F. Sinclair told about twenty life sciences students Wednesday.

They were meeting to form an academic and social organization for life sciences students.

"The objective of the new organization," third-year biology student Duncan Bull said, "is to show life sciences students what courses will be available to them in future years, acquaint students with incoming speakers, and generally provide a means of interaction between upper and lower year students.

Second and third year life sciences students have been meeting informally for some time now to act as a communicating medium for other students. They organized last spring's life sciences smoker.

Although informal, the new organization now plans to open participation to all life sciences students through lab demonstrations, course and career counselling sessions, and smokers. They have the full cooperation of faculty from the life sciences departments -- biology, anatomy, microbiology, and physiology.

"We hope that these activities will better orient students in their choice of courses and professors in the coming years," Bull said.

⊗ election

AMS: An election for presidential-vice-presidential team will be held February ~~8,9~~ and 10. There will be several policy and fee referenda on the ballot as well. An advance poll will be held February 2.

ARTSCI: ASUS general election will be February 8,9 and 10 for presidential-vice-presidential team, secretary, treasurer, 9 representatives-at-large, and three student senators.

GRAD STUDIES: Election dates not set yet for 1972-73 executive.

WOMEN'S RES: Voting February 3 for WRC president, secretary-treasurer, block chairmen. Vice-block-chairmen continue in office until September.

MEN'S RES: Election for central committee chairmen early in March.

EDUCATION: Advance poll for AMS election February. No other voting until September.

CANDIDATES FOR all elected positions are asked to notify The Journal as soon as they decide to run. Societies and years are asked to let The Journal know their election dates and similar information as soon as they are set.

No decision yet on union local

Examiners from the Ontario Labour Relations Board have held three sessions at Queen's -- the most recent last Thursday -- to gather evidence about the proposal that employees of the public relations department be unionized.

The Canadian Union of Public Employees has applied to have the five members of the department's staff certified as a CUPE local. The university is opposing the application.

A hearing in early December considered the university's claim that the department is not a reasonable unit for labour certification. Hearings in December and last week considered the university's application to have public relations director Larry Moore, and information officers Cathy Perkins and Brian Flynn, exempted if the department is certified. This would leave two secretaries as members of the bargaining unit.

The government examiner's findings will go to a three-man panel of the Ontario Labour Relations Board later this month.

An OLRB decision on the union's application is expected about the end of January.

Public relations director Larry Moore said he could not comment on the hearing in which his membership in the bargaining unit was discussed -- except that "it was one hell of a long session."

Queen's personnel director Bill Wright has said he cannot say anything about the matter while it is before the board.

dave ross stereo ltd.
337 princess st.
549-0761

allec lansing - dynaco - sony - sansui - elac - fisher - thorens - teac - horman korden - epi - electra - koss - dual - noresco - werfdele - kih - sanyo - sherwood - jensen - shure

For the last few months we've been warning all our customers about major price increases in 1972. It is now a fact - imports will now cost Canadians from 5 percent to 20 percent more.

But at dave ross stereo we put our money where our mouth was and ordered so much new 1972 stock that we're beginning to look like a warehouse.

We—we're going to have a "Warehouse Sale", and, to go one even better, the pre-discount list prices are from 31 December 1971.

This way you save twice - not only are we dealing at warehouse profit margins, but, until present stock is depleted, you also save the increase now applied to goods entering into Canada.

Remember, the list prices shown are those of 31 December, 1971 - these prices won't be repeated...for example.

THIS IS ONLY A SMALL SAMPLE

WE HAVE ONE OF THE LARGEST LIST OF SUPPLIERS IN THE AUDIO FIELD IN CANADA

ALL ampex basf scotch memoex tak mallory TAPE 1/3 off

ALL light displays strobes colour organs KITS BUILT 1/3 off

ALL Audioex accessories Omega diamond needles dc-dc adaptors 1/3 off

Elac-Miracord 50H changer wood base, plexiglass cover
ADC 230xE Eliptical Cartridge
WAHS dust bug
List — $262.35
Special . . . $185

Sansui 200 AM-FM Stereo Receiver
Elac-Miracord 620 Changer
Base, cover, Empire 909EX Cartridge
Two - Electra ED-8X Speakers
Koss 'Red Devil' Headphones
List — $606.15
Special . . $459.95

Dynaco SCA-80 Amplifier
Two Dyna A-50 Speakers
Elac-Miracord 770H with Base, Cover and Empire 999EX Cartridge
Koss Pro-4A Headphones
Wahs Deluxe Record-care Kit
List — $1257.45
Special . . . $995

QUEENS' UNIVERSITY SPECIALS — 20 ONLY
— BRING THIS AD WITH YOU —

14.95 list - Superior SP-30 Headphones ..... only $6.66
or
59.95 list - ADC 230XE Cartridge ..... only $25.00
or
39.90 list - 10 Superior 70 minute blank cartridge tapes ..... only $18.88

JADE GARDEN RESTAURANT
Specializing in QUALITY
Chinese Food and Canadian Dishes

TAKE OUT - and DELIVERY SERVICE
CALL 542-3033

TRICOLOR SOCIETY NOMINATIONS

Nominations for admission to the Tricolor Society are now being received.
Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be limited to postgraduates, and to students in the second term of their final year, who, maintaining a satisfactory academic standing during their course, have rendered valuable and distinguished service to the University in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities, for example:- (a) service in one of the major fields of student government, journalistic work, debating, dramatics, or (b) a significant contribution in a wide range of activity.
Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be granted by decree of a Special Committee for this specific purpose.
Any member of the Alma Mater Society may submit nominations to the Tricolor Society. Names of such nominees shall be submitted to the Selections Committee through the Alma Mater Society Office, together with a list of those services the nominee has performed. No nominations will be received later than January 25, 1972.

ARTS '73 STUDENTS

AS OUR GRADUATION GIFT TO THE UNIVERSITY, YOUR EXECUTIVE IS ORGANIZING A FUND DRIVE, MONIES FROM WHICH WILL BE USED TO SUPPLEMENT THE "CHAPLAIN'S TRUST FUND", A STUDENT LOAN FUND INITIATED AND DEVELOPED BY OUR UNIVERSITY CHAPLAIN, REV. A. M. LAVERTY.

WE NEED YOUR SUPPORT ! ! !

YOU WILL BE RECEIVING A NOTICE CONCERNING THIS FUND SHORTLY, IN WHICH YOU ARE BEING ASKED TO MAKE A DONATION. PLEASE RETURN THE ENCLOSED ENVELOPE BY JAN. 31.

THE MONIES COLLECTED WILL BE PRESENTED TO THE PADRE IN RECOGNITION OF HIS 25TH ANNIVERSARY AS CHAPLAIN AT QUEEN'S.

WE NEED YOUR SUPPORT IN ORDER TO MAKE THIS WORTHWHILE PROJECT A SUCCESS.

THANK YOU.

Bitter Grounds Coffee House

OPENS TONIGHT WITH

DOUG McARTHUR
THOMAS HANDY

Friday and Saturday

January 14, 15

9-1 am

2nd floor, Student Union

WELCOME BACK TO HILLEL ALL ARE WELCOME TO JOIN

A) THE FREE UNIVERSITY

1. Introductory Yiddish, Mon. 9:00 P.M.
2. Introductory Hebrew, Tue. 8:30 P.M.
3. Intermediate Hebrew, Wed. 8:30 P.M.
4. Introductory Talmud, Thu. 8:30 P.M.
5. Israeli Folk Dancing, Sun. 7:00 P.M.
6. Basic Judaism

B) SUNDAY NIGHT BUFFET SUPPER

Cold-cuts, Hamburgers, hot-dogs, and "liquid refreshments". $1.50

(C) Hillel "Key Club". The house is open to members 24 hours a day.

JANUARY CALENDAR OF SPECIAL EVENTS

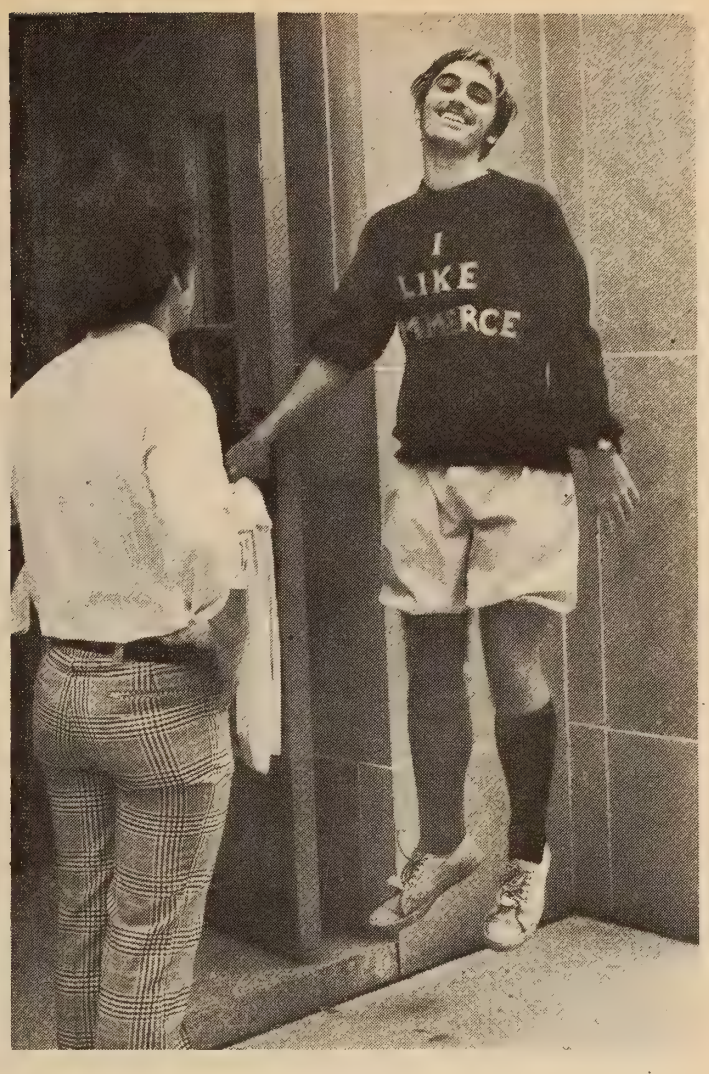
Sun. Jan. 16th Film -"We The Jewish People", a sociological study of Judaism. 8:00 P.M.
Sat. Jan. 22nd, Hillel Sleigh Ride and Party - meet at Hillel 7:30 P.M.
Sun. Jan. 23rd, Prof. I. Fenner, Dept. of Computer Science, Queen's, "Is The Computer Omnipotent?" 8:00 P.M.
Sun. Jan. 30th, Col. Yaakov Kaplan, Israeli Armed Forces, presently Director of Immigration, Ontario Division, "Opportunities in Israel - 8:00 P.M. Educational, Social & Economic".

ALL EVENTS AND CLASSES TO TAKE PLACE AT HILLEL HOUSE, 26 BARRIE ST.

CALL 542-1120, ANYTIME FOR INFORMATION.

Correction

A typographical error in Tuesday's Journal multiplied the wealth of Colonel R.S. McLaughlin a thousandfold.



The McLaughlin estate is valued at around $100 million -- not $100 billion, as the article stated.

Solution to Tuesday's crossword

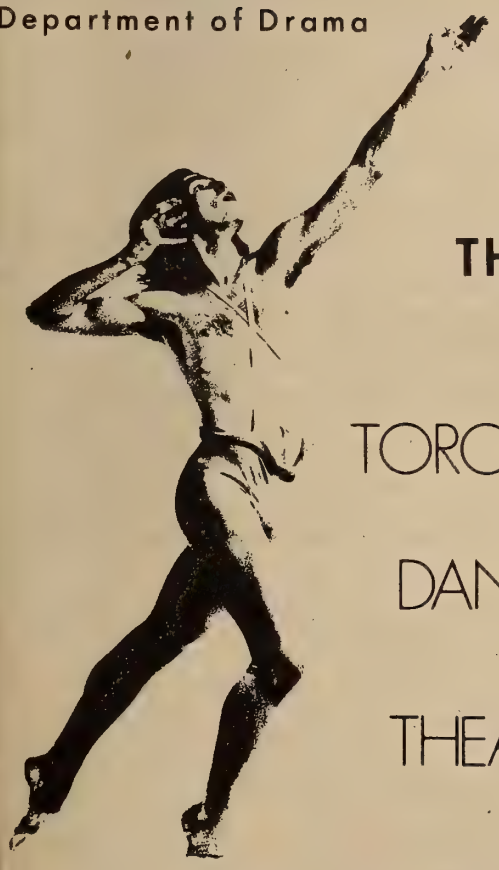
1S	A	L	A	2M	I	■	3A	4G	E	■	5A	6S	K	■
L	■	■	■	A	■	■	R	■	7A	■	C	■	8B	■
E	■	9B	I	L	I	N	G	U	A	L	■	10R	O	E
E	■	A	■	L	■	■	■	B	■	T	■	U	■	E
P	■	11S	T	A	M	12P	S	■	13R	O	B	B	E	R
■	■	S	■	R	■	A	■	14C	■	■	■	■	■	B
15F	R	O	N	D	■	16S	P	O	R	R	A	17N	■	A
O	■	O	■	■	■	T	■	S	■	■	■	E	■	S
L	■	18N	E	R	V	O	U	S	■	19R	O	U	G	H
L	■	■	■	■	■	R	■	E	■	E	■	T	■	■
20O	R	21I	O	22L	E	■	23S	T	U	P	O	R	■	24N
W	■	N	■	O	■	25U	■	■	■	L	■	O	■	A
26E	O	N	■	27P	A	T	R	I	C	I	A	N	■	T
R	■	E	■	E	■	A	■	■	■	C	■	■	■	A
■	28A	R	T	■	29T	H	E	■	30L	A	U	R	E	L

At Agnes

Jan. 11 - 16: Exhibit of the works of David B. Mline and Lionel Lemoine Fitzgerald.
Jan. 16: Venetian prints of the 18th Century.
Jan. 16: Exhibit of Modern African Makonde carvings.
Jan. 16: concert by S. Bristow and Culbreath at 3:00.

marier

Just think -- he could be smiling at you. Applications are now being accepted for "chief boss" and bosses in commerce orientation 1972. Forms are available outside Dunning Hall room 101.



AMS MEETING

Monday, January 17,

7 pm McLaughlin Room

Queen's
Department of Drama

presents

THE TORONTO DANCE THEATRE

TONIGHT!

McARTHUR AUDITORIUM 8:30 p.m.

TICKETS $2.00 STUDENTS $1.00

Available from Division of Concerts

CONTACT LENSES

MARC F RAYMOND

CERTIFIED FITTER
By Appointment At
265 King St. E.
KINGSTON

Shorney OPTICIANS
542-1747

St. Lawrence Parks Commission
Summer Employment At

OLD FORT HENRY

Kingston, Ontario

The internationally known Fort Henry Guard is a CIVILIAN unit dedicated to the creation of a living picture of British Army garrison activities during the nineteenth century. Find out about this unique summer job at an

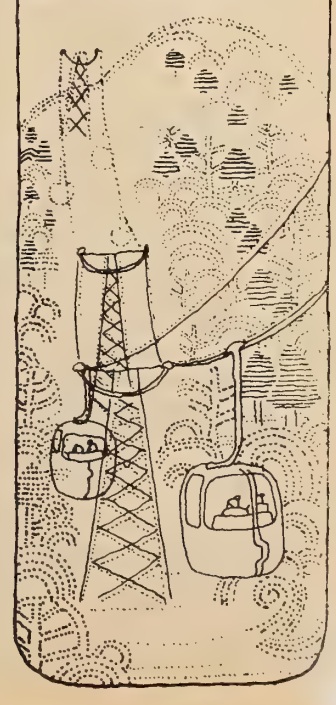
Information and Films Night

describing the

FORT HENRY GUARD

Thursday, January 20th at 7pm
Students' Memorial Union
(small common room, second floor)

Members of the guard must be eighteen years of age by next spring, and at least 5'11" tall, (height restriction not applicable to members of the band).



Application forms available at the Placement Office, 27 Queen's Crescent. Sign-ups for interviews begin on January 17th, and campus interviews are being held on January 24, 25, 26, and 27.

Mont Ste-Anne

Skiing costs less and is more fun

MORE AND BETTER SKIING THAN EVER
8 INCHES OF FRESH SNOW ON A BASE OF 4 INCHES.
TOTAL: 12 INCHES

For free brochures and information, write to
Mont Ste-Anne,
P.O. Box 40,
Beaupré,
Province of Quebec
Toronto ski reports phone number (416) 483-4510

Letter to the Editors

The WRC speaks out

This letter is in response to the letter written to the editors in Tuesday's Journal by Clay Rubec, Secretary of the AUSU.

The WRC was approached last spring by a member of the ASUS who was working in upcoming social events for the new term. The idea that she presented to us at that time was that the WRC (since it involves a large number of women on campus) and the ASUS could jointly organize a type of Levana Formal which would be a Poor Man's Formal at $5 a couple. Part of the rationale included the reasoning that few first-year women are invited or would invite a person on campus to either the ASUS Formal or the Science Formal and this would give that person a chance to attend a formal during their first year. The "informal formal" would be at a cost that most people could afford since it would not involve tuxes or the other "traditions" such as dinners before and could therefore be done in a very relaxed mood.

The WRC at this time thought that it was a tremendous idea and we wanted to work with the ASUS as was suggested to us: Levana, women's residences, dancing in Victoria Hall, and ASUS -- all jointly working together seemed terrific to us and it was all happening at a time when a new executive was making future plans for other social events such as the first men's and women's residences picnic which was to be held when we got back in September (1500 people attended) and other social functions were on the books up to and including a Christmas bazaar in December.

Yes, for an ambitious executive it did seem like a "splendid" idea. However in December we were told that the ASUS did not want to do it jointly nor have a Levana-type formal but they wanted to hold an ASUS Formal. After a meeting in December between the two parties we tried to talk over our feelings of differences and the WRC asked the ASUS to reconsider and work on the informal formal jointly selling tickets to anyone. There was a ready and anxious team of volunteers and a fairly secure market in the women's residences who wanted to go ahead with what we thought were the joint plans.

The answer that followed from the ASUS was "no", they did not want to work jointly and that they would go ahead with having the ASUS Formal at the Holiday Inn.

Are the residence buildings the home of the people who pay residence fees to live in them and for most of whom is their only place to rest their soul in Kingston or are they the stamping grounds of everyone on campus? All the operating and maintenance expenses are paid for by the students' fees. In fact, everything from the stereos and television sets to the sewing machines in women's residence are paid for by the WRC House Council Fees which are paid by each woman when she first arrives in September. These buildings are our homes in which we work together to make them ones that we are proud of.

In reference to the remark made, that the WRC in general is a poor group of people and who have showings of bad faith -- the WRC did receive a grant of approximately $50 from the ASUS "as a goodwill gesture" to assist the WRC with the Candlelighting venture which cost it over $350. Again there was another mix-up in communication from the changing executives concerning the financing of Candlelighting which was so graciously handed "down" to the WRC to look after even though it was not a residence activity. Not all of the first year women are in residence and the ceremony itself is not a dedication to the time that you'll be spending in residence!

Cindy Davidson

There have been many letters, including the one that this letter is responding to, that have downgraded the way the WRC handled the co-ed issue. The WRC would not have spent so much time, effort, and thought on questionnaires, meetings, precis of different projects for each resident, and trial applications, etc., if they did not want to see a co-ed residence on campus available to first year students. The many editorials and criticisms of the way the issue has been handled shows the lack of understanding of the complexities of the issue that the WRC has investigated.

The WRC did not consider the possibility of co-educational residences a dead issue when it went to the Ban Righ Board meeting nor at the Residences Board meeting on December 11, 1971. Both Boards followed through with the work done by the WRC and IRC with the result that Morris Hall is now being strongly investigated for occupancy as a co-ed residence in September 1972.

Contrary to popular belief women in residence (including members of WRC who by the way do not mind being seen in their hair curlers and robes in the halls) do enjoy the company of men as can be seen by yet another extension of open hours throughout the week.

Cindy Davidson
President, Women's Residence Council

Beth Higginson
Secretary-Treasurer

Joan Delavigne
Block Chairman (Vic ABC)

Pat Culm
Block Chairman (Adelaide-Ban Righ)

Debbie Bramm
Vice Block Chairman (Adelaide-Ban Righ)

Debbie McKay
Vice Block Chairman (Vic ABC)

Dorothy Lloyd
Vice Block Chairman (Vic DE)

Susan Bullock
Vice Block Chairman (Vic ABC)

Kitty Noble
Vice Block Chairman (Vic DE)

Bev Doherty
Block Chairman (Vic DE)

Cathy Scaife
Block Chairman (Chown)

Sheila Gilmour
Vice Block Chairman (Chown)

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 35
Friday, January 14, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman.
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks to Rachael Edwards, Jane Douglas, and loyal Bob Mutrie on the news staff. Cover pic by Pete Boag.

It can be done

Sweden has taken action to clean up pollution

By James Collier

Item: Two years ago the heating plant in Stockholm's Sodersjukhuset Hospital, one of Europe's largest medical complexes, was spewing out 20 tons of soot and 300 tons of sulphur dioxide every year. Today, although the plant has been enlarged, the flood of sulphur dioxide has been cut by 98 percent, the soot by 90 percent.

Item: For centuries Lake Vattern, at 760 square miles Sweden's second biggest, was remarkable for its clear waters; you could see straight down for more than 50 feet. By 1966 sewage and industrial wastes had reduced clarity to 20 feet. Weeds were growing along the shores and trout were dying. But in five short years the lake's destruction has been halted and Swedish authorities hope that Vattern will be clear again by 1973.

Item: In Sweden's older pulp mills, a ton of wood chips, dissolved fibers and chemicals goes pouring out for every ton of pulp produced. Traditionally this waste was dumped into lakes and rivers, turning them into foul dead pools. Today the filthy flood is slowing down. At the modern Munksjo paper plant at Vaggeryd, for example, the amount of waste leaving the factory per ton of pulp has been reduced to little more than three pounds.

When I first heard these stories they sounded too good to be true. Yet right now Sweden has begun the most important experiment ever tried by that "pilot project" nation. For the first time, an industrialized nation is making an all-out effort to turn back the gigantic tide of pollution.

"We woke up to the problem in the early 1960s," Dr. Hans Bouveng, research director of the Swedish Water and Air Pollution Research Laboratory, told me. "It began to be more generally recognized that something had to be done, that the situation in many lakes and streams must be deemed intolerable, that air pollution could be a threat to public health. The public's growing demand for a clean environment had to be considered."

Fortunately, the Swedes have an almost mystical feeling for nature. The nation's three million families own half a million summer cottages and more than 300,000 boats. They enjoy their land and like to fish, hike, picnic and swim. Moreover, unlike many other advanced countries, Sweden's industry is not concentrated in the cities but scattered around the countryside. Many Swedish business leaders live in the countryside, where they could see at first hand what was happening.

By the mid-1960s, pollution had become a hot issue. Radio and television scheduled special programs while environment protection courses were organized in schools and factories. Newly appointed environmental reporters ferreted out polluters and called for public action. Politicians began to realize that they could ignore the cries of the conservationists only at their peril and industrialists discovered that a stack belching black smoke was very poor public relations.

By 1969, public opinion had become such a juggernaut that the Swedish Parliament passed the world's first comprehensive pollution-control bill. It required communities, big and small, to plan advanced sewage-treatment plants. It ordered old factories to improve their handling of water and smoke discharges, and insisted that new ones meet stringent regulations. Where the cost of adding new pollution controls might close down a factory, special subsidies were made available. And to see that the law was enforced, Sweden set up a National Environment Protection Board, attached to the Ministry of Agriculture.

This crucial bill has made nearly every one of Sweden's eight million people a self-constituted pollution watchdog. During a National Environment Week in September 1970, two teen-aged boys were investigating the cause of a thick blob of scum on the surface of a pond. Observing that a broken pipe nearby was leaking pollutants, they traced it back to a factory. Alerted by the boys, local authorities ordered the factory to install proper controls.

Sweden's war on pollution cuts through all sectors of society - the university, industry, government and the public. After discovering that the phosphates in detergents are a major pollutant, for instance, Swedish housewives have begun using low-phosphate brands and detergent manufacturers have reduced the phosphate content of their products by at least 25 percent.

Investing in Research. Swedish industries, too, are now keeping a more watchful eye on how they are treating the countryside. Many firms, such as Fagersta Bruks, one of Sweden's largest steel producers, have given a top executive the full-time job of dealing with the company's pollution problems. Others are investing in research designed to nip pollution in the bud. In 1965, the worst polluters - among them pulp, paper, chemical and food industries - agreed to finance a Water and Air Pollution Research Laboratory with headquarters in Stockholm.

The pulp industry, which has launched its own $4-million program in pollution research, recently discovered that huge, costly treatment plants were not necessary to remove pollutants from water being discharged into streams and lakes. Instead they developed an ingenious and relatively cheap system that not only filters out the harmful chemicals within the factory, but permits recovery of 98 percent of the solid wastes. An unexpected bonus is that some of the latter - the bark and wood chips - can be pressed and burned for fuel or turned into a profitable cheap wrapping material. The result: dozens of small lakes and rivers, heavily polluted by the paper mills, are being reclaimed.

As I talked with scientists and engineers I was astonished at the ingenious solutions Swedish technicians have devised. For example, scientists at Atlas Copco, one of the world's largest manufacturers of compressed air equipment, have harnessed air to solve a water problem. Their system: to lay a plastic tube full of air holes across the bottom of a harbor mouth, around an area where oil-tankers unload, or across the front of a marina and, any time there is spillage, simply start pumping air through the hose. The bubbles create an astonishingly strong surface current which drives against spreading oil - or anything else - and contains it as effectively as a wall.

The effectiveness of Atlas Copco equipment was dramatically demonstrated in Antwerp harbor a year ago when it was successfully used to fence off a 200-ton oil spill. Moreover, because the bubble barrier can keep floating debris and oil out, as well as in, it can also be used as protection across the front of beaches to keep swimming areas clean.

Suction Systems. Another anti-pollution device invented in Sweden uses a vacuum to suck refuse from large buildings into a central incinerator. The housewife can dump anything from coffee grounds to a Christmas tree into a chute on her landing; three times a day, a valve is turned on and the garbage is whisked away. Such vacuum installations are already in use in Swedish housing developments and hospitals - where the incinerator fire is used to heat the water.

An even more ingenious use of the suction system is the Swedish-designed "vacuum toilet." The standard toilet pollutes a colossal amount of water - nearly 100 times the volume of the wastes being carried off. Often, the net effect of such pollution is doubled because in ordinary sanitary systems water from washing and other household uses is mixed with the toilet waste water.

The vacuum system changes all this. Human wastes are simply sucked away by a vacuum tube attached to a small storage tank outside the house, treated in the tank to destroy basic pollutants, and carted away periodically. Only one quart of water is needed to wash the bowl clean. Furthermore, with this system waste water from other household uses is separated from toilet wastes and can be cleaned easily in an inexpensive home treatment plant.

The final saving of water is enormous.

-(R.D., Jan. '72)

In Canada ... well, we're still waiting

Canada, and especially the provinces east of Ontario, is still a pollution haven for United States companies which are facing tougher pollution controls back home (and the U.S. laws are still far from strict.)

Ralph Nader told this to a Montreal audience last November, as he emphasized that Quebec or any other province had no need to allow corporations to waltz into the province, poisoning the population with chemical pollutants and despoiling the environment. Prosperity is possible without pollution.

Industries which claim that the expense of installing pollution controls would force them to shut down should be challenged to produce facts and figures, Nader said.

Companies continue to scare the workers with this threat and get away with it because unions have failed to employ economists, scientists and lawyers to shoot the argument down, he said.

In case after case in the U.S. where industries advanced this argument, he said, it's been demonstrated that installing pollution equipment would take only a small fraction of the profits.

The ecology movement, he said, must relate to the workers in terms of their occupational hazards. Otherwise, there was a danger of it becoming a middle-class fad.

"You don't have to tell the miner who dies of black lung disease from coal dust or the textile worker who is poisoned by cotton dust what pollution is," he told audiences at Loyola College and McGill University.

This is brutality visited upon the workers, he said, "the invisible, silent violence that's hard to define."

"The most dense pollution zones are around industrial plants - but you don't see company executives living near their beloved plants. They're aloof, off living in the safe shrubbery of some comfortable suburb."

Until executives become subject to jail and heavy fines and thus "become part of the risk, they'll never become part of the solution."

"Even using industries own figures, which are considerably inflated, they spent in the U.S. last year $3.5 billion on pollution control equipment."

Compare this, he said, to pre-tax profits of $85 billion.

"Can you imagine a landlord who every day walked to the top of his apartment building and dumped the day's garbage onto surrounding properties. And when you complain and the city health inspector visited him and told him he was breaking the law, he replied that he couldn't afford to dispose of his garbage in any other way, and besides, he was employing people and to do something about the garbage he'd have to fire them.

"After all, he was only making $85 from rents and it would cost $4 to dispose of the garbage in another way.

"It's absurd. But the landlord's problem is that he's doing it on too small a scale.

"If he was a corporation and doing it on a large scale, he'd be considered a community asset.

"It's a crime for a person to relieve himself in the St. Lawrence - but its okay for a corporation or a municipality to relieve themselves in the river?"

Israeli conflict

Nuclear war ... when ?

By Edmund Lehmann

The demonstration in Saskatoon by students of the university against the Amchitka nuclear test before it took place may well serve as a reminder that our young people are restless and are rebelling against an establishment which, in their opinion, does not endeavor to halt the threat of nuclear armaments and a Third World War.

Their lofty ideas and fresh thoughts emerging out of the fog of staid orthodoxy are the contemporary need of the world at this period of unrest, wars of aggression and constant threat of world-wide nuclear genocides.

It is to the credit of Dr. R.W. Begg, the principal of the University of Saskatchewan, that he allowed classes to be cancelled for the duration of the demonstration to permit students to take part in it.

Ominous clouds of a Third World-War are hovering over the world at the present time. Although the danger of the Vietnam War developing into a world-conflict has been lessened due to world-wide protest-meetings and demonstrations, which induced the United States to pull its troops out of that war-torn country, there is now an even greater and more imminent danger of a nuclear war developing out of the Middle-East crisis, which dates back some 3800 years.

Biblical history records that 3800 years ago Abraham had a dream during which God is supposed to have promised him possession of Palestine. Ever since then his descendants have claimed that, by the will of God, they are the rightful owners of Palestine of which they took possession 3400 years ago under Moses and Joshua during a brutal aggression, commiting genocides of the population IN THE NAME OF GOD according to Scripture, but losing the land later on during the Diaspora. Since 1948 they are back in Palestine established as the State of Israel, still claiming that they are the chosen people, by God, to possess the land.

The Palestinians, expelled from their land by the Israelites, dispute this claim. Since 1948 over one million Palestinians are living in miserable camps outside of their land now occupied by the Israelites, subsisting on funds provided by the United Nations organisation. They want to regain, by force if necessary, the land from which they were driven by Israel without compensation. Both sides are backed by major world powers possessing atomic weapons, who may be drawn into a disastrous nuclear confrontation.

The situation was aggravated in 1956, when Israel in a mood of expanding and on behalf of the shareholders of the former Suez-canal Company, joined Great Britain and France in an abortive attack against Egypt with the intent to take over the Suez-canal, which Egypt had nationalised a few months previously by paying the shareholders the full market-price for their shares, of which Great Britain held 40 percent and most of the rest was held in France and Israel, reaping lucrative dividends.

It was only through the efforts of the United Nations, led by Lester Pearson of Canada, who organised an international police force to which Canada supplied a large contingent of troops, which then stopped Great Britain, France and Israel from taking over the Suez-canal and a Third world-war was averted. Mr. Pearson subsequently received a Nobel-prize for his peace efforts.

Since 1967, after a cruel Napalm Blitzkrieg, Israel is again standing on the East-side of the Suez Canal, which in consequence has been closed to the detriment of world traffic and depriving Egypt of a badly needed income from it. The situation is tense to the point of an explosion. But due to a biased mass-media very little has been said about this tense Middle East crisis.

Yet, unless a peaceful solution can be found within the near future, the whole world may be plunged into a disastrous nuclear war, to be fought by the young people of the world, the flower of mankind, youth against youth, to kill and destroy each other and civilisation ..... All because Abraham had a dream 3800 years ago!

Edmund Lehmann.
Saskatoon, Sask.
(Lehmann is the author of In The Name of God.)

Foreign aid, investme

BY Guillaume Bissonnette

We live in an international order based on covert violence. One tenth of humanity lives today in relative affluence thanks to the systematic exploitation of the other ninetenths of humanity, the third world. There are two blocs in the world: the rich and the poor. Among the rich we find of course western capatalism, (its remarkable model being the U.S.A.), and the Soviet Union. Among the poor we find the great majority of humanity, paying in blood and tears for our opulence.

These two blocs we can label exploiters and exploited. Marx sees the only relevant cleavage for understanding the power distribution in a society as being that of class.

There are two classes: the capitalists who own means of production (capital), the proleterians who have no access to means of production, because they own none. The same concepts can be used to approach the international social order: the rich countries have monopoly control over the world stock of capital, the poor own no capital, and are denied access to it, which permits their being exploited. It is this fundamental cleavage between capital owning countries (by capital we understand machinery, technology, knowledge, educational facilities) and "proleterianized" countries which is the basis for economic exploitation, imperialism.

As defined by Che Guevara, economic exploitation refers to the distortions caused by developed countries who shape the third world to fit their needs, who mold it into a complementary, subordinated, dominated economy. Practically, this means tapping all the industrial and agricultural resources and thus abnormally developing the raw material sector (export sector mostly). The idea is to maintain the international class division, to prevent the poor countries from gaining any access to capital: all these raw materials, except a small fraction, are transformed in capital owning countries.

The best example of this can be found in the policies of American capitalism in South America. Most natural resources are controlled, and extracted by U.S. capitalist corporations; petroleum in Venezuela, tin in Bolivia, copper in Chile, bananas in Guatemala, etc. (The best known corporations are Anaconda, Standard Oil, United Fruit etc.) Because sales of these natural resources often constitute 80 or 90 percent of the country's national income, these corporations yield enormous political and economic power. American monopoly capitalism is very careful in avoiding as much as possible developing any transformation industries.

This would confer on South America a certain economic independance from the U.S. economy and American corporate profits would fall. This specialization in raw materials imposed upon South America by U.S. capitalism renders the continent terribly vulnerable. To quote Che Guevara, "We, the underdeveloped, are those of a single crop, the single produce, and the single market. A single product with an uncertain produce which depends upon a single market that imposes and sets conditions." The prices of raw materials are continually fluctuating on world markets, and in the long run they have a depressing tendency. These fluctuations render any economic planning impossible.

The same economic policy is carried out by the U.S., "our friends and allies," with Canada. The Canadian economy is a complementary economy, providing cheap natural resources to the U.S., who transform them and sell them back to us. The Canadian government once softly suggested that maybe International Nickel could process its raw nickel in Canada. After a brief but violent retaliation threat by the President of the U.S. in front of Congress, the Canadian government quietly understood that it should not interfere with the exploitative policies of our "friend and neighbor." This leads us to ask whether Canada and its over-developed raw material extraction industry is not in the same position as the underdeveloped countries. In a way it certainly is. (It is Canada's remarkable ability to nod in agreement while it is callously exploited that explains the friendly attitude of the U.S.)

We can note that although the U.S. is without doubt the greatest exploitative machinery ever devised by man, the U.S.S.R. is also doing its share and carefully maintains, through the C.O.E.C.O.N., COMPLEMENTARY satellite economies in Eastern Europe.

But American capitalism, through the rise of titanic multi-national corporations, is in a much more powerful position to exert these distortion effects. With 7 percent of the globe's population, the U.S. controls approximately 50 percent of its resources. In other words, a substantial fraction of the third world's resources are allocated by American managers, from American headquarters in New York, who perform this allocation with their profits curves in mind, without the slightest concern for the country, the economy, or the welfare of the population dealt with. This allocation is done on an international scale and, needless to say, the interests of these multi-national corporations seldom coincide with the interests of the exploited populations. (Making profits and satisfying human needs are two quite different things).

The result of these distortions carried out by the exploiting bloc is a continual decline in the terms of trade, i.e. the purchasing power of the Third World. Natural resources of the exploited countries are exported at ever declining prices and these countries are deliberately maintained in a position where they are dependant on imports of manufactured goods at ever increasing prices from the exploiting bloc. Thus, a Bolivian worker must produce approximately a day's work in order to purchase 10 cents worth of American goods.

Two French economists have tried to estimate the annual loss to the third world due to declining terms of trade. Francois Luchaire, using 1921 as the base year, estimates this cost at $8 billion annually by 1967. Paul Bairoch, with a more recent base year (1954), obtains $4.3 billion.

Foreign Aid

All the western foreign aid is a sly combine to benefit from these declining terms of trade. Through "tied aid," the third world is extended huge loans which must be used in purchasing manufactured goods from the generous developed country (whether these goods are needed or not is of little importance). An old story, maybe a hoax, but instructive, tells of an African country forced to buy North American locomotives with its foreign aid loans, dispite the fact it possessed no rail-road network!

Thus, 85 percent of American aid comes back to the U.S. for the purchase of American goods. The same policies are also carried out by Canada and Europe in their foreign aid programmes, though of course on a smaller scale. Thus, our foreign aid has the immense merit of maintaining the exploited under our heels by charging them exorbitant prices for goods we prevent them from producing themselves. Our tied foreign aid also has the great merit of redistributing wealth from the lower class to the capitalists inside the country providing the aid. Thus, Canadian workers, through taxes, finance loans to the third world so that the latter can buy Canadian goods and thus increase corporate profits of Canadian capitalists.

The French marxist economist P. de Jale'e, in "The Plunder of the Third World" attempts to obtain a quantitative estimate of the results of foreign aid by using U.N. figures and statistics. He finds that ultimately there is a net flow of capital, of income, from the poor countries to the rich. In other words, investments, loans, and gifts of the rich countries to the poor are exceeded by th profits from t instance, it incomes, repa

U.S. exceed investments a to South Amer
South America
in the U.S. c
NET EXPOR
This is Americ living conditio

The point I the French derdevelopm aggravated by mechanisms countries and

In other wo accident, a c creation of th
history, capit
thing as deco colonialism n yielded to a capitalism. I ago a former up with Europ

It succeeded America becan
the sickness an grown to appal empire, becau legal superstru great talent r justifications w of the western world", "diffus against totalita
These myths e on a scale neve perpetuates co wretchedness economic syst
South America
expect to reach brain power; h permanent da that the child

A mo

Latin

Latin Ame that it intend own terms.
known as the
of 22 Latin-A weeks last N organization
the world.

Peruvian
that the Lati
as a basis for
at the meeti

The Agree rejects all e rights of Lat exclusively statement di meaning wa

Numerous designed as current Uni copper, the decisions it

The sectio titled "sover
"whatever e nature that li its natural re

keeps underdeveloped underdeveloped income and corporate the rich countries. For hat the annual profits, m South America to the nes the flow of annual nade by U.S. capitalism means that the wretched are directly taking part umulation. They are A WEALTH TO THE U.S. ous effort to improve the South Americans.

sent is the one made by ist Albertini: "Un- day maintained and structures of which the unfavorable to the poor to developed countries." -development is not an lity. It is the conscious oitative social system in ialism. There is no such 18th and 19th century The European empires sal empire: American words, "two centuries colony decided to catch hat the United States of ter, in which the taints, manity of Europe have nsions." The American ormal, without any real s now taken the lead. Its s numerous ideological till fooling most liberals 'protection of the free nocratic values", "fight "aid to the free world". l legitimize exploitation ore: exploitation which world wide starvation, e of the regressive d by U.S. capitalism in ild born there can only t of our brain capacity, deep privations cause rain cells, (providing ' enough to survive at all.) This is what the State Department terms as "Foreign aid provided to the free world": slow but steady, gradual mass murder. This is the social order backed by the humanitarian liberals of the west: an international order where profits are extracted from the three billion starving bodies of a sub-humanity. How astonishing that nowhere one finds peace in the world, despite America's repeated "sincere efforts."

What is to be done? How can we achieve a world scale radical redistribution of wealth?

One the short run, as students belonging to the exploitative bloc, our duty is to use our educational facilities to study and denounce the actual exploitive international social order. Our duty is to systematically back all groups and parties, if any, advocating alternatives to exploitative foreign aid. Rene Dumont also suggests that through popular pressure we bring about an international agreement on preferential markets for the third world.

On the long run our objective must be the destruction of the social order called imperalist capitalism. It is profoundly dishonest and hypocritical to speak for the third world while supporting capitalism, an economic system of which the only raison d'etre is exploitation for profits. Any "aid", whether cash, grants, loans, or technological assistance going through the existing economic structures of the world, is exploitative.

Organizations like "Miles for Millions", and "Oxfam" are simply there to alleviate the feelings of guilt our bourgeois conscience may develop. They have a negative effect in that they legitimize the existing international social order. They foster the feeling that by increasing our "aid", by increasing our marginal redistributions, we can solve world proverty. No matter how much we step up our contributions to these organizations, we are not in any way changing the present economic structure, the present social order. We are simply redistributing a few pennies from the huge surplus we have violently exacted from the hungry. We are striving a quarter to a man living in crass-poverty because of exploitative economic structures. Is it really worth while? Why not overthrow the exploiters trying to crush him? Because this means a drastic decline in the profits of the capitalist world.

Most channels (institutional) for foreign aid in the west are but an ideological out-growth of American capitalism. The world bank, for instance, never even hints at alternative development models such as Cuba, China, or the U.S.S.R. Capitalism is implicitly the only "good", "desirable" growth model.

The solution to the third world's poverty is not only quantitative: it is essentially qualitative - a radical, sweeping, socio-economic revolution is needed to change our plunders into real aid.

Until American capitalism topples over there is no hope of any kind for any improvement. It is an absolute obstacle to any social change. The U.S., by systematically supporting the most reactionary, regressive states of the world (Portugal , Guatemala, Bolivia, Haiti, Santo Domingo, Brazil, South Vietnam, South Korea - the list is too long to state them all), have kept profits coming in but have also given rise to a revolutionary international struggling against American capital on every possible front. Everywhere in the third world, young men, students, workers, and peasants are fighting and dying to put an end to the exploitation of man by man.

Maybe their military efficiency is limited, their efforts springing from despair more than from a rational study of objective social conditions. Nevertheless, the French socialist economist Rene' Dumont asserts that the guerilla movements of the third world have had important contributions in shaking the arrogance, and the cold blooded confidence of the U.S. capitalists.The Cuban and the Vietnamese liberation struggles have seriously loosened the grasp of the Yankee lion's mighty claw. The risk of U.S. foreign military interventions has considerably declined: there are no marines yet in Chile.

Our role as students is to lead a struggle parallel to that of the vanguards of the hungry masses. Through massive popular mobilization, grass roots peaceful action, we must bring about the total disintegration of North American capitalism. The bad guys are not our southern neighbours, as present Canadian nationalists are trying to imply: we are part of the system. Canada's relative affluence is directly linked to the success of the American empire, of which we are a partner as well as a victim.

The destruction of North American capitalism and the institutions that support it is in no way the door to the paradise, the panacea. It is simply the prerequisite before any real work in the direction of social justice can be accomplished. The amazing power of American capitalism, its resistance ability to profound crisis is indeed despairing. But history possesses internal dynamics of its own and one day, inexorably, the exploiters will be overthrown by the exploited. This, as Canadian students, we must accelerate by increasing internal pressures and dissent against North American capitalism, by denouncing the covert violence it lives from.

As Marx once put it, "the times of that superstition which attributed revolutions to the ill will of a few agitators have long passed away. Everyone knows nowadays that whenever there is a revolutionary convulsion, there must be some social want in the background which is prevented by outworn institutions from satisfying itself. The want may not yet be felt as strongly, as generally as might ensure immediate success. But every attempt at forcible repression will only bring it forth stronger and stronger until it bursts its fetters."

One day the "wretched of the earth" will rise, never to be put down. The American empire, just like the Roman empire, by "leading the world wide anti-revolutionary movement in defense of vested interests, by consistently supporting the rich against the poor, by striving for the least happiness of the greatest number "contains the seeds of its own destruction. It is living on borrowed time. And when time will have run out, humanity will be faced by a formidable task: the building of a socialist world, out of which will emerge a new liberated man, the man Guevarn dreamt of before he fell under the fire of Bolivian troops trained by U.S. special forces ("Green Berets"): "We will make the Twenty-First Century Man. We ourselves!"

for Canada?

nerica declares right to make own choices

Washington and the rest of the world on notice out its economic and social development on its -American position, contained in a document nt of Lima, was approved by representatives nations which gathered in Lima, Peru for two for a meeting of the so-called Group of 77, an des most of the developing nations throughout

Minister Edgardo Mercado Jarrin indicated n nations hope that the agreement can serve n position on the part of all the nations present

Lima is extremely nationalistic in tone. It he part of the developed nations to limit the an nations to use their own natural resources economic and social development. The cifically mention the United States, but the nerican delegations said the agreement was to Washington that in situations such as the s-Chile dispute over the nationalization of nationalizes has the right to make whatever cessary for its own development.

greement of Lima dealing with this issue is r natural resources." It specifically says that ethods or pressures of a political or economic ll exercise of the right...of each nation to use furthering its economic development and the well being of its own people...constitutes an aggression against the affected nation."

The Agreement of Lima contains nine points, many of which have been spelled out before, as in the Consensus of Vina del Mar of 1969 and the recent statement signed at the Inter-American Economic and Social Council meeting in Panama. But the agreement here goes a step or two further in spelling out the Latin-American position in considerably more detail.

Among the nine points are these:

"The right to develop," regarded by the Latin Americans as a duty and one that commits the large nations to mobilize their efforts to change institutions in order to assure the progress and well-being of mankind.

"Generalized preferential treatment," dealing with tariff preferences on the part of the big powers to assist those nations in the process of development.

"The right to technological information," which Latin Americans say ought to be the indivisible patriomny of all mankind.

"Participation in decisions that affect social and economic development," these nations say that the big powers do not have the right to take unilateral decisions affecting development.

"Participation in invisible operations," referring to what the Latin Americans regard as the right of developing nations to participate on a growing scale in maritime activities and in insurance matters.

"Exploitation of marine resources within and without national jurisdictions," dealing with the right of coastal nations to use without interference the adjacent ocean waters as a part of their own natural resources.

(Christian Science Monitor)

tendays

Friday, January 14

10:00 a.m.: Mr. Roger Garaudy will present a lecture on "The Conditions Necessary for Dialogue between Christians and Marxists" in Jeffery Hall room 128.

12:30 to 2:30 p.m.: Auditions for BooHoo skits for Variety Night on ice in the Arena.

8:30 p.m.: The Toronto Dance Theatre in McArthur Aud. Students tickets $1.00 at the Division of Concerts.

9:00 to 1:00 a.m.: Bitter Grounds coffeehouse presents Doug McArthur and Thomas Hardy. $1.00 single and $1.75 couple. Algebra days at Queen's in room 101 of Jeffery Hall.

Saturday, January 15

9:00 to 1:00 a.m.: Bitter Grounds coffeehouse presents Dough McArthur and Thomas Hardy. $1.00 single and $1.75 couple.
Algebra days at Queen's in room 101 of Jeffery Hall.

Sunday, January 16

10:30 a.m.: Folk Mass in Dunning Hall. Coffee and doughnuts afterwards.

7:00 p.m.: Folk Mass in Newman House.

Monday, January 17

8:00 p.m.: The Graduate Wives' Club will hold the first meeting of the New Year at the Nursery School, Student Housing Complex, 47 Van Order Drive. The guest speaker Mrs. Vera Lidstone, a sewing instructor at Loyalist will speak on selecting patterns, fabrics, and give other useful and interesting information on sewing. All wives of students any faculty are cordially invited.

8:00 p.m.: Italian movie "Teorema" in Dunning Hall.

Tuesday, January 18

7:00 p.m.: Tickets for Tremblant Weekend sponsored by the Queen's Ski Club March 3-5th (cost $38.00 for bus accommodations, tows, meals) on sale in Union.

7:30 p.m.: Meeting of the Queen's Astronomy Club in room 319 of Ellis Hall. A lecture "Extraterrestrial Nuclear Physics" will be given by Dr. W. McLatchie. Refreshments will be served after the meeting.

8:30 p.m.: Drama Dept. sponsors Theatre 1, from Montreal, in the Convocation Hall. Admission free.

Wednesday, January 19

3:30 p.m.: Lecture by Professor Istvan Anhalt on the "Evolution of a Composer".

4:30 p.m.: Topics in Physics for Undergraduates - lecture by Prof. D. Atherton on "Magnetic Levitation for High Speed Ground Transport" in Stirling C.

8:00 p.m.: Sports' Films '72 in Wallace Hall. Smoker sponsored by Queen's Scuba, Ski, Skydiving and Autoracing Clubs. Admission free.

8:00 p.m.: The film "Salt of the Earth" will be shown in Stirling D. It is the story of a strike-locked New Mexico mining town, in which the company has complete control over the inhabitants. Then the men decide to fight for racial equality and the women to take a stand for equal status for themselves with the men. Admission $1.00.

Thursday, January 20

7:00 & 9:30 p.m.: Campus Movie of the Week is "Getting Straight", with Elliott Gould.

7:30 p.m.: Introduction to Engineering Physics, a course orientation for first year Applied Science, in Stirling C.

7:30 p.m.: Medical Sciences Lecture in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

9:00 p.m.: Elizabeth Brewster and George Jonas will give a poetry reading, sponsored by Quarry and Dept. of English, in Agnes Etherington.

Bars
401 Inn - Entourage
Pub - Muriel Day and the Night Squad
Manor - Debbie Lori Kaye
Commodore - Classic Revival

THEATRES
Capital: The Stewardesses
Hyland: Dollars
Odeon: Diamonds are Forever

"Eating Students" -- Food Crisis Centre

Any problems with meals: no variety, spending too much money on food, are you having trouble with malnutrition or some other student disease. Do you REALLY think you know how to cook?

On Monday, January 17, at 6:00 p.m., in the kitchen of the Student Affairs Centre (165 University) we're having our first meeting of our weekly 'clinic', one of the services offered by Elrond College Education programmes. Come to our meeting and let us know just where the problems lie. We'll try to help.

Elrond College Membership Forms Available At 137 Collingwood Deadline Is Jan. 24

Learn Classical, Folk and/or Accoustic Guitar

WILL O'HARA

544-0665

Want To Stretch Your Dollar?

Set aside $17. With this
1) feed
2) clothe
3) educate
4) give medical attention to a family of five for one month.

Could you do it? Become a foster parent and watch it happen.

If interested, phone 544-9364 for Queens' FOSTER PARENTS PLAN OF CANADA representative.

off the record

by Dick Loney

Aside from closing out 1971 with one of the hottest hit parade items in any year, Don McLean has filled rock and roll revivalist's hours with yet a new diversion. Treating "American Pie" as Beatlesque piece of pop poetry (with clouded allusions to the changing panorama of stars who alternately aspired to the Crown of the King of Rock and Roll) is merely a bonus diversion while one enjoys what is a superb second album by young singer McLean.

The album version of the title tune is a romp through that post-Buddy Holly period which began that fateful and frigid February day in 1959 when "The music died". For McLean, the air crash deaths over Iowa of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost of Rock (Buddy Holly, Ritchie Valens and The Big Bopper, J. P. Richardson) spelled the demise of rock and roll. From then on, through the era of sock-hops in the high school gym, up until McLean watches Mick Jagger (the Devil) cavorting on stage in his "Jumping Jack Flash" madness, the music has suffered through many changes and power struggles -- indeed the moss grows fat on the Rolling Stones! The meaning of the lyric is open to interpretation, but some of it seems fairly explicit.

The Jester (Dylan) in his coat borrowed from James Dean (of denim) is on the sidelines in a cast (after his motorcycle accident), and while the air filled with sweet perfume (what else?) sees the Sergeants playing a marching tune (the psychedelic beginnings of Sgt. Pepper and His Lonely Hearts Club Band).

Apart from the intriguing lyrics, the haunting melody McLean utilized has the type of repetitive structure that you find yourself humming from time to time. The classic title tune, indeed the entire album, was dedicated to Buddy Holly and to be sure it's all class material. The other songs are of a folky quiet nature for the most part, utilizing soft acoustic guitar, vibes and some airy-fairy beautiful string embellishments.

"Vincent" is a ballad that reveals the side of McLean which was his bread and butter before the phenomenal success of "American Pie" put him into the champagne and caviar camp. Other tunes such as "Winterwood" and "Empty Chairs" can only be described as having that perfection of melody and lyric which is to be found on the prettiest of Lightfoot compositions. What a pleasant surprise bargain-seekers will have when they purchase Don McLean's album merely for the sake of the hit, only to be rewarded for their interest with an additional nine sullies into the McLean mood. DON McLEAN-AMERICAN PIE UNITED ARTISTS - UAS-5535.

Elton John, that English madman across the water has released yet a new album combining his keyboard and vocal talents with the esoteric lyrics of Bernie Taupin -- and it's up to the standards they set with TUMBLEWEED CONNECTION. Already, one of the cuts has been lifted as a single release -- "Levon" -- and also "Tiny Dancer" has been receiving considerable AM & FM airplay.

All of the people connected with John's previous albums are back, making this one of the "sure things" in these days of treacherous and cautious album-buying (five big ones is a bunch for a bummer disc, right?) The orchestral arrangements by Paul Buckmaster are superb, as is the production of Gus Dudgeon, and the facilities at Trident Studios of London can best be evaluated by adding that Harry Nilsson's new rock album was recorded for the most part between these baffled walls in Britain.

"Razor Face" features that excellent guitar work of Caleb Quaye that infused the last pair of Elton John studio albums, and "Madman Across The Water" is one of those multi-versed vehicles which builds to a frenzied ecstasy in the manner of "Burn Down The Mission" -- complete with a bridge that accommodates Buckmaster's symphonic tendencies.

One of the added attractions of this album is the unusual discography of session-men and singers employed in the making of the album, with even the precise date of the actual "take" recorded for posterity. This type of accreditation has done much to add those touches of formality which pop music has attempted to adopt so as to bring it into acceptance as an art form of the same validity as the Bach-lovers, and Brubeck-touters claim for their less-universally followed styles of music.

Elton John & Co. take rock music into a new dimension, whether they sing of an Indian's lament for a hunted existence at the mercy of white men's bullets ("Indian Sunset"), or the more contemporaneous account of a music-celebrities' arrival in Boston and his trip to the inevitable Holiday Inn nearby: Slow down Joe, I'm a rock n' roll man.

I've twiddled my thumbs in a dozen odd bands,
And you ain't seen nothing
Until you've been in a motel baby
Like the Holiday Inn.

Even more unorthodox material for a rock song appears in "Rotten Peaches", a mid-tempo about migrant-workers, cocaine, pills and peaches "rotting in the sun".

Rock and Roll at its creative best -- structurally, lyrically and melodically -- ELTON JOHN -- MADMAN ACROSS THE WATER -UNI-93120.

Canada's premier folk duo, Ian & Sylvia, are currently riding a crest of popularity with their CTV Network Music Show (ah there, Belleville, won't you lead us out of the CBC wasteland of Kingston television?) and just to show their musical tastes haven't atrophied, along comes their very excellent Columbia album. Among the eleven carefully selected songs is their recent hit item "Creators of Rain", and Dave Whiffen's "More Often Than Not", as well as a solo effort by Sylvia -- "Midnight", and one by Ian on "Barney".

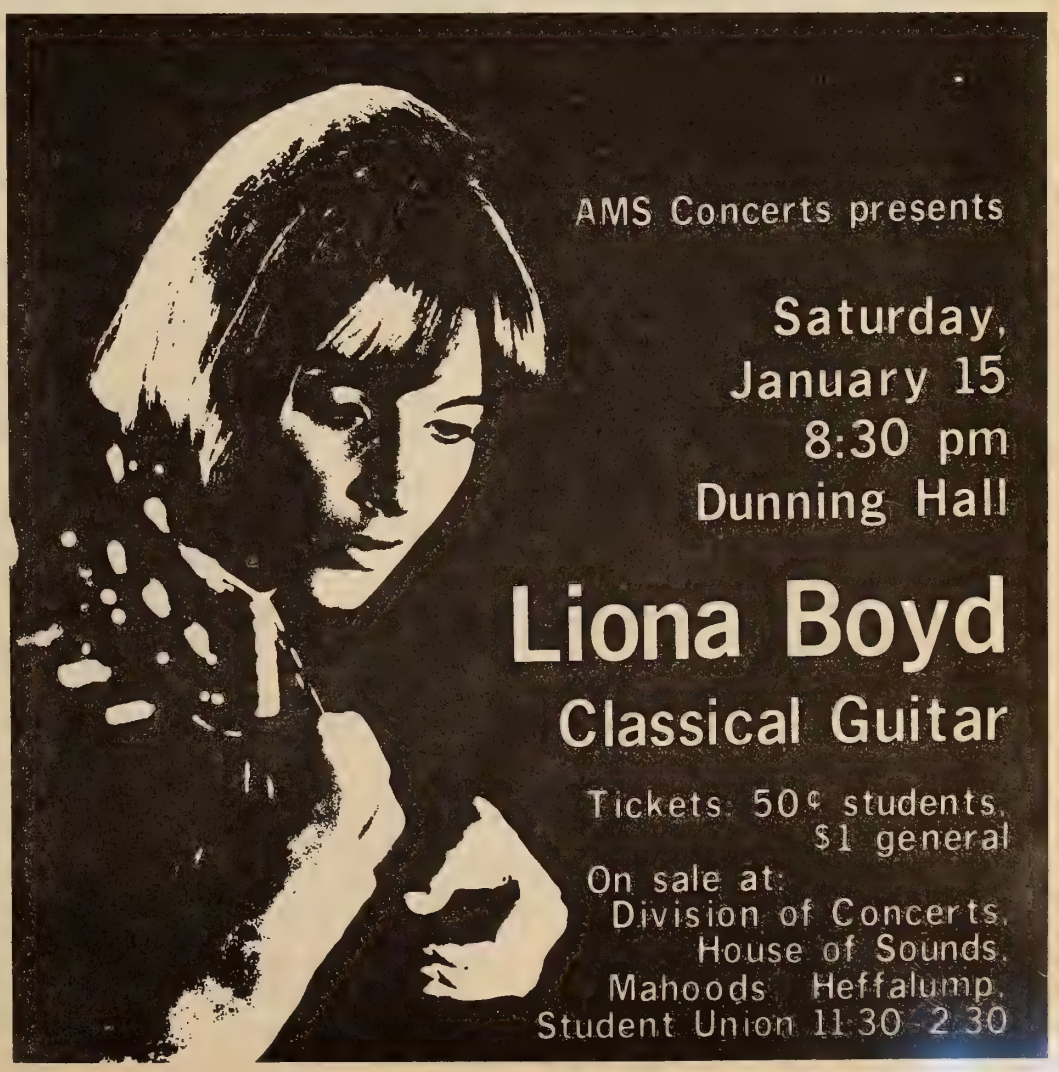
Ian and his wife utilized the cream of Nashville's studio corps -- Norbert Putnam, everybody's bassist; plus Kenny Buttrey on drums (once Elvis's favoured percussionist); with Weldon Myrick playing a lot of steel guitar, and even Charlie McCoy sitting in on harmonica. Dave Wilcox has now succeeded in an impressive coterie of sidemen who have performed with Ian (including Queen's favourite, David Rea)

To avoid getting into the spot that the liner notes writer does over the "bag" which Ian & Sylvia inhabit musically, it would be best to say that their style can go from a country-yodel novelty like "Shark and The Cockroach" to the Andy Williams pop-style of "Creators of Rain". The roots of "Four Strong Winds" surge through the lament for the "Last Lonely Eagle" despite the bluegrass shadings of Myrick's steel guitar which softly undershadows the plectrum picking of Tyson and Wilcox.

For sheer beauty of harmony you'll go a long way before you hear anything prettier than Mr. & Mrs. Tyson's rendering of "Lincoln Freed Me", sung to the single guitar of Dave Wilcox in the background. If you've followed the fortunes of Ian & Sylvia since the Tom Dooley-days you'll be sure to find their latest album an extra special treat . . IAN & SYLVIA-COLUMBIA C-30736.

WE'LL GIVE YOU ALL THE FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT DIAMONDS

The value of a diamond varies not only with the size, but with the degree of perfection in color, clarity and cut. We'll show you all the factors that influence the cost of a diamond. And help you find the finest for the price.



KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

Liona Boyd - Classical Guitarist

Saturday night Liona Boyd, a young classical guitarist, from Toronto, will be performing in Dunning Hall.

Among the masters of the guitar, with whom the artist has studied is the renowned Julian Bream. She has plans to study in France next year with Alexandre Lagoya. She has performed for various university campuses, the Guitar Societies of Toronto and Ottawa, at Stratford and with the Hart House orchestra in Toronto.

Her repertoire ranges from Baroque to contemporary with special emphasis on Spanish music. Tomorrow evening, her program will include selections from J. S. Bach, Albeniz, Torroha, de la Mainz, and Moussorshy. The concert is being subsidized by the AMS student concert fund.

CLASSIFIEDS

LOST on Aberdeen Street, half-grown black kitten, 5½ months, "Bear-Bear". Sorely missed. Please call 544-5841.

ROOMMATE wanted to share apartment with two others. $50 month. Utilities included. Phone 542-5593.

TALKER! 6D of 1969-70 reunion on January 17, 1972 at 227 Collingwood Street. 8 pm to 10 pm. BYOMug.

ANYONE interested in working as a bartender or casino banker for Saturday night of Snowball week please phone 546-3075.

LOST on January 12: a bunch of keys on a metal KLM (Dutch Airlines) keyring. Keys include one Samsonite key plus duplicate and other important keys, ie apartment etc. If found please call Allan at 542-1322. Thank you.

TABLE BOARD: delicious home cooked meals served in a homey atmosphere. Collingwood Street. Phone 542-9156.

ISI is the Arts 71 class gift to Queen's?

OST on Monday night: six onth old grey, white and orange otted kitten, vicinity Univer-ity and Earl. Reward. 544-9426.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH: Anyone interested in planning and participating in a summer tutorial-entertainment programme for elementary school age children in Lanark County (i.e. Lanark Village, 25 miles north of Smiths Falls) please contact Linda McLaren, 47 Beverley St., 546-4306.

NEEDED, apartment for four guys for this term. Call 544-1530.

NEEDED, one person to share a 3-bedroom apartment with two guys. 15 minutes from campus. Rent $168 a month. Call 546-7272 any time.

BOO -- I love you -- X.

SCIENCE 73 general meeting, Tuesday, January 19, 7:30 p.m. Election of Formal Committee. Dupuis Auditorium.

NOTICE to Drew, Nance, Sandy, Kathy, Spoon, Marv, Helen and all other ex-heavies of Arts 72. Tuesday 9:00 - 1:00 at the Plaza. The plan will be unveiled!

GOOD permanent or summer jobs are found more easily with a well-written resume. Call Page Resumes 549 1384.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5 year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

AUSTRALIA needs teachers now. Sick of hassling smog, unemployment? Growing needs, all subject areas. For full info sent $1 to Intl. Teachers Placement Bureau, PO Box 19007, Sacramento, California 95819.

BIG room, big house. Share large kitchen and bathroom. Rent $60 a month. Females welcome. Phone Bill, Brett, Mat or Ian 549 0044.

ST. ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Reverend Max V. Putnam, B.A., D.D., Minister
Christopher C. Hunt, ARCO, Director of Praise

10.00 a.m. Young Adult Bible Study
11.00 a.m. Morning Worship

7.00 p.m. Evening Worship
7.30 p.m. "Radio Ministry" CKLC

8.15 p.m. Youth Fellowship
TUESDAY, 7.30 p.m.
Bible Study

AMS PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS

Nominations for teams of candidates for AMS President and Vice-President will be received in the AMS Office until 5 pm January 28. Nominations must be supported with the signatures of 200 AMS members.

Have you considered this Leadership Profession?

The qualities of leadership show up in men who have chosen Chartered Accountancy as their profession, since those who are resourceful, have a keen analytical sense, enjoy meeting and working with people and can stand strong on their convictions, are the business leaders of today. As a Chartered Accountant you may apply your talents in a public accounting practice, in industry, education, or government. Each avenue provides rich rewards for the diligent, for the Chartered Accountant is a key-man in today's business and financial world.

Among the many firms of Chartered Accountants who employ CA students are those participating in this advertisement. These firms and others are interviewing on your campus. The names of most local CA firms are listed in your yellow pages under the heading, Accountants—Public.

Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.
Openings in 21 offices coast to coast in Canada

Arthur, Andersen and Company
Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver

Thorne, Gunn, Helliwell & Christenson with 43 offices across Canada and the Caribbean

Lavenhol, Krekstein, Horwath & Horwath
Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and throughout the world

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
JAN. 17 - JAN. 31

Check with placement office for specific requirements of each firm.

Whether you have decided on your future or not, this is an excellent opportunity to find out more about Chartered Accountancy as a career. Visit the on-campus recruiters, a local firm of CA's, ask your placement officer, or write directly to:

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario
69 Bloor Street East, Toronto, Ont.

They Call It Sport

Skydiving is becoming a popular sport for thousands of people across Canada - as across the world. At Queen's there are the Queen's Falling Gaels. This article is to give you a glimpse of the fun, the work and the reasons behind spending every possible weekend out at a Drop Zone jumping from planes.

Most people have seen parachutists jumping into football games, drilling, or perhaps at home at the D.Z. Generally you feel excited or apprehensive and often comment "I'd love to try but I'd never have the nerve!"

Yet 3500 of us in Canada - who are no less chicken than the rest of you - have been trained, made our first jump and were bitten by the awe and mystery that clouds the sport is soon turned into excitement and exhilaration coupled with satisfaction which sets a jumpers adrenilin going every time he looks up and sees a bright blue sky inviting him to fly through it.

Many is the young jumper - 17 is the lower age limit - whose parents have vetoed jumping as a hobby because of the danger involved. It is ironic that skydiving is (as the saying goes) safer than crossing the street.

One-sixth of one percent of jumps result in injury - usually sprained ankles or an occasional broken leg (ask Kathy Turner).

No one is out to maim his (or her) precious body - is in fact you will probably find that jumpers love their bodily comforts more passionately than many! They are people who have the love of life to the extent that they participate in a sport which can make the most of the sky.

Any of the 64 new jumpers at Queen's can tell you of the rigorous drilling and training that one must go through before being let loose in the sky. Queen's has chief training instructor, Joe Chow, who has close to 600 jumps and knows how important a basic training is.

During instruction on exiting the plane, the controls of your canopy, rules, free fall position and explanation of equipment, safety is given the greatest stress. Emergency procedures are thoroughly explained - in the unprobable case of a malfunction a student knows exactly what must be done.

His first seven jumps are done on a static line - a 4.6 foot, 3000 pound test rig. When the line pulls taught it breaks away from the parachute and opens the canopy. The jumper arches on exit from the plane, counts to 6 and then feels (often with relief) tug of the open canopy.

The thrill he feels after bursts out in hoots and yells as he descends slowly (15 M.P.H.) under his canopy, following the ground control instructions being signaled by the instructor below. His landing is usually more softer than he expects and once he has got over the excitement of the first jump and entered it in his Parachutist's Log Book, it is hard to keep him on the ground.

Like all sports there is a lot to learn. As soon as the first jump is over the progression in free fall is begun. From free fall of 0 seconds a set standard pattern is followed wherby he must do three stable delays of 5 seconds to tens, 15's, 20's and finally 30 second delays he is ready to do anything (up to 75 seconds!)

During his delay progression the student learns control during loops, how to track at speeds of 200 m.p.h. vertical and 50-60 m.p.h. horizontally.

Soon he is ready for relative work. This involves catching and doing acrobatics with other freefalling skydivers. They build up to 21 man stars - imagine all those people falling in star formation - until 2000 feet where they turn tail, track away, check above and below then and pull the ripcord.

The imagine all 18 steering their canopies to land in a 10 meter pea-gravel bowl, some with centimetres of a frou inch disc placed at the centre.

In Internation Parachute Competition skydivers compete in style events, doing a series of loops and turns in freefall and in accuracy events - landing as close to the four inch disc as possible in three separate jumps.

The total distance in three jumps often adds up to less than one metre, the winner almost certainly lands once, twice or all three times "dead centre".

At Queen's we have several D.C. (dead centre) jumpers. The majority however, are students on their way up! The Falling Gaels do their falling over Gananoque airport where Queen's pilots fly there up to 2800-12,500 feet in a Cessna 182 or a Cessna 172, both of which are tented by the club.

Jumping starts Friday, Saturday and Sunday mornings at 7 A.M. when everyone jumps out of bed - those who have been mistreating their bodies the evening before, jump our a little less avidly than the one or two who have slept a decent 8 hours!

After an exhausting day of jumping a group of fun-crazed people usually hits a local drinking spot to talk jumping and have more fun, often ending in smoke parties which last till it is ready to go jumping again - smoke and drink or the influence thereof, are strictly verbotten on the D.Z. - one of the stringent safety precautions which make "Cheating Death" a safe sport. SPORT.

Starting jumping is a sure cure for the midyear doldrums. There are always things going on - from B.O.D. meetings (serious stuff) to Pack and Talk nights every Thursday night when club members get together to hear the latest news, pack any chutes left unpacked, talk over club policies and end up going "Manoring".

There is also a club newsletter published every two weeks to keep people up to date. Last minute information is posted on our Club Board outside the Union Coffee Shop. Messages like "Just have to go jumping today - anyone interested?" or "going to Florida to jump at Christmas, anyone interested see Magoo."

A first this year at Queen's is the Sports Films Night on January 19th; six of the Queen's Sports clubs - Skiing, Autoracing, Scuba - are holding an open film night with a bar in Wallace Hall. Films from all the sports will be shown and drinks served.

It is a chance to get to know other sport nuts and learn about other sports. Each club will have a boother where new members can join, but it should be fun just for interest too.

So that is a look at our sport. There is room for many more of you - another training session starts January 20th so watch our notice board if you're interested. You are also welcome to "drop-in" at the D.Z. at Gan. any weekend to see what happens. Why don't you join us?

SNOWBALL IS COMING

Hockey Gaels Crush Ryerson 9-1

By Ron Pratt

The Golden Gaels hockey club started the new year right last Saturday afternoon, scoring a convincing 9-1 win over RPI in Toronto. The explosive offence was led by defenceman Bob Smith and forwards Colin Loudin and Bruce Cameron with two goals apiece.

Cameron added two assists for a four-point night, as did linemate Murray Douglas, on one goal and three assists. Steve Gross and Morris Mott also notched goals for Queen's as the Gaels completely dominated the action.

Queen's led 3-0 at the end of the first period and 6-0 after the second as they thoroughly outclassed the hapless Rams. The Gaels' defensive corps continued its steady improvement, with Steve Gross' goal an example of sharp play.

Gross stood his ground at the blueline, stole the puck from the Ryerson attacker with a fine stick check, and raced in to beat the Ram goalie.

Mott's goal also came from fine individual effort, as he zig-zagged out of the corner, leaving two defenders sprawled in his wake, and drilled a hard shot past the startled goalie.

Queen's was without regulars Mike Lynch and Stan Galt, although Dave Melloy played well in Galt's absence. In fact, all the Gaels played well, with coach Bob Carnegie singling out the defense for special praise: "Our defense is really coming now and we're moving the puck well. The team is starting to jell now."

This victory pushed the Gaels into 4th place in the OUAA Eastern Division.

Bruce Cameron-2 goals, 2 assists - perry

Colin Loudin (9), Murray Douglas (15) spark Gaels - perry

OUAA HOCKEY STANDINGS

EASTERN SECTION

	GP	W	L	T	Pts.
York	8	7	0	1	15
Ottawa	7	5	2	0	10
Toronto	5	4	0	1	9
Queen's	6	4	2	0	8
Laurentian	8	2	5	1	5
Carleton	6	2	4	0	4
Ryerson	10	2	8	0	4

CUSO

invites you to apply now:

- 1st priority: Medical personnel (must have 2 yrs. experience)
- also needed: teachers of most subjects, maths & science in particular, (experience preferred)

Contact K. Pold, 547-2807

International Centre.

1971/72 Career Seminar Series presents

Careers with the Ontario Government

...a pre-interview discussion on career opportunities with the Government of Ontario

Guests will include:

Mrs. A. Kerr
Liaison Officer
Colleges and Universities

Time and Place:

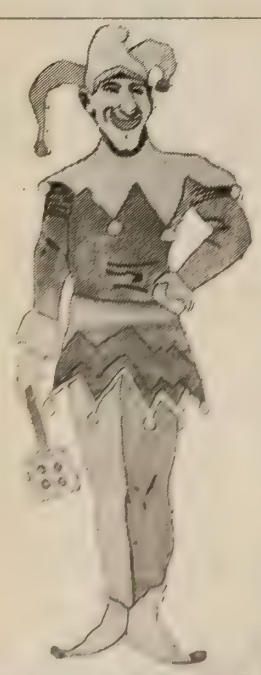
Monday January 17th at 7 p.m.

Students' Memorial Union
(small common room, 2nd floor)

The Ontario Civil Service Commission will be recruiting on campus on February 7th and 8th, and all students interested in a career with the Government of Ontario should attend this career session.

Aunt Lucy's Restaurant

Licensed of Course
STEAKS - SEAFOODS
PIZZA - SPAGHETTI
and
KENTUCKY FRIED CHICKEN



St. James' Church

UNION and BARRIE
KINGSTON

9.00 a.m. - HOLY COMMUNION
11.00 a.m. - MORNING PRAYER
7.30 p.m. - EVENING PRAYER

The Commerce Society Presents...

CASINO ROYALE RAFFLE

THE VEGAS VICEROY

FIRST PRIZE - Eight Fantastic Daze in Las Vegas for Two
- During Reading Week (Feb. 19-26)
- All Expenses Paid - $500 Spending Money
- Flight leaves Montreal or Toronto February 19, Returns 26
- Or $1,000 cash

SECOND PRIZE - $300 Stereo
THIRD PRIZE - Twenty Albums of YOUR Choice

WATCH FOR THE VEGA$ VICEROY AND CA$INO CAL AND FOR THE COMMERCE CAMPUS CASINO, TICKETS $1

Weekend Hockey

Gaels Doubleheader

By Bruce McLeod

Friday, the Hockey Gaels continue their second half schedule with an interlocking game against the western division McMaster Marauders. The game will start at 8:00. On Saturday, they play Bishop's in an exhibition game, and on Tuesday Carleton Ravens will be here for a league game.

McMaster is in fifth place in their division, but only one point out of fourth and two out of third. Fresh from winning the Hockey Canada tournament in Thunder Bay, they will be looking to improve their record and hungry for a playoff spot. Unfortunately, little information is traded amongst the members of the OUAA, so little is known about their strengths. Even less is known about Bishop's.

Coach Bob Carnegie seemed in a fairly confident mood, though, at the team's practice on Wednesday night. He is looking for a very strong second half from the Gaels, and said that he was very happy with the way they had been playing during their last few games.

In particular, he praised the team's passing and positional play, which is a very important aspect of the type of game the Gaels play. It was a strong second half which propelled the Gaels into the playoffs last year in a particularly exciting finish, and if they can repeat that performance, we should be in for some good hockey.

Stu Lang continues to play on defence with Bob Smith. With the exception of Mike Lynch, out with a shoulder separation, the team is healthy.

Wrestling Carleton, MacMaster at Queen's, Sat., Jan. 15, 7 p.m.

Gymnastics Queen's Invitational Meet, Sat., Jan. 15, 1 p.m.

Football 1972

Where have we seen this before?

By Chris Boon

Well, sports fans, here it is January 14, and guess what? It's still football season. Aside from assorted Super Bowls, Pro Bowls, Consolation Bowls, and similar NFL horseshit, the OUAA has finally arrived at an acceptable schedule for next year.

The big problem came when Laurentian dropped out for financial reasons. A five-team division, similar to last year's without Laurentian, was discarded because of the necessity for mid-week games and mid-season byes.

The final alignment which no one claims to be perfect, puts seven teams in the western section and four (Ottawa U., Carleton, Toronto, and Queen's) in the East, with the Western section sending 3 teams into the playoffs and the East 1. Each team plays 6 league games (home and home in the east, a once-a-season conference schedule in the West.)

The situation becomes interesting if you've been around long enough to remember the OLD OQAA-with four teams. Substitute Ottawa and Carleton for McGill and Western, and away we go. Right back where we started from, except there is no way two Ottawa weekends are a fair trade for one McGill (read Montreal) weekend.

The current version of the schedule for Queen's given below, raises an interesting question. We are, at present, playing Carleton, in Ottawa, on September 16th. Unless registration (and hence orientation) is as late next year as it was this year, there will be no "Frosh Week" home game -- a tradition which a sports-minded school like Queen's should try to save. How about it, people?

EASTERN SECTION FOOTBALL SCHEDULE 1972

Sat. Sept. 16th	Queen's at Carleton
Sept. 23rd	Ottawa at Queen's
Sept. 30th	Queen's at Toronto
Oct. 7th	Carleton at Queen's
Oct. 14th	Queen's at Ottawa
Oct. 21st	Toronto at Queen's

CLASSIFIEDS

FOUND, pair of black ski gloves outside Tech Supplies Monday. Call John 544-7474.

FOUND, one watch, between Ellis and the back of Jeffery. Contact Jim Seagram 544-7656.

JOB HUNTING? Let Page Resumes help. 549-1384.

THE old but loyal fans of that liberal but affluent organization Arts 72 are congregating at the plaza for a few ales on Tuesday, January 18 at 8:30 pm. The year will buy a round or two for loyal followers at 9:30 pm. Be there!

ALWAYS READY TO HELP

SMOKER

WALLACE HALL

Wednesday, Jan. 19 - 8pm

Sponsors: Ski Club, Scuba Club, Sky Diving Club, and Auto Racing Club

Films, booze, music, talk

THE CANADIAN MINERAL INDUSTRY EDUCATION FOUNDATION

offers

UNDERGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS

in

MINING ENGINEERING

$1,500 - 9 months

Educational Summer Employment Arranged

to students wishing to enter the first or subsequent professional year of a degree course in Mining Engineering

For applications contact:
The Secretary
Canadian Mineral Industry Education Foundation
1600-44 King Street West, Toronto
or
The Dean of Engineering
Applied Science

CLOSING DATE 15 MARCH 1972

MASTER DANCE CLASS

IN MODERN DANCE

presented by

The Toronto Dance Theatre

10 am - 12 noon

Dance Studio - Physed Centre

Admission Free

Duplicating

In addition to its complete range of typing service, your on-campus typing service has a 3600 111 Xerox for long-run, 'presentation quality' copying, a 720 Xerox for short-run, quality copying, and Ditto copying facilities.

The Student Typing Service

STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

CANADA

OTTAWA - Some rays of light broke through the darkening winter clouds of unemployment last month, Statistics Canada reported Tuesday.

While unemployment rose to an estimated 530,000 from 503,000 in November, the increase was less than usual for this time of year. The figure remained below the 538,000 unemployed in December, 1970.

QUEBEC - Quebec's industry minister predicted a rosy 1972 for the provincial economy Monday, while warning the issue of Quebec jobs must take precedence over any concern with foreign investment.

Gerard D. Levesque, delivering an economic review and forecast at a news conference, predicted increased production and employment opportunities, with a lower unemployment rate, for this year.

Mr. Levesque said Quebec will oppose vigorously any Ottawa policy on foreign investment and ownership which would restrict the creation of jobs in any way.

"We don't want to close the door on any foreign investment which will bring more jobs for Quebecers.

"We can't afford to refuse."

Mr. Levesque said:

"Our first duty is to make sure that all Quebecers have a job. Then we can proceed with other matters such as ownership."

WINDSOR - A conference on the Canada-United States Auto Trade Agreement Sunday suggested some form of work stoppage as a means of impressing on government and industry, labor's opposition to removing the agreement's safeguards.

The demand is contained in a resolution adopted by more than 200 union leaders and members of the New Democratic Party who attended the conference, organized by the party's Waffle wing.

The resolution also calls for the creation of a publicly-owned auto industry in Canada as the only means of freeing the industry from U.S. control.

However, the resolution points out, the primary concern at the moment is the preservation of the jobs of Canadian workers in the auto industry and in related industries.

OTTAWA - Finance Minister Edgar Benson has been agonizing whether to run again for his Commons seat, Kingston and the Islands.

If he opts out, he may well be succeeded by Trade Minister Jean-Luc Pepin. In such a case, Mr. Pepin would become Canada's first French-speaking finance minister.

ST JOHN'S - The Progressive Conservatives moved to the brink of power in Newfoundland Tuesday with a provincial Supreme Court decision awarding them a constituency left in doubt by the Oct. 28 provincial election.

"We'll be ready to form the Government in a day or two," Conservative leader Frank Moores said last night after learning that unanimous decision by two judges left his party the apparent winner.

Chief Justice R.S. Furlong and Mr. Justice Arthur Mifflin ruled that Conservative candidate Ed Maynard be declared elected in the disputed riding of St. Barbe South, thus assuring the Conservatives of 21 of the 42 Legislature seats.

The two judges dismissed a petition by the Liberals asking that St. Barbe South, won by the Conservatives in the election, be declared vacant on the grounds a recount could not be completed because 106 ballots were accidentally burned.

Mr. Smallwood said earlier his Government, in power since Confederation 1949, had the right to remain in office until the St. Barbe South dispute was settled.

MONTREAL - Mayor Jean Drapeau of Montreal was fined $50 and costs Tuesday after pleading guilty in absentia to charges of failing to file federal income tax reports for 1968 and 1969. Lawyer Marcel Trudeau, appearing on behalf of the mayor, said Mr. Drapeau had filed his 1968 and 1969 returns last December. No money was owed the federal government "because the taxes were deducted at the source."

TORONTO - Prime Minister Trudeau says industrial growth, foreign ownership and resource exploitation could be the key issues in the next federal election, expected some time during 1972.

The prime minister said on the CBC television program Weekend, shown Sunday night, he feels these issues will take precedence over problems related to social welfare.

OTTAWA - The federal Government will double the $50-million it planned to spend on job-creating winter projects proposed by private groups, Manpower Minister Otto Lang said Tuesday.

TORONTO - The United States has made some concessions in negotiations with Canada for an international treaty to clean up the lower Great Lakes and it likely will be signed this spring, about six months behind schedule.

Washington has eased its opposition to legislation for phosphate control at the state level and is coming to the view that commercial ships need holding tanks for sewage, Ontario Environment Minister George Kerr told the Canadian Press in an interview Tuesday.

The international technical committee that is drawing up the fine print for the pact likely will meet Jan. 27 or 28 to complete a final draft, he said.

Canada and the United States agreed in principle last June to stop pollution in Lake Erie, Lake Ontario and the international section of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

MONCTON - Student demonstrations erupted in Moncton Saturday night and early yesterday following a telecast of the National Film Board production L'Acadie, L'Acadie over CBAFT, the CBC's French-language station.

About 200 students of the French-language University of Moncton marched in a spontaneous demonstration to the suburban home of U of M president M. Adelard Savoie. Subsequently a group of students caused a disturbance at the residence of Moncton Mayor Leonard Jones.

L'Acadie, L'Acadie is a two-hour film devoted for the most part to a view of Acadian life through the eyes of militant students involved in a series of strikes, protests, marches and occupations that took place on the U of M campus and in Moncton during 1968-69.

From City Hall they marched to Mr. Savoie's home. There they chanted: On Veut le Francais—We want French. When they received no response, the students marched back to the campus and held a meeting at the men's residence.

"I couldn't find any fairy tales so I'm reading Justin the next closest thing — one of your old 'Just Society' speeches instead!"

THE WORLD

DACCA - Sheik Mujibur Rahman came home to a delirious welcome from his Bengali people Monday after more than nine months in Pakistani prisons.

Diplomats and troops of the new Bangladesh army were lined up at Dacca airport to greet the 51-year-old president of Asia's newest nation as he stepped from the RAF Comet jet that brought him from London and New Delhi.

Police had to hold back the huge crowd that surged toward the plane shouting "Joi Bangla" - Victory to Bengal—the rallying cry of the independence movement Sheik Mujib spawned.

Sheik Mujibur Rahman said Bangladesh, the former eastern wing of Pakistan, will not have any links with West Pakistan.

The links between the two wings had been snapped for all time to come, he said, and told West Pakistanis: "You live in peace and let us live in peace."

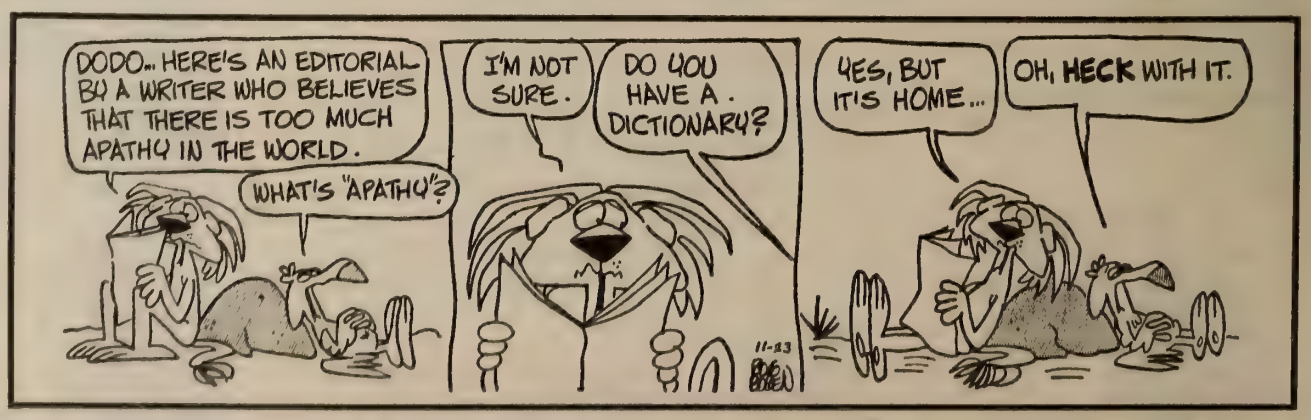
Mujib was addressing a public meeting, attended by an estimated 500,000 people, at the Dacca race course soon after arriving in Dacca to a delirious welcome.

LONDON - Britain's 280,000 coal miners have suffered a rebuff in efforts to whip up full and effective support from other workers in support of their country-wide strike over a pay dispute.

Vic Feather, general secretary of the powerful Trades Union Congress, told mine leaders Tuesday what aid can be expected, such as instructing trade unionists not to cross strike picket lines.

But the move masks disappointment in the National Union of Mineworkers that the TUC's top policy-makers had rejected the miners' plea Monday for a special conference to generate united support among trade unions for the stoppage, the first in the coal industry for 46 years.

TOKYO - A radio-active count 100 times higher than usual was detected over Japan Tuesday and the government's radiation counter-measure headquarters said it could have resulted from China's nuclear detonation Friday.



China confirmed Sunday it staged its 13th nuclear test Jan. 7. But the official New China News Agency announcement did not say where the test was carried out or give the magnitude of the explosion.

SAIGON - The collapse of the three-nation International Control Commission is imminent following the decision of its chairman. India, to establish full diplomatic ties with North Vietman, an authoritative diplomatic source said Saturday.

The commission, made up of Canada, Poland and India, was established at the Geneva conference on Indochina in 1954 to implement the agreements of the conference. Among the accords was the division of the two Vietnams.

The source said it is expected India will pull out of the commission altogether following an announcement on Saturday by South Vietmanese Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam.

He said Saigon will not permit the entry of the newly appointed chief of the Indian delegation to the ICC, L.N. Ray, until the New Delhi Government establishes full diplomatic ties with Saigon as well as Hanoi.

BACK PAGE

This sugarplum fairy is Sue Drowley (Rehab 74), captain of the figure-skating team. The team will appear at Snowball's Variety Night on Ice on Friday of next week; that's a warmup to the tournament February 4 and 5 in which Queen's, as defending champions, will host skating teams from four other universities.

- stalker

Chancellor to retire

Dr. John B. Stirling, chancellor of Queen's since 1960, has announced that he will retire when his term ends this summer.

Stirling, after whom the physics building is named, is honorary head of the university. His principal public role comes at the annual convocations, when he laureates individually the thousands of students receiving degrees from Queen's.

Under the charter of Queen's, election of a new chancellor is the responsibility of the university council, which will hold its annual meeting June 2.

A special committee to recommend a nominee is preparing its report, and welcomes suggestions from any member of the university community.

There are no legal requirements specifying who may be chancellor, except an archaic ruling that he must be a Protestant.

Chairman of the special committee, and the man to whom suggestions should be sent, is principal Dr. John J. Deutsch.

Others members are J. D. Gibson, chairman of the board of trustees; faculty association president Dr. James A. Bennett; alumni president George E. Perrin; alumnae president Mrs. K. B. Parkinson; Peter Hennessy, secretary of the university council; rector Alan Broadbent; and AMS president Pat Riley.

Greenhouses go down

Workmen recently demolished the greenhouses which stood west of the Old Medical Building and just north of Theological Hall.

Some of them had stood since 1920; others were added in 1955.

An official explanation was not available, but it is believed one reason was that the demolition reduces the total "net assignable square footage" which the university has available.

Since less space is available, the Ontario government will give the university larger construction grants next year.

Since the construction of Earl Hall, the old greenhouses have not been used much for botanical study. Plants for campus landscaping have been their main product.

FILM "FIGHTING FOR SURVIVAL"

Film studies students supporting expansion of their department influenced the arts and science faculty board Friday to recommend that a third film instructor be hired for next year.

The board had been asked to approve a committee recommendation that "the allocation of faculty funds for additional development within the department of film studies be deferred at least until costs in the departments of art history, computing and information science, and music have achieved relative stability."

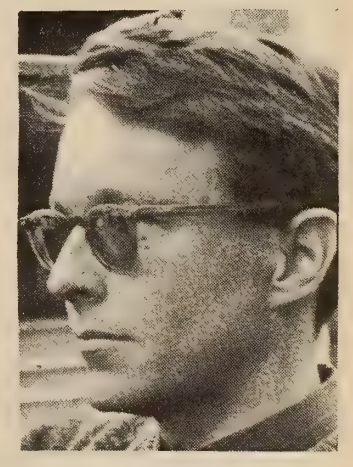
But the board, which governs the faculty of arts and science, recommended to arts and science dean Dr. Ronald L. Watts that enough extra money be budgeted at once to give film studies another faculty member and two new courses in 1972-73.

At present there are two film instructors -- Peter Harcourt and Robin Wood -- and four film courses.

About 20 film students attended the meeting as guests, with the permission of board chairman Dr. C. D. M. Crowder, professor of history. Film studies departmental student council chairman Kathy McSweeney brought the board a petition signed by another 100 film students, asking for the extra faculty member and courses.

Miss McSweeney said the additional courses are necessary to maintain a film studies programme at Queen's.

There are 80 students who want to take advanced film courses next year, she said, and room for only 20 in each of the two advanced courses scheduled to be offered. Without a third faculty member, the department would have to choose between straining the capacity of those two courses, and eliminating the introductory courses, film 210 and 221.



"We couldn't offer a minor and medial with the staff that we had," department head Harcourt told The Journal. "I either get another member of staff, or I have to withdraw my grouping."

Wood, the other present instructor, is leaving Queen's after this year, but a replacement for him is already budgeted.

The motion which came to faculty board was the work of the committee of departments, which consists of department heads and other officials; it was based on the recommendations of a review committee on the film department and a development sub-committee on the same subject.

Kathy McSweeney

Peter Harcourt

The major recommendations were that film should continue as an independent department (it was split from the department of English five years ago) and that it should eventually develop to a minimum of four full-time staff members "as the next matter of priority".

A third recommendation was that funds for such development be deferred for the time being. But an amendment proposed to the board by Miss McSweeney, and carried by its members, said that an exception should be made in favour of the third faculty member for 1972-73.

The development report said the cost of that instructor, and equipment necessary for his two additional courses, would be around $33,000. But Harcourt said he thought the cost would range between $15 and $20 thousand.

In the development subcommittee's report, the department was urged "to seek ancillary sources of financial support to offset inherently high unit cost factors in this discipline". Miss McSweeney said the department, with the help of committed film students, probably would look for outside support.

"In my case we aren't fighting for expansion," Harcourt said. "We're fighting for survival."

Queen's Journal

Vol. XCIX No. 36 Tues., Jan. 18, 1972

Graduating Students

The ASUS would like to draw your attention to the fact that the following companies will be recruiting at Queen's in the coming session

METROPOLITAN LIFE
January 18th

ORTHO CHEMICALS
January 19th

CROWN LIFE
January 20th

CANADA LIFE
January 20th

WARNER-LAMBERT
January 20th
(prescreening deadline was December 10th)

TRAVELERS OF CANADA
January 20th

EXCELSIOR LIFE
January 24th

Old Fort HENRY (summer)
January 24th, 25th, 26th & 27th

CANADA LIFE (Actuarial)
January 26th

JONES HEWARD
January 27th

CANADIAN LABORATORY SUPPLIES
January 31st and February 1st

NORTH AMERICAN LIFE
February 1st

T. EATON COMPANY
February 1st
(prescreening deadline January 17th)

BANK OF MONTREAL
February 1st
(prescreening deadline was December 15th)

CANADA PACKERS
February 2nd

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION
February 7th & 8th

METROPOLITAN LIFE
February 8th

MANUFACTURERS LIFE
February 8th & 9th

BELL CANADA (summer)
February 14th & 15th

ROBERT SIMPSON MONTREAL LIMITED
February 16th & 17th

Students may sign up for interviews at the Career Planning and Placement Office 27 Queen's Crescent

CFRC licence is safe after all

Queen's radio station CFRC is optimistic that its licence will be renewed, station manager Andy Marshall has told The Journal.

The announcement comes a year and a half after the Canadian Radio and Television Commission decided that broadcasting licences could not be held by provincial agencies -- which would include Queen's.

The decision was largely aimed at Quebec, where the CRTC wanted to ensure federal control of French broadcasting networks.

Representations were made by the university to the CRTC this past year, on the grounds that a university was not the voice of a provincial government.

Federal secretary of state Gerard Pellettier announced in December that the government intended to reverse its order-in-council in the case of Queen's.

Dr. Edward J. Monahan, executive assistant to the principal of Queen's, said that a formal request for renewal was sent to the government during the Christmas holiday, and that the university hoped for a formal acknowledgement of it soon.

Mayor wants more cooperation

Kingston mayor E. Valorie Swain said last week in his annual inaugural address that he wants to overcome separation of the Queen's community from Kingston.

He made no specific recommendations, but proposed that an attempt be made to develop a real liaison, in a non-structured way, with the students of Queen's.

He referred to the relationship students have long had with Kingstonians, with students remaining relatively aloof from the city except that they rent rooms or houses from city residents, shop at Kingston stores, and upset some residents with loud record players or obscene cheers in parades.

Swain said he thought it might be fruitful for city officials to hear "any representations the student body may have with regard to the municipal administration", and lamented the fact that students are "in the community" but do not feel part of it.

He has written to AMS president Patrick Riley, in hopes that the student government might consider the matter.

Student goes to nursing session

Carol Craine, a third-year nursing science student, will represent Queen's at the upcoming Canadian Universities Nursing Students Association convention at the University of Windsor.

Students from every Canadian university which teaches nursing science will be present for the four-day discussion and lecture programme beginning February 3, Miss Craine said.

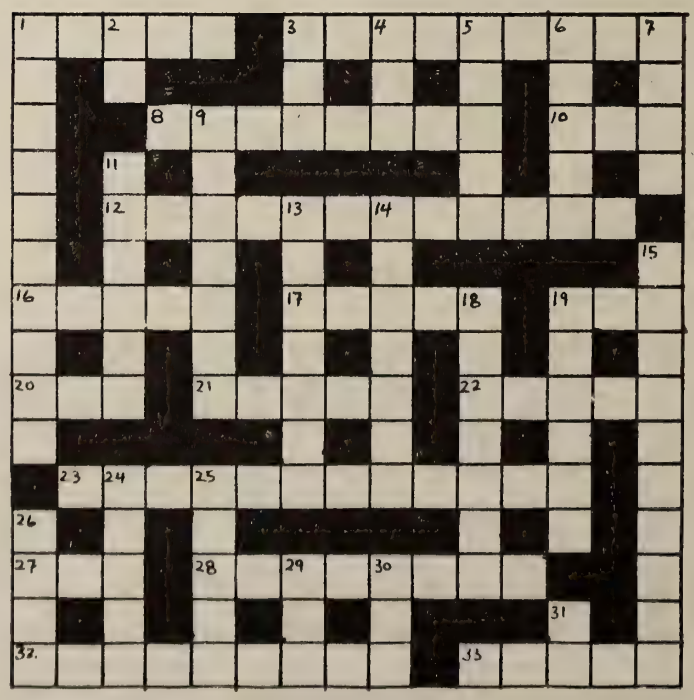
She is CUNSA representative for the Nursing Science Society at Queen's.

CUNSA was formed last year to bring together the students of different nursing programmes from all over Canada, for the purpose of integrating the various ideas and philosophies which have been developed in nursing.

This year's convention will be setting up a constitution for future years, as well as hosting speakers, among them Ontario health minister John Munro and Globe and Mail columnist Richard J. Needham.

Theatres
Odeon - Diamonds are Forever
Hyland - Dollars.

Bars
401 Inn - Joy
Pub - Muriel Day and the Night Squad



election

AMS: General election and referenda February 8,9,10; advance poll February 2. Teams of candidates (president and vice-president) must be nominated by January 28; nominations require signatures of 200 students and should be turned in to the AMS office in the Union.

GRAD STUDIES: Grad Society elections February 8,9, and 10.

NURSING: Nominations close January 27 for the nine positions open. Each nomination requires three signatures of nursing students. Voting will be held February 8 through 10.

Journal crossword puzzle of the week

ACROSS
1. Fruit of all evil.
3. Teases her hair.
8. Glorious.
10. Drunk when coffee palls.
12. Filling in forms for the university.
16. Land of Mao.
17. Sour citrus fruit.
19. Standing Room Only.
20. A nice place to visit, but you wouldn't want to live there.
21. Food from heaven.
22. Radiation therapy.
23. The very opposite of two left feet.
27. Also not.
28. Times of relaxation.
32. All over the north.
33. Ego and spirit.

DOWN
1. People who speak on CFRC.
2. Postscript.
3. Stinging insect.
4. Fish.
5. Fellow in uniform who steals Queen's girls.
6. Sapientia et doctrina stabilitas.
7. Sirius or Aldebaran.
9. Place where animals (such as policemen?) are raised.
11. Men of war.
13. Peace and quiet.
14. Of a lion, standing on tiptoe.
15. Make up and write the bylaws.
18. 19 down. (two words)
19. Scant.
24. Mindless little fellow.
25. More sick.
26. Sudden sharp noise.
29. One who believes in isms.
30. University of Alberta at Calgary.
31. Smallest United State.

AMS CONCERTS Presents:

JANUARY 30, HARTY ARENA

Edgar Winters White Trash

James Cotton Blues Band

Jake Holmes

and SPECIAL GUEST APPEARANCE

GEORGE CARLING

ONE SHOW: 8 p.m. TICKETS: $3.00 with student card
$4.00 general and at door

FEBRUARY 6, GRANT HALL

RITA COOLIDGE

& The Dixie Flyers

TWO SHOWS: 7 p.m., 9:30 p.m.

TICKETS: $2.50 with student card
$3.50 general and at door

SERIES SPECIAL Both Concerts for $4.50 for Students Only!

Student Tickets On Sale in John Orr Room in Union

General Tickets - House of Sounds, Tremblay's Record Store

NO RESERVED SEATS FOR EITHER CONCERT
BRING SOMETHING TO PARK YOUR ASS ON

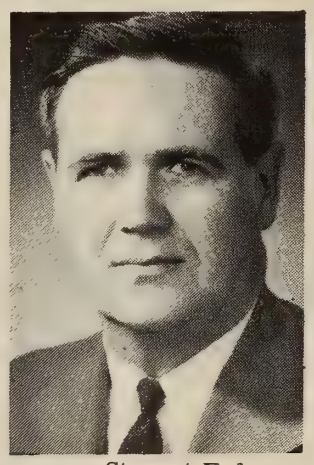
Queen's men head Kingston committees - education and planning

"The Padre", university chaplain Dr. A.M. Laverty, is the new chairman of the Frontenac County board of education.

A. M. Laverty

He has been a board member for 21 years, including his service on the now defunct City of Kingston board of education.

Laverty told the board of education, in his inaugural speech Wednesday, that economic stringency is the priority this year for education in Frontenac County.



"You are well aware how cost conscious we must be in the light of the department of education's stringent financial guidelines and of the weight of municipal taxation on private property in this county."

The board is responsible for seven high schools and 43 public schools in this county.

Dr. Stewart Fyfe, director of the institute of local government at Queen's, was elected chairman of the Kingston planning board Thursday.

"It will be nice now to see things from a different side," commented Fyfe, who was planning director for the city in the early 1950's.

He was a leading figure when Queen's was making early plans for the school of urban planning, which opened in 1970.

Stewart Fyfe

Call Birthright and keep your baby;

You should have your baby, two guest speakers said Wednesday night at the abortion referral centre at 165 University Avenue.

They were from Birthright, an organization whose purpose is to give assistance, companionship and information to unmarried pregnant girls.

The speakers told the gathering that a fetus is an individual human being, "a person with the inalienable right to live".

They pointed out that the after-effects on a woman who aborts are more severe than the effects of giving birth and becoming an unwed mother.

A film was shown, narrated by Dr. William Holden, an American gynaecologist; it indicated that, by the third month of pregnancy, a fetus is in fact human.

Holden pointed out that by the eighth day the sex of the foetus is determined; by the 21st day its heart is beating; by the 56th day all organs are present; and by the 64th day, the fetus has eyes and hair.

Holden also outlined various methods of abortion, showing the processes of vacuum curettage, saline injection, and caesarian abortion, and emphasizing the risks involved for the mother.

Two organizers of the 165 University information centre argued differently in the discussion which followed the presentation. Mary Ellen Marus, third-year arts, and Chuck Rubin, first-year applied science, said a girl should not be influenced in her decision, but should be allowed to make up her own mind according to her circumstances.

In either event, the organizers stressed, the centre will provide extensive assistance to students who want help. They have contacts with the Children's Aid Society, with Birthright, and with the Single Parents Association, for mothers who decide to have and keep their children.

For a woman who wants to abort, the centre will put her in touch with a gynaecologist and a psychiatrist, through the student health service, to find out whether her physical or mental health might be in danger if she were to give birth.

If the doctors decide that it would be, the case is presented to the therapeutic abortion committee at Kingston General Hospital, and the abortion may then be performed in Kingston -- totally paid for by OHSIP insurance.

Birthright is also willing to help pregnant women. The organization is committed to the idea that to abort a fetus is to commit murder; so they will help a future mother with companionship, prenatal classes, even monetary assistance if necessary.

Birthright can be reached at 546-LIFE (546-5433).

call Information Kingston for the facts

Information Kingston is a community information referral agency, staff member Maxine MacEachern told The Journal.

The agency, which was opened last Monday, received a great deal of criticism from such media as The Kingston Whig-Standard and George Webb's open-line radio programme on CKWS.

Miss MacEachern, one of the ten staff members, commented on this, "We're sick of the nonsense in the papers. This agency is not trying to monopolize information or act as a problem-solving service, but rather provide a clearing-house for information about Kingston."

The Kingston social planning council has also attacked Information Kingston, accusing the agency of duplicating their own service and wasting taxpayers' money.

But the social planning council applied for a grant under the local initiatives programme of the federal government in December, to provide the same service. The application was turned down.

Instead, a grant was given to Jim McManus, a former Queen's student. The other staff of Information Kingston was recruited through Manpower.

Located beside the A & P on Princess Street at Clergy, Information Kingston is open 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday to Friday and 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday. The phone number is 549-1073 or 549-1074.

Boo - Hoo Wants YOU FOR SNOWBALL'S VARIETY NIGHT ON ICE
AUDITIONS

SKITS
Wed. Jan. 19, 9:30 - 11 a.m., Arena
Friday, Jan. 21, 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Arena
Contact Debbie Pepler - 544-1468

MUSICALS
Wed. Jan. 19, 7:30 - 11 p.m. Kingston Hall, Room 201
Contact Colleen Greer, 544-9412

TAPES $3.98 - $5.98

ROCK - SOUL - BLUES - FOLK

We repair and buy and sell used tape. We have a complete line of 8-track stereo tape players for car and home as well as casset players. Service and installation.

MUNTZ CENTRE
61 Princess at King 548-7113 OPEN 10 p.m. Daily

THE BEST THINGS IN LIFE AREN'T FREE

Like her engagement ring. Not free, but not out of sight expensive either. From our wide and beautiful selection of diamonds, we'll show you different cuts, different sizes. We'll help you choose a diamond well within your budget. It will be a dazzling gem to make life even more beautiful.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET.
KINGSTON. ONTARIO
CANADA

Women still get a raw deal, panelists say

By Mary O'Rourke

"What's Happening How?" was the leading question at the panel discussion of the Status of Women Report sponsored by the Kingston Business and Professional Women's Club Wednesday night.

Introducing the debate on the Royal Commission's Report, moderator, Flora MacDonald, said, "1970 was the year of recommendations, 1971 was the year of recognition of the Report, and we believe 1972 will be the year of action upon those recommendations." She went on to outline the feminist traditions to which the Committee on the Status of Women was heir, and its own history and aims.

The Royal Commission on the Status of Women was set up February 16, 1967, to enquire into women's status and to ensure their equality in Canadian society. But as for implementation of the recommendations brought forth by the Report, Miss MacDonald described it as a "monumental process wending its weary way to legislation." The four panel members by and large echoed her impatience.

Mrs. Nancy Cooper, Women's Editor of the Kingston Whig-Standard, said that women are still getting a "raw deal" in society. "Speaking with a working women's bias," she said, "I know it's not a myth that women are a discriminated minority race." In the course of her job, she said, she has met many professional women who can mention examples of such discrimination, including the renowned Judy LaMarsh. "To get anywhere, women must be a thousand times better than men doing the same thing."

Although automation and the contraceptive pill have changed the trends, and brain not brawn is now the name of the game, Mrs. Cooper said a lifetime of conditioning is hard for women to cast off. She cited the mass media as the particular villains in this piece: "The mass media plays a large part in perpetrating the idea that women are brainless little sexpots who look good on a man's arm."

A classic example, said Mrs. Cooper, of such discrimination was the Whig's own Wednesday headline about "Citizen of the Year", Barbara Valberg: "Doctor's Quiet Wife Honoured by Jaycees."

"This implies that marrying Mr. Valberg was the best thing Barbara ever did, with no mention of her outstanding community work whatsoever!"

One-third of the Canadian labour force is made up of women, an increase of 62 per cent in the ten years from 1960 to 1970. Yet Mrs. Marion Buttle, office manager for the Kingston branch of the Department of Labour, reported that only 13 per cent are in the professional category, and 10 per cent in the managerial. If such figures suggest discrimination in employment, a large part of the blame lies with women themselves. "Women are reluctant to lay charges of discrimination on the job, even though investigations can be carried out without using any names." An audience-member suggested that this was also an example of what Psychology Today called 'The Compassion Trap': "Women don't want to embarrass their employers, who are men, because they've been trained never to do such terrible things to the superior sex! Mrs. Buttle encouraged women in the audience who felt they had a legitimate complaint to feel free to call on her.

Evelyn Flint, a staff member of a Queen's administrative office, and a publicity-committee member of the Kingston Day-Care Centre, described the importance of day care to the realization of women's equality. "This field," she said, "has been one of the more successful aspects of the Royal Commission's Report." The Commission recognized society's responsibility for day care, and stressed the importance of early education, recommending federal contributions to provincial building and maintenance of day care centres. Ontario has been particularly lucky in receiving a $10,000,000 grant from Labour Minister Thomas Wells for the construction of new centres in the province, she said.

Mrs. Flint outlined the operations of the Kingston Centre in detail, emphasizing the superiority of the staff and facilities available. Her only regret is that due to size limitations 100 applicants have been turned away since September.

Sister Helen Pickett, co-ordinator of adult education for the Archdiocese of Kingston, said that "Women have a great responsibility to become aware of their own potentiality, and must cast off the burden of lethargy".

"Woman is the powerhouse of love, and whatever hold a culture has on stability and permanence, it must be founded on her. Yet women are very diffident about accepting responsible positions." In conclusion Sister Pickett said, "Life is a mystery to be lived, not a problem to be solved, and to achieve true success, women must submerge themselves in it. From my own experience liking people and wanting to share in human enterprise with them is the greatest source of happiness."

A question period followed the discussion, eliciting votes of concern from two of the three male audience members. In conclusion Miss MacDonald said, "I hope no one thinks the Report is the last word. It's up to women to accept the responsibility and the challenge of pursuing their equality."

Planning board criticizes Queen's

Kingston planning board last week approved the latest piece of Queen's campus expansion, but served notice that in future it wants "very early involvement" with campus planning.

"What we want," board member Mrs. Mildred Grant said, "is a clear-cut, comprehensive plan in plenty of time to study it, to discuss it -- not something shoved under our nose at the last minute."

Alderman George Speal, another member of the board, said Queen's principal Dr. John J. Deutsch and campus planner Eric Thrift should be told that the board must be advised, at a very early stage, of any proposed development of the campus.

"And this must be the policy," Speal said, "whether the development is the university's, the Ontario Housing Corporation's or one proposed by students."

Deutsch, in commenting to The Journal on the board's statements, said the university has no quarrel with the city about getting the planning board involved in the university's plans at an early date.

In fact, he said, this has always been Queen's policy.

Commenting on the recent controversial approval of the 16-storey west campus apartment tower, Deutsch said the city had had the plans for about a year and a half and added that the planning board had agreed with them.

Queen's had applied for a by-law change at this late date, he said, after the planning was nearly complete, simply because the university and city officials had both overlooked the by-law which forbids the building of structures more than six storeys high in that area.

When the oversight was pointed out (by a university official, Deutsch said), Queen's applied for permission to go ahead with the tower.

That permission was granted last week.

- mossman

It looks like it was kind of fun Friday night at Wanderlust -- the semi-formal sponsored by the IRC and the WRC.

LADIES ELECTROLYSIS removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call:
Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair
HARRISON SALON 542-5595

New Hours
Your on-campus typing service will be open to handle all of your typing and duplicating needs at these new hours:
Monday - Thursday: 8:30 am - 8:00 pm
Friday: 8:30 am - 4:30 pm
The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

DEPARTMENT OF FILM STUDIES
A Weekend Of Mind-Blowing Films
Short Films From Europe & America
JAN. 21 & 22 8:00 P.M.
JAN. 23 3:00 - 5:00 P.M.
Students 75¢ Adults $1.50
Ellis Hall Auditorium
Tickets on Sale at Door

THEATRE 5 PRESENTATION
THE KNACK
Sponsored By
A.M.S. Campus Activities Comm.
SATURDAY, JANUARY 22
McARTHUR HALL 8:30 P.M.
ADMISSION $1.00
TICKETS IN UNION & AT THE DOOR

SNOWBALL
Button, Program Sticker
$1.00
UNION

Stunning Concert by Warsaw Quintet

by Ian Findlay

The Warsaw Quintet appeared in Dunning Hall last Wednesday and gave an absolutely stunning concert of three works for piano quintet (i.e. two violins, viola, cello and piano). The concert opened with Quintet No. 4 by Bocherini. This was given a technically faultless performance, and the players managed to convey the essential elegance of Bocherini's style.

The middle work on the program was a quintet written in 1952 by Grazyna Bacewicz, a Polish composer. Neo-classical in style, and somewhat similar to Bartok in harmonic and rhythmic technique, it seemed very attractive at first hearing, but it is hard to say how it would stand up to repeated exposure. The quintet performed it impeccably, with great unity of nuance and involvement in bringing out the emotional content.

After the intermission, the highlight of the evening was played-Dvorak's Opus 81. Little needs to be said about its performance-the musicians showed the same sense of close ensemble, phrasing and lyricism that characterized their playing in the first half. Particularly striking was the close-knit texture of the strings and piano.

There were one or two places where I would have preferred to hear the violins stronger in their accompaniment of the cello and viola solos, since at such places the piano accompaniment tended to predominate. But that is a matter of personal taste, since the balance was really first-rate throughout.

The audience applauded so enthusiastically that the Quintet responded with an encore, the Scherzo from the Shostakovich quintet. All in all, extreme musicality and unity of expression made this outstanding chamber music group a pleasure to hear.

CLASSIFIEDS

ANYONE INTERESTED in the dissemination of birth control information drop in to 165 University tonight.

FOR SALE: Lange Pros (ski boots). Size 8½-9. $100. Call 548-4712 at dinner time.

OCONTO, GIRLS' summer camp located near Kingston, requires female counsellors, minimum age 19, for July and August employment. All regular summer activities carried on. For staff application contact Mrs. C. Labbett, 3 Pine Forest Road, Toronto 12.

AUSTRALIA NEEDS teachers now! Sick of hassling smog, unemployment? Growing needs, all subject areas. For full info send $1 to Intl. Teachers Placement Bureau, PO Box 19007, Sacramento, California 95819.

PLAIN STERLING SILVER bracelet found in city park. Owner can have if identifies inscription. 542-1613.

FOR SALE: Raichle fibre jet ski boots, size 10, $60. 544-9853.

$20 REWARD if you can offer us the four-bedroom dwelling we take for next year. We want something close to campus. Apartment or house, nothing fancy. Phone Brian, John, Chris or Chuck at 542-6180.

PLEASE RETURN the questionnaire on page 186 of your Who's Where.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH: anyone interested in planning and participating in a summer tutorial-entertainment programme for elementary school age children in Lanark County (i.e. Lanark Village, 25 miles north of Smiths Falls) please contact Linda McLaren, 47 Beverley St., 546-4306.

IMPORTED FROM MEXICO: hammocks, peasant blouses, jewelry, pottery and other good stuff. Cheap prices. Call 546-5081.

THERE'S MORE to life than convenience. One or two people wanted to share large lakefront house on Wolfe Island. Easy transportation, cheap rent. Good country life for you and-or your dog.

BOO-HOO NEEDS HELP! Anyone wishing to help with either stage crew or set design for Snowball Variety Night on Ice please contact -- stage crew, Don McKay, 544-0199; set design, Barb Brown, 544-8790.

ROOMS AVAILABEL in Co-op immediately. Two half-doubles for girls only. Call Bev 544-3364.

ROOF over two single apartments, each with kitchen and bath, wanted for occupancy Sept. '72. Call Martha 549-0603 or Virginia 544-8166.

HAPPY day yesterday Carol you old sock---81

FESTIVAL FILM-MAKERS: please submit finished film to Hildi Adelhelm, 544-0175, or Doug Vallery, 542-3911, by Monday, January 24.

THE RED CROSS IS PEOPLE LIKE YOU HELPING PEOPLE LIKE YOU

Queen's Ski Club Sponsors
Tremblant Weekend
March 3rd, 4th, 5th
Tickets go on Sale Wed., Jan. 18th in Union at 7:00 p.m.
Cost $38.00 — includes bus, accommodation, tows & meals

For $3.00 You and your date can get sufficiently sophonsifide with all the wine you can drink and all the cheese you can eat.
Snowball Wine and Cheese Party
Friday, In Grant Hall
(after Variety Night)

icydays

Tuesday, January 18

2:30 to 4:30 p.m.: Legal Vistas presents Dr. A. R. M. Lower who will discuss "An Historian's View of the B.N.A. Act", in Theatres D & E, Macdonald Hall.

7:00 p.m.: Tickets for Tremblant Weekend sponsored by the Queen's Ski Club March 3-5th (cost $38.00 for bus, accommodations, tows, meals) on sale in Union.

7:30 p.m.: Meeting of the Queen's Astronomy Club in room 319 of Ellis Hall. A lecture "Ex-8:30 p.m.: traterrestrial Nuclear Physics" will be given by Dr. W. McLatchie. Refreshments will be served after the meeting.

8:30 p.m.: Drama Dept. Sponsors Theatre 1, from Montreal, in the Convocation Hall. Admission free.

9:00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies (European Classics) presents "A Kind of Loving" Schlesinger, 1962) with Alan Bates, in Ellis Hall Aud. Subscription is $5.00; students $3.00 for twelve films.

Wednesday, January 19

3:30 p.m.: Lecture by Professor Istvan Anhalt on the "Evolution of a Composer".

4:30 p.m.: Topics in Physics for Undergraduates - lecture by Prof. D. Atherton on "Magnetic Levitation for High Speed Ground Transport" in Stirling C.

4:30 p.m.: Queen's Biology Dept. presents Dr. G. A. Sacher of the Argonne National Laboratory, whose topic is "An Evolutionary Approach to the Biology of Aging". Room 111, Earl Hall. Tea served at 4:00 in Staff Lounge 3rd Floor.

8:00 p.m.: Sports' Films '72 in Wallace Hall. Smoker sponsored by Queen's Scuba, Ski, Skydiving and Autoracing Clubs. Admission free.

8:00 p.m.: The film "Salt of the Earth" will be shown in Stirling D. It is the story of a strike-locked New Mexico mining town, in which the company has complete control over the inhabitants. Then the men decide to fight for racial equality and the women to take a stand for equal status for themselves with the men. Admission $1.00. Presented by Men's and Women's Liberation.

Thursday, January 20

7:00 & 9:30 p.m.: Campus Movie of the Week is "Getting Straight", with Elliott Gould.

7:00 p.m.: Tickets on sale in the John Orr Room of the Union for the Queen's Ski Club trip to Whiteface on Saturday, Jan. 22. Cost is $13.00 for bus and tow. Bus leaves Victoria Hall 6:00 a.m.

7:30 p.m.: Introduction to Engineering Physics, a course orientation for first year Applied Science, in Stirling C.

7:30 p.m.: Medical Sciences Lecture in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

9:00 p.m.: Elizabeth Brewster and George Jonas will give a poetry reading, sponsored by Quarry and Dept. of English, in Agnes Etherington.

9:00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "Notorious", an American Screen Master (Hitchcock, 1946) with Ingrid Bergman, Cary Grant and Claude Rains, in Ellis Hall Aud. Subscription $5.00; students $3.00.

Friday, January 21

11:30 to 12:20 and 4:30 to 5:30: Dept. of Medicine sponsors "Films with Lunch" in the Etherington Hall Auditorium.

Saturday, January 22

7:30 p.m.: "Special Event" - Water Ballet '72, featuring Quebec YWCA team - Canadian Synchronized Swimming Champs, with waterpolo and diving exhibitions by Queen's teams.

Cabaret Looks Promising

With less than four weeks to opening night, Queen's Musical Theatre's production of Cabaret looks promising. Last year Queen's produced The Pyjama Game, which drew a standing ovation closing night from a sell-out crowd, despite a snowstorm so severe that part of the orchestra never did arrive for the performance.

This year, conductor Duane Bates feels that while rehearsals for Cabaret were slow getting under way, the talent that has emerged will result in an even better show this year.

Director Jill Hodkinson was drawn to Cabaret because it had more to it than the ordinary musical comedy that is completely predictable. The plot revolves around a cabaret during the pre-Nazi era in Berlin, and traces the reactions of the various characters as the political world increasingly encroaches on the make-believe world of the stage. The result is a somewhat bitter sweet but very sensitive musical.

Cabaret will be produced February 9 - 12 in KCVI auditorium, and should not be missed.

Toronto Dance Theatre

A Blend of Dance and Drama

By Sandy Naiman

Most people, who attended the program offered by the Toronto Dance Theatre, at Duncan MacArthur Auditorium, Friday evening, January 14, would have to agree that the four selections presented, were, to say the least, provocative.

"Study For A Song In The Distance", a rather acrobatic sequence, did not seem to me to be unified, although the randomness of the activities, and their apparent unrelatedness was interesting to watch. Since the Toronto Dance Theatre, as the name implies, seems to be trying to juxtapose dramatic principles onto the disciplines of movement and dance, I found myself trying to find meaning in the activities on stage and ultimately to fail in this quest.

Instead, I began to dissemble my preconceived notions about what I thought modern or creative dance should be and simply sit back and let the patterns, the sounds, the visual and audio sensations surround me.

Such a cleansing of the mind, a process which cannot be totally achieved in the space of five or ten minutes, allowed the "Untitled Solo . . . out there seems so strangely to be in me" to pass by without too many internal questions on my part such as, "why is this dancer moving inside a blanket?" and "are we supposed to be waiting for something to come out?" and "perhaps this is symbolic of prenatal development?". at any rate, it didn't really matter when a beautifully formed and incidentally, totally nude girl emerged from the blanket and slunk off stage, to finish the second selection.

"Songs From The Newfoundland Outports" is a pretty little number danced in long flowing dresses and was perhaps based on a legend of young love in a small village in the Maritimes. The movement was lyrical, although I felt that dancing in unison was avoided because the dancers were too sloppy to be able to execute such manouevers.

After a short intermission "Hot and Cold Heroes" was presented, against a huge "It's The Real Thing" sign, to the first and only strains of familiar rock music in the entire program.

Patricia Beatty, co-director of Toronto Dance Theatre and Keith Urban danced beautifully within a collage of camp, nostalgic sentimental people and activities, to create a picture of the trends that seem to be encompassing our crowded and paradoxical existence. This last number seemed to grab the near-filled auditorium and as the curtain came down, a thunderous applause, alas brought no curtain call, and the program ended.

Certain aspects of what Co-directors Beatty, Randazzo and Earle, seem to be trying to do came across particularly well in the last number. Dancing here is not just pretty to watch but when placed within a context of properties and preoccupations, can make a statement in a non-verbal and dynamic way, if indeed a statement is meant to be made. At any rate, the evening was unusual and for one spectator I met, "impossible to describe in words". I can only suggest that you take the opportunity to see this company the next time you are in Toronto, and come to your own conclusions.

Water Ballet 1972

Don't miss this exciting evening

— Beautiful girls
— Spectacular routines
— Diving and Waterpolo exhibitions

Featuring Canadian Champions
From Quebec and Queen's Intercollegiate Teams

Jan. 22, 7:30 p.m.
Students 50¢

Learn Classical, Folk and/or Accoustie Guitar
WILL O'HARA
NOTE CORRECTED
TELEPHONE NUMBER
544-0265

CAESAR'S PALACE
Commerce Formal

SATURDAY FEBRUARY 12 8:30 - 1:00

BAND: THE DIPLOMATS
BUFFET
OPEN TO ALL FACULTIES

At The Round Table
$9/couple
Dark Suit or Black Tie

High School
Conference on
The Environment

Anyone interested in helping to organize a conference on the environment for 500 high school students from across Ontario in June is requested to leave his name in the AMS Office, Students' Union.

the Woman's page

Partial book review

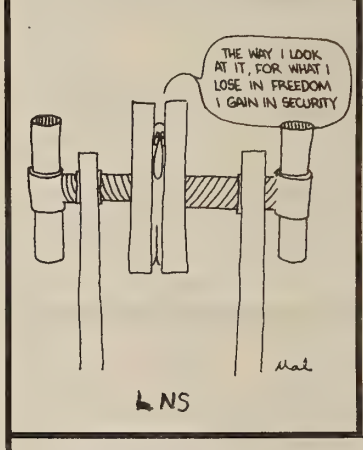
Sexual Politics

author: Kate Millett

Sexual Politics is a brilliant piece of work. Considering the highly charged emotionality surrounding her subject - the nature of patriarchy and the subjection of women - Kate Millett has managed to write a clear and objective criticism of the conservative forces that strive to maintain the domination of women. Knowing as much as she does, historically, psychologically, anthropologically, and literarily, about the exploitation and cultural and economic humiliation of women since the dawn of the patriarchal society, one would not blame her if she became inscensed at times, or even extremely angry. But she maintains her objectivity, only allowing the occasional subtle dig to slip past.

The description "objective", however, is not to imply the book is dull. It certainly is not; but is a fascinating unmasking of several "theories" based in "biology" (of a distinctly suspect and expedient nature) on the "natural state of women." Her dissections of Freud's basic confusions and sssumptions is most amusing, her delineation of his sexism shows that because he began from chauvinistic attitudes, he built absurd and contradictory psychoanalytic theories which, unfortunately, have been used as the basis of much of this century's psychoanalysis and psychology. It is very convenient for male supremists to have feminist behaviour defined as "unnatural", "perverse", or "pathological", even if such definitions are not founded in fact.

Freud, true to his Victorian times, began with certain sexist attitudes and then proceeded to "prove" them. His most complex, and ridiculous theory regarding female feelings of inferiority is destroyed by Millet as follows: "Freud believed he had found the key to feminine experience – in that moment when girls discover they are "castrated" - a momentous discovery which girls are destined to make." She quotes Freud as saying, "They notice the penis of a brother or playmate, strikingly visible and of large proportions, at once recognize it as the superior counterpart of their own and inconspicuous organ, and from that time forward fall a victim to envy for the penis." Millett notes, "There are several unexplained assumptions here: why is the girl instantly struck by the proposition that bigger is better? Might she just as easily ... imagine the penis as an excrescence and take her own body as norm? ,,, Secondly, the superiority of this "superior counterpart", which the girl is said to "recognize at once" in the penis, is assumed to relate to the autoerotic satisfactions of childhood; but here again the child's experience provides no support for such an assumption ... It is never explained how the girl makes the logical jump from the sight of bathing or urination to knowledge that the boy masturbates with this novel article ... It would seem that Freud has managed by this highly unlikely hypothesis to assume that young females negate the validity, and even, to some extent, the existence, of female characteristics altogether. Surely the first thing all children must notice is that mother has breasts, while father has none ..." Although she does not say it, Millett implies that it is as logical for females to think of males as being mutilated as it is for them to think of themselves as being castrated. But somehow Freud never saw his "theory" in that light.



Freud admitted he knew little about femininity, but proceeded to take his perogative and prove he knew little about the subject in subsequent lectures and writings. Upon these theories, which neglected any forces of conditioning or generalized social attitudes, was built an anti-feminist, reactionary psychoanalytic era which confined women to the home because it was "in their nature," and therefore good for them. Women were assumed to be "naturally" pacific, and able to spread a little benevolence in a world where men were condemned by "nature" to the battlefield. Millett consistently shows these theories for the fallicies they are.

Letter from home

Hi,

What a day!!! Kept telling your Father there was a burning smell in the car. He kept insisting there was nothing wrong. I asked if he had the emergency brake on and he insisted one could NOT drive our car with it on. I know one can. Anyway today I had a millllllion errands to do and set forth. I had a terrible time getting out of the drive. I could back but not go forward. Decided it was a poor shovelling job of snow causing trouble and shovelled and suddenly away I went. First stop sign I couldn't go forward again so again decided wheels must be spinning and reversed and after reversing enough times suddenly went again. This kept on and on. One of my ports of call was outside Police station and I wondered what the Police would make of me driving backwards around their lot but thank God they did not look out of their window. Finally away I went again. By the time I stopped to make the left turn at Handy Andys I had had enough nonsense and drove in there backwards and the man informed me that I should never drive with the emerge... that doing so I had frozen it. I told him ... NEVER drove with the emergency on b... husband did and please don't blame me. ... all over three more times IIIIII shoul... with it on until I snarled that I would rat... horse anyway and stomped home leavi... thing to be thawed. When I collected it ... man gave me a lecture on driving ... emergency on because it freezes in wi... asked him please to not tell me but ... husband who says the car will not m... emergency is on. Then the man told m... nonsense and I told him would he kin... right person that because I knew all... nonsense but I was damned if I cou... husband to believe me. If you have ... shopping driving backwards I can tell ... not do much for your peace of mind or yo...

Bet Walker gave birth to a five pou...

"male" vs. "female"

I won't push the theory, but it may be that every ... chauvinist, somewhere along the line, has realized ... greater or lesser degree that women have the ability ... both "female" and "male" (in the popular ... meanings: that is, passive and submissive ... aggressive and dominant) in that they have the ... with which to bear children, and the intellects with ... to bear meaningful jobs, while men can only be "... Having ascertained this, the chauvinists must ... women to be as monovocational as men are by d... women out of the intellectual sphere. It is a theory n... fanciful than D. H. Lawrence's and Henry Mi... fixations on the "primitive woman" as the "real fem... In fact, it may have a great deal more validity, as w... have proved that they have intellectual as we...

Wed to home, the gifted falter at 40

DETROIT - She graduated from the University of Michigan with distinction. She was creative and capable, and she made a career out of getting married and raising children.

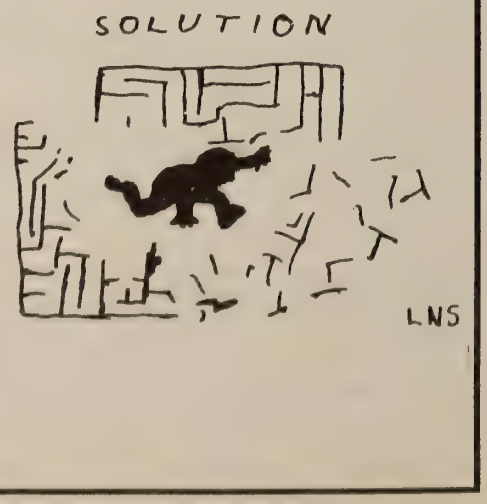
Today, 20 years later, her self-esteem is faltering. She's frequently lonely and uncertain about who she is and what she wants.

She's among 81 intellectually gifted middle-aged women studied by University of Michigan psychologist Judith Birnbaum in an effort to find out how satisfying homemaking is - 20 years after college - and how housewives differ from married or single professional women.

Dr. Birnbaum interviewed 29 women who graduated with distinction and who had not worked since their children were born, 25 faculty women at the university who were also wives and mothers, and 27 single faculty women. No widows or divorcees were included in the study.

In general, Dr. Birnbaum found, the homemakers had the happiest memories of life as teenagers and young adults. They dated often, were friendly and compliant, married upwardly mobile successful men and devoted themselves exclusively to their families.

The professional women, on the other hand, were plagued by self-doubt as teenagers and young adults.



The married professional women, as a group now think of themselves generally as unconventional and maintain egalitarian marriages, but they still need to think of their husbands as more intelligent and success... themselves.

They consider t... mothers than the ho... they find a great dea... their own careers.

The unmarried pro... the study, as teenager... felt homely and inferio... idea of marriage and ... own achievements ins...

The differences amo... substantial. Only 1... homemakers, for exa... self-esteem, while 5... married and single c... themselves highly.

Sixty-six percent o... admitted feeling uncer...

I'm a person in m...

There has been much said against the practice of women having to be defined in terms of their marital status, eg. Miss or Mrs., and particularly in terms of their husbands, eg., Mrs. John Doe. The arguement is that this practice implies that a woman has no worth aside from the man to whom she is married. But, when one thinks about it, if a woman decides to retain her own last name she is actually retaining her father's name, which, in effect, defines her in terms of another male. (I can't explain why women are considered more their father's daughters than men are considered their father's sons. It may simply be a function of the dependency ... built up in patri... most obvious s... women to choos... independently o... cause severe bu... problems. (But ... go through va... hassles re thin... when they mar... names.)

I would rathe... must, at least in... chosen, not som... assigned, ie., a ... of course, that ... choose, or not ... and the right to ...

compiled by Leslie Kaye

d daughter Patricia Anne. Seeing the Dr. thought Bet was beyond child bearing he did not fine out what was wrong with her until she was five months pregnannt and then the child was brought on early so Bet only knowingly carried her two months. The baby is fine. I gather Bet never gained any weight hence she did not show she was pregnant and I suppose this helped to confuse the Dr. who sounds a bit ding-a-lingish anyway but then I am slowly deciding all doctors are idiots. I think I shall take my problems to some dear old fish wife who deals in herbs and probably would be treated as well.

I think I hate men today and most doctors are men hence the nasty remarks about doctors but they really are germless at times.

Gotta go. Thank God we are going to see those Checkoslovak dancers. I can put my feet up and rest.

Love,
Me.

iological ability, while the "primitive woman" idea has o basis in fact.

While men never can bear children, they could have hem in that they could enter the sphere of parenthood at a evel equal to women's, the same way as women are ntering the sphere of the intellect of men's terms. The dea does not seem to me to be very radical, but many nen seem to be incapable of being fathers beyond the here sexual act required, and that takes very little effort t all. One can only hope that the famous "male ego" will ecome more flexibile in the future, and realize that being complete human being, rather than simply "male", is nuch more fulfilling. Men who stereotype women trap nemselves in their own typology. It must get lonely at mes.

'homas
y News)

they are s better s do, and faction in women in ng adults,

jected the d on their oups were t of the rted high t of the nen rated

nemakers who they are or what they want. Only 36 percent of the married and 42 percent of the single professionals said they often felt this way.

Most of the homemakers (72 percent) and most of the single women (73 percent) said they felt lonely, at least once in a while. Only 28 percent of the married professionals, on the other hand, said they ever felt lonely.

Forty percent of the homemakers-compared to 12 percent of the married and 11 percent of the single career women - said they had fewer friends than they wanted.

Although only half as many homemakers as career women reported themselves overweight, 61 percent of the homemakers considered themselves "not very attractive" to men. Only 12 percent of the married professionals felt this way.

Why I want a wife

I belong to that classification of people known as wives. I am a wife. And, not altogether incidentally, I am a mother.

Not too long ago a male friend of mine appeared on the scene from the Midwest fresh from a recent divorce. He had one child, who is, of course, with his ex-wife. As I thought about him while I was ironing one evening, it suddenly occurred to me that I, too, would like to have a wife. Why do I want a wife?

I would like to go back to school so that I can become economically independent, support myself and, if need be, support those dependent upon me. I want a wife who will work and send me to school. And while I am going to school I want a wife to take care of my children. I want a wife to keep track of the children's doctor and dentist appointments. And to keep track of mine too. I want a wife to make sure my children eat properly and are kept clean. I want a wife who will wash the children's clothes and keep them mended.

I want a wife who will be a good attendant to my children, arrange for their schooling, make sure that they have an adequate social life with their peers, take them to the park, the zoo, etc. I want a wife who takes care of the children when they are sick, a wife who arranges to be around when the children need special care, because of course, I can not miss classes at school. My wife must arrange to lose time at work and not lose the job. It may mean a small cut in my wife's income from time to time, but I guess I can tolerate that. Needless to say my wife will arrange and pay for the care of the children while my wife is working.

I want a wife who will take care of MY physical needs. I want a wife who will keep my house clean. A wife who will pick up after me. I want a wife who will keep my clothes clean, ironed, mended, replaced when need be, and who will see to it that my personal things are kept in their proper place so that I can find what I need the minute I need it. I want a wife who cooks the meals, a wife who is a GOOD cook. I want a wife who will plan the menus, do the necessary grocery shopping, prepare the meals, serve them pleasantly, and then do the cleaning up while I do my studying. I want a wife who will care for me when I am sick and sympathize with my pain and loss of time from school. I want a wife to go along when our family takes a vacation so that someone can continue to care for me and my children when I need a rest and change of scene.

I want a wife who will not bother me with rambling complaints about a wife's duties. But I want a wife who will listen to me when I feel the need to explain a rather difficult point I have come across in my course of studies. And I want a wife who will type my papers for me when I have written them.

I want a wife who will take care of the details of my social life. When my wife and I are invited out by my friends, I want a wife who will take care of the babysitting arrangements. When I meet people at school that I like and want to entertain, I want a wife who will have the house clean, will prepare a special meal, serve it to me and my friends, and not interrupt when I talk about the things that interest me and my friends. I want a wife who will have arranged that the children are fed and ready for bed before my guests arrive so that the children do not bother us. I want a wife who takes care of the needs of my guests so that they feel comfortable, who makes sure that they have an ashtray, and that they are passed the hors d'ouevres, that they are offered a second helping of the food, that their wine glasses are replenished when necessary, that their coffee is served to them as they like it. And I want a wife who knows that sometimes I need a night out by myself.

I want a wife who is sensitive to my sexual needs, a wife who makes love passionately and eagerly when I feel like it, and a wife who makes sure that I am satisfied. And, of course, I want a wife who will not demand sexual attention when I am not in the mood for it.

I want a wife who assumes the complete responsibility for birth control, because I do not want any more children. I want a wife who will remain sexually faithful to me so that I do not have to clutter up my intellectual life with jealousies. And I want a wife who understands that MY sexual needs may entail more than strict adherence to monogamy. I must, after all, be able to relate to people as fully as possible.

If, by chance, I find another person more suitable as a wife than the wife I already have, I want the liberty to replace my present wife with another one. Naturally I will expect a fresh new life; my wife will take the children and be solely responsible for them so that I am left free.

When I am through with school, and have acquired a job, I want my wife to quit working and remain at home so that my wife can more fully and completely take care of a wife's duties.

My God, who WOULDN'T want a wife?

own right

hat has been ocietys.) The would be for e completely but this may ic processing men have to ureaucratic credit cards change their myself, if I a man I had us arbitrarily

his assumes,
the right to ny husband, mically and

legally autonomous from him. (But not emotionally. I am at least that old fashioned.) This is not the case, generally, in a society where, through marriage, a woman ceases to be economically independent. At present, women must have their husbands sign their credit cards, even they (the women) are supporting their husbands, even if the women have better credit ratings than their husbands.

But the women must bring up children, and so move out of the work world, or so the arguement goes. This is not a necessity of nature, as members of either sex can be parents, and a woman need not be removed from the economic sphere all that long just to bear a child. Child-bearing, unfortunately, is equated with childrearing, a confusion which has removed many fathers from the joy of their children. Neither sex is more prepared for parenthood than the other, a fact which makes parenthood one of the most difficult of avocations. Because pre-industrial history has shown that the burden of parenthood was on women, with them it has remained. Surely preindustrial attitudes are obsolete, or is the cultural lag so long as to make totally outmoded values viable today?

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 36
Tuesday, January 18, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters:

Development report

Dear Editors:

In your article of the Journal of January 11th on the Report of the Sub-committee on Development in the Faculty of Arts and Science you suggest that my preface requests comments only from "members of faculty" and "makes no mention of asking for student opinions".

I should like to make it perfectly clear that in wording the preface I had no such implication in mind. The status of the report is that it is a formal report to the Faculty Board of the Faculty from a sub-committee of its Committee of Departments.

As such it was initially distributed to all members of the Faculty Board, including each of its 28 student members, with the request for their comments. The formal constitutional body for the Faculty of Arts and Science is the Faculty Board.

In using the term "members of Faculty" in my preface I was careful to capitalize the term "Faculty" (changed in your quotation to an uncapitalized form) to indicate that it referred to all members of the Faculty Board in the expectation that its student members would participate fully in these deliberations.

I hope that this letter will remove any misunderstanding that might be created by the suggestion in your article that student comments on this report are not sought. We would welcome student comments.

-R.L. Watts
(Dean of Arts & Science)

Razor's Edge

Dear Editors:

Jesse Winchester came to the Razor's Edge. But did you notice the price? It's ridiculous to expect students to pay $2.50 to spend an evening in a coffee house even if it's to see someone as celebrated as Winchester.

If the Razor's Edge was in Yorkville maybe it could charge two or three dollars a head and get away with it. But Princess Street is no Yorkville Road by any stretch of the imagination and for the management of the The Edge to charge such exorbitant prices is simply maddening.

Sure I understand that Jesse Winchester has to be paid and sure I understand that since The Edge doesn't draw such large crowds the admission prices have to make up for it. But, for God's sake, if the prices have to go up that high, they just shouldn't have people like Winchester.

Some people, it may not have occurred to the management, like to go to coffee houses to talk, to relax, to hustle chicks, to write poetry, or whatever, and they don't want to have to pay a fortune to do it.

It would be better to stick to local people and have a low admission charge, or even pipe in music and have no admission charge (just rake in profits off 35 cent cups of tea) than to maintain this ridiculous state of affairs. I suggest the people who run The Edge go down to St. Denis in Montreal to get some tips on how to run a coffee house.

-phil miller

Student Typing Service

Dear Editors:

Being one who tries not to let life's little hassles get her down, I submit this letter not as a complaint, but as a warning. I relate a hassle of mine so that others may avoid same.

On the final Friday of last term (!) I handed in an essay to the Student Typing Service to be typed for the following Wednesday. On that day, with my bus ticket for home in hand, I picked it up, paid four fifty for it and began to proofread.

I began to freak when I noticed such things as "thet" "discrimate", "egscentric", "intenalize", "dregree", "sence", "hus", "ocial", "incoguence" and finished when over the thirteen pages, I found eighty three typing errors. (as many as sixteen on a page).

These mistakes are not explainable by the difficulty with jargon or handwriting. They can be noted by anyone with a working knowledge of the English language.

Further, three of the thirteen pages had margins of the requested width, the rest varied at random. There were scratched-out and typed-over words...

I of course do not claim that this quality of work characterizes all that of the Typing Service. I simply would like to point out the unreliability of the work especially to those who, like myself, do not allow in their timing for essays to be retyped.

Nancy Poole

PS. I thank my friend Chris Crombie for bringing me down by retyping the essay flawlessly on that afternoon.

Bradley isn't news

Dear Editors:

The new year's first edition of the Journal greeted me with a headline proclaiming in hosannas that "Victor Bradley Seeks AMS Presidency." By this headline and its accompanying article and pictures the Journal has lost all chance of impartiality in the forthcoming AMS election.

In doing so, you, the editors, have seriously breached editorial ethics. The fact that Mr. Bradley and Miss Cousins were the first team to announce their candidacy is no reason whatsoever to accord the event front page status and, in all likelihood, the edge over all other candidates with such early notoriety and a chance to present their platform ahead of all others.

After all, it is over two weeks before nominations close. No such individual attention has ever been given to an AMS presidential candidate before.

Your article could indeed serve to discourage potential candidates: 1) Bradley already has campus-wide publicity for his face and platform. 2) Other politically active students say they have no interest in the job (Messers Richardson, Gannage, and Nordheimer). Do you imply that they now consider their presidential chances small or that they consider "his strong personality has been necessary for the management of the large business which the AMS has become." 3) Indeed, Mr. Bradley already seems to be picking his inner council (Gary Gannage is rumoured to be Bradley's choice for external affairs commissioner). What confidence!

Is this what you are trying to do? I hope not. But this extraordinary article indicates that the editors have more than a passive interest in this election.

Last term I withstood self-righteous editorials, faulty reporting, and a continued artistic use of white space. But I expect news on the front page. Victor Bradley's candidacy is hardly news.

John Blakney

Prophetic

Dear Editors:

The front page of the last issue of the Journal, Tues., Jan. 11, 1972, indicates that you can predict my future. If you have any other interesting tidbits, please let me know.

Gary Gannage

Letters to the Editors (one of whom is a woman (for those who persist in addressing them "Dear Sirs") should be not longer than three pages, double spaced, 56 characters to the line, typed (or two pages handwritten).
Letters longer than that may be condensed before they are run, and illegible letters may not run at all.

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman.
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Special thanks this week to news staff Jane Douglas and Bob Mutrie, and to Elsbeth Nickle who typed.

Civil war in Philippines

Onward Christian Soldier

Thousands of Philippine Moslems have been slaughtered in a secret Christian Crusade which is developing into a civil war. Investigators instructed by President Marcos to find out who started the bushfire fighting say privately that senior government officials are paying a macabre secret society to kill thousands of Moslems and drive them off their ancestral homelands. Augusto Encarnacion, leader of the investigating team, said: "We know the governor of the province (Mindanao Island) asked these people to come here and help him fight the Moslems. Other officials have also been paying them."

Moslem politicans are calling for the secession of the Moslem south from the republic. Others are vainly appealing for restraint and for United Nations intervention. Prof. Ibrahim Ismael, a leading Philippine scholar, writing to the United Nations, claimed: "We have pictures of victims whose eyes were plucked out, ears cut off and bodies mutilated. Pregnant women have been killed and their bellies slashed. Spiritual leaders were killed and their organs cut off and placed in their mouths.

"We have living children whose arms and legs and ears were cut off to ensure that (the) future generation of Moslems will be a generation of freaks."

The crusade against the old Moslem tribes who have inhabited the southern islands since the 16th century is being led by a society popularly called The Rats. Its operations were revealed by a man who said he left the movement after sickening of its atrocities. "We were paid according to the number of ears and eyes we collected from the Moslems we had killed. It is the ambition of The Rats to convert every Moslem to Christianity," he said. "If they refuse to be converted they must be killed."

The Moslems suspect the predominantly Christian government forces are in cahoots with The Rats. Moreover, they allege the crusade has the tacit support of the Catholic Church. Militant priests in Mindanao say The Rats are merely "protecting" Christian settlers.

"The Rats are inspired by a sense of mission," said Father Rodolfo Galenzoga of Kolambugan Town. "With the right kind of guidance I think they can be very good."

Stories reminiscent of the days of the Spanish conquistadors of the Philippines are rampant. In Cotabato City, 15 Moslems claim they have been forced to become Christians on pain of death. Mayor Bagorna Sanggacala of Matungao claims he has only been allowed to remain a Moslem after paying hefty "bribes" to the Rat Society.

Even the government's closest Moslem allies are resigned to wholesale war and secession. A close confidant and friend of President Marcos, Moslem congressman Ali Dimaporo, said: "We invited our Christian brothers to come here. Now they outnumber us. They want to put us in reserves like Red Indians. We must fight. We are banning together to fight. Mindanao is our last stand. We have nowhere else to go."

excerpts from an article by Garth Alexander

(The Toronto Star)

The human side of US involvement in Vietnam

by Nicholas von Hoffman

President Richard Nixon will be going into this election campaign with the loss of one worker. Probably Nixon doesn't care, although in 1960 when Lloyd Jay Kantor was 12 years old, he licked envelopes for him. In 1967 he spent his own money having Nixon campaign buttons made up.

During the '68 campaign the young man from Mount Vernon, N.Y., who was studying to be a teacher, worked even harder.

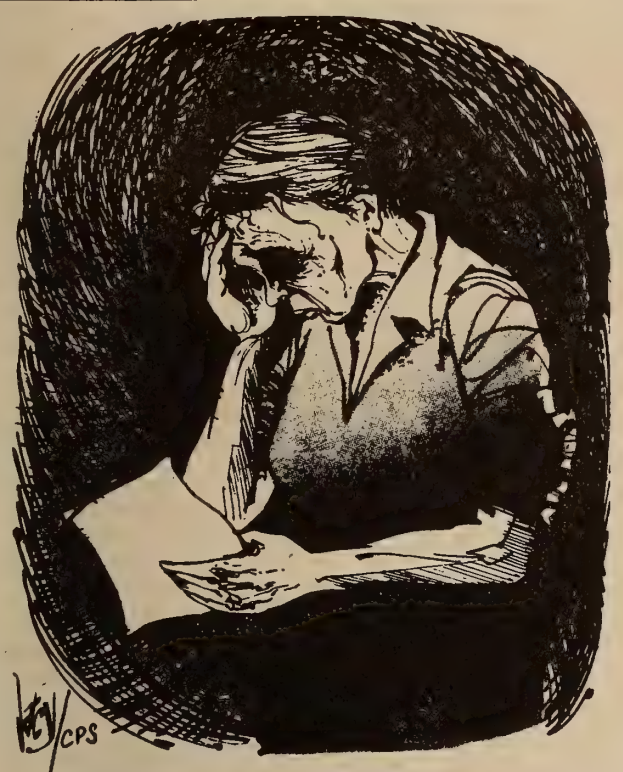
He won't be doing it this time, but that could hardly matter to Nixon because in the meantime Kantor has lost both feet, both hands, one eye and part of his hearing, and, although he's done very well mastering the prosthetic devices on the remnants of his limbs, he might spoil the campaign image.

In September, while he was still in the veterans' hospital, Kantor wrote the president a letter, wrote it on his old "Nixon for President — '68" stationery, stationery that has Kantor's name on it too. He never got an answer. When you read it you'll know why.

"Dear Mr. President:

"As I write this letter I think back to September, 1967. At that time I organized one of the first Students for Nixon Clubs in the country, the Hunter College Students for Nixon in New York city. I was filled with idealism about your plans for a better America. I was convinced that you would end the terrible war in Viet Nam and reunite the people of America. Although we received little help from the Nixon for President Committee in Washington, we worked hard and built up our organization.

"We campaigned throughout the New York area and became one of the largest clubs on the Hunter campus. We constantly faced hostility and harassment. We were called warmongers and Fascists. We were told that Nixon wouldn't and couldn't bring about an early end to the Viet Nam war. After the convention we continued to work hard and were elated when the results were in. That was the first election I was able to vote in, and I considered it an honor to cast my vote for a man who . . . had a plan to end the war and bring about a better life for us.



"Afterwards people on the campus would come up to me and ask, 'When is Nixon going to end the war?' My answer was always the same: 'Give him a chance.' The war continued. You announced that Vietnamization was working well. A year after your inauguration, I received my draft notice, was inducted into the army and less than five months later I was fighting in the jungles of Viet Nam.

"In the fall of 1970 I read in my hometown newspaper that the president and vice-president felt that the war was no longer an issue. It was at this point that I realized how insensitive you really were. As long as one American was risking death in Viet Nam, the war was certainly an issue. My opinion of your actions was representative of every soldier I came in contact with. I even had guilt feelings because I had worked for your election so vigorously.

"In November, 1970, I was badly wounded and suffered the loss of parts of all four limbs and an eye. This was the better life I had worked so hard for. This was what Nixon's America was all about.

"The war still goes on Mr. President. I think you owe me and every other American an explanation. I would like to know if you feel that American lives are worth so little that they should be sacrificed for the corrupt, undemocratic dictatorship ruling South Viet Nam. Think about it when you go to sleep tonight.

"Sincerely,
Lloyd Jay Kantor."

'We regret to inform you your son was among the lowest casualty count in recent months'

Portrait of the Artist as a Young Moo-Cow by James Juice

Earliest Childhood

Grbnx glxnt bowagnx grlmn gwmb gwiggle awa bwix gwng:
"Wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa
wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa"

Memories

Once upon a summer day came a brown woof-dog wandering along the garden path, and this brown woof-dog met a wee nicens named Baby Tictoc...

His father told him that story. He was drunk at the time.
"Happy dancing round a pickle,
Pick a dill in Piccadilly,
Up and down around a steeple,
With a hey nonny nonny . . ."

Uncle Alfred sang that song. That was Uncle Alfred's song, until the men in white came and took him away.

He was Baby Tictoc. They let him visit Uncle Alfred on alternate Thursdays when he wasn't frothing at the mouth...He lived in a pretty place.

His mother played the banjo, and he sang:
"Wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa
Wa wa wa wa wa wa wa wa"

Uncle Carl and Dentyne used to watch him dance. They clapped their hands. They weren't terrible co-ordinated. Uncle Carl was much older than Dentyne, but Dentyne was older than Baby tictoc, and Baby Tictoc was younger than Betty Bryne, who didn't even know the moocow. And ice cream has no bones and snakes have no armpits.

-O, Stephen has an armpit, don't you, Stephen? said his mother.

-Did you know that stocks have had a general rise of .5? replied his father.

Stephen hid under the table. Maybe if he'd stayed there, this novel wouldn't have been written.

—(G.P.W. for WC)

the Dormouse

by alan broadbent

About three months ago I made an application to the federal government asking for an extension of the fall season. I just received word this past week that I have been granted this extension.

In a letter from the Office of the Secretary of State, it was indicated to me that the Cabinet had agreed that they had slated winter too early this year, and that it would be postponed indefinitely.

The reason that I had wanted winter put off is that I can't stand the cold weather. Actually, it isn't so much the cold that I can't stand, but the snow. I am in the habit of walking with my feet very close to the ground, and I find that fallen snow, and particularly hunks of ice, prohibit me from my daily rounds.

Thus, I felt gratified that the government was postponing winter and its accompanying weather. They hinted that perhaps there would be some light snowfall, but nothing too severe.

In the midst of my dance of gratitude, however, I was informed that the government had encountered their own problems, which in addition to my problems had hastened them to their decision.

First, there was a problem in the administration of the Kingston Area Ice Office, the group responsible for the covering of Lake Ontario with the sheet of ice we see each year. The old iceman who has been working in this area for the past 40 years quit just this past month to take employment with the new Teron waterfront project, and he took his icy secrets with him. The government has as yet been unable to find a replacement who can do the job, and want to take their time in finding the right man. In the meantime, the Teron people have begun to plant palm trees near the hotel site.

The second government reason is that they have just started their winter works program, much of it being administered under the Local Initiatives Program (LIP). Now, LIP is a new, instant bureaucracy, similiar to the Opportunities For Youth Program (OFY) which they ran in the summer. Like the summer program, LIP was started very late and the government anticipated some of the same problems in getting the thing going. So they decided to delay winter to the time when their fledgling bureaucracy was well back in its chair. From what happened to the summer program, one might assume that things will be set in about three months or so.

The third reason for the government to want to delay winter is because of the impending federal election. There are two factors at work here. First, they know that the Canadian winter is for many a depressing thing, and that when it is over many are anxious for a change. This would not put the government in a good position, for they don't want a change in government. The second factor is that the Liberals realize that one of their most potent campaign assets is the Prime Minister swimming and diving. They know that he would be loathe to do this sort of thing during the winter, and they know that the more of it he does, the better it will be for the Party. So what they want to do is to delay winter until after the election, until perhaps August or September.

There are those among us, notably the snowmobilers, who will decry this decision by the government. They will comment that this is yet another arrogant gesture by Mr. Trudeau, yet another example of his "holier-than-thou" attitude.

The Progressive Conservatives, featuring Mr. Diefenbaker from Northern Saskatchewan, will wonder at the political effect of this move. The NDP will surely see it as yet another Liberal concession to the forces of continentalism, an attempt to meld the climatic variances of North America.

For my part, I applaud the courage of the government, and I thank them that for the first time in some years I will once again be able to move about without those dastardly seasonal pedestrian impediments.

THE WRC: THE OTHER SIDE

letter to the editor:

With a realization that there has been perhaps too much written concerning the WRC and co-ed residence, I nonetheless feel obliged to answer in some part the WRC's letter of Jan. 14.

Ignoring for the moment the omissions and half-truths concerning the ASUS formal. I shall concentrate on co-ed.

The complexities of which the letter speaks were indeed many, but most were of the WRC's own making. The co-ed committee "chose to investigate . . . a co-ed arrangement whereby half of Vic Hall would be integrated with the women so displaced . . . being accommodated in Morris." This scheme allowed as much integration on Leonard field as the residents wished. The plan also necessiated modification of washrooms in Morris at the cost of $2000 per washroom.

BACKGROUND TO CO-ED

The entire issue of coed has been floating around Queen's since 1969 and it has yet to be resolved. Interestingly enough, it was the IRC that opposed the 1969 coed plan (Integration of Gordon-Brockington with Chown-sound familiar?) on the basis of expense and not being coed enough. In 1971 the coed committee under Doug Romans was struck and his rather exhaustive report was made public on September 28, 1971. The 60 page report dealt with admission policies, ratio of residents to washrooms and various schemes of integration. The entire report should have been treated as a social document, but this sadly was not to be the case.

After two alternatives were presented to Residence Councils, the Gordon-Brockington-Chown proposal was put forward. The WRC's position stated on November 9 was that they "were in favour of coed residences available on campus for first year students." They seemed however to be less than willing to work much towards it. "The Women's Residence Council does not support the proposal for co-ed living in Gordon Brockington with the displaced males going to Chown". (WRC Nov. 9) The WRC wanted investigation of Elrond and other off campus facilities. This despite their proclaimed support of on-campus co-ed for first year students. It occurs to me, that as soon as the WRC came out in favour of coed principle, they were committed to implementing it to the best possible advantage of their constituents. The change in policy took place as soon as the WRC endorsed coed in principle. The referendum was in no way binding and was merely to find out how many girls favoured coed policy. The results of the referendum are a matter of interpretation.

But before we come to interpretation it is interesting to note that the IRC is favouring the same proposal that it rejected in 1969. The reason for this is the sagging popularity of Men's residences, "a change in attitude of the men in Leonard Field toward the present type of residence life" (IRC Oct. 20, 1971). Goed res might aid subscription. The WRC however is over-subscribed and coed might result in surplus applications being withdrawn and a raise in fees might be the result. Interpretation of coed seems to becoming more non-social as the issue wears on.

A QUESTION OF INTERPRETATION

By referendum day of course the official lines had been drawn. The only difference was that the WRC continued to maintain that they supported coed in principle despite working against it in fact. They further mis-represented 65.4 per cent of their constituents and 84 per cent of men. It must be remembered that coed does involve both sexes and that neither group should be unfairly denied access to coed. The 36 per cent of women who voted against coed could have easily been accommodated in segregated residences. Beth Higginson sec-treasurer of the WRC stated on Oct 29 "That the WRC was trying to please the greatest number of women in residence and did not want a group of discontented women in Gordon Brockington." To me 65.4 per cent seems to be the greatest number and by denying that, the WRC has moved discontent from Gordon Brockington to their own buildings.

Part of the WRC's opposition to coed res seemed to be based on Queen's reputation as a "Conservative university more so than Ottawa (where 40 per cent of the freshette applicants wanted to live in coed residence, and thus we may not be able to fill the quota." (WRC November 8, 1971) Ottawa university had a 40 per cent freshette response Queen's had a 39.6 per cent. Is the difference really that significant? At the same meeting the WRC stated that "the girls are not that keen. They are apathetic because the process is too, long." Yes, the process is long and involved and now it is going to last for another year. That is the fault of the WRC. As for keeness. Well, 69.4 per cent turnout seems reasonably "keen" to me.

One can perhaps interpret the WRC's actions up until Nov. 15 as those of a residence council that was to imbued with caution and accidentally made misleading statements. After the 15th however, I find it hard to be so flattering.

On November 15 at an open meeting held before women residents, Cindy Davidson outlined "counter-arguments" to coed. The president of the WRC openly listing arguments against coed res after she had repeatedly stated that both she and the WRC were in favour of coed. It is at this point that the WRC oversteps itself and ceases to become a governing body. At this point they become irresponsible and self-contradictory.

Miss Davidson gave the following ten reasons for the rejection of the Chown Gordon-Brockington proposal.

1. that other situations, Elrond, McArthur and West Campus Tower have a chance to settle down. 2. Some of the residents view an extension of open hours as a logical step before institution of Coed residence. 3. the coed buildings proposed could not be filled with the ratio chosen. 4. None of the proposals have been found to be feasible. Only 60.6 per cent willing to lose Chown as a women's residence. 5. The Victoria proposal was more popular than the Gordon-Brockington one. 6. There was an over-submission to traditional residences. Those who could not get in would be placed in coed residences. 7. Women's residence council is leery of getting into a situation where . . . fees might be raised. 8. The money to change residence facilities would come out of retained earnings reflecting a raise in fees. 9. The University of Toronto example shows that there is a tendency for girls not to move into traditional men's residences. 10. Parental approval may not be forthcoming.

Before dealing with political morality of the situation, let's examine each point. 1. this entails further delay removing all chances of coed in 1972-73. 2. Yes extension of open hours is a logical step. But, there has been no significant logical extension and no figures were used to support her arguments. 3. On November 9, Doug Romans informed the WRC that "the ratio chosen by the WRC is incorrect". 4. A definition of "Feasible" might have been appropriate. If 60 per cent are in favour of rentention . . . it is retained. Not so 65.4 per cent. Inconsistent interpretation. 5. Agreed but the WRC thought that the Victoria plan was "too ambitious." 6, 7, 8 These all reflect the economic concern of the WRC. There would however, be no change in enrollment, the question is hypothetical and if people are willing to pay more, why shouldn't they. 9. This is the same point (in reverse) that we found at the U of O, comparison. If Queen's is so "conservative" then there is no indication that it would follow the trends of any other University. 10. It may not ...but then again it may.

The above reactions to the ten points were not presented at that meeting. There was in fact, no presentation from the other side. It must have appeared to the persons at the meeting that the WRC was opposed to coed residence when in point of fact, they maintained support in principle. This is bad faith. The fact that any governing body could make such a one-sided presentation two days before the referendum is to me a violation of political morality.

On Nov. 16, Miss Davidson commented that the referendum was "non-binding" leaving interpretation entirely in the hands of the WRC. The results of course were 65.4 per cent women in favour and 89 per cent of men in favour. Doug Romans asked that neither of the residence councils meet before a joint meeting on November 19. Both parties agreed.

BAD FAITH - A EUPHEMISM

On Nov. 18, the WRC held a meeting in the Vic A wing conference room. "Bad faith" is a euphemistic term for that action. "Discussion was directed towards it (the results of the referendum." At first the WRC states that only 45 per cent of the whole house is in favour of coed. The implication being that 55 per cent were opposed. If however, I extrapolate the no vote, we find that 28 per cent of the "whole house" were opposed, the implication being that 72 per cent were in favour. Both assumptions are invalid. But the WRC effectively voted for 30.6 per cent of their constituents. That too is bad faith.

The WRC then extended article 13 of their constitution which necessitates a two-thirds majority vote on change of policy and amendments. To quote Marv Bloos ". . . this article should not be stretched to cover the situation at hand. It is not an addition to the WRC constitution nor could it ever be construed to be a controversial rule change."Further, the WRC had already stated that it supported coed residence and policy was a fait accompli. Grasping even further the WRC expostulates that there would be a 20 per cent cancellation rate and an 11 per cent withdrawal rate. We now have the WRC cancelling the vote of 31 per cent of their constituents. Further still there was a fear expressed that "if we could not fine enough upperclass how could we get freshettes." what did the WRC do to "get" the upperclass. They balked, they reworded referendums and rejected proposals. They made one-sided presentations to their residents and now, they were sitting convincing themselves that it was their constituents who were against coed. How indeed could they get Freshettes?

Finally it was moved by Dorothy Lloyd and seconded by Joan Delavigne (WRC rep to the Coed Committee) that the WRC was "constitutionally bound" to reject the proposal. After the motion was unanimously passed they wondered if the meeting on the 19th was necessary. They finally agreed to meet with IRC after having effectively killed coed.

The meeting was anti-climatic the WRC held to their interpretation coed was for all intents and purposes dead.

And that's it. I feel that the WRC didn't act as a responsible government and that it denied coed residence to a majority of residents on campus, as well as those coming to Queen's next year.

I don't know really how the WRC can write that they "did not consider coed a dead issue." In conclusion I have to say that yes there has been bad faith, at best motivated by good intentions. This is really part one of a two-part letter. The second section will deal with the ASUS formal. I really am sorry to say that the WRC acted even less honestly in that area.

All quotations are from IRC WRC minutes or from the coed report. The letter is not representative of the ASUS executive and the opinions herein are personal ones.

(To be Continued)

Terry Macli.

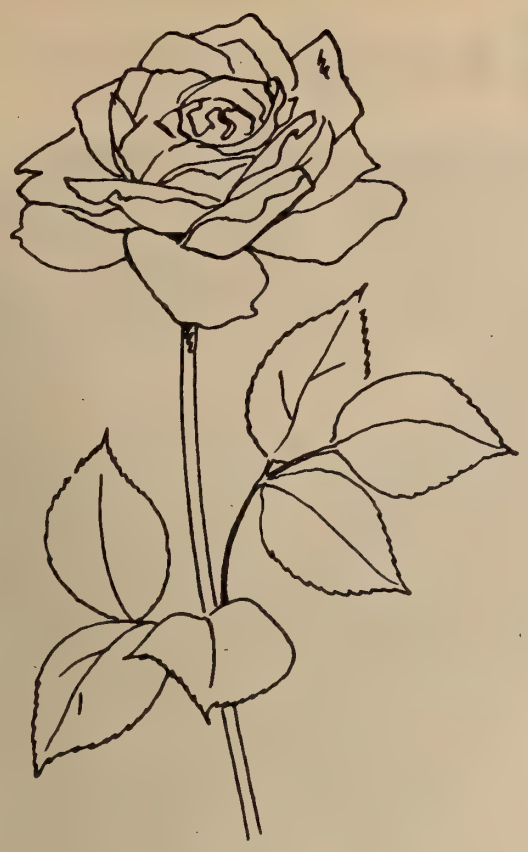
REMINDER

The second installment of fees due by January 31, 1972 can be paid in person at the Accountants' Office, Richardson Hall.

If you find it more convenient to mail your cheque to the Accountants' Office, please record your student number on the face of your cheque.

TRICOLOR SOCIETY NOMINATIONS

Nominations for admission to the Tricolor Society are now being received.

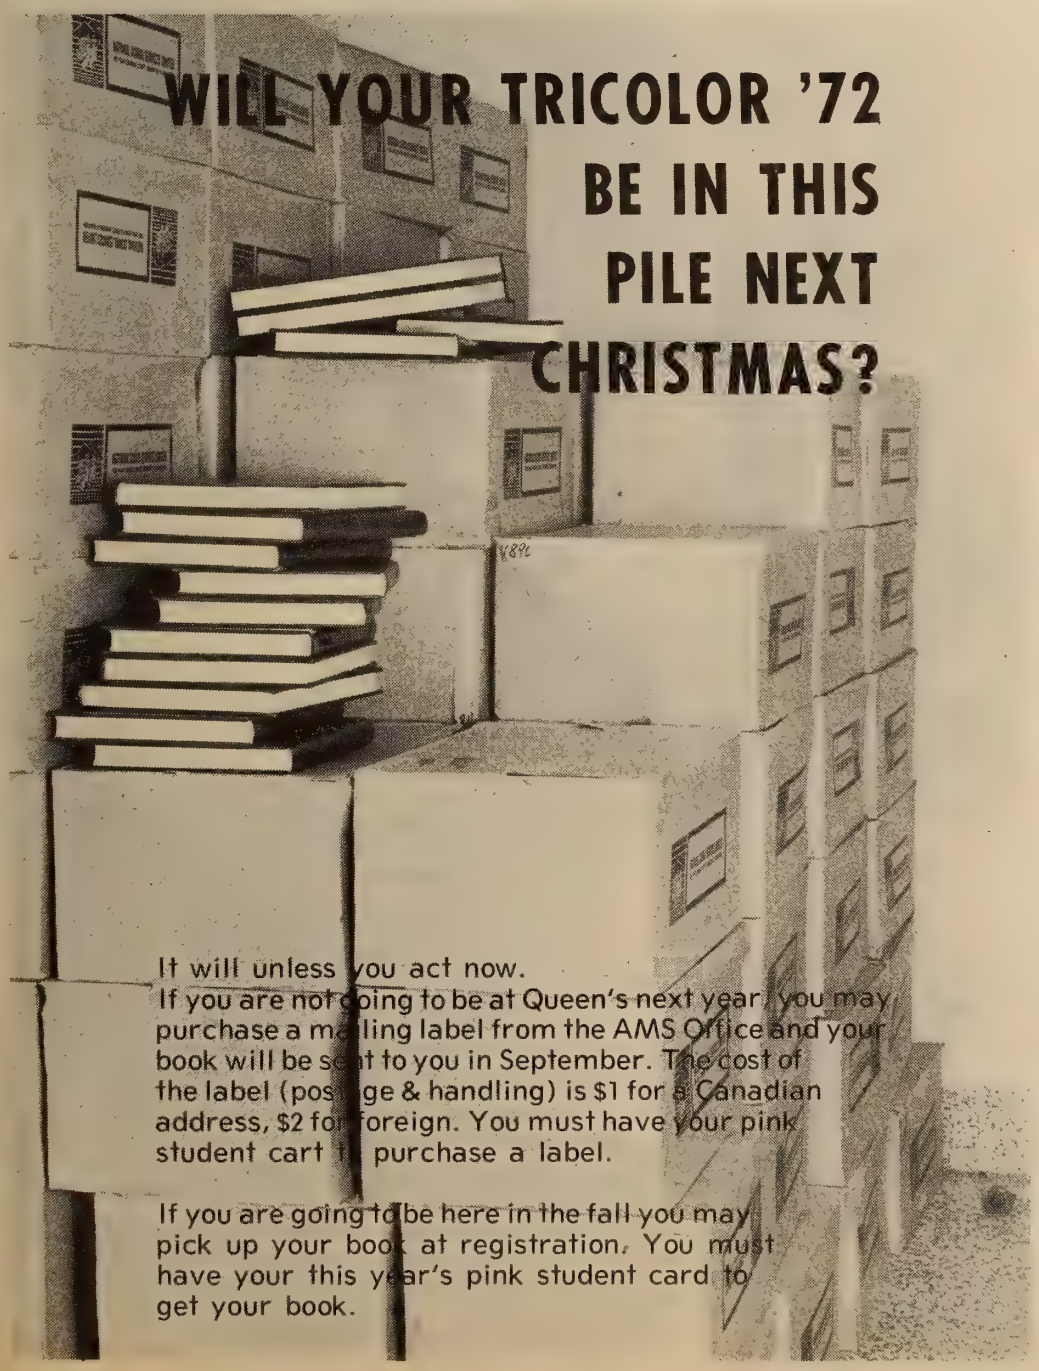


Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be limited to postgraduates, and to students in the second term of their final year, who, maintaining a satisfactory academic standing during their course, have rendered valuable and distinguished service to the University in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities, for example:- (a) service in one of the major fields of student government, journalistic work, debating, dramatics, or (b) a significant contribution in a wide range of activity.

Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be granted by decree of a Special Committee for this specific purpose.

Any member of the Alma Mater Society may submit nominations to the Tricolor Society. Names of such nominees shall be submitted to the Selections Committee through the Alma Mater Society Office, together with a list of those services the nominee has performed. No nominations will be received later than January 25, 1972.

AMS PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS



will be received until Jan. 28.

INTERLUDE

Arts & Science Formal
To be held at the Holiday Inn
Saturday, February Twelfth
Nine to One
Refreshments
The Bob Ayre Orchestra

Eight Dollars per Couple
Tickets go on sale in
John Orr Room
January 31

WILL YOUR TRICOLOR '72 BE IN THIS PILE NEXT CHRISTMAS?

It will unless you act now.
If you are not going to be at Queen's next year you may purchase a mailing label from the AMS Office and your book will be sent to you in September. The cost of the label (postage & handling) is $1 for a Canadian address, $2 for foreign. You must have your pink student card to purchase a label.

If you are going to be here in the fall you may pick up your book at registration. You must have your this year's pink student card to get your book.

CUSO

invites you to apply now:

- 1st priority: Medical personnel (must have 2 yrs. experience)
- also needed: teachers of most subjects, maths & science in particular, (experience preferred)

Contact K. Pold, 547-2807
International Centre.

Reflections

Snowball Semi-formal

featuring
MAJOR HOOPLE'S
and
BRANDY

SAT. JAN. 29, GRANT HALL
TICKETS $7.00

Foul Winds in Kingston

Gaels Blow Three Straight

by Chris Boon

If Queen's played 36-minute games of basketball, the Gaels would be in great shape. Unfortunately, they don't. Three days in a row, the Gaels were ahead or tied with a little over four minutes left. The results: three losses, by ten to Carleton, 72-62, four to MacDonald College, 80-76, and three to Bishop's, 64-61. The amazing thing is that they managed to find a different way to lose each time.

Against the Ravens, the Gaels shot badly, particularly in close where the board battles looked more like volleyball than Mr. Naismith's invention (actually, this plagued the Gaels all weekend).

Starters Paul Howard and Rob Smart fouled out, Smart early in the fourth quarter and Howard with about four minutes left in the game. Part of this came from exhaustion, since substitutions had been used sparingly all game, and Howard's fifth foul was a tired man's offence.

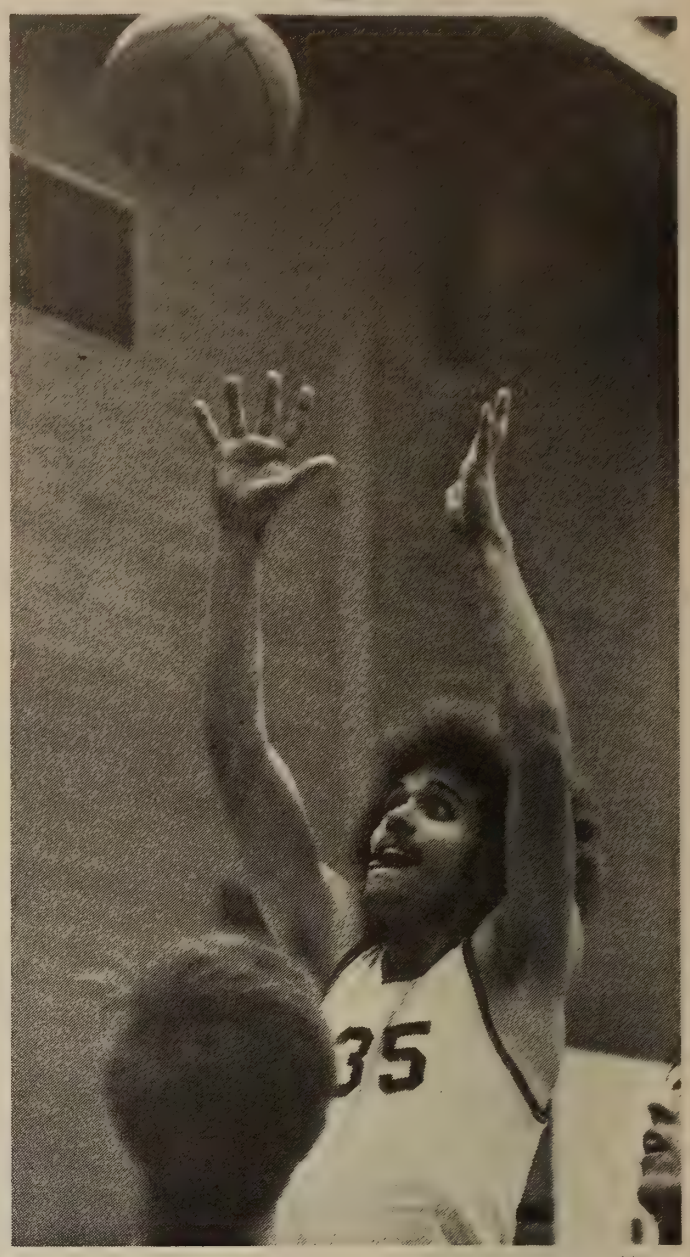
Even without this rebounding strength, the Gaels stayed close, and trailed by only one, 61-60, with a minute-seventeen to go. Then guard Peter Gordon fouled Carleton's Jon Lefebure, and the whole mess collapsed. The Gaels turned the ball over three times, and managed only a single basket as the Ravens ran the score to 72-62.

The Gaels had been plagued by turnovers and bad passing all game, and both starting guards, Gordon and Dave Smith, were less than impressive moving the ball past centre court. Andy Daugulis added his usual 22 points, but played rather loose defense and missed several critical shots in the second half.

Smart added 11 points and Howard 9. Rookie Stu Beck was one of the few bright spots with 7 points and generally good play, with guard Stu Bridgeman looking infinitely more alive than some prominent Gaels who shall remain nameless.

Against MacDonald, it was a variation on the same theme - foul problems for Smart and Howard, too many turnovers, particularly in bringing the ball downcourt, and an inability to make layups.

Bridgeman again proved effective, particularly in the second half, and the Gaels did show a hint more hustle, but the team effort was less than outstanding. Daugulis had 22 points and 14 rebounds, Howard added 16 and 15, and Smart chipped in 11 points and 12 boards.



Unfortunately, the Clansmen had four men in double figures - Jim Guild with 31 points, Dave Algar and Chris Hunter with 18 each, and Ken Smythe with 11. Take nothing away-the MacDonald team showed a hell of a lot of hustle and considerably more accurate shooting than the Gaels all game, but lacked the height to neutralize the Gaels front line on the boards. Once the fouls struck - we had problems.

The Bishop's game, whose time batted back and forth between afternoon and evening, finally came off in the Bews Gym in the afternoon. The absence of a crowd may have been merciful.

Trying to play a pressing, running game for the first time in living memory, the Gaels fell victim to abysmally bad shooting (five air balls in one game is quite a lot, especially from fairly close range) and some equally bad refereeing (we had the man with X-ray vision again -- those cross-court call through three bodies really do take talent).

The hustle-hustle tactics worked in the first half, and certainly sharpened up the passing and ball-handling, but showed an unfortunate tendancy to decay with time. Late in the fourth quarter, the pace was just as slow as in the first two games, and the results no more gratifying.

Next weekend will pretty well decide the Gaels' fate in the OUAA this season. They play Toronto and Laurentian, on the road. Two wins will put them to 4-2, and in fair shape for a playoff berth. Two losses, or even a split, and.....we got troubles.

- perry

Stu Bridgeman - a faint gleam of hope

Gymnasts Sweep Own Meet

Guided by coach Barry Brooker, Queen's Gymnasts walked off with a victory in their own Invitational Meet last Saturday. Although hampered by a typical below-par performance in Vaulting, Queen's thoroughly dominated the other events to sweep victory with 131.9 points over runner up York (125.7) and third-place Toronto (113.5).

In the individual standings, Queensmen copped the first two spots. Drew Strickland, a second-year Arts student from Kingston, stood first with 44.3 points, just ahead of teammate Tim Wasiliniuk with 44.1. Dave Hunter of York, a former Ontario high school champion, placed third in the all-round standings.

The Gaels struck gold in four events. Strickland won on Parallel Bars and tied for first on Side Horse, while Wasiliniuk grabbed the top spots in Rings and Horizontal Bar. His performances in Floor Exercises and Parallel Bars also earned him seconds in those events.

The fact that the Gaels have triumphed over the four other OUAA-East schools seems to augur well for the Gaels' chances in future encounters, which will be coming up shortly.

Queen's will test its formula for success against T.O., Carleton, and Ottawa this coming Saturday in the R.M.C. Invitational meet, before facing its league competition in the Eastern Division finals February 12th at York. In that meet, the Gaels must finish first or second to qualify for the league finals here at Queen's on Feb. 26th.

- newbury

Sports Shorts

Wrestlers Win Dual Meet

Friday, January 14, Queen's hosted McMaster in a wrestling tournament. Bob Pesowsky (134 lbs), Rob Beamish (142 lbs), Gary Brown (150 lbs) and John Johnston (177 lbs) all won their classes by decision to accumulate 13 points. The 161 lb., 191 lb., and heavy weight classes were all taken by McMaster. Queen's took the 118 lb. class by default as did McMaster the 126 lb. class. At 158 lbs., Mike Dwhytie by far outwrestled his opponent; however, the result was a draw. The final score was Queen's 19 and McMaster 17.

Next Saturday, Queen's wrestles in the Guelph Invitational. We expect our winners from this week to do just as well at Guelph. We can also look forward to good matches from Steve Brown, Del DeMonte, Ted Pourdham, Dan Thompson and Pete Verhoeven.

Swimmers Fare Well

On Saturday, January 15, Queen's Women's Swim Team travelled to Guelph for an invitational relay meet. In order to enter an event, a minimum of 3 team members were required. In competition with 5 other universities, Queen's held its own, winning two of the relays – the 300 yd. backstroke and the 200 yd. medley. In the first relay the team was composed of Deb Turnbull, Cathy Clark and Sue Derby. In the medley, Sue Derby, Cathy Brace, Cathy Clark and Brenda Prosenyak swam back stroke, breast stroke, fly and freestyle.

Queen's swimmers also won 3 of their heats, but did not place in the overall heat times.

Diver Carla Lennox competed in the 1 metre and 3 metre events, placing third in both, very close behind the first two.

Reasonable improvement was shown after the Christmas break, and the successful team effort will see the team off to Waterloo's Invitational Meet, next week, in high spirits.

Women's Track

Queen's women began an indoor season for the first time in many years, competing in the York University Invitational. Outstanding performances were turned in by Marion Spence setting a new Queen's women record in the 50 metres in a time of 6.8 seconds.

Janey O'Rourke came fourth in the same event. The excellent performance of the women helped a combined men's and women's team place second in the meet behind Waterloo.

The women's team has an excellent nucleus on which to build. Irene Harris, a rookie, has been given a national ranking in the 100 metres. National Rankings is a system used to select athletes for the Canadian Olympic team.

The indoor season will continue on January 29, at the University of Montreal Invitational. Other meets include the Albany N.Y. Invitational, Quebec Championships, Ontario Championships and the 96th Highlander Games in Hamilton, the oldest indoor track meet in North America.

VOLLEYBALL

The Queen's Women's Volleyball team competed in the Waterloo Women's Invitational this past weekend. In all there were twelve competing teams, with the first four places going to Western, Waterloo, University of Toronto and Dalhousie.

Queen's played eight games but, hindered by injuries, stood second last. The girls will be travelling to Sudbury to meet Laurentian next week in a rematch of their last game before Christmas which saw Queen's emerge victorious.

We Won't Mention... ...Bishops

Harris, Mott Star in Gael shutout over Mac

by Bruce McLeod

Morris Mott scored three goals and Clyde Harris stopped three breakaways on the way to the first shutout by a Queen's goalie in at least 14 years, as they led the Gaels to their second victory of the new term, 4-0 over the McMaster Marauders. In other weekend action, the Gaels bowed 8-4 on Saturday afternoon to a strong Bishop's team, and rallied to beat the Old Boys 11-7.

"Scrambly" was the word used by Gaels coach Bob Carnegie to describe the Mac game. The Marauders came at the Gaels with a vigorous but disorganized forechecking game that had the Queen's team struggling to get out of their own end.

On the other hand, McMaster never could get a co-ordinated attack going inside Queen's blueline, and were several times the victims of bad bounces or miscues.

At 11:57 of the first period, Stan Galt intercepted a poor clearing pass in the McMaster end and slid the puck in the Mott, who left the goalie scrambling as he tucked it in behind him.

But this was the only goal of the first period, and the outcome was very much in doubt until the Gaels scored two quick goals near the beginning of the second period.

Mott took a pass outside the blue-line and moved in to the face-off circle before whizzing a shot in along the ice, and Doug Barton fooled the goalie with an off-balance backhand a few minutes later.

From then on, the Gaels seemed to get stronger, as they were outhustling and outmuscling the smaller Mac team, and the fans were able to relax, confining themselves to the odd mutter about the lack of finesse and sharp passing which they had been led to expect from this team.

If there was a turning point in the game, it came when the Gaels got two penalties within 25 seconds of each other at the end of the first period. The Gaels killed off the penalties superbly, allowing only one shot at Harris, and seconds after the second penalty expired Mott scored his second goal and the Gaels never looked back.

The Mac goalie, Gary Innes, made several outstanding saves over the rest of the game to keep his teammates in the game, but Mott's third goal, at 17:38 of the final period was icing on the cake.

Saturday's game against Bishop's was a prettier game to watch, with more good playmaking, but unfortunately, the Gaels were at the wrong end of most of it, as Bishop's put in four unanswered goals in the third period against a hapless Clyde Harris for the win.

Bishop's has a better team than their 6th place standing in the QUAA would indicate, as they have played much fewer games than their rivals. They are big and fast, and have some excellent shots.

Their captain, Ron Perowne, who scored four of their goals, and their big defenceman, Mike Booklaim, were particularly noticeable, and their goalie made several outstanding saves in the third period to frustrate the Gaels.

But they have lost to the top three teams in their league, one of which, Sir George Williams, the Gaels have beaten decisively, and another of which, Loyola, they should have.

Queen's managed to play even with the Bishop's team for two periods and, with a little bit of luck, could have been leading at the end of that time. They led 3-2 after one period, and seemed to have the better of the play in the second, although they were outscored 2-1.

But the Gaels fell apart completely in the third period, and looked completely disorganized and futile most of the time.

Typical of the Gaels' erratic play was Steve Gross, who scored Queen's lone goal in the second period on a brilliant solo end-to-end rush, and then seconds later had the puck taken off him in his own end to set up the fourth Bishop's goal.

Other goal scorers for Queen's were John Smith, Morris Mott and Dave Nuttall.

Mott was subject to the usual semi-legal and blatantly illegal harassment, which the referees seem particularly able to ignore when it's directed at him, but he still managed a goal and an assist.

Other bright lights for the Gaels were Stu Lang, who was making some outstanding plays at the oppositions blue-line, and the penalty killing team of Kindon and Barton, which has been particularly effective this year.

Tonight, the Gaels meet the Carleton Ravens for the first time this year in an 8:00 game at the Jock Harty Arena. The team can't afford to take this game quite so lightly as the last one, as this is one of the teams.

- mciver

Morris Mott - 3 goals, much hustle

5-3 McMaster 2-0 U.of T.

W.I.C. News

On Thursday, the Women's Intramural Committee held an athletic night to introduce the activities of the new term.

The W.I.C. again invites all women on campus to get involved and emphasizes that the essence of an intramural program is participation and that experience should not be considered a prerequisite for involvement.

Activities planned for this term include a Runathon, curling, volleyball, indoor softball, archery, co-ed bowling, speed swimming, and squash. If you wish to participate in any sport and have not yet entered, you should sign up on the Intramural Board in the Women's Locker Room.

The Runathon began Thursday evening and P.H.E. currently holds the lead. However, it continues until Jan. 23 and anyone may still enter. Just sign up at the track and run laps when you wish. The more laps, the more points for your faculty!

Volleyball starts on Tuesday, Jan. 18. The schedule is:

7.15 - Arts '73 vs. Law, Bews Gym; Rehab. vs Nursing, Bews Gym.

7.30 - Arts '75 vs P.H.E., Ross Gym; Arts '74 vs Meds., Ross Gym.

8.15 - Arts '75 vs Meds., Bews Gym; P.H.E. vs Law, Bews Gym.

As a reminder, entries for Indoor Softball close on Tuesday, Jan. 18 (games begin Thursday) and a curling clinic will be held on Sunday, Jan. 22.

Once again, Intramurals are for fun -- so come out and support your faculty!

Swimming Cancelled

The recreation swim on Saturday Jan. 22nd from 8:30 to 9:30 has been cancelled due to a special Water Ballet program

Hockey Gals Drop Two

-but maintain first place

During the past week the women's ice hockey team had three hard workouts and a game against the Kingston Red Barons in hopes of getting the team up to the pre-holiday standards. However, they were disappointed in their losses to McMaster 5-2 and Toronto 2-0 in this away weekend.

Friday afternoon at 4.00 pm, the Queen's team came into action with the McMaster team. The ice hockey gals started out on the right foot by achieving the first goal at 3.40 in the first period. Karen Howatson shot the puck from the left side of the slot towards the net and the puck deflected off a Mac skate into the far corner of the net behind the Mac goalie.

However, the McMaster team retaliated and tied up the score at 10.15 in the second period. Queen's was determined to follow suit though and came through with a goal in the next fifteen seconds. From the face-off the puck was sent to the opponents' left corner of the ice.

Karen Howatson retrieved the puck and shot it towards the goal. The goalie was in such a position that the puck deflected off her right skate and slipped into the net to make the score 2-1. From here on in Mac could not be stopped in their aggressive offensive play.

Mac's succeeding goals occurred at 12.00 and 12.25 during the second period. This put the McMaster team ahead 3-2. Queen's came out in the third period determined to chalk up a couple of goals but it was the Mac team that came through. Anne netted one at 1.42 and Janelle, the other, at 7.25 in the third period.

Queen's had more than their share of penalties during the game. Cathie Black and Deb McCaw sat out the 1½ minutes for Queen's in the first period; Debby Gilmour in the second period; and Doreen Howes in the third period.

Gail MacLeod was the only offender on the MacMaster team; she acquired penalties in both the first and third periods.

The Queen's team had to wait round to play the Toronto team at 5.15 Saturday afternoon. Allison McGreer netted the first goal at 13.21 in the first period assisted by Barb Spence. Barb shot the puck and Wanda Gyde, the Queen's goalie, went down and deflected the puck back to Barb. With a short pass to Allison, the puck was in the open net to put Toronto ahead 1-0.

The second goal came at 2.15 in the second period. Diane Gilmour, Debby's twin sister, came through this time with Barb Spence assisting. The same pattern as the first goal followed. The rebounded puck was passed over to the open side of the net and popped in.

Marg Mutch had a holding penalty in the second period against Queen's. Then Toronto gave Queen's an opportunity to score by two overlapping penalties in the third period. Queen's just couldn't click against the three opponents, not to mention the full Toronto squad.

Queen's is still in first place but to defend this position they must become an aggressive offensive force in future games. In both losses the opponents outshot our gals by a large margin. The Queen's team needs your support.

Next weekend come and cheer them on in their encounters with Guelph, tied for second place, and York.

BACK PAGE

CANADA

QUEBEC — The Quebec government Thursday ordered all school boards, hospitals and other public institutions to stop payments to the federal unemployment insurance plant.

The directive, drawn up at Wednesday night's meeting of the Quebec cabinet, amounts to open defiance of the new federal unemployment scheme, which came into force Jan. 2.

A provincial government communique said the action will be maintained at least until "the first days of February," when the Quebec cabinet will reach a final decision on its attitude to the federal plan.

The move is seen as a victory for the nationalist wing of Premier Robert Bourassa's Liberal cabinet and marks a step-up in the current Ottawa-Quebec tug-of-war for control in the field of social affairs.

OTTAWA — The medical profession knows more about how to treat and prevent disease than it has ever known -- but the health care system in Canada isn't capable of taking suck knowledge and applying it to people, a University of Toronto doctor said Friday.

It's structurally overloaded and can't cope with this surge of new knowledge, Dr. Edward L. Thomas said.

OTTAWA — Canada's cutlural and artistic heritage is being destroyed and ignored because too many influential people would rather spend millions on fine European paintings than on the folk art of pioneers or Indians and Eskimos, a leading archeologist said Thursday.

William E. Taylor, director of Canada's National Museum of Man, told the Canadian Science Writers' Association, that these same people would spend great sums to save Toronto's Front Street -- "a stone and concrete echo of an economic system and materialist philosophy" -- rather than preserving an historic Indian village, habitat farm or Ukrainian Prairie village.

Taylor said Canada's cultural establishment "are a decent lot, but they have mangled part of our cultural life" because they consider great painters such as Rembrandt and Titian "the pinnacle of world art."

TORONTO — Most Ontario druggists will be required to provide the lowest-priced drugs when they fill doctors' prescriptions, under a bill which the provincial government will pr;esent to the Legislature in February or March.

The measure is expected to save Ontario residents at least $15 million a year in drug costs.

It would compel most druggists to substitute cheap, chemical-named drugs for more expensive brand-name drugs unless a doctor specifically writes "no substitution" on a prescription.

Some 1,000 of Ontario's 1,600 pharmacies would be required to take part in the scheme. They are members of Parcost, (Prescriptions at Reasonable Cost), the provincial government scheme to bring down the cost of prescription drugs by persuading doctors to prescribe low-priced drugs rather than expensive brand named drugs.

The new bill is designed to bolster the Parcost plan by providing for a compulsory use of a cheaper drug unless a doctor specifically forbids it.

ST. JOHN'S — The digging by hand of an undersea tunnel to link Newfoundland with Labrador was proposed Monday by Social Minister Stephen Neary, the only declared candidate for Premier Joseph Smallwood's job as Liberal Party leader.

"Instead of giving some contractors in New York or Montreal a contract to build the tunnel across the Strait of Belle Isle, we should do it ourselves" by hand to make jobs available to the unemployed, he said.

Previous Government studies have shown that a tunnel beneath the strait, 10 to 15 miles wide and up to 250 feet at its narrowest point, would cost more than $80-million, but there has never been an estimate of how much it would cost to dig a tunnel by hand.

OTTAWA — The federal Government will spend $85-million this year to provide summer jobs and other activities for young people, mainly students.

"The target this year is 75,000 jobs," Secretary of State Gerard Pelletier said in announcing the Government's summer youth package.

MONTREAL — Alleged police documents published Thursday suggesting improper behavior in the past on the part of Montreal Police Chief Jacques Saulnier will be studied by the Public Security Council.

Mr. Justice Jacques Coderre, chairman of the council, which is responsible for policing the island of Montreal, said "the statements made are disturbing enough that the security council will examine the case." He said the case would be studied at the council meeting on Wednesday.

The documents, published in Le Devoir, also suggested that Mayor Jean Drapeau refused to act on police information pointing to serious irregularities in the morality squad. Chief Saulnier was head of the morality squad from June, 1961, to January 1967.

TORONTO — A national strike of CBC radio and television technicians that could black-out our Canadian-produced programming is a strong possibility by next weekend.

Reacting to a conciliation board report released yeasterday, Kenneth Steel, Canadian director of the National Association of Broadcast Employees, which represents 2,170 CBC employees, said it was "the most ridiculous conciliation board report I've ever seen."

The unanimous report recommended a 6 per cent wage increase for the period from July 1, 1971 to July 1, 1972, and 4¼ per cent from July 1, 1972 until March 31, 1973, in a 21-month contract.

Current starting rate in the key group is $119 for a 40-hour week, climbing to $179 after seven years' experience. The group covers cameramen, sound technicians, radio technicians and announcer-operators.

ST. JOHN'S NFLD. — Premier-elect Frank Moores said Thursday one of the first jobs for his Conservative government will be "a very thorough investigation" of the agreements under which Premier Joseph Smallwood provided American promoters with public finance and exploration and development rights to vast, resources-rich areas of the province.

Smallwood, 71, who has headed Newfoundland's government since the island joined Canada 22 years ago, announced Thursday he will resign no later than next Tuesday, opening the way for a Conservative take-over of government early next week.

OTTAWA — Sharp increases in food prices pushed the consumer price index up seven-tenths of a point in December, equalling the largest jump recorded from November in the last 10 years.

The overall index was 5 per cent higher than in December, 1970, but food prices were 7.9 per cent higher, Statistics Canada reported Thursday.

OTTAWA— Canada has rejected demands by the United States that Canadian residents be allowed to buy cars in the United States and bring them back without paying duty, senior Canadian trade negotiators said Friday.

The negotiators said that Canada also has rejected a U.S. demand that it drop its prohibition on the importation of used cars from the United States.

With the two rejections, the current round of Canadian-American negotiations on the seven-year-old auto pact have come to a halt, with no further meetings scheduled.

OTTAWA — The federal government has decided to disband the powerful secretariat that has been organizing federal-provincial constitutional conferences for the past four years.

A spokesman for the Prime Minister's office said Thursday it was obvious that because of the decision to disband the secretariat there would be no more constitutional conferences "for some considerable time".

THE WORLD

COPENHAGEN — King Frederik IX is dead after nearly 25 years as Denmark's deomcratic monarch. His 31-year-old daughter Margrethe ascended to the throne, the heir in a royal succession that stretches back 1,000 years to the Vikings.

SALISBURY — One African was killed and none were wounded when police opened fire on demonstrators at Shabani, about 200 miles from Salisbury, in an outbreak of black-white violence, police said Thursday.

They said they were "compelled to open fire on riotous and vicious crowds" on Wednesday.

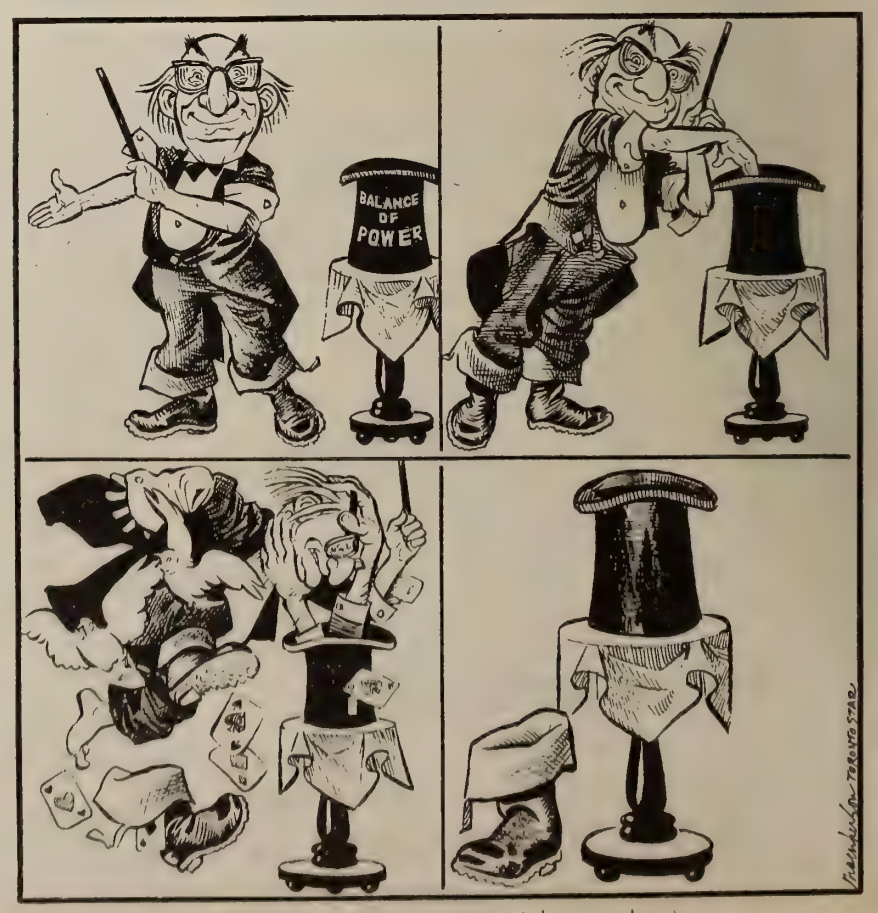
LAGOS, Nigeria — An army-civilian group seized power in Ghana Wednesday and Prime Minister Kofi Busia, currently in London, was dismissed from office.

A Ghana Radio announcement by a senior army officer said the situation was under control and urges the nation to stay calm.

News of the coup came in broadcasts by Lt. Col. Mike Achampong, who said the country was to be governed by a council of senior army officers and civilian leaders. Trade unions, farmers, a women's council and the Christian Council of Ghana would be represented.

DACCA — Sheik Mujibur Rahman says he wants the new nation of Bangla Desh to become a non-aligned socialist state with a foreign policy of "friendship to all and malice toward none."

The Sheik, who became Prime Minister on Wednesday, said Friday that the only way to get the economy of Bangla Desh back into action quickly is socialism at home, buttressed by aide from abroad.



EGYPT — In 1965, Chinese Premier Chou En-lai told President Nasser of Egypt that the Chinese were deliberately trying to get American soldiers in Vietnam hooked on opium.

This was recently revealed by Mohammed Heikal, editor of Al Ahram and Nasser's closest confidant.

Chou told Nasser that "some of them (U.S. soldiers) are trying opium and we are helping them. We are planting the best kinds of opium especially for the American soldiers in Vietnam."

Chou continued: "Do you remember when the West imposed opium on us? They fought us with opium. And we are going to fight them with their own weapons. We want to have a big army in Vietnam which will be hostage to us and we want to demoralize them. The effect that this demoralization is going to have on the United States will be far greater than anyone realizes."

Although he was sceptical at first, Nasser was finally convinced that Chou intended to do exactly as he had said he would.

NEWFIE MAGICIAN (return engagement to be announced soon)

⊗ election

ALL STUDENTS: Voting February 8, 9 and 10 for AMS presidential-vice-presidential teams. Nominations close January 28. Also on that date, referenda on these questions;

Shall the $3 concert fee be continued?

Shall the $4 Tricolor fee be continued?

Shall the $5 university centre fee be raised to $10 for the next three years?

Shall the $6.50 AMS fee be raised to $9.00?

ARTS AND SCIENCE, including Phys Ed: Voting February 8-10 for executive members and 3 senators. Nominations close January 30.

APPLIED SCIENCE: Voting February 8-10 for executive members and one senator. Nominations close at meeting January 31.

NURSING: Voting February 8-10 for executive members. Nominations close at meeting tonight.

GRAD STUDIES: Voting February 8-10 for executive members. Nominations close at meeting February 1 or 2.

REHAB: Voting February 8 for most executive members, February 9 for vice-president.

EDUCATION: Advance poll February 2 for AMS election. No other voting this spring.

COMMERCE: Voting February 10 for executive members and one senator. Nominations close February 2 (tentative).

THEOLOGY, LAW, MEDICINE: No information available.

WOMEN'S RES: Voting February 3 for council members. Nominations close January 31.

MEN'S RES: Voting early in March for council members.

Queen's
Journal

Vol XCIX, No. 37 Thurs., Jan. 20, 1972

PARKING PROPOSED UNDER LOWER CAMPUS

The university intends to build a 600-car parking garage under the "lower campus" south of Kingston Hall.

The Alma Mater Society outer council refused Monday night to give student support to the project, despite an explanation from AMS vice-president Victor Bradley that the university is anxious to go ahead with the project as a preliminary to the medical complex to be built at the southern end of the campus.

The two-storey underground garage would not detract from the aboveground appearance of the area once finished, Bradley said. He pointed out that the elm trees immediately south of Kingston Hall are all scheduled for removal (because of Dutch elm disease) whether or not the project is built, and said the pines along Stuart Street would not be affected.

In addition, Bradley said, the lower campus playing field would be improved to a quality comparable to that of the west campus outer field: level and properly drained.

But during construction, use of the lower campus would be lost for at least a year.

The university is in a hurry to begin building the garage, Bradley said, because there is a ceiling of $186 million which can be spent on the health sciences complex and it is being "eaten away" by inflation at six per cent per year.

The garage itself will cost about $2 million.

Bradley told the outer council that the city of Kingston is requiring Queen's to build the parking before starting the rest of the complex. Deputy Kingston planning director Bob Morris told The Journal Tuesday that he could not comment on this.

And traffic and streets administrator Ken Linseman said he did not know what the parking plans were. "We're waiting for the plan, and we have asked them for it several times."

Bradley said one effect of building the underground garage will be that aboveground parking will be abolished on Stuart Street, on lower University Avenue, and around Kingston Hall and Theological Hall.

He added that no concrete will show when the garage is finished, except around the entrances, which will be from Stuart Stret.

"If we've got to have cars around this place," Bradley said, "let's get them out of sight." Accordingly, he said, the university's policy is to put parking underground and on the periphery of the campus.

The idea was approved in principle by the campus planning committee at a meeting December 15, on the condition that the AMS and alumni be "afforded an opportunity to review and make recommendations", that the quality of playing field and landscaping not be lowered, and that a more detailed planning and design study be carried out.

Several members of the AMS council expressed strong objection to the proposal. "The lower campus is more than just a playing field," grad representative Graham Millington said, "and I don't like this idea at all. I think it stinks."

The council turned down Bradley's motion to approve of the project, on the condition that the lower campus be disrupted for construction "for the absolute minimum of time".

This would mean slightly over a year, Bradley said, probably beginning about April 1, 1972.

One objection was raised by arts and science rep Glenn Hall: the finished garage would make a "just dandy" foundation for a building in a few years, he said.

Students protested in 1960 when the university proposed to put a physics building on the lower campus; as a result Stirling Hall was built next to Ban Righ Hall instead.

When the council rejected his motion, Bradley told them, "I think a number of people here have made a very injudicious decision."

But he met with some criticism for bringing the university's proposal to the AMS as he had. "It was a bit presumptuous of the mover to bring this to us without any information at all," arts and science rep Gary Gannage commented.

A motion was proposed, but the tabled, saying that the AMS would not approve the garage without assurance that it would not later become the foundation for a building.

Members asked that deputy campus planner Kurt Gesell, or vice-principal (administration) R. J. Kennedy, attend an outer council meeting to explain the project further.

Kennedy is expected to attend a council meeting which is scheduled for 5 p.m. today in the McLaughlin Room of the Union.

View of lower campus, from the top of Theological Hall, showing present above ground parking. - brown

"THE NEW MOON"

By S. Romberg

Meistersingers' March Production

TENORS and BASSES required for chorus. Students and staff welcome

Phone Mr. E. Whyman, 389-3676 or Dr. D. Walton 389-2016

Queen's Ski Club Sponsors...

SKI WHITEFACE MTN.

Saturday, Jan. 22nd

Cost - $13.00 bus and tow

Tickets on sale in Union

Thurs. Jan. 20, 7 pm

Bus leaves Victoria Hall at 6:00 am

AMS PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS

Nominations for teams of candidates for AMS President and Vice-President will be received in the AMS Office until 5 pm January 28. Nominations must be supported with the signatures of 200 AMS members.

GENERAL MEETING

NURSING SCIENCE STUDENTS

TONIGHT - Thurs. Jan 20, Gym Lecture Theatre

Nominations for elections.

Meet the candidates afterwards

ATTENDANCE VERY IMPORTANT

TRICOLOR SOCIETY NOMINATIONS

Nominations for admission to the Tricolor Society are now being received.

Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be limited to postgraduates, and to students in the second term of their final year, who, maintaining a satisfactory academic standing during their course, have rendered valuable and distinguished service to the University in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities, for example:- (a) service in one of the major fields of student government, journalistic work, debating, dramatics, or (b) a significant contribution in a wide range of activity.

Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be granted by decree of a Special Committee for this specific purpose.

Any member of the Alma Mater Society may submit nominations to the Tricolor Society. Names of such nominees shall be submitted to the Selections Committee through the Alma Mater Society Office, together with a list of those services the nominee has performed. No nominations will be received later than January 25, 1972.

The AMS is holding an OPINION POLL

during the forthcoming AMS elections.

Please submit questions upon which you would like to hear opinions to Jim Richardson c/o AMS Office.

Solution to Tuesday's crossword

Historian gives view of confederation policy

Thursday afternoon Dr. A. R. M. Lower, former professor of history at Queen's, came back to Macdonald Hall to speak on "the historian's view of the British North America Act". About fifty law and history students attended the lecture, sponsored by the Legal Vistas committee of the Law Society, primarily so that Lower could provide a historical background for the Canadian constitution course, now required in second-year law.

Lower is known to many students of Canadian history and politics through such books as Canadians in the Making, The Development of Canadian Federalism, and Colony to Nation, for which he won a Governor-General's Medal. He is also past president of the Canadian Institute for International Affairs and is a professor emeritus at Queen's.

Lower is a proud man, proud that he belongs to the English-speaking world that invented federalism and representative government as the best method of governing such large tracts of land as Canada, the United States and Australia.

He had high praise for the American constitution, which he called "an extraordinary achievement", especially for its time. And he said the fall of the ancient empire of Greece and Rome was caused by "its own weight, extreme centralization, no link between local municipalities and this great circumference".

The union of French and English Canada in 1791 created "an uncomfortable situation" in Quebec, similar to the "uncomfortable situation" today, Lower said.

He credits Sir John A. Macdonald for writing the BNA Act with "a committee getting things into good plain words". Lower agreed with Macdonald's recognition of Georges Etienne Cartier as a key figure in the founding of a united Canada, for if he had not thought it safe to bring the people of Lower Canada into confederation, there would never have been one united country.

Lower said Canada's provinces are too large to be governed fairly, but "this is just idle talk" and nobody takes it seriously. He cited the smaller, more manageable provinces, such as Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, as being "a province at home with itself".

In federalism, the balance of power between federal and local governments must be kept, Lower said. The Civil War in the United States, he said, is an example of an imbalance of power.

Is there any danger of such an imbalance of power in Canada? Lower pointed to the events of a year ago, when 7000 troops were stationed in Quebec, and said that it is possible to turn to violence to protect federalism. It is very difficult to destroy a nation peacefully, and as yet there is no sign of a peaceful breakup, he said.

In the question period, Lower drew several parallels between pre-confederation Canada and present-day Ireland: there are differences in religion, language, traditions, and history.

He said he favours more Canadian nationalism, not jingoistic patriotism or regional alliances, but a national pride; otherwise, he said, the nation cannot survive.

Lower is a full supporter of the government programmes to encourage bilingualism: "I'd even come west of Brockville" in extending it, he said.

CLASSIFIEDS

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

INTERLUDE: Arts and Science Formal. To be held at Holiday Inn Saturday, February twelfth. Refreshments. Nine to One. Eight dollars per couple. Tickets to go on sale January 31 in John Orr Room.

Elrond applications going well, though rents are high

Elrond College applications are going well, the AMS outer council was told Monday night, in spite of rents which will be higher than had been hoped.

"It's not really as cheap as Science 44," Dr. Ned Franks, an AMS appointee to the Elrond board, admitted to the council. But he pointed out the quality of the newly-built apartments and co-op units, almost all of which have a view of Lake Ontario from the 16-storey tower.

"There's no way that we could be cheaper and still survive," Franks said.

Graduate rep Doug Pritchard asked Franks whether he thought the proposed rental of $190 a month for a medium-sized two-bedroom apartment was competitive and fair. "This has bothered me, " Franks replied, but he added that many such apartments will be occupied by three or four people.

He said it was unlikely that Elrond rents would rise for a long time, and therefore they would become more competitive as Kingston housing costs in general go up.

Applications are coming in well, Franks said -- "I'm still sleeping at nights," even though the building has not yet been filled for 1972-73. Containing 420 beds, it will open this summer after three years of planning and construction.

Elrond was originally organized by the Alma Mater Society.

Leases beginning this fall will be for eight months, Franks said; beginning in 1973, apartments will lease for twelve months and cooperative units for eight months.

The Board of Elrond, responsible for business affairs, is hard at work, Franks said, and so is the users' committee, responsible for the programme and facilities which go on in the building.

An educational programme will be carried on, he pointed out, since Elrond has all the rights and privileges of a college under the terms of its charter. He suggested that in addition to "counter-course", some Queen's credit courses might be offered in the building.

The educational programme will be open to anyone, not just Elrond residents, Franks said.

One other college programme which Elrond may adopt is the issuing of bursaries, he said, to make it possible for students to attend Queen's who otherwise could not do so.

Franks said residence in Elrond officially is limited to "bona fide students" from Queen's and other area institutions, but he added that families, children, and perhaps some university staff probably will live there as well.

Two courses are set for Venice summer school

The third annual Queen's summer school in Venice will be held from May 12 to June 29 this year. Two courses will be offered, if there is sufficient demand: Italian 100 (introductory) and Art History 245 (Venetian art and architecture).

Flight arrangements will be made independently this year, and students will live, as they did last year, at a pensione on a canal near the Piazzo San Marco, prospective Venice students were told at a meeting Monday night.

(Students who went to Venice last year said they found the pensione clean and that they were well-fed there.)

Last year the cost was about $550 for air fare, accommodation, two meals a day, and weekly day trips to areas nearby. As it was last year, the tuition fee this year will be paid by the government of Canada. Bursaries may also be available to give more students an opportunity to attend the Venice session.

Students can take the Italian course (to be taught by D. Bastianutti of the Spanish and Italian department at Queen's), the art history (being given by a Mr. Knox of the University of British Columbia and Mr. Dargavelle of Queen's), or both.

At Monday's informal session, last year's students were unanimously enthusiastic and said they would like to return to Venice this year. May and June are good months to be in Venice, they said, before the tourist invasion and the summer heat.

The May-June scheduling means that July and August are left for summer jobs and travelling, they said. Most of them claimed to have returned with a working knowledge of Italian, Venetian art, and the romatic way of life.

Information is available from the Venice summer school committee at room 129, Watson Hall.

Poverty teach-in is scheduled

The AMS agreed Monday night to give $1100 towards Awareness 72, a mid-February week of speakers and events about Canada's poverty problem.

The idea of Awareness grew out of the proposal for human problems mini-courses which the arts and science faculty rejected in December, politics professor Dr. Ned Franks told the AMS outer council Monday. He said he and math chairman Dr. John Coleman, the sponsors of the mini-courses idea, had cooperated with the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society in planning Awareness.

The ASUS will spend $250 on the week, its president, Marvin R. Bloos, told the AMS. The AMS agreed to pick up the rest of the estimated $1300 involved.

Franks said the programme which the ASUS plans has some advantages over the original idea of two-week courses centred around the problems of poverty, population and war. That proposal was "over-detailed and arrogant," he said, which was one reason for its defeat by the faculty board.

AMS vice-president Vic Bradley pointed out that unused funds from the Education Commission were available for Awareness.

Bloos told the AMS the programme would start February 8 with a panel discussion among Kingston civic leaders, and continue through February 16 with meetings featuring Norman Alcock, Stanley Burke, and the authors of The Poverty Report. On February 17 participants in the earlier sessions will meet in small groups to discuss questions in detail and suggest proposals to a larger meeting.

QUEEN,S READING WEEK FEB. 19 -27

(AOSC and AMS Travel)

NASSAU BAHAMAS

- Roundtrip Air Canada DC - 9; free bar
- 8 nights
- Double occupancy; free breakfast; private beach
- Golf, scuba diving, tennis
- All transfers between airport and hotel

$195.

CONTACT THE AMS OFFICE IMMEDIATELY!!!
DEPOSIT OF $100. REQUIRED BY JANUARY 30.

The drug guide

an antidote to excesses

From the Introduction to The Medicine Show:

"A good many of the ailments which the subtitle of this book (Some Plain Truths about Popular Products for Common Ailments' refers to as common . . . are more annoying than dangerous, more a bother than a threat . . . and it is likely that, left to our own devices, we would be quite capable of getting along with them during their comings and goings. But we are not left to our own devices. Indeed, we are all but overwhelmed with the devices of others, the popular products which have occupied the drugstores, which stare at us from advertisements in the newspapers and magazines, and which give us our instructions from the television screens they now command. Our peace is endangered if not our health, and at least the economic threat has become real.

. . . This book might be described as a restorative of balance and perspective, an antidote to excesses, and a purgative for much nonsense.

. . . But The Medicine Show is not primarily for doctors, nor even for patients. It is first of all for any man or woman who, transfixed before the commercial on his television screen, still can summon from within the will to question."

By Leslie Kaye

Except where noted, the scientific material for this article was taken from The Medicine Show, a Consumers Union publication.+

1. Acne treatment:

Careful washing is the best treatment for this problem, perhaps using a soap containing hexaclorophene or other anti-bacterial agents (Dial, Safeguard). Cut down on sweets and starchy and fatty foods, and also iodide and bromide drugs.

2. Antacids:

Indigestion may be an overt sign of a serious illness. If you have this condition persistently, see a doctor, especially if the indigestion is of one of these three types:

(a) an initial attack accompanied by severe or persistent pain;
(b) vomiting, especially any which brings up blood; and
(c) repeated episodes of indigestion. ("Repeated may mean as infrequently as a few times a month for several months.").

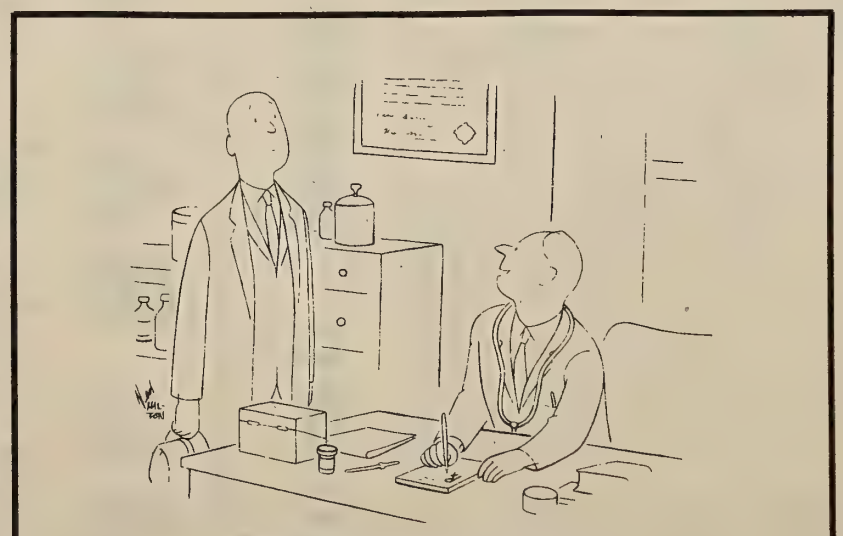
None of the overly-expensive combinations of indigestion products has ever proved any better in controlling gastric acidity than Precipitated Calcium Carbonate, commonly called precipitated chalk. Also sodium bicarbonate (sodium dihydrogen carbonate or baking soda) is a safe and effective remedy, if not used too frequently. If you want to use a drug store product, make sure it is as close to a simple antacid as possible (Tums and Rolaids).

3. Aspirin:

Consumers Union reports that all aspirin are virtually the same, except in price. Buffered aspirin and aspirin in combination with caffeine, phenacetin or acetaminophen offer no advantages over plain aspirin.

Consumer Reports (The Buying Guide Issue, Dec. '71) advises that you "buy a 25-tablet or 100-tablet bottle of the least expensive brand you can find. Open the bottle- make sure that it does not smell strongly like vinegar and that the tablets have not begun to crumble."

Aspirin has value in that it relieves the symptoms of a variety of ailments, reducting fever and aches in colds, grippe and flu; relieving tension headaches, muscle aches and rheumatism. For chronic rheumatic disorders it seems as effective as, and is safer than, hydrocortisone, prednisone, prednisolone, and other adrenal steroid hormones.



It does not relieve severe pain such as migraine. Some people find that it irritates their stomachs, particularly when used frequently. Others are allergic to it. Those people who do get stomach upsets from small doses of aspirin can reduce the chances of irritation by taking aspirin after eating or by drinking a full glass of water with each dose.

Phenacetin, which can be used as an aspirin substitute for those sensitive to aspirin, has the same effect in relieving pain and depressing fever, but not in suppressing inflammation. Prolonged doses (of 1 gram or 15 grains) may irreversibly or fatally damage the kidneys, and, in smaller doses, cause blood abnormalities.

Acetaminophen has the same properties as phenacetin and is also used as an aspirin substitute. So far no kidney injuries have been reported, but it is too early to be sure.

4. Cold treatments:

At present there is no known remedy for colds. Bed rest does keep you from spreading the germs, once you have a cold, even if there is no medical evidence

"Stop worrying, and get plenty of what used to be called fresh air."

packaged at most drugstores) is a good covering for the burn. If a blister forms, a firmly applied dressing of this gauze helps prevent rupture and guards against secondary infection.

It is recommended that propietary burn ointment never be used.

9. First aid for wounds;

Any antiseptic applied directly to the wound will probably do more harm than good. The best antiseptic is isopropyl (the cheaper) or ethyl alcohol. In concentrations ranging from 50 to 95 per cent, alcohols are probably as effective, least irritating, and most devoid of allergic effects as any other germicide in common use.

Gently cleanse the damaged area. Ordinary soap is a good antibacteriant, alcohol is a good germicide, applied around the wound, not on it. If the antiseptic will get in the wound, skip it. When the cleansing is complete, allow a scab to form. It helps protect the new cells during healing. If the scab may be damaged, use a light covering of sterile gauze and adhesive tape, and do not make it airtight.

10. Gargles for sore throat:

Never treat any sore throat with self-prescribed remedies; if the sore throat is accompanied by fever, see a doctor without delay.

The National Academy of Sciences National Research Council (USA) recommended that medical claims be eliminated from the advertising and labelling of mouth washes and gargles. They found that none of them has a therapeutic advantage over a saline solution or even hot water, and both of these are obviously cheaper and more available than store-bought remedies.

11. Laxatives;

Many physicians have encountered instances of ruptured appendix and peritonitis coming after a patient has taken a laxative for an attack of abdominal pain assumed to be due to constipation but actually arising from an acutely inflamed appendix.

Basically, most laxatives do more harm than good. See your doctor if you really think you need to use one, and follow his directions exactly.

The medical consultants of Consumers Union believe that the only laxatives that should be used for self-treatment of temporary constipation are milk of magnesia, cascara sagrade, or senna, which are available as USP or NF preparations.

12. Mouthwashes:

Plain water will do just as well as most commercial mouthwashes in washing away food debris. Continual use of mouthwashes containing alcohol (such as Scope, Listerine, and Pepsodent, etc.) can cause excessive drying of the mucous membrane of the oral cavity.

Proper brushing before bed will do much to reduce the "brown" mouth taste in the morning.

True halitosis is caused mainly by aromatic material (such as from onions, garlic, etc.) absorbed from the intestines, carried in the blood stream to the lungs, and excreted by the lungs into the breath. Obviously a mouthwash will not be able to clear up this kind of odour.

13 Sleeping pills:

Sleeplessness may be caused by caffeine beverages such as coffee, tea, Coca-Cola, or stimulant drugs such as the appetite depressant or mental depression combatant types. Missing a few hours; or even an entire night's sleep for these or any other reasons, will not have any temporary or permanently harmful effect on a healthy adolescent or adult.

Persistent inability to sleep may have its roots in some illness, which should be treated. The insomnia will clear up as the underlying disorder is relieved. Insomnia can also be a symptom of tensions, or even a neurosis, and should be treated by an expert in psychotherapy.

The most effective of the traditional hypnotic drugs prescribed for troublesome insomnia are the barbiturates and Chloral Hydrate. At the usual dosage (1½ grains several times a week) under a doctor's close supervision (because of the possibility of side effects) addiction is not at all likely. Addiction occurs when persons with personality disturbances increase the dosage themselves.

Where drugs are cheapest

(Based on a comparison of drug prices Monday at Londry's Drugs Ltd. (471 Princess), Lord's Supervalue Pharmacy (107 Princess), Thrifty Drug Store (106 Princess), Mahood's Drug Store (156 Princess) and vegetables and whole-wheat breads and cereals containing whole grains) and well-rested;

(b) keep the humidity at a comfortable level, around 15 to 30 per cent indoors; and

c) try to avoid contact with people with cold viruses.

People who smoke also seem to be more susceptible.

If you do have serious discomfort from a runny nose, I have found that Actifed antihistamine suppresses (as opposed to cures) this symptom.

5. Cough remedies;

There are more than 800 cough remedies on the market. As The Medicine Show puts it, "With sales of these products so high, it is remarkable that reliable evidence of the effectiveness of popular cough remedies is virtually impossible to find."

Coughing may be a nervous reaction, or the body's response to an irritation in the respiratory tract, etc. Often cough preparations do have a positive psychological effect (whatever the cough's cause). Patients who have been treated with such a "remedy" report fewer coughs although they are actually coughing the same amount by count.

6. Deodorants and antiperspirants:

To prevent body odour, deodorant soaps will impede bacterial action, and antiperspirants will also impede bacterial action and reduce sweating. Hexaclorophene, trichlorocarbonilide, or bithionol (antiseptics), added to a number of brands of soap reduce the rate of growth of bacteria, and leave small amounts of antiseptic on the skin, thus diminishing body odour somewhat more than comparable use of soaps without antiseptics.

Because of the controversy over the possible toxicity of the substance, it is probably advisable not to bathe very small infants with products containing hexaclorophene.

Most people find one of the aluminum-salt antiperspirants satisfactory, although it may be necessary to try several brands to tell which one is most effective for you as an individual.

Deodorants are no substitute for bathing, and, as I have said before, do not use a genital deodorant.

7. Eyewashes;

The best eyewash is one or two drops of cold tap water, placed in the lower lid with a clean eye dropper. The application of iced wet compresses for fifteen minutes or so will safely relieve 'tired' though otherwise healthy eyes.

A physician should be consulted if tired eye symptoms persist.

8. First aid for burns:

For first - and small second-degree burns (first-degree - reddening of the skin; second-degree - blisters) relieve the pain by immediate immersion in ice water or cold, running water. Cold, wet compresses may also be useful for as long as there is pain. Sterile gauze impregnated with petroleum jelly (specially

"To the common cold!"

Item and quantity	Cheapest Price	Savings over next cheapest price	Store where cheapest price found
1. Aspirin
500 ASA tablets	.66	.10	Super Save
100 Bayer tablets	.73	.05	Super Save
2. Cough syrup
Benylin DM (8 oz.)	2.59	.09	Super Save
Vicks Formula 44
7 oz.	1.93	.03	Lord's
3 oz.	1.06	.03	Thrifty
3. Vitamins
Multi-vitamins
250 tablets	3.97	.30	Lord's
100 tablets	1.77	.52	Thrifty
Vitamin C
100 100-mg tabs.	.56	.15	Thrifty
100 250-mg tabs.	1.27	.30	Thrifty
4. Actifed
24 tablets	1.48	.01	Super Save
100 tablets	5.79	.05	Lord's
5. Dial Soap (4.8 oz. bath size)	2-.53	.03	Lord's
6. Anti-perspirants
Ban (scented) 1.5 oz.	1.09	.10	Lord's
Ban (unscented)
1.5 oz.	1.19	.04	Super Save
Arrid (roll-on)
1.5 oz.	1.11	.12	Super Save
7. Isopropyl
Alcohol 16 oz.	.65	.04	Thrifty and Super Save
8. Toothpaste
Crest 8 3/4 oz.	1.29	.15	Lord's
Colgate MFP
8 oz.	1.33	.06	Thrifty
6 oz.	.96	.07	Thrifty

Notes:

1. The Ban roll-on deodorants were generally the same price for scented and unscented, except at Lord's, where the scented was cheaper than at any other store and the unscented was more expensive than at Thrifty or Super Save.
2. Toothpaste prices (which were supposed to be unit priced by now but aren't) are peculiar. Crest, for instance, still comes in fractions of an ounce, which makes its price hard to compare with other, comparable toothpastes. And the cheapest price per ounce for toothpastes (as for many other items) is not necessarily in the biggest tube. In the prices quoted for Colgate above, for instance, the price per ounce of the 6 oz. tube is less than the bigger tube. One store sold Colgate 4 1/2 oz. tubes for 99 cents and the 6 oz. tubes for $1.03.
3. The multi-vitamins priced may not all be exactly comparable, with some having one more vitamin beyond the basic seven found in most of the pills and with the exact amounts of each of the vitamins perhaps varying slightly. In all cases, the vitamins priced were the lowest priced multi-vitamins on the store shelves.
4. In general, the cheapest prices were found at the three discount drug stores, Lord's, Super Save and Thrifty. Mahood's and Londry's were found to be about the same for prices (and higher than at the other three,) with Londry's having the edge, at least for students, because they give a discount of 10 percent on all drugs sold to students. Even with the discount, however, their prices were found to be generally higher than at the discount stores.
5. You can save more than a dime by buying:
   - Crest, Ban (scented) and 250 tablet bottles of multi-vitamins at Lord's.
   - Vitamin C tablets and 100 tablet bottles of multi-vitamins at Thrifty.
   -Arrid roll-on (1.5 oz.) and 500 tablet bottles of ASA tablets at Super Save.
6. The three discount stores are quite close together, so it will save you some money if you do some comparative shopping.

(Data compiled by Leslie Kaye and Bill Johnston.)

contain antihistamines which may make you drowsy, as well as dizzy, uncoordinated, nervous, lose your appetite, urinate frequently, and may blur your vision.

Any persons with glaucoma should avoid preparations containing scopolamine (also called hyposcine).

14. Toothpaste:

Buy a fluoridated toothpaste for greater resistance to decay, and brush frequently and properly (your dentist can show you how). See a dentist every six months, whether or not you feel you need it.

The Medicine Show specifically recommends either Crest or Colgate with MFP; none of the others have been ADA approved.

I have found Sensodyne helpful in clearing up the problem of sensitive teeth. My dentist also suggests glycerine applied to the base of the teeth, where they meet the gums, after brushing, as another treatment.

15. Vitamins:

Although proper nturition should supply all the needed natural food nutrients, I feel that most students seem to neither eat nor cook properly. The four protective foor groups (eaten daily are:

(a) the milk group: children - 3 to 4 cups teenagers - 4 or more cups adults - 2 or more cups pregnant women - 4 or more cups nursing women - 6 or more cups

Cheese, ice cream and yogurt can replace part of the milk.

(b) meat group: 2 or more servings of such food as beef, veal, pork, lamb, poultry, fish, liver, or eggs.

(c) vegetable - fruit group: 4 or more servings, including at least one citrus or other fruit (or tomato juice) which is rich in Vitamin C, every day, and at least one dark green or deep yellow vegetable for Vitamin A every day.

(d) bread-cereals group: several servings of food made with whole or enriched grains (any bread, preferably whole grain, hot or cold cereals, macaroni, noodles or other pasts.)

The greatest amount of food value will be retained through careful cooking, using as little water and heat as possible.

+Ed. note: We recommend the purchase of The Medicine Show for its sane, sound and practical advice. (The Medicine Show, a Consumers Union publication, revised 1971, Mount Vernon, N.Y. $2.00).

Summary:

As far as I could determine, of the proprietary products sold as "remedies" for the common ailments mentioned above, most are either ineffectvie or can mask symptoms of serious illnesses. Your best bet is not to buy indiscriminately. Don't expect miracles.

Before . . . . . and . . . . . after

CLASSIFIEDS

ARTSCI 74 - this is the chance of your lifetime. Come on out and help build our snow sculpture on Sunday, January 23 at 3 p.m. So we'll see you at the north side of Grant Hall. Support your year.

INTERESTED IN sharing blues, pop, rock, r & b sheet music? Call Mike Walker, 544-7078.

TO RENT: two large single furnished bedrooms with shared bathroom. Suitable for two friends. Close to campus. No cooking. $13 each. 546-9314.

LOST: last week, half-grown black male kitten, 5½ months, "Bear." Sorely missed. Please call 544-5841.

LOST: young bright orange tomcat missing centre Union, Saturday night, wearing red collar with Kingston phone number. Call 542-1933.

BERTHA'S BROTHEL is now incorporating. Need spare time work? Contact Kent the Pimp on the Wolfe Island Ferry or Stu the Heavy at 544-7013.

ROOF over two single apartments, each with kitchen and bath, wanted for occupancy Sept. '72. Call Martha 549-0603 or Virginia 544-8106.

ROOMMATE WANTED to share furnished three-bedroom apartment with two other girls. $50 monthly plus utilities. 238 Victoria, apt. 3, 546-6752.

FESTIVAL FILM-MAKERS: please submit finished film to Hildi Adelhelm, 544-0175, or Doug Vallery, 542-3911, by Monday, January 24.

HI BOO, and Sammy

WANTED: 8-bedroom house for next year, beginning May 1972. Call Cathy 544-8399, or Heather 544-8386, or Ginny 544-8388, or Cathy 5448307.

LARRY and Steve's exotic food market. Bargain parsnips and rutabagas. Home grown specialty. Limited supply. 382 Alfred Street, apt. 2. 542-4082.

A SINGLE ROOM for rent. Four students in house need a fifth. Phone 549-0044.

THIS NOTICE is to inform "Random Number" and O.T.H. (On The Hustle) and all of our other invited guests that the Surprise Bash on January 22 is for real. Once more, we invite all of the invited guests, and we assure you that you will be surprised by our mutual acquaintances at Saturnalia No. 6. The Den of Iniquity.

LOST in Capitol Theatre or downtown, one pair brown-rimmed glasses. If found please phone 544-7726.

OCONTO - Girls' summer camp located near Kingston requires female counsellors, minimum age 19, for July and August employment. All regular summer activities carried on. For staff application contact Mrs. C. Labbett, 3 Pine Forest Road, Toronto 12.

AUSTRALIA needs teachers now. Sick of hassling smog, unemployment? Growing needs, all subject areas, For full information send $1 to Intl. Teachers Placement Bureau, PO Box 19007, Sacramento, California 95819.

SCHLITZ MIT FRITZ, Saturday, January 22. Skating party beforehand 7:00 - 8:30, arena.

SYNCHRO IS SOON

3600 111 Xerox Duplicator

If you require a 'presentation quality' reproduction for letters, theses or any bulk copy work, your on-campus typing service has a 3600 111 Xerox capable of producing such copy for as little as 1½c per copy (from same original) on runs of over 100. A 720 Xerox and a Ditto Machine are also available.

The Student Typing Service

STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

Festival '72

A festival for the artistic expression of Queen's Students

FEB. 3-6, UNION

One piece of art
more or less,
doesn't count
unless you've Experienced it yourself

Share your artwork, sculptures, batik, tapestries, pottery photography with others in Festival '72 exhibit February 3rd - 6th

Festival workshops can't run without you Interest (not necessarily expert) people needed to help set up and demonstrate:
macrame
clay work metal work leather work batik collage making contact:

Carol Rogers 549-0858
Bill Sweedish 544-9542

FILM MAKERS

To all those persons making films for the Arts Festival:

Please submit your finished film to Hildi Adelhelm, 544-0175 or Doug Vallery, 542-3911 by Monday January 24th.

The Arts Festival needs you!

If you are interested in dancing in the Arts Festival if you have a number prepared, if you are trained or just interested in dance, please contact Lizza at 544-0175. The arts festival has never before had a dance section before. Let's make it a first this year!

THE VEGAS VICEROY

The Commerce Society Presents...

CASINO ROYALE RAFFLE

FIRST PRIZE - Eight Fantastic Daze in Las Vegas for Two
- During Reading Week (Feb. 19-26)
- All Expenses Paid - $500 Spending Money
- Flight leaves Montreal or Toronto February 19, Returns 26
- Or $1,000 cash

SECOND PRIZE - $300 Stereo
THIRD PRIZE - Twenty Albums of YOUR Choice

WATCH FOR THE VEGA$ VICEROY AND CA$INO CAL AND FOR THE COMMERCE CAMPUS CASINO, TICKETS $1

Gaels Romp 13-1 Over Carleton

By Bruce McLeod

How the mighty are fallen! The once-proud Carleton Ravens, leaders of the OQAA Eastern Division last year, bowed tamely to a vastly superior Queen's team on Tuesday night at the Jock Harty arena.

A shadow of the powerhouse of last year, without almost all of their former stars, the Carleton team was no competition from the start, and many of the spectators were leaving halfway through the third period.

Morris Mott once again led the Gaels, with four goals and two assists. Mirroring his accomplishment was Colin Loudon, who broke out of a one-game scoring slump with two goals and four assists.

John Smith was another effective performer for the Gaels, contributing two goals and three assists. Altogether, the line of Mott, Smith and Galt amassed 14 scoring points. Galt, Douglas, Cameron, Gross and Goulet added singles.

Mott's first goal, the Gaels' third, was a low, screened drive from the point, but his other three were obtained when the Carleton defence allowed him to swoop in front of the net unmolested.

This typified the efforts, or lack of them, on the part of the Raven team. After Queen's pumped in three goals within little more than three minutes of the second period, to make the score 6-0, Raven starting goalie Jeff Walker was replaced by his backup.

But his replacement had no better luck with his teammates - it took Gaels only 13 seconds to score on him, as Murray Douglas picked up a rebound off the boards and fired it over the goalie's shoulder. The score was 3-0 after the first period, and 10-0 after two, as the Gaels took complete control.

For the most part, the Gaels bore their superiority well, controlling the play with poise and effective passing. But it was a little disturbing to see them descend to the level of their opponents from time to time.

Often, it was only the play of the opposition that made them look good, and they were often guilty of sloppy clearing in their own end. This was mostly noticeable toward the end, when the score mounted, and the Gaels began to realize they could get away with almost anything.

The Gaels face the toughest part of their schedule in the coming month with games against league leading York Yeomen and Toronto Blues. More play of this calibre will be needed from all the players if they are to keep their eye on first place.

Still, this is turning into a well-balanced team, and their chances must be rated as high.

How About..

How about some coordination between the OUAA and the OWIAA in scheduling. There is no reason that the men's and women's basketball teams couldn't play doubleheaders - except that when one's at home, the other's away, etc., etc., etc.

Might make more sense for road trips, too. Fifteen people on a 47-seat bus isn't exactly optimal use of space, and we all know what the money situation is like these days.

Same thing for hockey, and for several other sports as well - not for every game or road trip, mind you, but certainly for some of them. Might make the post-game victory celebrations a lot more fun, too.

Of course, that might be what some people are worried about, given the awful, animal nature of Queen's Jocks. (To be on the safe side, we won't bother to differentiate these beasties -- not that it's possible.)

Trackmen 2nd Indoors

Queen's track team opened its winter season last Saturday in the York Invitational Meet, finishing second behind perennial powerhouse Waterloo.

Sprinter Hugh Fraser led the thinclads with a first place finish in the 50m. sprint. His time of 5.6 seconds was only 0.2 seconds off the world mark. Dave Jarvis also struck gold with a 400m victory in a time of 52.3 seconds. Jarvis and Fraser then joined Bob Milne and Brian Aiken to wrap up the 400mx4 relay event in the relatively slow time of 3:29.3.

Freshman Glen Milliagan added second place points with a 21'11¼" effort in the long jump, while soccer refugee Gord Taylor managed a 6.1 showing in the 50m. Veteran Bob Milne put forth a strong effort in the 1500m run,

Hugh Fraser -faster and faster but was forced to settle for fifth in a time of 4:03.8.

Nordic Competition

Skigaels Show Well

This past weekend the men's nordic ski team competed in the Gatineau Zone Championships held at Camp Fortune. Despite the 10 below temperature (at race time) the times were fairly fast and Queen's placed skiers in every class entered. The course was cut from a 16 to a 11 km. race due to the weather. Dave Campbell had the best team time and the second best time of the day with 49.26 min., which gave him a first in Senior B. Peter Cook placed third with a time of 55.02 min. and Rick Lake, another Queen's veteran, was only 5 seconds back at 55.07 min. After completing a good first lap of 26.38 min., Al Maddox broke a ski second time around and was unable to finish. With similar bad luck, Walter Kubanek, a rookie in his first cross-country race also broke a ski on his second lap.

In Senior C, over the same course, Chris Gilliatt placed second with a time of 53.40 min. The biggest surprise of the day was Ross Wilson's third place finish with a time of 54.09 min., also the third best team time. Ron Olson in his third cross-country race ever finished with a time of 61.30 min. and Peter Kopp was right behind him at 62.03 min.

Since nordic skiing also includes jumping, Queen's entered four men in the jumping meet also held at Camp Fortune in the afternoon. Peter Kopp looks like the team's best jumper with jumps or about 85 ft. Dave Campbell also had some good jumps at around 75 ft. Peter Cook and Chris Gilliatt were the other two jumpers going approximately 65 ft. Though no medals were won it was a fairly successful afternoon, with success being measured by the ability to go off the jump and escape alive.

With the O.U.A.A. only a week away, the team seems to be in good shape with a definite shot at the title. Though Laurentian has a formidable racing team the jumping could be the deciding factor.

Gaels 11 OldBoys 7

Mott A Coach???

by Bruce McLeod

Queen's Golden Gaels squeaked by a powerful squad of former Queen's hockey greats at Jock Harty Arena on Saturday afternoon. The younger Gaels did their best, but it was obvious to the fans that the Old Boys were just holding back, and could have taken over at any time. They scored first and then, as a gesture of contempt, allowed the Gaels to build up a 9-2 lead before a final surge put them in their place. One of the Old Boys was heard to remark, "We didn't want to be too hard on them, as they had just finished another game." Fie on those who say different.

Scoring for the old boys were former stars Billy Colvin, with three goals, Jim "Teddy Bear" Tait, "Dashing Doug" Hunt, Petie Joe Bob Grossi and Peter Quinn. They were joined by such lesser lights as "Bullet" Armitage, John "The Enforcer" Quayle, Norm "Cinci" Douglas, and one "Elbows" Carnegie.

Morris Mott showed impressive style behind the bench in his coaching debut, with the aid of Clyde Harris who, after a token appearance in net, showed that he was really born to the offence.

Support Your Teams

St. Lawrence Parks Commission

Summer Employment At

OLD FORT HENRY

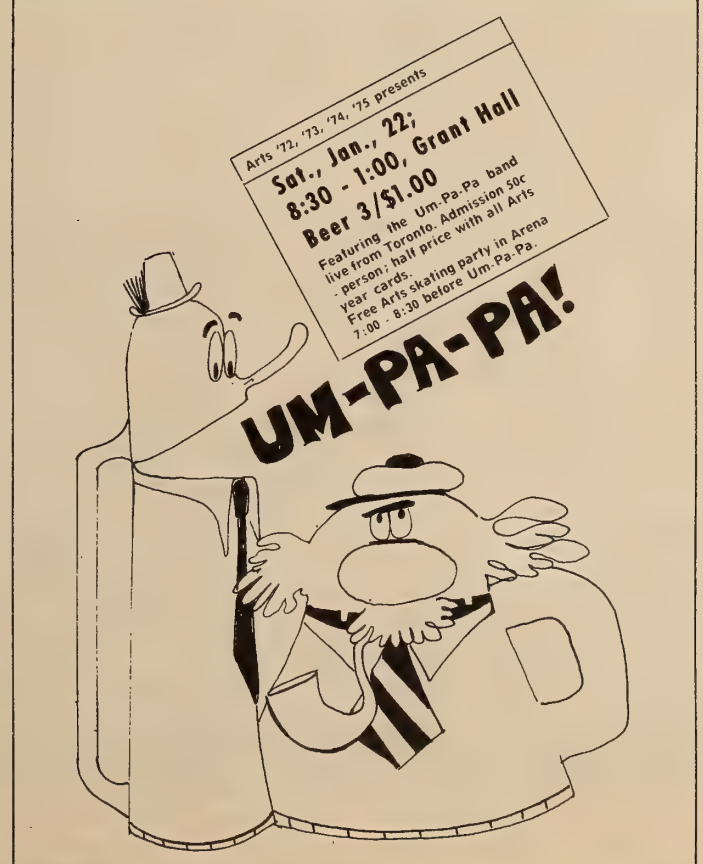
Kingston, Ontario

The internationally known Fort Henry Guard is a CIVILIAN unit dedicated to the creation of a living picture of British Army garrison activities during the nineteenth century. Find out about this unique summer job at an

Information and Films Night

describing the

FORT HENRY GUARD



Thursday, January 20th at 7pm

Students' Memorial Union

(small common room, second floor)

Members of the guard must be eighteen years of age by next spring, and at least 5'11" tall, (height restriction not applicable to members of the band).

Application forms available at the Placement Office, 27 Queen's Crescent. Sign-ups for interviews begin on January 17th, and campus interviews are being held on January 24, 25, 26, and 27.

PIZZA FACTORY

544-1221

Open Tues. - Sun.

Free delivery within city limits

Elrond College

Application forms are available until January 24 at the Library, Union, Phys Ed Centre, meal lines or from Elrond House, 137 Collingwood. Come over and visit or call 547-5866 for more info.

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 37
Thursday, January 20, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

Opinion:

More information needed on underground parking plan

Monday night at Outer Council, AMS Vice President Victor Bradley revealed that he had been asked to consult the AMS for an opinion on building a parking garage under lower campus. Outer Council refused to make a definite comment, lacking any advance warning or detailed information other than what Bradley was able to give. It seems rather naive that Bradley would expect council to comment on such short notice, as the issue is of considerable importance and of practical and emotional concern to many students. It also seems rather unfortunate that the administration should spring this on the campus with so little warning.

Much of the opposition at Outer Council was based on fears that this underground garage would make a very nice foundation for some future above-ground building. All kinds of assurances have been made that a building will never be built above ground on the lower campus, but it seems possible that the garage could (or should) be designed so that it is incapable of supporting an above-ground structure. If we had an architect's or engineer's assurance that this is the case with the present plan, this fear could possibly be dispelled. But, we have not had such an assurance and maybe none can be given. So the suspicions must linger.

We do not oppose underground parking in general, and possibly not even this project if adequate guarantees are given. In addition to the assurance that the garage could not be used as a base for future building, assurances are needed that the lower campus will be restored, and will be torn up for only a short time. Bradley told council that Vice-Principal (Admin.) R.J. Kennedy had assured him that the lower campus would be restored to its present state with an improved playing field, but there is a potential contradiction which no one noticed at the meeting. We were assured that the band of trees along the south edge of the campus would not be disturbed, but we were also told that the entrance and exit of the garage would be onto Stuart Street -- i.e. through this band of trees.

Apparently Kennedy has stated the project should take a year or a little longer to complete. During this time the lower campus will be torn up and unavilable for any other use. As the area is much used for recreation, this is a long time to be deprived of its use, even if it will be restored to a better condition at the end of this time. The disturbing prospect is that the project, like most other university construction, will take about twice as long to complete as expected. The prospect of losing the lower campus for two years or more is clearly unacceptable. Some way must be found to ensure that the project is completed on schedule, but we have had no suggestion that such a way has been found.

The other question to which Bradley was unable to pass along a satisfactory answer was the question of why parking could not be incorporated into new buildings as they are built. This would involve adding a level or two under these buildings for underground parking. The only answer was that parking cannot be financed along with other buildings and must be paid for separately. But does this mean that parking must be built separately? The Arts-Social Sciences Complex was mentioned, but it was pointed out that plans were too far advanced to permit changes at this point. Fair enough, but why wasn't parking included when these plans were drawn up. The parking problem has been around for quite a while. As a matter of fact, the original information released when the complex was first discussed a few years ago indicated that underground parking would be a part of the complex, but this appears to have vanished. (Why?)

The present proposal seems to have been precipatated by a government decision to proceed with the new medical centre, although this decision has not been announced to our knowledge. Why can't parking be included in (under) part of this centre, especially since much of the parking is for the use of users of the centre. We seem to recall that the original ideas for this complex also included parking facilities.

In summary, we do not necessarily oppose the projected project, but adquate explanations and assurances which we feel are vital have not been given so far. The haste in the matter is probably responsible for this state of affairs, but it in no way justifies it. As Kennedy has obviously known about the plan for some time (he has full architect's drawings) it is curious that we have just now heard about it. It is unfortunate that the growing climate of student-faculty-administration cooperation and consultation has apparently been thwarted by this presentation of what appears to be a fait accompli.

Hopefully the meeting tonight will clear the air. It needs it!

John and Charlie

Should students think about the world's problems ?

Dear Editors:

The failure of Professors Stayer and McLay to comprehend the intention of the Coleman-Franks motion, which was defeated in the Faculty Board of Arts and Science on December 10, 1971, leaves me somewhat disturbed. They ascribe to me execrable pedagogical errors which I disavowed at least thirty years ago. Presumably, this was my fault because of the maladroit form of the original motion. However, the revised motion which was defeated 43 to 31 (with only one student voting against it) asked the Faculty to sponsor a set of six lectures, on an experimental basis this term, intended to provoke informed discussion about poverty, conflict and pollution. To characterize this modest proposal as "messianic and authoritarian" is pure nonsense. Since Professor McLay was not at the Board meeting, there was little reason for him personally to take Mr. Johnston's concluding diatribe so seriously. Professor Stayer makes a minor contribution to my understanding of the psychology of the Board's decision but not of its logic.

Professor Stayer's theological insights are usually correct and the dangers about which he warns us in his letter are of some significance even though almost totally irrelevant in this instance. However, on more than one occasion previously, Professor Stayer has warned the Faculty Board of messianic dangers attendant upon a particular proposed course of action. Always he concludes that nothing can or should be done, that the Faculty or Department should continue on its perfect course of the past decades. On previous occasions I was delighted to have high-sounding reasons for inaction and complacently agreed with him. But now we part company, I fear. In my opinion - an opinion which was confirmed by Gunnar Myrdahl's quiet forceful presence at Queen's last term - the very survival of human beings in any significant sense of the word "human" is now seriously in question. Mr. Johnston began his editorial of December 14 with the key question, a question implicit in my motion, a question to which neither Professor Stayer nor Professor McLay address themselves: "Does Queen's, as a university, have a responsibility for the promotion of decent human conditions?" Some of my colleagues would say that this is not part of a "scholar's" task as such and, therefore, it is not the responsibility of a university. Perhaps Professors Stayer and McLay hold this a view. The information which Mr. Johnston had about the debate in the Faculty of Arts and Science. Professors McLay and Stayer say little which could disabuse Mr. Johnston of his error - if, indeed, he is in error.

However, Professor Stayer does say "The only contribution the university can make to basic human problems is to think about them, - even though this is not enough". Exactly! To stimulate such thought was precisely the central purpose of our motion. So Professor Stayer should back us to the hilt.

Unhappily, he does not. Despite his theological acumen, Professor Stayer goes off half-cocked about "coercion". There is much woolly thinking about this topic among staff and students which derives from John Dewey and Dr. Spock. Presumably, the fact that I enforce with unrelenting rigor the decision of the Mathematics Department that all Math Majors must study the salient facts of analysis and algebra is, in Professor Stayer's view, ample evidence of my authoritarian character. Since, according to Professor Clarke, there are no "salient facts", it also proves I am a reactionary pedagogical heretic. But note that on p. 167 of the Calendar of the Faculty, one can read the following draconian regulation "A student who selects history as his subject of major concentration must take ten courses in history . . .at least eight of the ten must be seminar courses". This sounds appallingly utopian and authoritarian. Doubtless, Professor Stayer is leading an insurrection to defend the rights of history majors who do not like seminars.

Professor Stayer is a sufficiently acute historian to know that coercion is a necessary element of all societies. I, therefore, infer that he has merely introduced a red-herring in order to attract support from confused liberals among staff and students. I share all of his hesitancies about "required" courses. But when I discussed this particular issue with one hundred or more students, 9 out of 10 upperclassmen were categorical "If the University takes human problems seriously, there will be an element of compulsion in the programme". I may be old and reactionary and I do not automatically bow to student opinion, but I have more respect for it than was manifest by the Faculty Board.

The question which I hope will be debated in the Journal, in the Senate and in Faculty Boards is the following "Is it as important that all students at Queen's think seriously about the most crucial problems bearing on the survival of human beings as it is that all Maths Majors study calculus?"

If the answer to this question is yes, then some radical changes are inevitable. To paraphrase Mr. Johnston's editorial: We shall be less rigid when it comes to making changes. . .we shall have to leave our comfortable departmentalized existences. . .we shall no longer be content to stick to the narrow fields in which we are knowledgeable without concern for the social relevance of what we are doing.

-John Coleman,
Head, Department of Mathematics.

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman.
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Special thanks this issue to news staff Bob Mutrie, Jane Douglas, Sue Bourbonniere, and Rachael Edwards.

The word "germless" in the Tuesday centre-spread should read "gormless", a Yorkshire word meaning "stupid". And "I want a wife" was LNS material.

Queen's
Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 38 Fri., Jan. 21, 1972

Snowball coming

That white stuff on the ground (sometimes) is snow. It falls in honour of Snowball Week, which begins Sunday, and the first great event is Monday night's smoker (from 8:30 to midnight in the Union). Tuesday is Activity Night, Wednesday is Athletic Night (or a dance), and so the week goes. Buttons and programmes are on sale from 1;:30 to 3:30 in the Union, and in residence supper lines.

Commerce raffle

The Vegas Viceroy and Casino Cal will be on campus this weekend, making sure everybody knows about the Casino Royale Raffle. First prize is eight days in Las Vegas for two, during reading week, with all expenses paid and five hundred dollars in spending money. Second prize, a $300 stereo set; third prize, twenty record albums. Tickets are $1 from commerce students, since the Commerce Society is sponsoring the raffle.

Senate committee finds Tech Supplies outdated

Tech Supplies does a good job, but this is not enough, a senate committee report concludes.

The report of the "task force on bookstores" will go to the university senate next Thursday and then public discussion of its comments will be invited. Copies will be distributed on campus on Monday.

It says most criticisms of Technical Supplies, the present bookstore in Clark Hall, are unfounded. "In its avowed goal of keeping text prices down, the store is the best in Canada."

And, the report says, shortages and delays in textbook stock are usually the fault of the professors who ordered too few books or ordered them too late.

"Other services in the store are limited," the report says, "because the deliberate policy is to make the sale of textbooks the prime concern."

But in spite of admirable textbook service, the committee's report summarizes, the present bookstore service at Queen's is not what is needed:

"The student and faculty surveys have shown what the campus wants, and this is consistent with what the trends in book use at the university show it needs.

"Technical Supplies as it is, is incapable of meeting either criterion. In the absence of other factors then, Queen's University should replace Technical Supplies with a larger, more comprehensive bookstore."

The 89-page draft report was written by a ten-member committee chaired by graduate student senator Tim Garrard. Its secretary, and the person chiefly responsible for compiling the report's contents, was Arts and Science Undergraduate Society vice-president Nancy Hoey.

The committee conducted surveys and did studies on the present operation of Tech Supplies and on bookstore services which people on campus want. Based on them, it made recommendations for new bookstore services.

The most extensive alternative suggested is "a comprehensive campus bookstore" which would offer for sale general interest books, fiction, light reading and magazines as well as textbooks, academic books, stationery, gifts and general merchandise.

Such a bookstore might compete more directly with Kingston merchants than Tech Supplies now does, the report points out. "It is not the proper role of a campus bookstore to sell miscellaneous items for no other reason than to compete with Kingston merchants; the only justification can be to meet campus needs while subsidizing in part the rest of the store."

It also says such a store will need more space than is available in Clark Hall, and suggests that the 21,600 square feet tentatively assigned for bookstore space in the new university centre would be "adequate . . . but not ample".

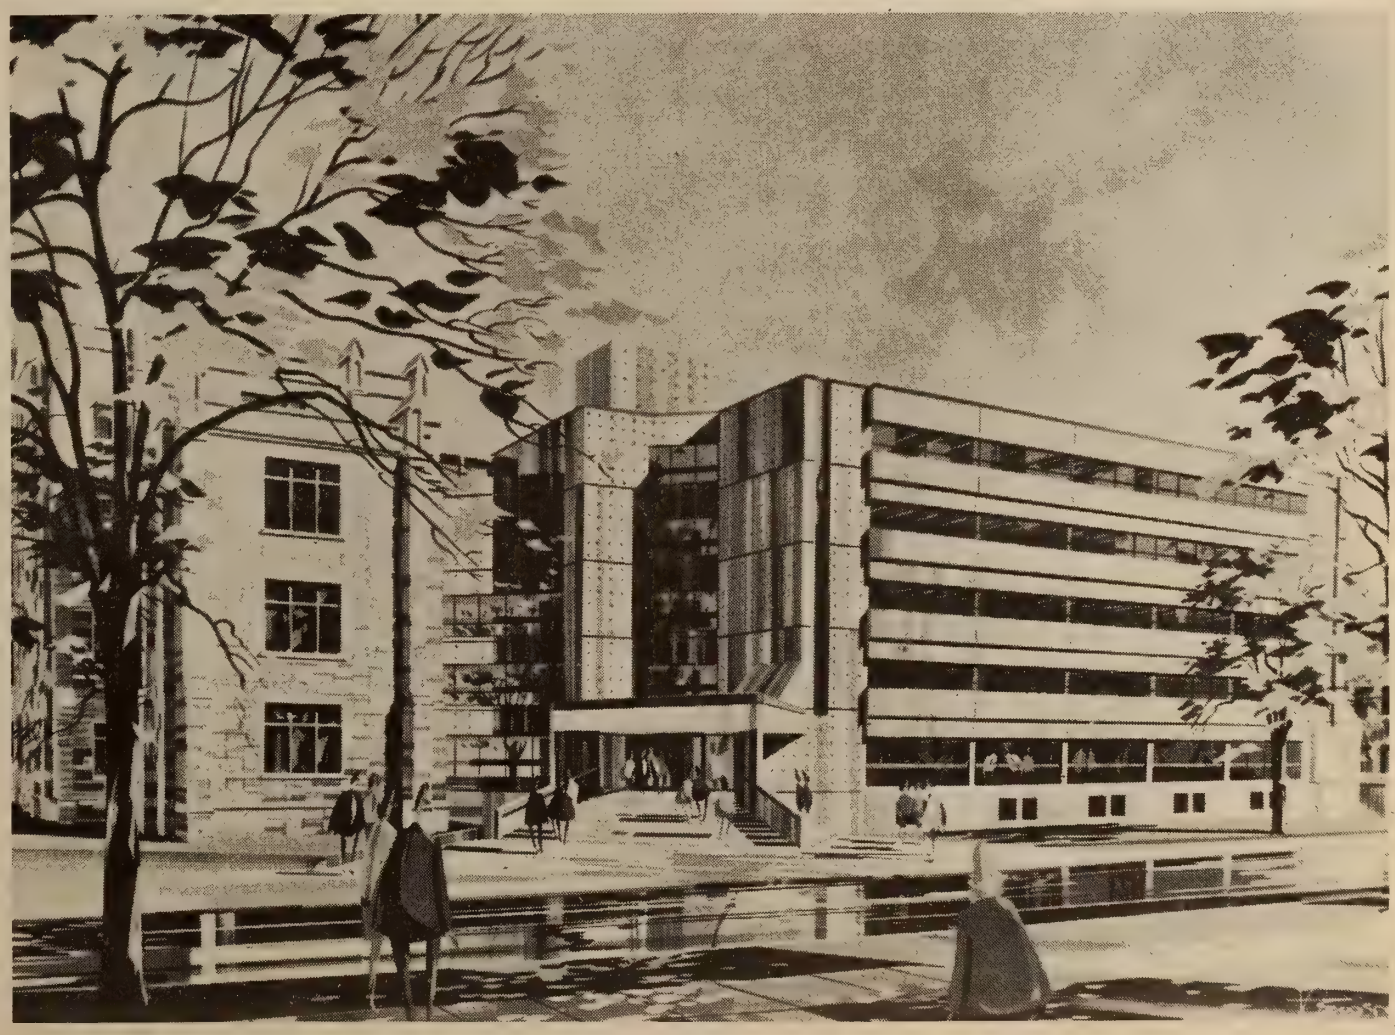
Expanding the campus bookstore from a purely textbook-oriented service into a full bookstore would mean a rise in administrative costs, around five per cent on textbook prices, the report says.

If the bookstore had to pay rent on its space in the new university centre, there might be a further seven per cent increase, it continues.

Some of this rise might be offset by the profits made on gifts and general merchandise, however, producing a net increase probably between five and ten per cent.

The report suggests, as one alternative to such a full bookstore, a continued textbook service, but points out, "This alternative, however, is not what the students or faculty want, price considerations aside."

The third alternative is a compromise: "a half-measure between the first two". Such a store would include a smaller selection of most of the things to be found in a comprehensive bookstore.



But it "would be less economical than a comprehensive store" and, the report says, would be preferable only if a full-size store were impossible for some reason.

Early in the report, the committee traces the growth of Tech Supplies, beginning in 1909 with two engineering students selling supplies in "a cranny in Fleming Hall".

It then describes the present system by which Tech Supplies stocks its books, and graphs show the relationship between the date professors submit booklists and the date the books arrive. "When the dates when professors submitted their orders . . . are compared with the ordering delays . . . one principal cause for books being available when the students need them becomes obvious: professors are not submitting their orders to the bookstore early enough."

Another cause, it says, is professors' inability to estimate the number of students they will have. "In our sampling, which fell far short of considering all the courses taught at Queen's, we discovered about 4700 unsold sets of books, and 330 potentially disgruntled students for whom there were no texts."

Finally the report summarizes the results of student surveys taken on use of Tech Supplies, in which the committee found, among other things, that 95 per cent of students buy their textbooks at Technical Supplies.

The university has released this architect's sketch of the new geology building, to be constructed south of and attached to Miller Hall. Occupancy is expected in spring 1973; construction of the $1.2 million building will begin late this month. The five-storey structure will contain 43,000 square feet of

CAMPUS ELECTIONS

February 8,9,10 (except law, meds, theology

NOMINATIONS:

AMS

Nominations must have the signatures of 200 AMS members and must be in the AMS Office by 5:00 pm Friday Jan 28-72.

President/Vice President (team)

Referenda

Requests for referenda will be accepted until the Outer Council meeting Monday Jan 31-72. Requests require 200 signatures of AMS members.

Referenda are presently scheduled on the questions of 1- retaining the $3 concert fee; 2- retaining the $4 Tricolor fee; 3- increasing the university centre fee to $10 4- raising the AMS fee to $9.

ASUS

President/Vice President (team)
Secretary
Treasurer
9 AMS Reps
3 Senators (2 - 2 year terms; 1 - 1 year term)

Nominations must have the signatures of 25 ASUS members and an acceptance by the candidate. They will be accepted until 7:00 pm Jan 30-72 by Marv Bloos, Nancy Hoey, or Doug Donald.

COMMERCE SOCIETY

President — Vice-President
Secretary — Treasurer
Athletic Stick — Social Convenor
AMS Junior Rep — AMS Senior Rep
Senator (2 year term - candidate must be in 1st or 2nd year)

Nominations will be accepted until 5 pm Wed Feb 2-72 at Carl Lawrence's Office in Dunning Hall. They require the signatures of 10 Commerce students.

GRAD SOCIETY

President
Vice-President
Treasurer
Secretary
3 AMS Reps
Senator (2 year term)

Nominations for all positions except senator may be made at the Annual General Meeting to be held at 8:00 pm Tues Feb 1-72 at Grad House. Nominations for senator require 5 signatures. Forms are available in room 262B Stirling Hall (phone 3198).

ENGSOC

President (must currently be in 3rd year)
Vice-Pres (must currently be in 3rd year)
Secretary (must currently be in 2nd year)
Treasurer (must currently be in 2nd year)
Development Committee Chairman
(must currently be in 1st, 2nd or 3rd year)
Senator (2 year term - must currently be in 1st or 2nd year)

Nominations require the signatures of 50 1st, 2nd, or 3rd year EngSoc members. They may be submitted to the EngSoc Office (Clark Hall 1-4pm) until Mon Jan 31-72 at 4pm. If there are fewer than two candidates for a position additional nominations will be accepted at the nomination meeting Monday Jan 31 at 7 pm in Stirling C. See Golden Words Wed Jan 19 for further details.

REHAB, NURSING see this year's executive for details

NOTE: Due to the scheduling of the elections this year and the need to provide proper publicity, nomination deadlines CANNOT be extended.

Report of Wright Commission is leaked prematurely

By Jennifer Grass

Mass education and state control of the post-secondary educational system are the main concerns of the "Wright Commission" report, leaked Tuesday by The Globe and Mail and scheduled for official release next week by the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario.

The report will go to public hearings, and is to be presented in final form to the provincial government in June.

In April 1969, William Davis, then minister of education, established the commission -- including its chairman, Douglas Wright, and Queen's principal Dr. John J. Deutsch -- to provide guidelines for future higher education in Ontario. The commission is composed of seven teachers and administrators, one student, and five outsiders -- from labour, business and the legal profession. All 13 members have been involved with universities or community colleges at some time.

The report was formulated on the basis of a series of 25 public hearings across the province, which drew 334 briefs. Private citizens and major institutions were all asked to contribute. A committee of Queen's students, headed by John Blanchard, presented a brief last spring.

The Wright Commission report will be printed in magazine form and distributed throughout Ontario for the public to read. The commission then will open a series of hearings to get reactions to their proposals.

One commission recommendation is greater government control of all areas of higher education.

Two new categories will be brought under the department of colleges and universities: the first includes institutions established by the government for specific purposes, such as the Niagara School of Horticulture, police colleges, the colleges of agricultural technology, teachers colleges, and schools of nursing, and the second includes libraries, museums, threatres and art galleries.

The report says the reason for this recommendation was "to provide the mechanism for increased participation of libraries, museums, theatres and art galleries in post-secondary education; to increase the accessibility to learning of all citizens; and to facilitate the necessary coordination and planning of these facilities, as well as their funding, by a province-wide body".

The report also says, "The time has come for clear definition of jurisdiction and responsibilities of the various component elements of post-secondary education and their incorporation in appropriate legislation."

In response to this need, a new bureaucracy under the minister of colleges and universities would be set up, consisting of three coordinating boards: one for universities, another for colleges, and a third for the two new categories of institution. These would be responsible to a senior advisory committee of 13 members appointed by the provincial cabinet.

The committee would include a fulltime chairman, six members of the public nominated by community organizations, and six members nominated by the faculty, student and staff organizations of post-secondary educational institutions. No university presidents or vice-presidents would be eligible to sit on it.

Proposed jurisdiction of the committee is wide. It would have the power to establish new faculties and do away with old ones, at both graduate and undergraduate levels. The policy on general admissions would also be established there. But, most important, it would advise the government on allocation of funds among the various sectors of post-secondary education.

The massive reorganization of higher education which the report recommends is aimed at making education more available to the average citizen, no matter what his age or previous schooling.

It recommends that formal admission requirements of post-secondary institutions be abolished for students who have left full-time education for two years. (Queen's, and most other universities, have such "mature student" programmes on a limited basis now.)

An education plan should be instituted for all workers, professional or otherwise, so they could take part of their salary increases in education leaves, the Wright Commission suggests.

It is also suggested that degrees be awarded "not only for work accomplished within the walls of our educational institutions; they should also be available on evidence of accomplishment achieved by individuals not formally associated with a university or a college."

And to deal with the status value of degrees and diplomas, colleges of applied arts and technology should be given the right to grant degrees of Bachelor of Technology and Bachelor of Applied Arts to students after three years there.

The establishment of satellite campuses of existing universities is recommended for communities which presently have neither universities nor colleges and are not close enough for commuting; Brantford, Chatham and Orillia are suggested sites.

Other proposals include the quotas and deadlines for the hiring of more female academic staff.

By 1976 as least as many women should hold tenured positions as now hold non-tenured positions, it suggests. By 1981, the proportion of male and female faculty at every level in Ontario universities should "at least equal the proportion of males and females receiving doctoral degrees in Canada in 1971."

According to a special section of the Wright report, all post-secondary educational programmes now available in English should eventually be offered in French as well.

The section also recommends special grants for French-language and bilingual institutions to offset their higher costs.

It proposes the allocation of research funds for French-language and cultural study. These funds would be available to any institution in the province offering French-language programmes.

The commission makes a serious assault upon doctors and dentists. It suggests elimination of degrees as their main method of certification, and replacing them with tests to establish competence.

In addition, any professional should have to pass a set of tests every ten years to keep his licence, the report says.

It recommends the establishment in each profession of a "spectrum of practitioners" which would include specialists, general practitioners, paraprofessionals, technicians, assistants and aides. Next, it suggests a stepladder of transfer courses to allow people in each group to climb to a higher professional status.

The cost of education would be shifted directly to the student as the educational consumer.

For the first three years, a student would pay half the cost of his teaching if his family income is more than $10,000, and none if it is less than $7500, with a sliding scale between.

Loans for further education would be available, repayable on a scale geared to income over 15 years. After that the loan would be forgiven.

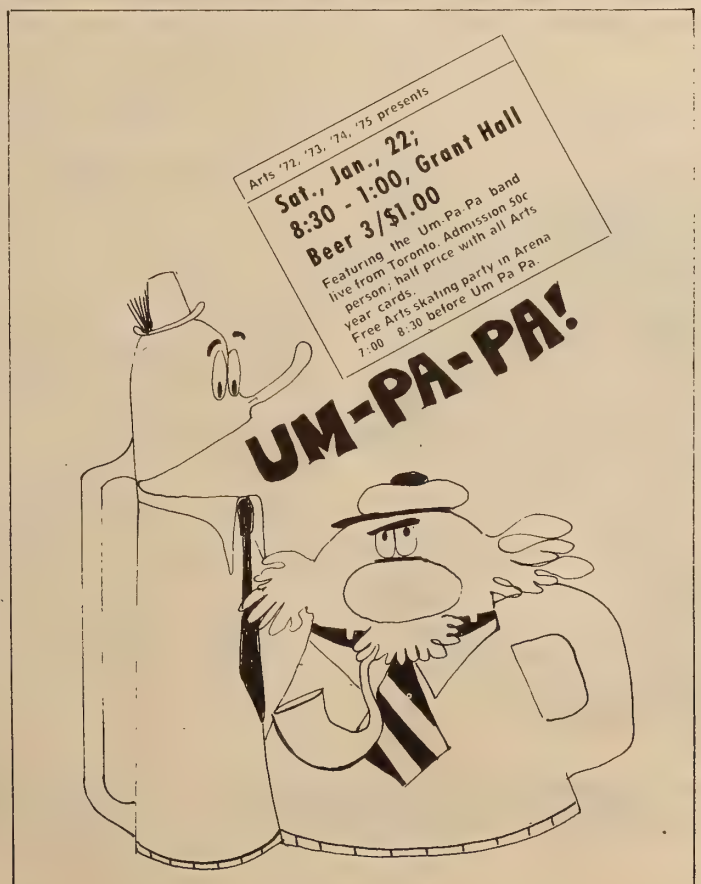
The Wright report puts forward 72 recommendations on which there will be general debate. But whatever the government does will begin to affect the lives of 180,000 full-time students in post-secondary education, and almost as many more part-time students.

WANTED: 8 bedroom house for next year beginning May 72. Call Cathy 544-8399 or Heather 544-8386 or Ginny 544-8388 or Cathy 544-8307.

FESTIVAL FILM MAKERS: Please submit finished films to Hildi Adelhelm 544-0175 or Doug Vallery 542-3911 by Monday Jan. 24.

FACULTY OF EDUCATION

(Formerly McArthur College of Education)



QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AT KINGSTON, ONTARIO

Applications to the Faculty of Education, Queen's University, are being invited from university graduates throughout Canada. The eight month program leads to a Bachelor of Education degree and basic teacher certification at the secondary level; additionally, an elementary option is available.

Now in its fourth year of operations, the Faculty of Education features the following conditions:

(1) An emphasis on the human dimension in education;
(2) A forward-looking program, in line with current and emergent educational needs;
(3) Considerable flexibility in candidates' program design;
(4) Continuous assessment (de-emphasizing term examinations) consistent with the stress on personal and professional development;
(5) Participation of candidates in administration and planning of the Faculty of Education;
(6) Unexcelled facilities in the new academic-residential complex, Duncan McArthur Hall.

Applicants must already hold an undergraduate degree or be eligible for graduation by September 1972. Elements emphasized in the selection of teacher candidates include professional motivation, academic competence, and communication skills.

PIZZA FACTORY
544-1221
Open Tues. - Sun.
Free delivery within city limits

Elrond College

Application forms are available until January 24 at the Library, Union, Phys Ed Centre, meal lines or from Elrond House, 137 Collingwood. Come over and visit or call 547-5866 for more info.

MED STUDENTS

Have you acted on your invitation to join the O.M.A.?

The Ontario Medical Association By-Laws have been amended to allow students of Ontario Medical Schools to join the Association as full members.
- Make your voice heard in organized medicine and enjoy the many benefits of membership.
JOIN NOW!! For further details:

Ontario Medical Association
240 St. George Street
Toronto 5
Phone 925-3264

THEATRE 5 PRESENTATION

THE KNACK

Sponsored By
A.M.S. Campus Activities Comm.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 22
McARTHUR HALL 8:30 P.M.
ADMISSION $1.00

TICKETS IN UNION & AT THE DOOR

REMINDER

The second installment of fees due by January 31, 1972 can be paid in person at the Accountants' Office, Richardson Hall.

If you find it more convenient to mail your cheque to the Accountants' Office, please record your student number on the face of your cheque.

Housman
"Shoulder the sky my lad, and drink your ale".
(Last Poems)

Shakespeare
"For a quart of ale is a dish for a king".
(The Winter's Tale)

Borrow
"Good ale, the true and proper drink..."
(Lavengro)

Browning
"There they are, my fifty men and women".
(One Word More)

poetic justice

SAILING CLUB

America's Cup Film

FRI. JAN. 21
STIRLING C 7:30

MAKE HER ACCEPTANCE OFFICIAL WITH AN ENGAGEMENT DIAMOND

Your proposal was brilliant. Her acceptance sweet. And now it's time to publicize the pledge with a diamond on her finger. Our selection is wide and brilliant. We'll help you choose the right ring. To announce your honorable intentions to the world.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

Coed Morris proposal to be submitted

Details on how Morris Hall can be made coed will be submitted to the residences board tomorrow morning. When they are approved, the way will be clear for 91 men and 91 women to be admitted to the first main campus coed residence at Queen's.

A proposal written by residences director Gerald McGrath says building alterations to Morris, mostly in washrooms, will cost just over $25,000, meaning an increase of about $9 on all residence fees for next year.

It will cost about $7,000 more to operate Morris as a coed residence, McGrath's comments say, mostly because some double rooms would be converted to common rooms and there would be no income from them.

Except for the possible $9 increase, residence fees should not change for men or women, McGrath says.

He says the 91 men should include 34 upperclassmen, chosen at random from those who want to live in coed Morris, and 57 freshmen chosen on a first-come, first-served basis.

The 91 women would include 55 upperclasswomen and 36 freshettes, all chosen on the same basis as the men.

Morris would have a married warden, a married don, and a single female don.

No comments are made on how student government might work in the coed building.

Both the Women's Residence Council and the Inter-Residence Council will support the proposal at the residences board session tomorrow.

Correction

Tuesday's Journal gave the wrong impression in saying that an "archaic restriction" requires the chancellor of Queen's to be a Protestant.

We meant that this old ruling had been abolished; but it could have been taken to mean that it was ancient but still in effect. Peter Hennessy, secretary of the university council, has asked The Journal to make it clear that there is no religious restriction on who may succeed retiring chancellor Dr. J. B. Stirling.

OHIP deductions soon

Queen's employees will find deductions made from their pay cheques, beginning this month, for the new unemployment insurance plan and for Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

The employee contribution for unemployment insurance is 36 cents monthly per $100 of salary, to a maximum of $2.34 per month.

For OHIP, single employees will pay $7.31 per month; married employees will pay $14.62 monthly.

Information on these benefits is available from the personnel department.

OHIP information for non-employees is available from the OHIP office at 797 Princess Street.

Elrond will run food clinic

Students of Queen's who are forced to subsist on their own cooking need starve no longer Elrond College has started a weekly "food clinic" to help students cope with all the problems that arise from having to cook for oneself.

The Clinic will be held in the Student Affairs Centre (165 University) every Monday at 6:30 p.m. for the rest of the term.

Mrs. Liz Whitley, a qualified dietician and good cook, will be leading the group in its culinary endeavours each week.

This week's meeting was an organizational one to gather ideas about what sort of help students who are inexperienced in the kitchen need.

It was decided that everything from the basics of boiling water, scrambling eggs and frying bacon, to super gourmet meals would be attempted.

There will also be instruction on nutritional values of food, budgeting for large and small groups, and the planning of meals.

Other topics such as health foods, the buying of meat and other foods, and diets to gain or lose weight will probably be discussed.

At many of the meetings, Mrs. Whitley will prepare a meal or a specific dish while the group watches and presumably learns how to do it. The food will then be eaten by the group in order to test its success.

The Clinic has been organized by AMS artsci representative Alison Allan as one of the services of the Elrond educational programme.

It promises to be a great help to those who can no longer rely on mother to make meals for them.

Deans' terms end

Two associate deans of the faculty of arts and science will end their terms June 30.

Dr. Albert P. Fell, associate dean (studies), is returning to full-time teaching in the philosophy department. Dr. Clint Lougheed, associate dean (arts), is eligible for reappointment.

University principal Dr. John J. Deutsch has invited comments on who should take over these positions, and on related matters involving the future of the arts and science faculty.

Such comments should be directed to Dr. Ronald L. Watts, dean of arts and science, who is chairman of the committee advising Deutsch on the new appointments.

SNOWBALL IS COMING

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Prepare for a career in Advertising or Journalism in just one academic year

Students who have completed at least one year of a B.A. course may obtain Direct Entry into the second year of the Journalism and Advertising programs of Sheridan College (Oakville campus).

Term begins in September.

For further information and application forms apply to

The Registrar
Sheridan College of Applied Arts and Technology
1430 Trafalgar Road
Oakville, Ontario

Phone
Oakville - 845-9430
Toronto - 362-5861
Burlington - 632-7081

OPEN MEETING

Senate Committee on Fine Arts andPublic Lectures

TUESDAY 25 JANUARY

AT 3:30 P.M.

Faculty Lounge

- 2nd floor Theological Hall

to hear submissions on the Position Paper concerning the arts at Queen's

SYNCHRO:
SAT. 7:30
POOL

JADE GARDEN RESTAURANT
Specializing in QUALITY Chinese Food and Canadian Dishes

TAKE OUT - and DELIVERY SERVICE
CALL 542-3033

LADIES ELECTROLYSIS
Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call:
HARRISON SALON
542-5595

CASINO ROYALE RAFFLE COMING

Regaining control of t

An analysis of the Gray Report on foreign ownership

By Ed Reed
Canadian University Press

As celestial choirs hummed a strain of O Canada and the pulse of Canadian nationalists everywhere raced quicker, the Herb Gray Report burst upon the country's consciousness two weeks ago.

What the report, or at least the pirate version of it that appeared in Canadian Forum Magazine, told us was that unless something is done in a big hurry, Canada runs the risk of becoming nothing more than an economic and cultural satellite of the United States.

This was hardly news to many Canadians who think that this has already happened and have for many years recognized the omnipresence of the American corporate behemoth in every sphere of the Canadian existence.

The Revenue's Minister's report, for all the uproar it has caused, is really nothing more than the last gasping attempt of a national bourgeoise to reassert some measure of control over its own economy. The Gray Report provides no answers. it's a case of far too little much too late.

Still, what is significant about the report to the Cabinet on foreign investment is that it maps the frightening proportions of American economic domination and reveals that the Trudeau government has been forced to develop at least a basic awareness that the problem exists and must somehow be dealt with.

The basic strategy which the Gray Report recommends to deal with the threatened economic and cultural assimilation into the great imperialistic marshmallow to the south, is a screening agency which would review future foreign takeovers and direct investment in Canada. (Direct investment, as opposed to portfoilio investment, is defined as actual, legal control of the assets of a corporation rather than merely possession of share equity.)

Such a body would have the power to block any new foreign economic move which did not conform to government goals regarding Canada's development.

The report also deals with the by-products of foreign investment such as its inhibiting effect on the emergence of a distinctive Canadian cultural identity and the country's forced dependence on a foreign-developed technology unsuited to its own national needs.

Another predictable facet of the report is its call for greater support of Canadian industry and the recommendation to home-grown industrialists and investors to be less cautious in their support of industrial expansion than they have been in the past. The report says that a major factor retarding the development of an autonomous capitalist economy has been the innate conservatism of Canadians about investing in their own country.

It now appears that the edited version of the report which Canadian Forum obtained by as yet undisclosed means, is very close to the document which Gray presented to the Cabinet some time ago - and which was to have remained secret. It appears, too, that the document has been used as a base for formulating government policy on foreign ownership.

Mitchell Sharp, at the time acting prime minister, admitted in the House of Commons, Nov. 16, that the Cabinet has given approval in principle to the screening agency concept.

The problem with such a scheme, is, of course, that it is very much like shutting the barn door after the horse has escaped.

The main value in the Gray Report is its extensive documentation of the scope and dimension of foreign ownership that already exists in this country. The report shows, for example, that the assets of foreign owned firms in Canada amount to at least $50 billion and that at least 58.1 per cent of all manufacturing industries are foreign owned - that is a controlling concentration of equity in the firm resides in a nation other than Canada.

As necessary as it is to prevent any further sellout of our industry or resources, the amount of economic and political power that already rests in foreign hands - and those hands by a vast majority are American - will effectively prevent us from ever putting forth any kind of meaningful assertion of our own destiny.

The Trudeau government and the class interests it serves - that is the industrialists and financiers - are not prepared to undertake the kind of drastic structural change in our economic system that would end American economic, cultural and social exploitation of Canada. From the government's point of view its fortunes and those of the class it represents are much too closely interwoven with the continued well-being of the mammoth corporate-industrial empire operating out of the United States.

Since the Trudeau government, and indeed the government of any capitalist country, receives its power and direction from the corporate elite it would have no interest in making any kind of substantial change in these power relationships. It just couldn't afford to challenge such a basic element of the status quo as existing American penetration of the Canadian economy.

Talk of buying back the Canadian economy under the existing system is ultimately unrealistic. Despite the token step of attempting to retard the rate of foreign takeover of our means of production, very little is going to change in terms of in whose hands the power to make decisions about the lives of Canadians rests.

Still, the Gray Report is an indicator of how far we are from controlling our own economic destiny - even in a straight capitalist sense - and how this is fast becoming a central reality to members of the government.

The man under whose name this report was presented is rather an anomalous figure to be involved in a study of the dangers of foreign ownership.

Herb Gray, the honourable members from Windsor West, gained something of a reputation in the spring of 1969 as being little short of a front man for one of the largest multinational corporations of them all, Ford Motors.

At that time he played a key role in covering up the Liberal government's questionable decision to forgive the Ford Motor Company of Canada - whose main Canadian branch plant is in Windsor - more than $75 million in duties it owed resulting from its failure to live up to the terms of the 1965 Canada-U.S. auto pact.

It is not clear at this point exactly what role Gray himself played in the writing of the report, which in the Canadian Forum version has been edited to 75,000 words from an original 200,000.

The research team which compiled the report was headed by a young Montreal economist, Joel Bell. The task force drew upon the knowledge of a large number of experts employed in various branches of the federal civil service.

The report, two years in the compiling, has been called the most comprehensive study of foreign ownership and investment ever undertaken in this country.

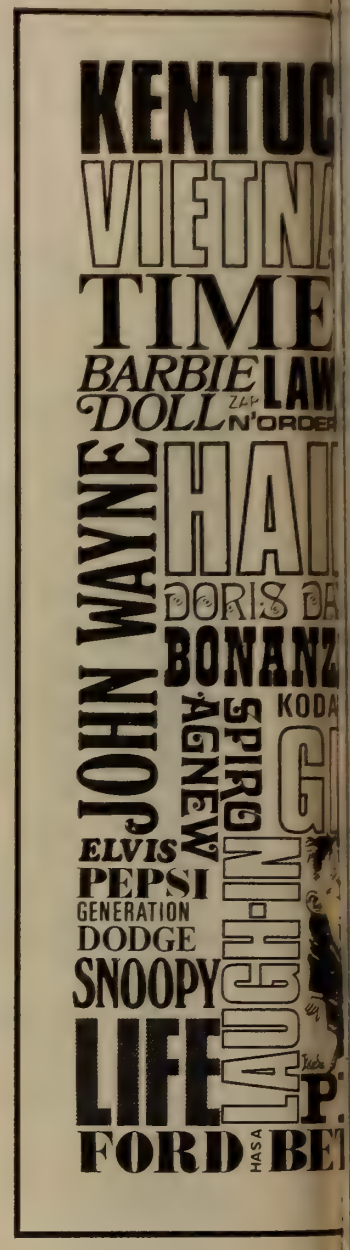
Some of the research and the conclusions of the report can help us to better understand the nature of our own exploitation. Among the most significant of the observations made:

A large amount of Canadian money is being used to finance the sellout of the country's identity and resources. There is a slower influx of American capital than there has been in the past but as the report points out, over 60 percent of the financing for the expansion of foreign control between 1961 and 1967 came from Canadian sources. And as the report says: "....If new direct investment were to be entirely excluded from Canada, foreign control would continue to grow in absolute terms, due to both the internal generation of finances by the firm and their ability to raise external funds in the Canadian capital market."

As a direct consequence of foreign - again chiefly American - involvement in our economy the growth of Canadian culture in nearly all respects has been stultified. There can be no real reconciliation between large-scale foreign ownership of our means of production and the development of an identifiable national culture.

As the report says: "...the presence of large volumes of foreign investment concentrated in U.S. hands increases the difficulty of developing a distinctive national culture. This has potentially serious implications since the economic and political strength of a country lies largely in the creation of a cultural, social and political milieu which favours indigenous iniative and innovation.

"There is no way of leaving the 'economic' area to others, so that we can get on with the political, social and cultural concerns in our own way. There is no such compartmentalization in the real world."



The authors of the report also point out that a sort of vicious circle develops; the less national culture a country has, the greater the danger of foreign economic domination. "The lack of a strong identity and a distinctive culture tend to create... a vacuum and a greater receptivity to foreign incluence and investment. The ease of importing our culture from the UK or the U.S. reinforces this tendency by reducing the pressure on Canadians to develop their own cultural distinctiveness."

The country's reliance on an external technology has retarded the development of national autonomy. The report says: "Some 95 per cent of patents issued in Canada are registered to foreign owners, of which two-thirds are owned by United States residents....

"Another study shows that in a list of 25 countries, Canada is first in percentage of patents which are foreign-owned and last in the percentage of patents owned by nationals of the issuing country."

This indicates that our technology has been moulded to meet the demands of nations other than our own and that if we are to achieve any form of sovereignty we must come to grips with a technology oriented to specific Canadian needs and problems.

Continued on Page 12

PERCENTAGE OF NON-RESIDENT OWNERSHIP AS MEASURED BY

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY	ASSETS	SALES	PROFITS	TAXABLE INCOME
Food and beverages		31.3	27.1	29.4	30.9
Tobacco		84.5	80.1	82.7	83.1
Rubber products		93.1	91.5	90.1	88.4
Leather products		22.0	21.4	25.2	27.3
Textiles and clothing		39.2	28.5	54.9	54.6
Wood		30.8	22.2	23.8	23.0
Furniture		18.8	15.5	20.4	23.2
Printing, publishing and allied		21.0	13.2	22.0	22.7
Paper and allied		38.9	40.7	39.8	39.0
Primary metals		55.2	51.1	62.4	64.4
Metal fabricating		46.7	45.0	64.7	62.6
Machinery		72.2	72.7	78.1	87.2
Transport equipment		87.0	90.6	89.8	88.7
Electrical products		64.0	62.7	78.0	88.1
Non-metallic mineral products		51.6	42.3	47.2	52.9
Petroleum and coal products		99.7	99.6	99.7	99.4
Chemicals and chemical products		81.3	81.1	88.9	89.1
Miscellaneous manufacturing		53.9	51.2	72.1	72.6
Total - All Manufacturing		58.1	55.0	63.4	62.4

SNOW-BALL comes MONDAY!

reflections

This year the Snowball Semi-Formal, "Reflections", is being held in Grant Hall and Kingston Hall, in the hope that the "crowd" situation will be alleviated. The ticket sales will be limited to 800 couples. They are going quickly, so if you are wanting to attend the best dance of the year, pay a visit to the John Orr Room and buy your ticket.

Nine areas are being decorated by different groups, all interpreting the theme "Reflections" in their own manner. Grant Hall, in which Major Hooples' and Brandy are appearing, is being decorated by the French DSC and Club. In the Red Room, where Subway Elvis is gyrating, (bring your grease and comb) Rehab and Civil Engineering are applying their artistic talents. There are four bars, serving both beer and liquor, in Grant and Kingston Halls, three of which are being decorated by Science '74, Science '73, and "the White House". Kingston 200 is the room for singing along to old time Honky-Tonk Music with PHESA doing the decorating. Kingston 204 and 205 - rest your bones - strictly sitting and drinking, with the decorations compliments of Artsci '74 and '75.

Momentum is gathering for a great finale Snowball Dance. COME ON AND JOIN THE FUN!!!

on the rocks

The Variety Show Boo Hoo is presenting to Queen's this year is not only hilarious, and entertaining, but also novel. Boo Hoo searched his fuzzy brain and decided Variety Nite should be different, so he is presenting 72's show on ice. Mr. Jock Harty was generous and offered his arena for this two hour laff-filled show, providing everyone uses the main entrance and brings their Snowball Button and 2 bits (25c). Boo Hoo would like to begin his show at 8:30 and promises everyone they will be free at 10:30 to pursue their individual Friday Nite festivities. Boo Hoo's Variety on the Rocks is one show no true Queensmen can afford to miss. See you there!

pool tourney

Snowball is sponsoring a billiards competition in the Student Union, during Snowball Week. Players will get the first 45 minutes of their games free but they must register this week at the tuck shop - Please bring a 25 cent entrance fee. A double elimination schedule will be posted in the Pool Room, this Saturday, and interested students are invited to the finals which will be held next Saturday the 29th, from 3 p.m. onwards. The winner will receive a 26er and a bottle of wine.

snow!

Another of the long standing traditions of Queen's has been proudly continued, this year. The Snow Sculpturing Contest, which in the past has struggled to combat the natural elements, is facing the same problem again.

If for some unknown reason, snow does appear in Kingston this week-end, this year, the contest will commence as planned. The Snowball Committee suggests that ALL 8,000 students THINK SNOW, this weekend.

If for some technical reason, there is no snow next week, the contest will be postponed.

Snowball Wine and Cheese Party

Friday, 28 January

time - 10:00 pm - 1:00 am
(after Variety Show)

place - Grant Hall

admission - $3 / couple

Coffeehouse atmosphere with wine and cheese and live, danceable entertainment. Admission includes all the wine you can drink and cheese you can eat.

SNOW

Monday, 24 January

Snow-Drop-In

Wallace Hall 2nd floor
Admission - free with Snow

Tuesday, 25 January

Activity Night

Nail driving, tug-o-war, hu
Afterwards-hot coffee and
Sponsored by Queen's Alum

Wednesday, 26 January

Athletic Night

Dance - Bramb

B- -r available Admissio

Thursday, 27 January

Cultural Night

Mathews and Steele on A

Friday, 28 January

Snowball Varie

8:30 pm Jock Harty Are

Wine and Chee

10:00 - 1:00 Grant Hall

Saturday, 29 January

REFLECTIONS

Major Hoople and Brandy
9:00 - 1:00 Grant and Kings
Admission - $7 / couple

Refractions In th

Snooker in Wallace Hall
Bitter Grounds Graffiti

Ticket Sales Joh

BALL 72

moker 8:30 - 12:00 pm
mon room Pub button

races etc. Leonard Field
ghnuts Donald-Gordon Common Room

:00 - 11:00 pm Phys Ed Complex

9:00 - 1:00 Grant Hall
Snowball button & 25 ¢

8:00 pm Dupuis Auditorium
anization of universities

y Night On Ice
Admission - Snowball button & 25 ¢

e Party (after Variety Show) mission - $3 / couple

Snowball Semi-formal

Halls

nion 9:00 - 1:00

asino

rr Room, meal lines and at door

REFLECTIONS

Snowball Semi-formal

featuring

Major Hooples'
Brandy
Subway Elvis

Saturday, 29 January
time - 9:00 pm - 1:00 am
place - Grant and
Kingston Halls
tickets - $7 / couple

REFLECTIONS

AMS CONCERTS Presents:

JANUARY 30, HARTY ARENA

Edgar Winters White Trash
James Cotton Blues Band
Jake Holmes
and SPECIAL GUEST APPEARANCE
GEORGE CARLIN

ONE SHOW: 8 p.m. TICKETS: $3.00 with student card
$4.00 general and at door

FEBRUARY 6, GRANT HALL

RITA COOLIDGE
& The Dixie Flyers

TWO SHOWS: 7 p.m., 9:30 p.m.

TICKETS: $2.50 with student card
$3.50 general and at door

SERIES SPECIAL Both Concerts for $4.50 for Students Only!

Student Tickets On Sale in John Orr Room in Union

General Tickets - House of Sounds, Tremblay's Record Store

NO RESERVED SEATS FOR EITHER CONCERT
BRING SOMETHING TO PARK YOUR ASS ON

he Canadian economy

Swedish socialism: An answer to Canada's problems ?

By Bill Johnston

"Canada could have achieved a self-reliant economy like Sweden... a country with half the population and about a 20th of the size - yet it doesn't have to rely on Time as its national magazine... it has two thriving auto industries... control over its resources...

"And it's got little to do with socialism... for at the num of that country is a concentration of corporations that dominate the Swedish economy."

-Ralph Nader in the Montreal Star, Nov. 1971.

How does the economy of Sweden, and the other Scandinavian countries, operate in such a way as to produce these benefits - a thriving economy along with the most equitable distribution of income and services found anywhere in the world? And is there anything about these economies which can be applied to Canada, particularly in relation to Canada's problems with foreign domination?

A book published in 1970 under the catchy but rather misleading title of Reclaiming the Canadian Economy gives some of the answers to these question, and points the way to possible solutions to the control of our economy by foreign companies which seem to show more likelihood of increasing the benefits derived by Canadians from business carried on in Canada than any of the solutions - from screening agencies to 51 per cent ownership by Canadians - which have been suggested to date.

The book's original (and more accurate) title is Functional Socialism, and is an attempt by Swedish economist Gunnar Adler - Karlsson to formulate a theoretical framework to explain the way in which the Swedish economy works. He uses the term functional socialism to describe that country's economy.

The basis of the Swedish economic system is a concept of ownership which differs markedly from that used in either capitalist countries or socialist countries. In both of these systems, ownership means that the owner can do anything he wants to do with the objects he owns, unless explicit legal restrictions or customary right prevent him from doing certain well defined things with the property. Thus, in a capitalist state, individuals, as owners, can do anything they want within legal boundaries, and in a socialist state, the state, as owner, can do anything it wants with the means of production and the individuals in a socialist state can do only what the state allows them to do. Although there are marked political differences between the two types of systems, from an economic point of view an individual (who is not an owner) may well have the same rights in a socialist state as in a capitalist state.

What the Swedes have done is "to stress that the concept of ownership is not an indivisible concept, but, quite the contrary, a concept embodying different ownership functions, which can be easily separated from each other. Ownership is conceived of as consisting of certain functions; ownership, O, equals certain functions, a, b, c, etc. Using this concept, it is not necessary for a society to undertake wholesale socialization in order to achieve the goals of socialists, but, rather, it may be sufficient (and economically better perhaps) to socialize only some of the ownership functions; eg., socialize a

To illustrate this point, Adler-Karlsson used the example of the owner of a house. In a society with unlimited ownership, owning a house means the following:

1) that the owner can choose to live in the house himself;
2) that he can rant it at any price he chooses, thus deriving a monetary income;
3) that he can dispose of the income earned from renting the house in any way he wants to;
4) that he can tear down the house and rebuild it;
5) that he can throw out the tenant when the contract time has elapsed;
6) that he can sell the house; and
7) that he can send abroad the money he earns from renting or selling the house, where he might be able to make better profits.

A capitalist would say that the owner, by right of owning the property, had the right to do all these things. A 'true' socialist would contend that all these functions should be socialized by one stroke in a full socialization of housing. The Swedish legislators have regulated some of these functions, to encourage social, rather than "unsocial", use of ownership.

Thus, a Swedish house owner may rent out a house or live in it himself. He is now allowed, however, to charge any rent he likes, since rents are partially controlled by the state. He does not have completely free use of any profits he earns from the ownership of the house, since he must pay a fair amount of taxes to the state (the taxes being used for the comprehensive social welfare programmes of the country.) He cannot tear down and rebuilt his house as he sees fit, but must have a permit to do so, such permits being granted only under special conditions, of which one, for instance, is that the new house must fit into the aesthetic pattern laid down by the existing city plan. The owner cannot evict a law-abiding tenant when his contract has elapsed "because we think that a tenant should have some security in housing." The owner is allowed to sell his house at any time, but he may not send the income from this sale out of the country without the permission of a government agency.

What the Swedish government has done, then, has been to take away or regulate a number of functions which capitalists themselves have regulated in capitalist countries, while at the same time, they have not socialized all the functions, as a socialist state would, but only the most important ones, in an effort to ensure that owners do not use their ownership in unsocial ways.

It is important to note that, although the assumptions about ownership in Sweden differ markedly from those of 'true' socialists and of most of the Western, capitalist countries, the Swedish concept of ownership is not really that different from the practices followed by most Western countries. While continuing to hold to the belief that ownership rights belong to the owner, and continuing to hold themselves to rigid opposition to socialist states which maintained that ownership, particularly of the means of production, should reside with the state, most Western countries have for many decades been lessening the number of functions which are considered to be the prerogatives of owners, through such things as social welfare legislation, legislation controlling wages and working conditions, taxation legislation, legislation about succession duties, and legislation concerning collective bargaining.

As Abraham Rotstein, University of Toronto economist, notes in the introduction to the book, Adler-Karlsson "is not proposing a new or wild-eyed approach to the problem of ownership. On the contrary, he is drawing our attention to exactly what we are already doing."

So much for theory. How have the Scandinavian countries applied this concept of ownership?

Adler-Karlsson states that the two tasks which an economic system must solve are the creation of an efficient production "providing a good and balanced economic growth with full employment," and the sharing among the members of society of this production in a just and equitable way.

Partly to ensure growth, Sweden has allowed most of the industry in that country to remain in private hands (90 percent of the means of production are owned by private individuals and industries,) and the main fields of economic activity controlled by the government (about six per cent of the means of production) are public utilities, such as railways, telephones and much of the electricity production. Adler-Karlsson believes that private ownership is beneficial, in terms of growth, because much of the innovation in the economy comes from that sector.

On the other hand, there are numerous ways which the ownership functions of the private sector have been limited. One of these has been through the strength of the labour union movement, which has, as well, played a major role in dividing up the production of the economy among the people. The fact that the labour unions are very strong in Sweden greatly limits the freedom of owners of industry to pay whatever wages they feel like paying.

The conduct wage negotiations in Sweden is quite different from in Canada or the United States. Swedish workers are represented by three large labour organizations (one for trade workers, one for white collar workers and a third for professional workers) and wages are set in central negotiations between one of these union organizations and a central association of employers. The agreements reached in this manner are binding on all the parties and any conflicts arising out of an agreement must be settled through arbitration or a special labour court. Another unique feature of the Swedish labour scene is that about 90 per cent of Swedish workers are members of unions, compared to about 33 per cent here. The Swedes manage to avoid a large number of costly strikes largely because of this near total organization, since no part of the labour movement is allowed by the other parts of the organization to attempt to gain benefits for themselves at the expense of the other groups.

Most of the other ways in which ownership functions are taken over from the private owners of industry are through direct intervention of the government. The government has stepped into the banking field, for instance, in several ways. For one thing, the government owns one of the five big banks in Sweden in an attempt to ensure that there is competition among the banks. As well, there are legal restrictions on the actions of the banks. Banks are not allowed direct ownership in industry, since they are not allowed

Continued on Page 12

PERCENTAGE OF CORPORATIONS' TAXABLE INCOME EARNED IN EACH INDUSTRIAL SECTOR AND REGION EARNED BY CORPORATIONS OWNED BY NON-CANADIANS (1965-1968 average)

Industrial Sector	Maritimes	Quebec	Ontario	Prairies	B.C.	Canada
Agriculture, forestry, fishing	42.9	-	14.3	6.2	25.2	20.7
Mining	88.8	40.6	59.3	76.5	26.7	55.0
Manufacturing	59.6	60.3	70.0	60.5	44.1	63.8
Construction	9.7	12.1	19.0	23.0	42.6	20.6
Transportation, communications, public utilities	16.2	44.0	20.9	19.3	12.0	22.1
Wholesale trade	17.6	32.2	39.7	38.5	30.8	35.7
Retail trade	30.4	27.2	36.3	52.2	40.5	37.4
Finance	21.8	22.3	25.6	28.3	26.7	30.6
Services	24.4	41.9	39.1	40.6	27.8	38.7

both charts from the Canadian Forum version of the Herb Gray Report

AMS CONCERTS Presents:

JANUARY 30, HARTY ARENA

Edgar Winters White Trash

James Cotton Blues Band

Jake Holmes

and SPECIAL GUEST APPEARANCE

GEORGE CARLIN

ONE SHOW: 8 p.m. TICKETS: $3.00 with student card
$4.00 general and at door

FEBRUARY 6, GRANT HALL

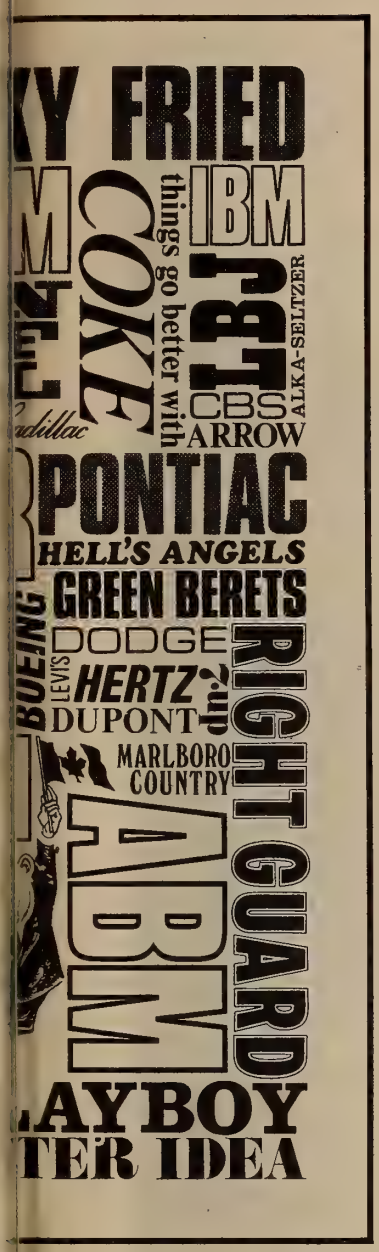
RITA COOLIDGE

& The Dixie Flyers

TWO SHOWS: 7 p.m., 9:30 p.m.

TICKETS: $2.50 with student card
$3.50 general and at door

SERIES SPECIAL Both Concerts for $4.50 for Students Only!



Student Tickets On Sale in John Orr Room in Union

General Tickets - House of Sounds, Tremblay's Record Store

NO RESERVED SEATS FOR EITHER CONCERT
BRING SOMETHING TO PARK YOUR ASS ON

ne Canadian economy

Swedish socialism: An answer to Canada's problems ?

By Bill Johnston

"Canada could have achieved a self-reliant economy like Sweden... a country with half the population and about a 20th of the size - yet it doesn't have to rely on Time as its national magazine... it has two thriving auto industries... control over its resources...

"And it's got little to do with socialism... for at the num of that country is a concentration of corporations that dominate the Swedish economy."

-Ralph Nader in the Montreal Star, Nov. 1971.

How does the economy of Sweden, and the other Scandinavian countries, operate in such a way as to produce these benefits - a thriving economy along with the most equitable distribution of income and services found anywhere in the world? And is there anything about these economies which can be applied to Canada, particularly in relation to Canada's problems with foreign domination?

A book published in 1970 under the catchy but rather misleading title of Reclaiming the Canadian Economy gives some of the answers to these question, and points the way to possible solutions to the control of our economy by foreign companies which seem to show more likelihood of increasing the benefits derived by Canadians from business carried on in Canada than any of the solutions - from screening agencies to 51 per cent ownership by Canadians - which have been suggested to date.

The book's original (and more accurate) title is Functional Socialism, and is an attempt by Swedish economist Gunnar Adler - Karlsson to formulate a theoretical framework to explain the way in which the Swedish economy works. He uses the term functional socialism to describe that country's economy.

The basis of the Swedish economic system is a concept of ownership which differs markedly from that used in either capitalist countries or socialist countries. In both of these systems, ownership means that the owner can do anything he wants to do with the objects he owns, unless explicit legal restrictions or customary right prevent him from doing certain well defined things with the property. Thus, in a capitalist state, individuals, as owners, can do anything they want within legal boundaries, and in a socialist state, the state, as owner, can do anything it wants with the means of production and the individuals in a socialist state can do only what the state allows them to do. Although there are marked political differences between the two types of systems, from an economic point of view an individual (who is not an owner) may well have the same rights in a socialist state as in a capitalist state.

What the Swedes have done is "to stress that the concept of ownership is not an indivisible concept, but, quite the contrary, a concept embodying different ownership functions, which can be easily separated from each other. Ownership is conceived of as consisting of certain functions; ownership, O, equals certain functions, a, b, c, etc. Using this concept, it is not necessary for a society to undertake wholesale socialization in order to achieve the goals of socialists, but, rather, it may be sufficient (and economically better perhaps) to socialize only some of the ownership functions; eg., socialize a

To illustrate this point, Adler-Karlsson used the example of the owner of a house. In a society with unlimited ownership, owning a house means the following:

1) that the owner can choose to live in the house himself;
2) that he can rant it at any price he chooses, thus deriving a monetary income;
3) that he can dispose of the income earned from renting the house in any way he wants to;
4) that he can tear down the house and rebuild it;
5) that he can throw out the tenant when the contract time has elapsed;
6) that he can sell the house; and
7) that he can send abroad the money he earns from renting or selling the house, where he might be able to make better profits.

A capitalist would say that the owner, by right of owning the property, had the right to do all these things. A 'true' socialist would contend that all these functions should be socialized by one stroke in a full socialization of housing. The Swedish legislators have regulated some of these functions, to encourage social, rather than "unsocial", use of ownership.

Thus, a Swedish house owner may rent out a house or live in it himself. He is now allowed, however, to charge any rent he likes, since rents are partially controlled by the state. He does not have completely free use of any profits he earns from the ownership of the house, since he must pay a fair amount of taxes to the state (the taxes being used for the comprehensive social welfare programmes of the country.) He cannot tear down and rebuilt his house as he sees fit, but must have a permit to do so, such permits being granted only under special conditions, of which one, for instance, is that the new house must fit into the aesthetic pattern laid down by the existing city plan. The owner cannot evict a law-abiding tenant when his contract has elapsed "because we think that a tenant should have some security in housing." The owner is allowed to sell his house at any time, but he may not send the income from this sale out of the country without the permission of a government agency.

What the Swedish government has done, then, has been to take away or regulate a number of functions which capitalists themselves have regulated in capitalist countries, while at the same time, they have not socialized all the functions, as a socialist state would, but only the most important ones, in an effort to ensure that owners do not use their ownership in unsocial ways.

It is important to note that, although the assumptions about ownership in Sweden differ markedly from those of 'true' socialists and of most of the Western, capitalist countries, the Swedish concept of ownership is not really that different from the practices followed by most Western countries. While continuing to hold to the belief that ownership rights belong to the owner, and continuing to hold themselves to rigid opposition to socialist states which maintained that ownership, particularly of the means of production, should reside with the state, most Western countries have for many decades been lessening the number of functions which are considered to be the prerogatives of owners, through such things as social welfare legislation, legislation controlling wages and working conditions, taxation legislation, legislation about succession duties, and legislation concerning collective bargaining.

As Abraham Rotstein, University of Toronto economist, notes in the introduction to the book. Adler-Karlsson "is not proposing a new or wild-eyed approach to the problem of ownership. On the contrary, he is drawing our attention to exactly what we are already doing."

So much for theory. How have the Scandinavian countries applied this concept of ownership?

Adler-Karlsson states that the two tasks which an economic system must solve are the creation of an efficient production "providing a good and balanced economic growth with full employment," and the sharing among the members of society of this production in a just and equitable way.

Partly to ensure growth, Sweden has allowed most of the industry in that country to remain in private hands (90 percent of the means of production are owned by private individuals and industries,) and the main fields of economic activity controlled by the government (about six per cent of the means of production) are public utilities, such as railways, telephones and much of the electricity production. Adler-Karlsson believes that private ownership is beneficial, in terms of growth, because much of the innovation in the economy comes from that sector.

On the other hand, there are numerous ways in which the ownership functions of the private sector have been limited. One of these has been through the strength of the labour union movement, which has, as well, played a major role in dividing up the production of the economy among the people. The fact that the labour unions are very strong in Sweden greatly limits the freedom of owners of industry to pay whatever wages they feel like paying.

The conduct wage negotiations in Sweden is quite different from in Canada or the United States. Swedish workers are represented by three large labour organizations (one for trade workers, one for white collar workers and a third for professional workers) and wages are set in central negotiations between one of these union organizations and a central association of employers. The agreements reached in this manner are binding on all the parties and any conflicts arising out of an agreement must be settled through arbitration or a special labour court. Another unique feature of the Swedish labour scene is that about 90 per cent of Swedish workers are members of unions, compared to about 33 per cent here. The Swedes manage to avoid a large number of costly strikes largely because of this near total organization, since no part of the labour movement is allowed by the other parts of the organization to attempt to gain benefits for themselves at the expense of the other groups.

Most of the other ways in which ownership functions are taken over from the private owners of industry are through direct intervention of the government. The government has stepped into the banking field, for instance, in several ways. For one thing, the government owns one of the five big banks in Sweden in an attempt to ensure that there is competition among the banks. As well, there are legal restrictions on the actions of the banks. Banks are not allowed direct ownership in industry, since they are not allowed

Continued on Page 12

PERCENTAGE OF CORPORATIONS' TAXABLE INCOME EARNED IN EACH INDUSTRIAL SECTOR AND REGION EARNED BY CORPORATIONS OWNED BY NON-CANADIANS (1965-1968 average)

Industrial Sector	Maritimes	Quebec	Ontario	Prairies	B.C.	Canada
Agriculture, forestry, fishing	42.9	-	14.3	6.2	25.2	20.7
Mining	88.8	40.6	59.3	76.5	26.7	55.0
Manufacturing	59.6	60.3	70.0	60.5	44.1	63.8
Construction	9.7	12.1	19.0	23.0	42.6	20.6
Transportation, communications, public utilities	16.2	44.0	20.9	19.3	12.0	22.1
Wholesale trade	17.6	32.2	39.7	38.5	30.8	35.7
Retail trade	30.4	27.2	36.3	52.2	40.5	37.4
Finance	21.8	22.3	25.6	28.3	26.7	30.6
Services	24.4	41.9	39.1	40.6	27.8	38.7

both charts from the Canadian Forum version of the Herb Gray Report

Swedish socialism: An answer to Canada's problems? (cont.)

Continued from Page 11

to own shares, and a special government inspection board controls the operations of banks.

The taxation system has also been used by the government as a tool of socialization, by limiting the ability of owners of capital to receive and dispose of their profits derived from this capital (a right already limited to some extent by the wage bargaining process.) Personal income tax is highly progressive (increasing quickly as income increases), creating a better equality of after-tax income. As well, the tax system is so structured that it is highly profitable for a businessman to reinvest his profits in his own business, thus encouraging him to expand and improve his business. Such investment must create more jobs and make useful products, however.

Direct legislation has also been passed to deal with particular examples of unsocial behaviour by businesses, or by people who own property. For instance, all agreements between producers must be registered with a public control board, which can investigate the behaviour of the contracting parties, and, if it finds anything which it thinks is bad for the consumer, it can start special court proceedings to correct the behaviour.

Other laws require that all non-Swedes who wish to invest in Swedish shares may only do so with the permission of the government and in certain cases where foreigners have gained control of certain industries (public relations was a recent example), the government may nationalize the industry. (This may at least partly explain why the Swedes have no problem with foreign ownership. It is also partly due to historical circumstances.)

Application to Canada?

Could functional socialism be the solution to the problem of foreign domination of the Canadian economy? In the introduction to the book, Rotstein indicates that he believes that such an approach may work in Canada.

Rotstein indicates that, if we were to adopt the Swedish ideas on ownership, it would be a matter of much less concern whether Canadians or Americans owned Canadian industries. The question becomes not one of nationalization vs. a free economy, or of socialism vs. capitalism, but rather a question of deciding what functions of ownership we think Canadians must control, to ensure that the benefits derived from the economy accrue to the Canadian people. Rotstein says: "If we are to have a Foreign Investment Control Agency, what precisely should it control? Which of the decisions now made in the boardrooms in New York, Chicago and Washington are vital to Canadian interests? By what new laws and administrative procedures should these decisions be taken over and made by Canadians?... Are there 'key industries' whose decisions are more vital to us and which should, consequently be stripped of more of the property rights? Should any be nationalized outright?"

In effect, he is saying, Why do we want Canadian industry to be Canadian? Exactly why are we worried that the Americans have so much control of our economy?

Certainly, some of the answers to these questions, which are implicit in some of the 'solutions' which have been proposed, indicate that, for the average Canadian, it does not make much difference. Suggestions that 51 per cent of all companies in Canada be owned by Canadians, for instance, or that Canadians must be represented on all boards of directors of companies in Canada, would mean that power and wealth would simply be transferred from the hands of the American rich to the hands of the Canadian rich, with no benefit sifting down to most of the population. Many Buy Canadian programmes also probably have little affect other than to increase the profits of a few Canadian firms, without improving the lot of most Canadians.

The Swedish experience does, I think, offer an alternative which could benefit most Canadians. In applying it in Canada, of course, it would be necessary to not simply limit the functions of ownership exercised by foreign firms but to limit the functions exercised by all firms resident in Canada, regardless of who owns them.

Taxation laws could be changed (again?) to encourage companies to invest in job-producing Canadian firms, and government permission could be required before the profits earned by Canadians or Canadian businesses could be invested abroad. The taxation system could be made more progressive, with a rate of nearly 100 per cent above a certain level, in an effort to create a more equitable distribution of income, and the same rates could be applied to business profits, except when those are invested in businesses which will create jobs and produce useful products. All companies resident in Canada could be required to do their research and development work in Canada (or perhaps, in the case of multi-national firms, a level or R&D activity proportional to the value of sales in Canada would have to be done in Canada.)

A government agency could be set up to examine all agreements among producers and between or among businesses, including agreements between branches of the same firm, to ensure that, for instance, prices charged for parts or for managerial services exchanged between companies were reasonable and to ensure that any profits made on such exchanges were taxed.

The labour laws of the country could be changed to allow a far greater number of people to join or form unions who are presently prohibited from so doing. Associations of employers could also be encouraged and centralized bargaining on the scale of Sweden's could be required, in place of the present system of collective bargaining in which each company and the local union(s) bargain separately.

Direct legislation could be passed to force companies to not obey the laws of countries other than Canada, when such laws are different from Canadian laws, as in the case of American branch plants which have refused to sell goods to Cuba or China. Nationalization of certain types of companies could be undertaken in certain key industries.

Companies working in the natural resources field could be required to justify explorations and the opening of, for instance, new mines to a government agency which would consider the needs of the country for further resources development before approving such actions.

Individually, these suggestions may be faulted, but it seems to me that the concept involved could be useful. The problems which have been created by the high degree of foreign ownership of industry in Canada all relate to the fact that Canadians have not been benefiting fully from investment in this country when the investors are non-Canadians.

The Gray Report, (cont.)

Continued from Page 6

The world's economy is on the verge of being dominated by about 300 multinational enterprises - defined by the report as being "major corporations that spread their activities around the world and treat all countries as their own". Two-thirds of these multinational enterprises are American-controlled.

Some sobering statistics about these corporate monsters whose power rivals that of even the largest nations:

-Eighty per cent of all American direct foreign investment is accounted for by 200 firms.

-Sales of U.S. - owned corporations operating in foreign countries amounts to about $200 billion a year.

-Multinational corporations are responsible for 15 per cent of the Gross National Product - the value of all goods and services produced - in the non-socialist world.

-this percentage will rise to 50 per cent by 1990 at which time sales of multinational enterprises operating throughout the world will be valued at around $2,000 billion.

-In the near future it will not be unusual for these giant companies to have over one million employees.

-The book value of American direct investment abroad has increased from about $7.5 billion in 1929 to $70.8 billion in 1969 and is still expanding.

-The conclusion of the report is that these multinational corporations through their size and the consequent greater integration of national economics, are gaining more power than most national governments. There will have to be some kind of showdown.

The extent of the control of these multinational corporations in Canada is furthered amplified by these figures:

-In 1968 the assets of firms which were 50 percent or more non-resident-owned were $50.7 billion. (It should be remembered that effective control of a corporation can be gained by possession of as little as three per cent of its common stock.)

-As measured by taxable income - usually not the best guage because of the numerous tax loopholes which corporations can find - 64 per cent of the manufacturing industry in Canada is foreign-owned. Ontario tops this industrial sellout parade with 70 per cent foreign ownership of manufacturing firms followed by the Prairies with 61 per cent, the Atlantic Provinces with 60 per cent and by BC with 44 per cent.

Foreign ownership in Quebec-considered by the government to be non-Canadian as opposed to non-Quebecois - is somewhat below national levels in all sectors except services and ulilities.

-Over 8,500 Canadian firms are foreigned-controlled, at least 7,000 by Americans. This list has been growing in recent years by about 170 companies a year.

There are some important realizations about the shakey chances for Canadian survival contained in the Gray Report. It would appear that the Trudeau government is prepared to make at least token steps to arrest the trend that is marking our destruction. But neither the authors of the report, nor the government, nor the men who hold the real power - the corporate titans - are willing to make any fundamental changes to an economic and social system that operates only for the rich.

It looks like we'll have to be content as colonials for some time to come.

Yes, but do we want to be saved?

On Sunday evening the CBC lined up the premiers of Alberta, Manitoba, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and asked them what they thought of the Herb Gray report.

To a man they opposed the report's proposal that restrictions be placed on foreign investments through the use of a screening process. If Premier W. A. C. Bennett of B.C. had been present he undoubtedly would have joined the chorus. So, most likely, would Joey Smallwood or Frank Moores had they been asked the same question.

Prince Edward Island, out there in the cold Atlantic, is more interested in some kind of economic transfusion than it is worried about American take overs.

That leaves Saskatchewan, whose Premier, Allan Blakeney, leans to the nationalist cause; Ontario, the province that has benefitted most from American investment; and Quebec, which seems to consider the rest of Canada rather than the U.S. the real enemy.

(Ed. Last week, Quebec industry minister Gerard Levesque said Quebec will oppose vigorously any Ottawa policy on foreign investment and ownership which would restrict the creation of jobs in any way.)

Even assuming the Trudeau government will look kindly on the Gray recommendations-a mighty big assumption, considering the Liberals are continentalists from away back - the lack of unanimity among the 11 heads of government is staggering.

Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta is the most adamant in opposing any measures that would slow the flow of American money, into his province, anyhow.

"Would Leduc have ever been discovered if we had kept American money out in the past?" he asked an interviewer. Lougheed's position is that Alberta needs more, not less, foreign investment and he sees nothing wrong in principle with the present system of oil-leasing. He just wants a bigger cut for the province.

Manitoba's Ed Schreyer asked the key question: what are the alternatives to American capital investment?

The Gray report itself, or that part or version of it that broke in the Canadian Forum and was reprinted by The Star on Saturday, seems to me to be no more than the conventional wisdom on the subject of American domination of Canada. It is long on stating the problem, short on offering solutions. What is this, the second or third such report?

Do you know what I think? That neither the present federal government nor any other that may suceed it, including an NDP administration, will ever take decisive steps to stem the flow of American money and American influence into this country. It is too easy just to let things ride as they are; and governments, like the people they represent prefer the course of least resistance. Maybe there is no other course, as seems to be the opinion of most provincial premiers.

- Dennis Braithwaite, Toronto Star

"Children of the future age
Reading this indignant page
Know that in a former time
Love! sweet Love! was thought a crime."
William Blake

New Hours

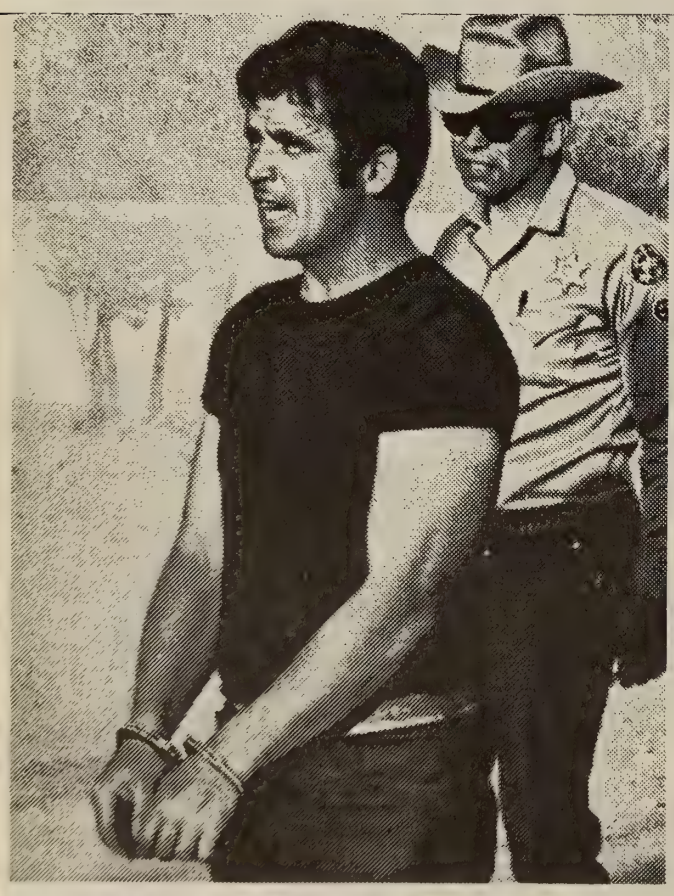
Your on-campus typing service will be open to handle all of your typing and duplicating needs at these new hours:

Monday - Thursday: 8:30 am - 8:00 pm

Friday: 8:30 am - 4:30 pm

The Student Typing Service

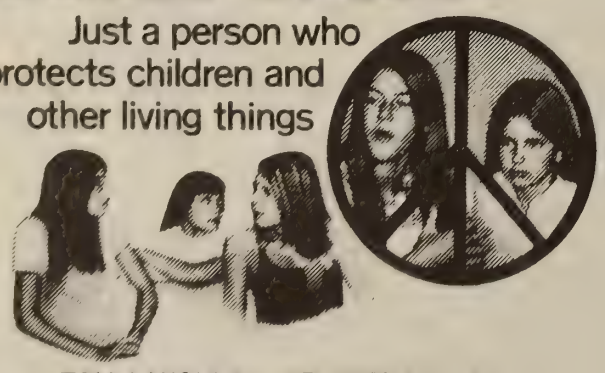
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING



RIFLE CLUB

FIRST MEETING

Saturday, January 22



Projectile Range - Phys. Ed. Centre

ALL WELCOME

BILLY JACK

Just a person who protects children and other living things

Starring TOM LAUGHLIN · DELORES TAYLOR

Co-Starring CLARK HOWAT Screenplay by FRANK and TERESA CHRISTINA

Produced by MARY ROSE SOLTI Directed by T. C. FRANK A National Student Film Corporation Production

TECHNICOLOR®

CAPITOL

223 PRINCESS 546-5395

STARTING FRIDAY

off the record

by Dick Loney

Paul McCartney's third album solus signifies a widening of the breach between his style of music and that of the more outspoken member of that once-famed duo Lennon & McCartney. Actually Paul's wife Linda and the two Dennys--Siewell at the drums, and ex-Moody Blue Laine--have banded together under the collective appellation Wings, with their collection of eight extended pieces of music comprising an album they call WILD LIFE.

Early criticism tends to dwell upon what must be considered the weak link of an otherwise sturdy chain of musical durability--the sometimes thin voicings of Mrs. Mac.--but such carping is tantamount to critically declaiming REVOLVER or ABBEY ROAD on the weaknesses of Ringo's admittedly inferior vocalizing on "Yellow Submarine" and "Octopus's Garden"!

But this is nonsense--side two of the Wings album contains four of Mr. & Mrs. McCartney's songs, which are hardly distinguishable from the genius of early Beatle compositions "Yesterday" and "Michelle", or the later poignancy of "Long Winding Road" or "Let It Be". It is on these four songs that any evaluation of WILD LIFE must be based, and to a lesser extent on the "answer song" "Wild Life" and the Wing's treatment of Mickey & Sylvia's "Love Is Strange". The remaining two songs approximate the things like "Ram On" from RAM, and the abberational jungle thing on MCCARTNEY. They are as gimmicky as the melodic side of the session is beautiful.

"Some People Never Know" blends the voices of Paul and Linda ostensibly imploring John: "Who in the world can be right all the right time?" Linda's piano work is as steady as anything heard on the earliest Beatle albums, and with Paul's voice crooning the lead baritone, she slides into Paul's accustomed harmony-spot with an ease of manner that belies her inexperience.

For sheer waves of pleasing harmony its hard to pass by "Tomorrow" as it features Paul in a plaintive mood chanting "Baby don't let me down tomorrow" with Denny L. and Lady McCartney double-tracking some truly pretty harmonic variations a la the Jordanaires of early Presley vehicles. "Dear Friend" and "Wild Life" have been readily labelled as addresses from Paul to his estranged old pal John in reply to Lennon's IMAGE album. The former tune has a haunting lead line which is flushed out with a full compliment of strings, and the latter contains a lyric and melody which equally seem to mock the type of music that Lennon has been responsible for in the past few years.

Truly WILD LIFE - Apple SW3386, is the most consistent collection of melodies to come from a Beatle since Harrison's ALL THINGS MUST PASS from December 1970.

One thing about the quality of recordings by Canadian content groups lately is that they are not easily recognized! And that's saying a lot, for at one time not so long ago, you could earmark a Canadian l.p. with ease. Take the PERTH COUNTY CONSPIRACY ALIVE album for instance. Although it was recorded for the most part at Bathurst St. United Church in Toronto, it contains four sides of music of a quality which cannot be impugned by the mere fact that its performers salute that crimson symbol of Canada which the Pearson Administration "liberally" shoved down our throats.

The Conspiracy put down thirteen tunes in their live double album which utilize their heavy acoustic guitar backing and piano instrumentations. Vocally they excel on such numbers as the medley "Pilgrim-Welcome Surprise" and the "Tractor Song" on sides three and four, and on the soft lilt of Dylan's "You Ain't Goin' Nowhere" which opens up side one.

Just when they have you lulled into a lullabye sweetness with "Sailboat" and "Broken Wing" with their reliance on maintaining a quiet musical mood, the Conspiracy hit a number of soft-spots with the hilariously satirical "Stratford People". Just about everything connected with the Summer Festival of the Bard comes into the focus of this delightful musical barb. They rip into the decor and topography of the atmosphere of Stratford; where you can see a swan, rent a canoe, "and at night when the cannons go, you can watch animated Madame Tussaud". The dialogue in the bridge, with a culture-vulture declaiming how much he enjoyed "The Merchant of Vengeance", is a summary of all the wrong reasons why people are attracted by the Stratford extravaganza.

The inventiveness and musical dexterity of this group from Western Ontario should be enough to ensure that their latest album is given the recognition it deserves--THE PERTH COUNTY CONSPIRACY ALIVE-Columbia GES 90037.

Very little pop music emenates from the depths of Connecticut these days, and it's really a damned shame! Judging from the sounds put out by a group called Repairs in their album REPAIRS-ALREADY A HOUSEHOLD WORD. Connecticut is a hotbed of rock solidarity. Outstanding material from the pen of Repairman Peter McCann highlights this album with its unusually generous allotment of over 25 minutes of melody per side. From folk-oriented guitar outings such as "O Lonesome Sorrow" and "Measures", Repairs move into the changing tempoes of "Sleepwalkin' Child", with its dominant piano strains, which the liner credits also attribute to guitarist-writer McCann.

The five guys and one gal comprising the Repairs unit come close to sounding like a brass section on the tricky "There She Was", and on the following cut they sing your ear off with "Circle Won't Take Me Around"--an outstanding song which manages to stand out from a selection of fourteen--yes 14--assorted melodies of a high calibre. Guitar work is delegated to four of the six members of Repairs, and they add keyboards and percussion with tasteful measure.

REPAIRS-ALREADY A HOUSEHOLD WORD, on Ampex-Rare Earth R 532L, features some of the closest vocal harmonies after the fashion popularized these days by Bread, Poco and the surf-weary Beach Boys.

A long-awaited album by one of the most distinctive voices in pop music has at last adorned not a few turntables with his rocking-country amalgam of topical tunes and soulful folk ballads--John Stewart joined the Kingston Trio in the early sixties and made them the Kings of Folk with his banjo, guitar and writing styles. Since the Trio disbanded in 1967, Stewart has had three albums, and this fourth is his first on Warner Bros. The title tells the tale-THE LONESOME PICKER RIDES AGAIN-Warner Bros. 1948.

John sings of the simple things in life, as on "Little Road and A Stone To Roll", which is aided by the strings of the ever-busy Jimmy Haskell, as he says "everybody needs a Carole King tune". There are 12 of Stewart's compositions included, from the ballad "Bolinas", on which he is aided by Buffy Ford, to the song he wrote which was one of the Monkees' biggies--"Daydream Believer". John's own version turns it into the kind of song that should never reach an end, and adds that folky flavour of the CALIFORNIA BLOODLINES set which was one of the brightest, yet unheralded albums of 1969.

The ballad side of Stewart, on "Crazy" and "Just An Old Love Song", is balanced with some of the Lonesome Picker's uptempo cuts such as "Swift Lizard" and "Wolves In The Kitchen"--both of which were recorded in Los Altos California last may. Pick up on the Lonesome Picker, it's all good stuff delivered in that gravelly distinctive voice which so readily identifies John Stewart.

snowballdays

Friday, January 21

11:30 - 12:20 and 4:30 - 5:30 p.m.: Dept of Medicine sponsors "Films with Lunch" in the Etherington Hall Auditorium.

All Day: Mr. Henry Johnson, superintendent for North York Board of Education will be in Room A115 of Duncan McArthur Hall.

9:00 - 1:00 A.M.: Bitter Grounds Coffee House Blues with "David and Roselyn" upstairs in the Union. $1.00 and $1.75.

Saturday, January 22.

6:00 a.m.: Ski bus leaves Victoria Hall for Whiteface.

7:30 p.m.: Water-ballet '72 in the Queen's Pool. Featuring the Quebec YWCA team - Canadian synchronized swimming champions with waterpolo and diving exhibitions by Queen's teams.

9:00 - 1:00 a.m.: Bitter Grounds coffee House Blues with "David and Roselyn" upstairs in the Union. $1.00 and $1.75.

Sunday, January 23.

10:30 a.m.: Folk Mass in Dunning Hall. Doughnuts and coffee afterward.

3:30 p.m.: Collegium Musicum presents Renaissance Instrumental and vocal Music in McArthur Hall.

7:00 p.m.: Folk Mass in Newman House.

Monday, January 24.

7:00 p.m.: Queen's Yoga Club presents a Demonstration of Advanced Yoga by guest Bill Davidson of Yoga Forum in Toronto in Kingston Hall, Room 200.

7:00 p.m.: French Club on the third floor common room at the Union.

7:30 p.m.: Interested in hiking, camping, snowshoeing etc.? Outers club meeting in room 128, Jeffery Hall. People with cars especially welcome.

8:30 p.m.: Concert in McArthur Auditorium by musicians of the Kingston area.

8:30 p.m.: Snow-drop-in Smoker in Wallace Hall 2nd floor common room. Free admission with Snowball button.

Tuesday, January 25.

7:30 p.m.: Interested in CUSO? South-East Asia? Andy Woodsworth, returned CUSO volunteer will be giving a talk slide show on Malaysia. Place is the International Centre upper meeting room. All welcome.

7:30 p.m.: Queen's University Amateur and Electronics Radio Club, VE3VX is holding its first meeting the new year in the upstairs lounge, Clark Hall. This is a very important meeting so all members and interested persons are urged to attend.

9:00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "A Taste of Honey" in Ellis Hall Auditorium.

Snowball Activity Night in Leonard Field. Afterwards - hot coffee and doughnuts in Donald-Gordon Common Room.

Wednesday, January 26.

9:30 - 1:30 p.m.: Music Department presents the Kodaly Choral method workshop in Victoria Public School Auditorium.

6:00 p.m.: Athletic Night at the Phys. Ed Complex.

8:30 p.m.: Music Department presents a student recital in Dunning Hall.

9:00 p.m.: Dance with Bramble in Grant Hall. Admission 25 cents and Snowball button.

Thursday, January 27.

4:15 p.m.: Dept. of History presents Prof. Herbert Gutman giving a lecture of "The Development of the American Negro Family" in 517 John Watson Hall.

7:00 p.m.: Campus Movies presents "The Good, The Bad and The Ugly in Dunning Hall.

7:00 p.m.: Bridge Club in McLaughlin Room in the Union.

7:30 p.m.: Medical Sciences Lecture Series presents Pills and Pregnancy and Drugs and Chromosomes in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

8:00 p.m.: Snowball Cultural Night in Dupuis Auditorium. Mathews and Steele on Americanization of universities.

9:00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "Make Way for Tomorrow.

Theatres
Hyland: Dollars
Odeon: Kidnapped
Capitol: Billy Jack

Agnes
to Feb. 15: Venetian Prints of the XVIIIth Century on exhibition
Feb. 3: Opening of exhibition of paintings by 12 contemporary Scottish painters at 8:00.

Bars
401: Joy
Pub: Muriel Day and the Night Squad
Commodore: Mashmakan
Manor: Shamrock

Coming Events

Men's Intercollegiate Sports

Basketball: January 21 - at Toronto; January 22 - at Laurentian
Hockey: January 21 - at Toronto; January 22 - at Windsor.
Wresting: January 22 - at Guelph (invit.) OPEN
Squash: January 21, 22 - at Waterloo Invit.
Swimming: January 22 - at Guelph
Badminton: January 22 - at York (invitational)
Gymnastics: January 22 - at R.M.C. (invitational); Toronto, Carleton, Ottawa, R.M.C., Queen's

Women's Intercollegiate Sports

Archery: January 22 - Queen's Invitational 1:30 p.m. Projectile Range
Basketball: January 22 - at Laurentian
Curling: January 21-22 - OWIAA - Part I at Carleton
Ice Hockey: January 21 - Guelph at Queen's 7:00 p.m. - York vs McGill at Queen's 9:00 p.m.; January 22 - Guelph vs McGill at Queen's 1:00 p.m.; York at Queen's 3:00 p.m.
Swimming: January 21 - 22 - Invitational at Waterloo
Volleyball: January 22 - at Laurentian
Alpine Skiing: January 21 at Blue Mountain Winter Park, University of Waterloo Invitational

Special Events:

Water-Ballet: Saturday, January 22, 7:30 p.m. Admission: Students - 50 cents, General - $1.

CLASSIFIEDS

IMPOVERISHED male students (4-5) DESPERATELY need a house for next year. Will pay well. Please call 544-7383 or 544-7382.

BOOKLETS available to assist you in writing your business resume. One page personal histories that might help you find the job you are looking for. For information call 549-1384, Bob Stock.

DRAFTING instruments in white plastic bag found in exam hall during December. Call 547-6951, Richardson Hall room 12.

WANTED - two single apartments for next year. Martha 549-0603, Virginia 544-8106.

JENNIFER; You're one of the coolest, in spite of Prince Rupert! Thanks for listening and understanding; you really are great. I hope Northern Italy and skiing Switzerland are fantastic. Beware of wife hunters! So... love to my favorite fourth year girl! Thanks, Dan.

AVAILABLE FEB. 1 - Large, newly-finished, furnished room; share kitchen and bathroom with 2 others; 10 minutes walk from campus; Girls only. Phone 544-9393.

FOR SALE - Lange Pros (ski boots) size 8½-9. $100. Call 548-4712 at dinner time.

A SINGLE ROOM for rent. Four students in house need a fifth. Phone 549-0044.

INTERESTED in sharing Blues, Pop, Rock, R&B, sheet music? Call Mike Walker 544-7078.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

"SCHLITZ MIT FRITZ" Saturday January 22. Skating Party beforehand 7:00-8:30, Arena.

TWO GIRLS need an apartment or room for next year. If you have or know of one, please call Brenda or Pat at 544-8794.

OCONTO, GIRLS' summer camp located near Kingston, requires female counsellors, minimum age 19, for July and August employment. All regular summer activities carried on. For staff application contact Mrs. C. Labbett, 3 Pine Forest Road, Toronto 12.

St. James' Church
UNION and BARRIE
KINGSTON

9.00 a.m. - HOLY COMMUNION
11.00 a.m. - HOLY COMMUNION
4.00 p.m. - ECUMENICAL SERVICE IN ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL.
7.30 p.m. - EVENING PRAYER

ST. ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Reverend Max V. Putnam, B.A., D.D., Minister
Christopher C. Hunt, ARCO, Director of Praise

10.00 a.m. Young Adult Bible Study
11.00 a.m. Morning Worship

7.00 p.m. Evening Worship
7.30 p.m. "Radio Ministry" CKLC

8.15 p.m. Youth Fellowship

TUESDAY, 7.30 p.m.
Bible Study

Queen's University Music Department
A PROGRAM OF RENAISSANCE MUSIC
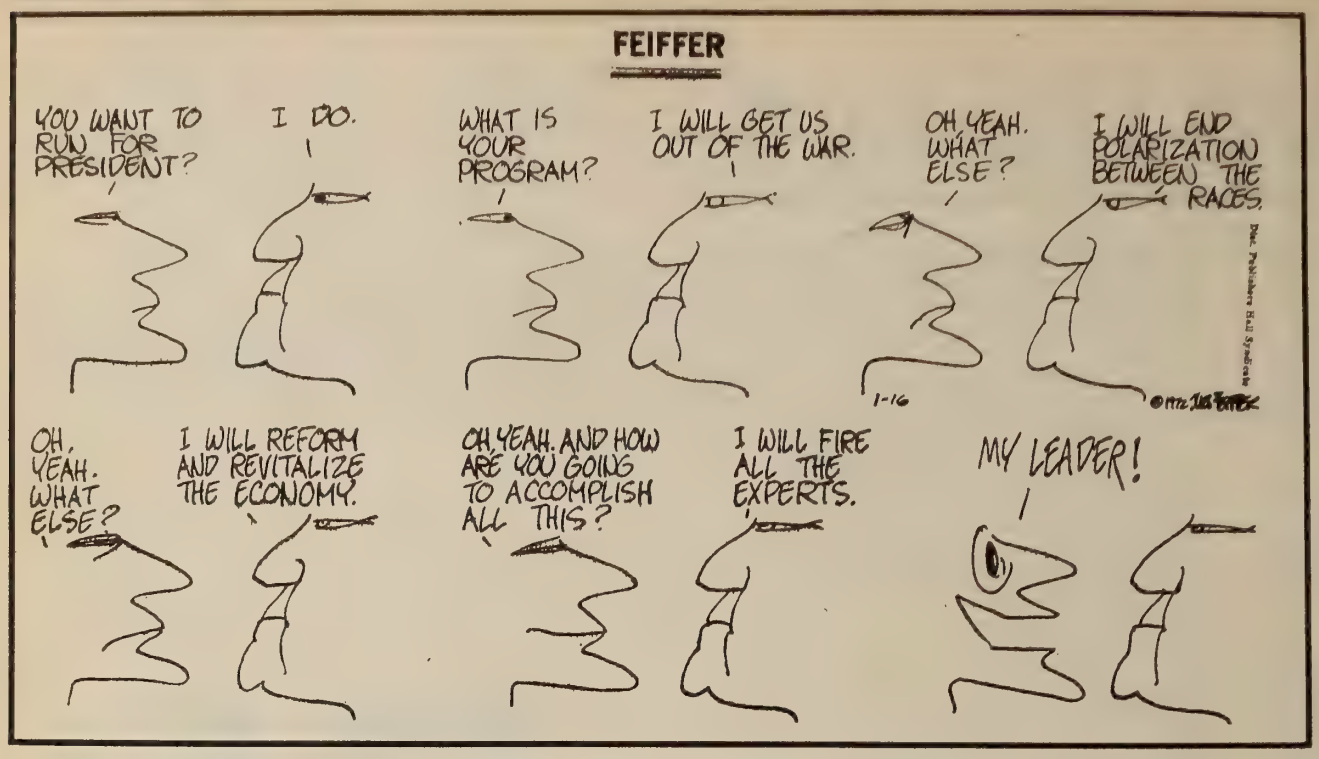
by: QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY COLLEGIUM MUSICUM
SUNDAY, JANUARY 3, 1972 — 3:30 p.m.
—Duncan McArthur Auditorium

GENUINE CANADIAN CRAFTS,
CLOTHES, TOYS and
CANADIAN BOOKS
CANADIAN SHOP
OF KINGSTON
telephone: 542-1115
219 Princess St.
(next to the Capitol Theatre)



The True North Blueprint

a fantastical, phantasmagoric dance through the fiction of Canada's technological, political and scientific future

a TRILOGY by LOUIS CAPSON

will be presented
by
CREATION 2

FEB 1, 2, 3,
8:30 p.m.
GRANT HALL
in conjunction with
FESTIVAL '72
BE THERE!

CANADA

TORONTO - Waffle leader James Laxer Monday said he has no intention of "behaving like a compromise Canadian" to satisfy the United Auto Workers union in Detroit.

Laxer was singled out Sunday at a meeting of the UAW of Canada as "an irresponsible academic, accountable to no one, a headline-hunter and an ego-tripper par excellence."

Canadian UAW director Dennis McDermott told union members at the quarterly meeting in Toronto that it is time for a showdown between the New Democratic Party and the Waffle.

McDermott was reacting to proposals made at a conference in Windsor last week sponsored by the Waffle, the left wing of the NDP.

The conference called for a one-day work stoppage by Canadian auto workers to protest any weakening of the Canada-U.S. auto pact.

In a joint statement issued Monday with Melville Watkins, Laxer said the conference "dealt with matters broader than the auto industry" and "didn't try to give the UAW advice."

Watkins, a professor at the University of Toronto, and Laxer, a professor at York University said the auto pact "is an issue for all Canadians, not simply for Dennis McDermott."

They called McDermott's attack "beneath contempt." McDermott had said the Waffle was led by "footloose academics."

Laxer said McDermott "is more interested in pleasing his union in Detroit than safeguarding the auto pact."

"If he knew how many times left-wing academics have to put their jobs on the line, he wouldn't make such idiotic statements," Laxer said.

TORONTO - Examinations for university degrees should be available on demand to everyone in Ontario, according to the Commission on Post-Secondary Education.

This is one of the many major proposed changes in a draft of the commission's report to the Ontario government likely to be released next week.

OTTAWA - Drastic steps must be taken quickly to restructure Canada's economy and prevent either the country's complete stagnation or its annexation by the United States, the Senate's Special Committee on Science Policy warns in a report published Tuesday.

By 1980, it says, "it will be too late" to prevent the gradual extinction of Canadian manufacturing. "Canada has already reached the crossroads. Major decisions cannot be delayed."

The committee says the time has come for Canada to take control of its own destiny.

It stresses that "nothing less than an industrial revolution will bring the necessary specialization, improve productivity, build up innovative capacity, and substantially increase the flow of successful innovations."

TORONTO - Universities will have to hire more women faculty members if the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario has its way.

Starting this year, new appointments to academic positions should reflect the proportion of women receiving PhDs in the same year, the commission says.

By 1981, the commission says, the proportion of male and female faculty at every level in Ontario universities should match the proportion of males and females receiving doctoral degrees in Canada.

OTTAWA - All Canadian airline passenger planes were grounded today by a strike of 1,750 air controllers - the men in the control towers who guide aircraft landing or taking off at airports.

The controllers walked out of their towers at 4 a.m. Toronto time when negotiations for a new contract in Ottawa broke up without an agreement.

Without controllers to man the electronic guidance equipment in the towers, the airlines were forced to ground their planes because of the risk of midair collisions or of planes crashing during approaches to airports.

The main dispute between the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association and their employer, the federal Transport Ministry, concerns pay and hours of work. Most controllers make $12,000 to $14,000 a year.

Betsy Clifford, Canada's young skiing star, finished off her Olympic hopes when she broke one heel and cracked the other during a slalom run Saturday. Her coach had had hopes that she would bring home at least one medal and perhaps two.

RED LAKE, ONT. - The Union of Ontario Indians wants a coroner's inquest into the deaths of three North-western Ontario Indians in an influenza epidemic, terming federal health services in the area a disgrace.

Union president Fred Plain asked for the inquest in a telegram Saturday to Attorney-General Allan Lawrence and Dr. H. B. Cotnam, Ontario's supervising coroner. Mr. Plain urged that the inquest be conducted bilingually in Cree and English before an all-Indian jury.

The influenza epidemic broke out New Year's weekend and since then, 28 Indians have been admitted to hospital in Red Lake, a tiny settlement 400 miles northwest of Thunder Bay.

One of the Indians died in the hospital and two others died in their homes. A union spokesman said health services, provided by the federal Health and Welfare Department, are virtually non-existent.

THE WORLD

SEATTLE, WASH. - Women who seek to end unwanted pregnancies by abortion generally made no effort to avoid the pregnancy by contraception, a University of Washington researcher says.

Dr. Palmer Beasley, who studied the effect of Washington's liberalized abortion law during its first seven months, said Saturday two thirds of the 7,239 women having abortions did not use contraceptives and "the failure to use contraceptives was especially common among never married women irrespective of age.

He recommends additional counselling, increased availability of contraceptives and realignment of "our attitudes about pregnancy."

GENEVA - The husbands of about 200,000 Bengali women have deserted them in accordance with Moslem custom because the women were raped by West Pakistani soldiers, the World Council of Churches said Monday.

Rev. Kentaro Buma, Asia secretary of the council's refugee service, said that the 200,000 women "form one of Bangla Desh's most urgent social problems . . . although the government has proclaimed the women to be 'national heroes. . .'"

LONDON - The greed of a handful of white mercenary pilots prolonged the Nigerian civil war for 18 months, according to a book published here today.

Federal mercenary pilots could have smashed rebel Biafra's jungle lifeline - Airstrip Annabelle - within a few days in mid-1968 had they wished, writes John de St. Jorre in The Nigerian Civil War.

But he claims that the mercenaries agreed among themselves to extend the war to keep their $2,400-a-month jobs longer.

[redacted]

NEW DELHI - Pakistani President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto has offered to step down from office in favor of Bangla Desh Premier Sheik Mujibur Rahman if this will keep Pakistan together, Radio Pakistan said Monday.

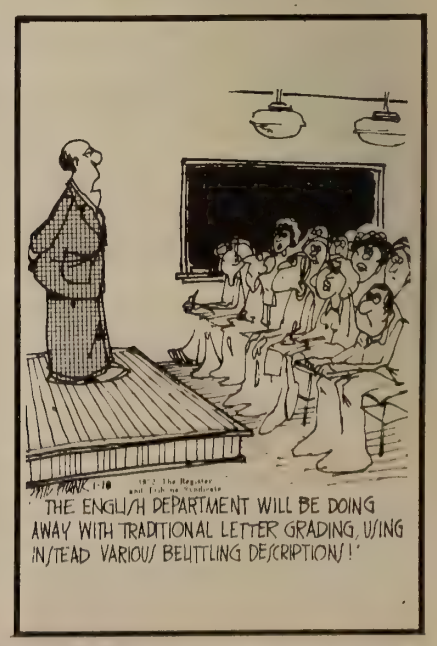
The radio quoted Bhutto as saying he had offered Mujib the presidency of a united Pakistan before releasing him from prison and house arrest earlier this month.

A special commission set up by Bhutto to investigate the circumstances leading to last month's two-week war with India opened secret proceedings yesterday in Rawalpindi.

The commission is expected to make its report to Bhutto after 90 days.

SANTIAGO - The opposition soundly defeated Marxist President Salvador Allende's Popular Unity coalition Sunday in by-elections which, although of limited importance themselves, were taken as a poll of government popularity.

In by-elections to fill two vacant congressional seats, Christian Democrat Rafael Moreno was elected to the Senate and Sergio Diez of the National party to the House of Deputies.



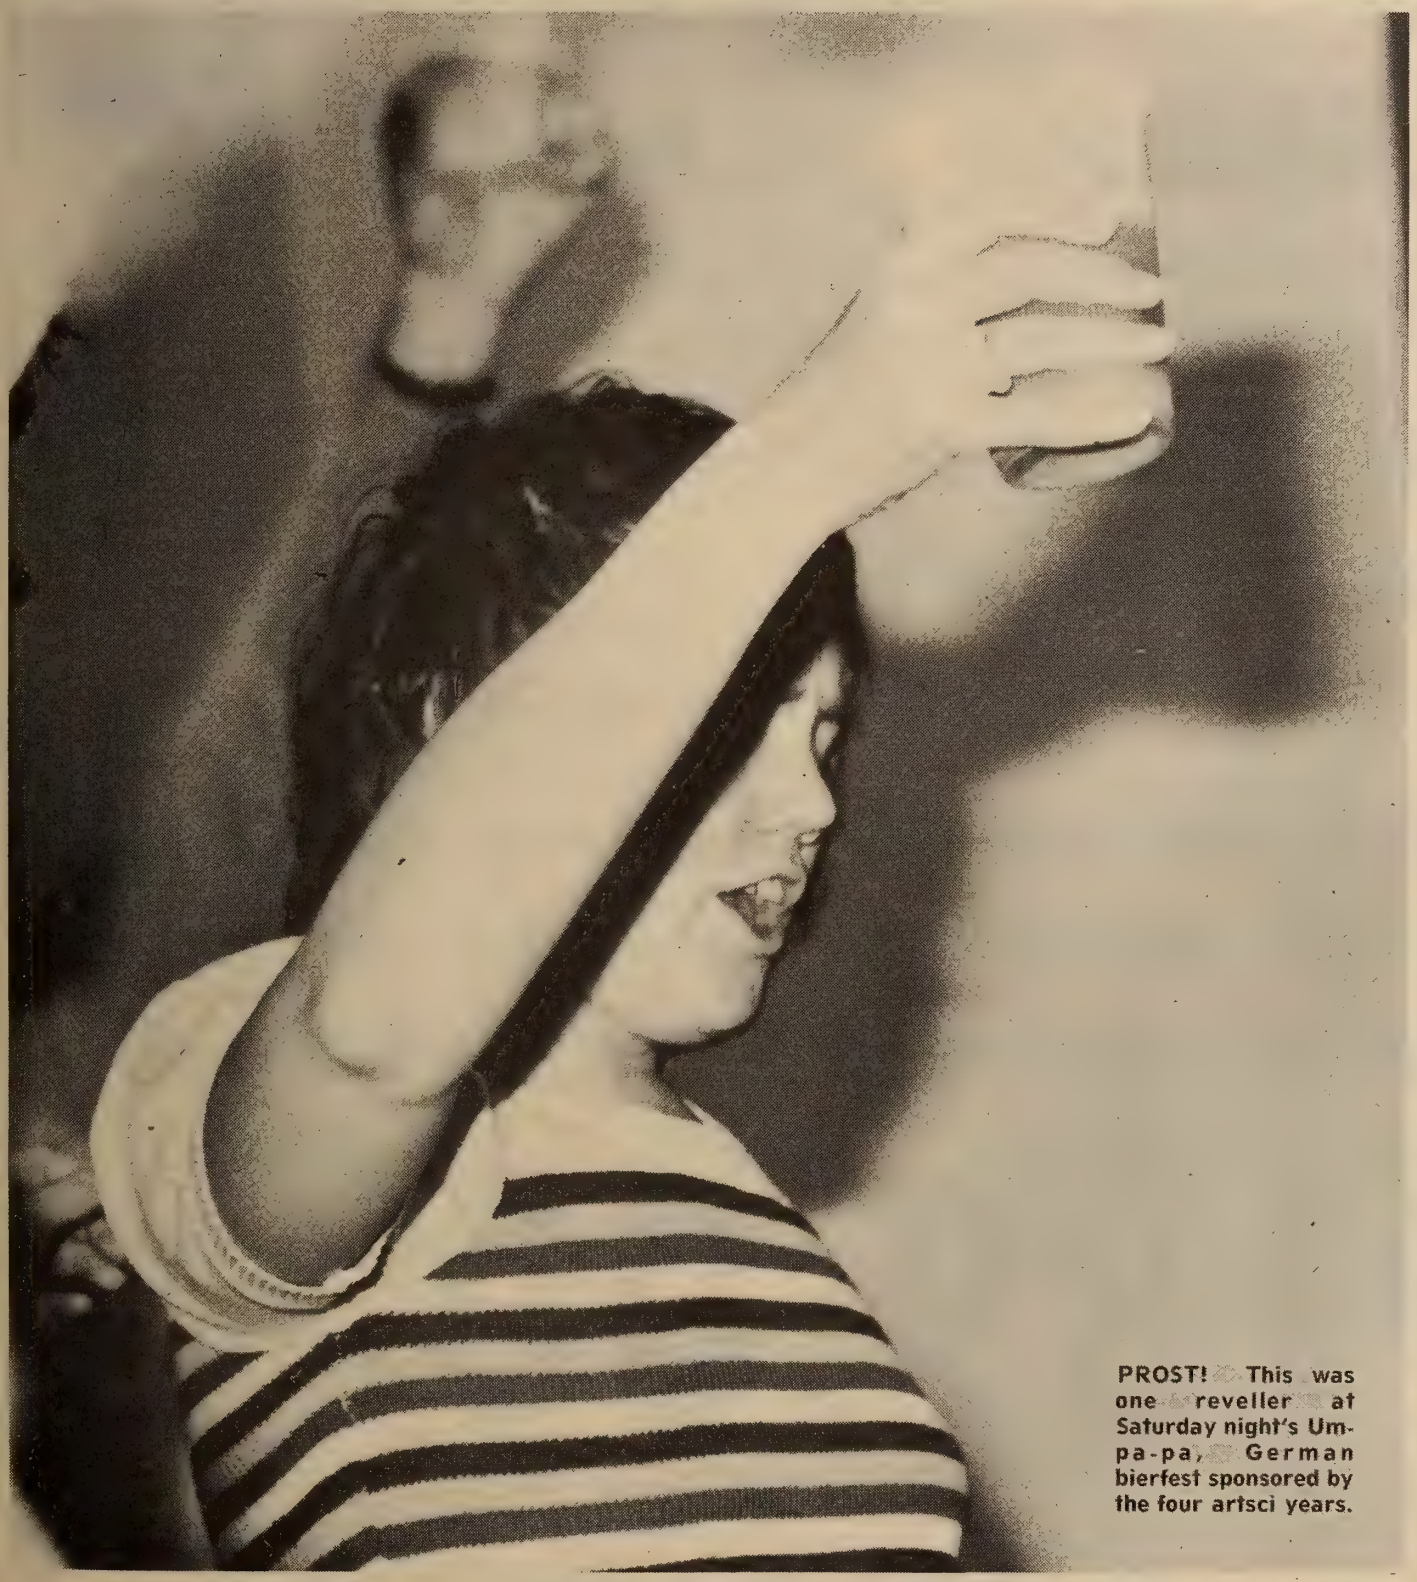
Their margins were just below 54 per cent and exactly 58 per cent respectively, exceptionally high in Chilean races. The two principal opposition parties had jointly backed these two candidates to confront the governing coalition. Both opposition candidates maintained that votes for them were votes to preserve libertarian democracy.

BELFAST - A second internment camp was opened Sunday for people held without trial under special powers introduced in Northern Ireland in August, a Government spokesman said.

He said a number of men, unofficially estimated at 50, were transferred from the prison ship Maidstone in Belfast Harbor to Camp Magilligan, a former army base on the North coast near Londonderry.

About 680 men are being held without trial in a crackdown against suspected terrorists in this troubled British province. They have been held in another camp - Long Kesh, near Belfast - on the Maidstone and at the Crumlin Road jail in Belfast.

U.S.A. - A record 11,858 students began medical training in the United States this year. That's about one medical student (and probably fewer will graduate) per 22,000 people. Beginning medical students now make up .006 per cent of the population. In a record year.



BACK PAGE

Queen's
Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 38 Tues., Jan. 25, 1972

IT'S SNOW-BALL WEEK

PROST! This was one reveller at Saturday night's Um-pa-pa, German bierfest sponsored by the four artsci years.

- bean

Candidates may appear

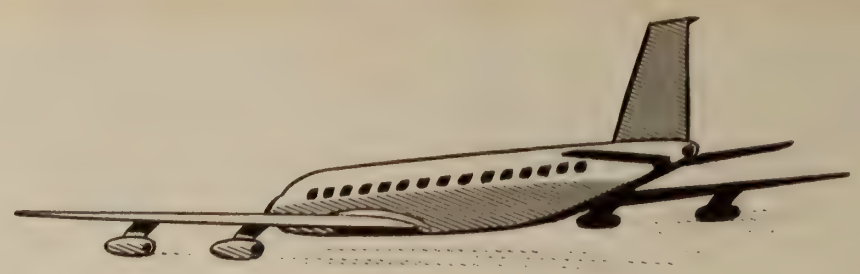
With five days to go till the nomination deadline, there is still only one announced team of candidates for president and vice-president of the AMS: Victor Bradley and Marney Cousins.

Miss Cousins told The Journal Sunday that the Bradley nominating petition, which has been circulating since late last week, will be submitted even if there are no other candidates by the 5 p.m. Friday deadline.

But rumours are circulating. At least four names were being mentioned Sunday as possible candidates, and two students had told The Journal that they were seriously thinking of running for the student presidency.

Both asked that their names not be publicized until their candidacies were definite.

Chief returning officer John Solman has asked The Journal to announce once again that nomination deadlines will not be extended for the positions coming to election February 8 through 10.



These include positions on the executives of the AMS the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, the Engineering Society, the Grad Society, the Commerce Society, the Nursing Science Society and the Rehab Therapy Society, and a number of student senatorships.

Information on nominations is available from members of the current executives (see Who's Where) or from the AMS office; it also appeared in Friday's Journal.

More government jobs than last year -- page 3

Lower campus parking garage will go ahead -- page 5

Deutsch explains report that will change the future -- page 7

QUEEN'S READING WEEK FEB. 19-27

(AOSC and AMS Travel)

FREEPORT, BAHAMAS

(Howard Hughes booked our hotel, but the sun is the same and the sand is the same in Freeport)

- Roundtrip Air Canada DC-9; free bar
- 7 nights in the Freeport Inn
- Double Occupancy; kitchenettes available
- All transfers between airport and hotel, taxes, and gratuities
- Free bar for 1 hour each afternoon

$189.00

CONTACT
THE AMS OFFICE IMMEDIATELY!!!
DEPOSIT OF $100. REQUIRED BY JANUARY 30.

GOLF - SCUBA DIVING - TENNIS

More government jobs, placement director says

by Bob Mutrie

Queen's placement director David Wroe says the 1972 government student summer job programme is better coordinated than last year's, and expanded to a new scale.

"It is broader in scope and at the same time more integrated, to make information and administration more readily accessible," he said.

Federal secretary of state Gerard Pelletier recently announced that the government plans to spend $85 million to finance summer jobs for about 75,000 students this year.

J. Harvey, assistant director of placement and coordinator of the summer jobs programme at Queen's, said the major objective of the 1972 government job programme is to put money in the hands of students who need it the most to complete their educations.

The newest government programme, Harvey said, is an interregional student employment project organized in conjunction with local businesses.

This new programme is designed to help 2006 students who would not otherwise have found jobs, to travel to other areas where jobs are more available.

Opportunities for Youth is also expanding this summer, Harvey said. This year the government will sponsor 29,215 jobs, with an average salary of $1100 per student.

Wroe said emphasis will be placed on student planning, administration and execution of OFY projects. "They must be non-profit oriented," he said, "but the government has also made provision for directing profit-making projects to potential sponsors in the private sector."

The guidelines issued with OFY application forms stress that preference will be given to projects which offer new services to the community or provide a new approach to existing services.

Another distinctive feature of this year's OFY programme, Wroe said, is the government's determination that women get "their fair share" of the jobs.

The application deadline is March 8, Harvey said, and application forms are now available at the career planning and placement office in Goodwin House.

The federal government is also running a language training programme this summer, Wroe said. Providing room, board and tuition for about 3500 students, the project will allow them to take six-week French or English courses at a Canadian university.

There will be a group travel programme again this summer, providing grants for the Young Voyageurs and organized groups of students, Wroe said.

"It was designed to allow students to meet and live with other Canadians," he said.

Harvey said assistance will also be given to community groups wishing to provide hostel services to accommodate youth travelling across Canada.

Operating grants will be made to approved hostels from May 15 to September 15, to cover salaries, rent and utilities, he stated.

Eighteen thousand summer jobs are to be provided in various government departments, all aimed at aiding upper-year students in gaining experience in their chosen careers, Wroe announced.

Openings will be available for students in administration, natural and applied sciences, economics and the social sciences.

Application forms are available at the placement office; the deadline for the government career-oriented programme is January 31.

The department of national defence is organizing a programme of civilian training for 2300 students this summer, Harvey said. Anti-litter and anti-pollution projects will be emphasized, he said.

Places for another 3020 students will be arranged by the Canadian government in eleven countries, working for and paid by companies in the host countries. Students will have to pay their own transportation, but the government will help them get to the point of departure, Wroe said.

Applicants will be screened by Canada Manpower officers, he said, but the placement office has a limited number of application forms.

The government is also planning to make grants to street agencies and universities to hire students in their drug study programmes, Wroe said.

He also said that 800 grants will be made to outstanding student athletes who are "unable to improve their ability and skills because they must find summer employment".

This programme is being administered through the physical education office, Wroe said.

COED COMES TRUE

Coed residence is a reality.

Morris Hall will be an integrated residence in 1972-73, the residences board finally decided Saturday. It will house 91 men and 91 women.

In each case, 55 will be first-year students and 36 will be from upper years, though Doug Romans, the student who has steered coed residence through committees since last spring, said those ratios were flexible.

Students admitted to coed residence will pay the same fees as those in other residences for their sex.

Coed res application forms will be available in a few days, Romans said. Those who are admitted will be chosen at random from upper-year applicants; first-year applicants will be admitted on a first-come, first-served basis.

The residence board decided some improvements should be made to Morris Hall, chiefly the provision of common rooms with refrigerators and running water. These improvements will mean a $10 increase in all residence fees for next session, Romans estimated.

The Morris proposal was supported by both the Inter-Residence Council and the Women's Residence Council.

JANUARY 30, HARTY ARENA

Edgar Winters White Trash
James Cotton Blues Band
Jake Holmes
AND SPECIAL GUEST APPEARANCE
GEORGE CARLIN

ONE SHOW: 8 p.m.
$3.00 with student card
$4.00 general and at door

AMS CONCERTS
Presents two big shows

FEBRUARY 6, GRANT HALL

RITA COOLIDGE
& The Dixie Flyers

TWO SHOWS:
7 p.m., 9:30 p.m.
$2.50 with student card
$3.50 general and at door

SERIES SPECIAL - Both concerts for $4.50 (students only)

Student Tickets On Sale in John Orr Room In Union
General Tickets - House of Sounds, Tremblay's Record Store
NO RESERVED SEATS FOR EITHER CONCERT
BRING SOMETHING TO PARK YOUR ASS ON

CLASSIFIEDS

To the 700 or 800 who made the Um-Pa-Pa the biggest Queen's smoker ever--thanks. An Arts Inter-Year Event, thanks to: Chris et. al. who put flyers in Res.; Steve and the Horney Heavies who lugged beer; Lizza and Jeanie for all their helpers; Jim Kathy who were $keptical; Sharad and Paul who love money; Dave, Marianne, and Jarv who designed; Nails and Tim for Super V and Sci. 74 ¡acket; Laurie who kept the door in control; Tider et. al. who tidied; Simba and Al who sold 170 cases; the Oom-Pa-Pa's for finally arriving; Ian and Richard for AMS-ing; Claire-Happy Birthday; anyone else; and finally Bri for co-ordinating the whole thing. Next year, the Arena!

WANTED - 4 or 5 bedroom house for next year for Queen's girls. Call 544-8535 or 544-8500.

ROOMS AVAILABLE IN CO-OP immediately. One half-double for a girl only. Call Bev 544-3364.

BRUCE MCLEOD is no longer residing at 18 Garrett St. New address is 248 Barrie St.

FRONTIER COLLEGE: Labourer-Teacher recruiting session Wed Jan 26 at 7:00 pm in Jeffrey 127. Interviews can be arranged only at this meeting.

BOOKLETS available to assist you in writing your business resume. One page personal histories that might help you find the ¡ob you are looking for. For information call 549-1384, Bob Stock.

HEY MAN - Is that hard to do?

FOUND - Blue Skate Protector in front of Stirling Hall. Contact the AMS Office.

SVB needs volunteers for - St Matthews Church, St Margarets nursery school, French Cub Group, Senior Citizen's programmes, Kingston Psychiatric Hospital, Swim program at Sunnyside, skating with retarded children, Kingston Free School. There is still time to volunteer for community service.

PIZZA FACTORY
544-1221
Open Tues. - Sun.
Free delivery within city limits

Agnes
to Feb. 15: Venetian Prints of the XVIIIth Century on exhibition
Feb. 3: Opening of exhibition of paintings by 12 contemporary Scottish painters at 8:00.

REMEMBER
HELP YOUR RED CROSS
TO HELP

the pant place Dover's

Geared for action in two tone flared Levis. A big mix of patterns and styles, body tight sweaters and wide hide belts makes upstairs at Dover's the Pant Place.

Dover's Limited, 109 Princess Street — near Wellington

AMS okays parking garage -- senate is next

by Chris Redmond

A university spokesman promised the AMS outer council Thursday that a building will never be erected on the lower campus. And with that reassurance, the council gave student approval to the parking garage which the university intends to build beneath the playing field south of Kingston Hall.

Queen's vice-principal (administration) R.J. Kennedy and campus planner Eric Thrift came to a special outer council meeting to explain the project, which was criticized by council members when they first discussed it earlier last week.

"We are looking for every parking space that we can get," Kennedy told the council when asked why the lower campus site was necessary. Surface parking is not enough, he said, though it will be used as well in the area surrounding the new health sciences complex planned for the area around the present Kingston General Hospital.

About 1500 parking spaces eventually will be needed in that area, Kennedy said, of which the lower campus garage represents 600; most of the rest will be in a six storey above-ground garage planned for the west side of Barrie Street near Okill Street.

The parking cannot chiefly be put under the building itself, Kennedy said, because "these are large heavy buildings" needing more support than an open garage would give, because a garage would interfere with communications lines, pipes and pneumatic tubes, and because the water table is high so close to Lake Ontario and continuous pumping would be expensive.

By contrast, the lower campus is "a favourable environment" for the garage, Kennedy said, because there is room for two levels of parking and four feet of fill above the water table.

Parking spaces in that garage will cost around $3400 to build, Kennedy estimated, compared with $2400 to $2800 for the acquisition of above-ground parking.

Accordingly, he said, the rates charged for them will probably be higher. Kennedy pointed out that 72 roofed parking spaces now exist under the arena, and that 65 more are to be built south of Miller Hall in connection with the new geology building.

"I am strongly in favour of putting as much parking as possible below ground," Kennedy said, "even if it costs more." He added that he thought above-ground parking should be away from the central campus.

Below-ground parking will be built along with the arts-social sciences complex, he added, under the outer field.

Kennedy said he could not estimate how many parking spaces Queen's would eventually have or need. But he mentioned probable future parking areas: under the north half of the university centre block, and below the playing field which is to be made on the block north of the physical education centre.

How long will the garage take to build, Kennedy was asked. "The maximum time, I suppose, is infinity," he replied, but said that if work began this spring there would be green space by convocation time in 1973 and a playable field by the following autumn.

"We will do it in the minimum amount of time possible if it is decided to go ahead," Kennedy said.

The haste, he explained, is because the parking garage is a prerequisite for construction of the health sciences complex. "We will not be permitted either by the authorities in Toronto, or by the city fathers in Kingston" to start building the complex until parking is ready or at least in progress.

Council members criticized the whole concept of building the health sciences complex at the south end of the campus, and the university's delay in asking students what they think of the parking garage proposal.

"We should have come about a year ago," Kennedy admitted, but the delay was caused by the difficulty of getting organizations to work together.

"The messages have been coming through a lot more clearly since the last election," he said, and a detailed proposal for the complex is now ready to be submitted to the Ontario government.

On the other hand, Kennedy blamed the university's vagueness on some details on the fact that the project is still in the early planning stages.

He stressed the urgency again: "I am utterly convinced that if the health sciences complex is not built down here, starting very soon, it will not be built anywhere near Kingston at all."

He was aksed whether the university could promise that the lower campus garage would not later become the foundation for a building.

Kennedy's reply was, "It may not be worth much, but they'd have to fire me first.

"It just is not to be thought of."

He added that a broad garage probably would not be strong enough to support a later building.

Some council members asked whether the building of more parking is the correct approach to the traffic problem. The university intends to "gradually move the parking out off campus", Kennedy said, and planner Thrift told another questioner that he favoured the improvement of public transport rather than always catering to vehicle traffic.

But "I haven't seen a solution yet that would help us," Thrift said.

Kennedy defended the university against the claim that "everything takes twice as long" to build as originally scheduled.

"Assurances you can't get, Kennedy admitted, but he said the garage is "a standard sort of thing they could bang through in seven or eight months" and thus should not take more than a year to complete.

He traced the history of the proposal, saying that originally the garage was to extend all along Stuart Street from University Avenue to Arch Street.

But Summerhill's lower lawn would have been destroyed, Kennedy said, and this is "unthinkable". That has been avoided, and the project made more economical, he added, by extending the garage north almost to Kingston Hall but keeping it west of the heating tunnel which runs underground just west of the tennis courts.

Kennedy promised that the lower campus would be relandscaped once the garage is built. "It won't look the same," he admitted, but it will be a better playing field.

The council was finally asked to approve a motion giving student endorsement to the parking project on the condition that the lower campus be made unusable for "a minimum period of time".

An amendment was proposed adding a second condition: that the university guarantee the garage will not be sufficiently strong to support a building.

"Make sure that doesn't include goalposts," artsci rep Georgie Fallis called out.

The amendment and the motion carried.

The parking garage proposal will go to the university senate Thursday and to the board of trustees next month.

Parking garage is an old idea

The Alma Mater Society was told three and a half years ago that the university planned to build parking facilities under the lower campus.

In a meeting with the AMS outer council on March 19, 1968, then principal Dr. J. A. Corry outlined the future plans for the university's physical plant, including the parking proposal.

The information was never made public or passed on to future councils because of a misunderstanding between Corry and AMS president Chuck Edwards.

Corry had been invited to speak to the AMS about expansion on the understanding that that part of the meeting would be closed to publicity. The meeting, however, was not made closed until it was noticed that a member of The Journal's staff, who also worked for The Globe and Mail, was taking notes of the discussion. The council then took the unprecedented step of declaring the meeting closed retroactively.

Some of the things Corry said during that meeting would not have been said if the principal had thought he was speaking to an open meeting. Some of the plans he outlined are now buildings on campus; others included land which the university was contemplating buying.

Under heavy pressure from the university and the AMS, the reporter did not publish the details of what Corry had said.

- mossman

Casino Cal and the Vegas Viceroy visiting Saturday's UM-pa-pa to promote the Commerce Society's Casino Royale Raffle. The draw is February 11 for a trip for two to Las Vegas.

Course guide is planned without computer figures

The arts and science course evaluation guide will not use computer calculations this year, coordinator John Bankes has told The Journal.

The decision is the result of a motion passed last month by the arts and science faculty board, declining to give faculty support to a computer-written course guide because of the calculation mistakes found in the 1971 guide.

Each departmental student council has been given for study a copy of the evaluation questionnaire used at the University of California at Berkeley, compiled and assessed there at a cost of $50,000. Bankes said each department is expected to modify the questionnaire to meet its particular needs.

He added, "I want more emphasis placed on a personal evaluation of each course." To this end, he stressed the use of more open-ended questions.

DSC representatives in each course will work out percentage responses of the students and then compile a written summary. This will be supplemented with remarks from the professor -- an extension, at the least, of what appears in the calendar about the course.

Bankes commented that 75 per cent student response is necessary to make the course evaluation guide worthwhile. But "I have a hell of a lot of faith in it," he concluded.

Each course evaluation will be printed in a large book, bound like a Who's Where. There will be a limited edition of 1000 copies, which will be located at strategic places on campus with "Do Not Remove" signs on them.

The guide will be restricted to second, third and fourth year courses with more than ten students.

Bankes said. "I hope to have it ready by the middle of the summer."

TRICOLOR SOCIETY NOMINATIONS

Nominations for admission to the Tricolor Society are now being received.
Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be limited to postgraduates, and to students in the second term of their final year, who, maintaining a satisfactory academic standing during their course, have rendered valuable and distinguished service to the University in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities, for example:- (a) service in one of the major fields of student government, journalistic work, debating, dramatics, or (b) a significant contribution in a wide range of activity.
Admission to the Tricolor Society shall be granted by decree of a Special Committee for this specific purpose.
Any member of the Alma Mater Society may submit nominations to the Tricolor Society. Names of such nominees shall be submitted to the Selections Committee through the Alma Mater Society Office, together with a list of those services the nominee has performed. No nominations will be received later than January 25, 1972.

GOT A PROBLEM?

WITH THE ONTARIO GOVERNMENT

Bring any problem or question you have concerning the Ontario government to the Queen's Progressive Conservative Problem Desk, every Wednesday

TOMORROW - AMS OUTER OFFICE, UNION
FUTURE - JOHN ORR ROOM, UNION
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING 9:30 - 11:30

OPEN MEETING

Senate Committee on Fine Arts and Public Lectures

TODAY — 3:30 p.m.

Faculty Lounge - 2nd floor Theological Hall

to hear submissions on the Position Paper concerning the arts at Queen's

The Queen's Pub

would like to hire everybody on campus

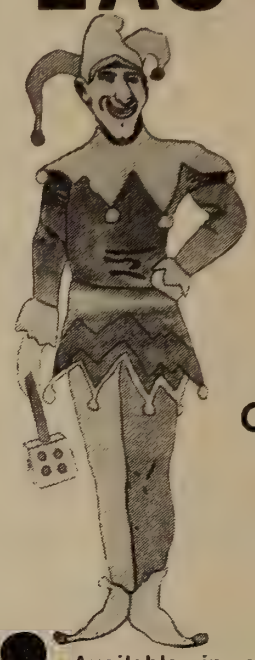
BUT...



Unfortunately we have absolutely no openings for this term. We have a permanent staff of over 50, plus a waiting list of over 100. With no openings in the forseeable future, we regret to announce that we won't be able to hire any new personnel. So, until further notice, please don't call us....

REMINDER

The second installment of fees due by January 31, 1972 can be paid in person at the Accountants' Office, Richardson Hall.

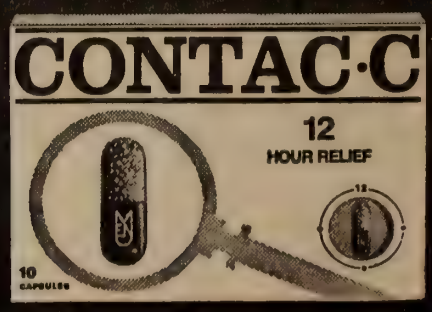
If you find it more convenient to mail your cheque to the Accountants' Office, please record your student number on the face of your cheque.

LAS VEGAS

For Two During Reading Week.

All expenses paid
Plus $500 to spend

IT'S A SUPER SUNSATIONAL SENDOFF



GET YOUR TICKET TODAY

For

CASINO ROYALE RAFFLE

Available in all Residence Meal Lines, Dunning Hall Foyer, and from The Vegas Viceroy.

MAN WHO BLOWS NOSE, OFTEN BLOWS CHANCE.

Man who takes Contac·C, takes good medicine.

Deutsch explains Wright Commission's vision

by Jennifer Grass

A satellite campus in Oshawa is not part of Queen's plans for the future, principal Dr. John J. Deutsch told The Journal last week.

It had been suggested by Ontario legislator Dr. Charles McIlveen (PC-Oshawa).

But, Deutsch added, "We are willing to assist the government in setting up a campus there."

He said that despite the government's enthusiasm for satellite campuses of universities, such a remote campus would lose by the arrangement--and so would Queen's.

Deutsch's comments were made in a conversation with a Journal reporter Thursday, en route to Toronto for a press conference at which he and other members of Ontario's Commission on Post-Secondary Education explained their just-released report.

That report was leaked and published last week by The Globe and Mail. Because of the premature publication, the commission (often called the Wright Commission) held a conference to discuss their proposals and the reasons for them. (A summary of the report appeared in Friday's Journal.)

Deutsch explained that before compiling the report, commissioners travelled throughout the province hearing briefs from private citizens and major institutions. Some even went to other countries to see how their educational systems were set up.

"We found that the desire for education in Ontario was extremely high," Deutsch said. However, many people had commented that there were not sufficient opportunities for them to improve themselves, he said.

"We therefore decided it was necessary to open the educational system up, to provide greater diversity and accessibility to higher education."

This is to be accomplished by the introduction of additional forms of educational services, the encouragement of life-long education, part-time school attendance, and new ways of delivering educational services.

To increase geographical accessibility to post-secondary education, the report recommends that the province encourage the establishment, through local, community, or private initiative, of small colleges of 200 to 1000 students; satellite campuses affiliated with existing universities are also suggested.

To further diversify the system, the Wright Commission recommends that higher education be delivered in a new way. The creation of a University of Ontario would provide educational services through mass media. A testing and evaluation service would be made available. And those people who achieved a level of competence in some field equivalent to that of graduates of established universities would receive degrees or diplomas.

To encourage part-time attendance, all programmes in universities and colleges should be available in that way, the report says. Students should also be able to enrol in two institutions simultaneously. In the case of such mixed programmes, the University of Ontario would have the authority to grant degrees.

Some of the recommendations regarding this mass education programme are intended to increase opportunities for occupational mobility. The report recommends that in the professional area, which includes architecture, engineering, law, medicine, psychology, social work, and teaching, there should be "a spectrum of practitioners".

This would include specialists, general practitioners, paraprofessionls, technicians, assistants, and aides. Courses would be provided which would enable people of "lower" levels to advance to "higher" levels on the basis of performance.

It is also suggested that employees be allowed to take a portion of their pay increases in educational leaves. The extent to which this could take place would depend on an agreement between unions and employers. Commenting on the implications of mass education, the report says, "The social and economic privileges that used to follow attendance at post-secondary institutions are going to diminish as more and more students attend."

At present the public pays more than 86 percent of the operating cost of educational institutions. The rest comes from student fees. The Wright Commission suggests that the cost of teaching should be shifted directly to the student, as "educational consumer".

For the first three years, the student would pay half the cost of his teaching if his family income was over $10 thousand, and none if it was below $7500, with a sliding scale between.

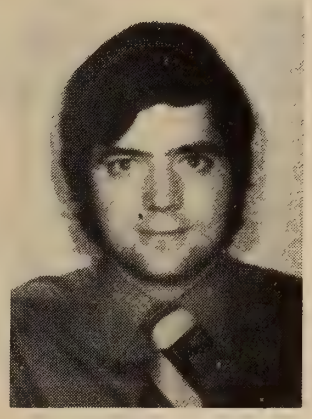
Two schemes would be involved in financial aid to students. The grant scheme would make higher education accessible to students from lower income groups. These awards would be large enough to pay the student's tuition fees and to provide for his maintenance while at school.

The loan system would be open to all students, with loans to be repaid in the 15 years following graduation and forgiven after that time.

Reaction to the Wright Commission proposals for the complete reorganization of education in Ontario have been mixed. The government will be deciding, in June or later, just what is to happen.

Chief boss is chosen

John Farrell of Commerce 75 has been chosen as chief boss for next fall's commerce initiation.



The choice was made Thursday night, and announced by commerce orientation chairman Richard Chown. Chown said the orientation committee had changed its membership, and now includes, besides himself, Angela Biever (finance), Murray Mackay (academics), and Kenny Wong (social).

Interviews will be held this week, Chown said, for the choice of five or six female bosses and about 25 male bosses, who will lead groups of freshmen during orientation week.

We're setting up a policy that can be a reference for all other years, like a constitution," Chown said of the committee's plans.

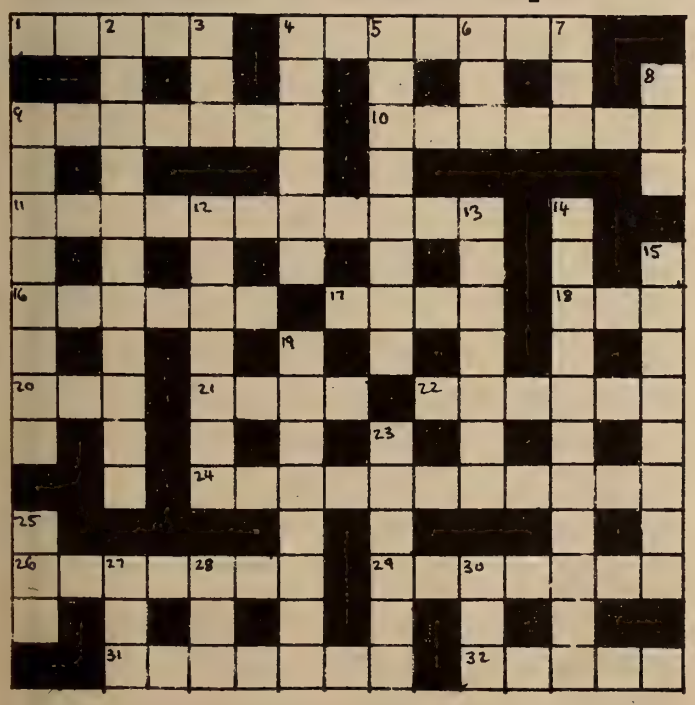
He added that there would be more cooperation with arts and science orientation than in the past.

Plans should be finalized by mid-February, Chown said.

John Farrell

Acting grad dean named

Dr. J.E. Hogarth, associate dean of graduate studies and a professor of mathematics, will be acting dean of graduate studies next academic year.



The present dean, Dr. R.L. McIntosh, will be on sabbatical leave for a year beginning September 1.

Assisting Hogarth for the year will be an acting associate dean, Dr. H.M. Estall of the philosophy department.

"Professor Estall's sage counsel within the office of the school will make an important contribution to the success of the school's operation," a statement from McIntosh said.

Journal crossword puzzle of the week

ACROSS

1. Ruin.
4. Not precise.
9. Came out.
10. Area behind Douglas Library.
11. Common path (across the lawn, for instance).
16. Objects.
17. Joy, when sung.
18. Seize.
20. A very long time.
21. Wild goat.
22. Get out of jail.
24. Places of residence.
26. Bringing in the sheaves.
29. Run off with the goodies.
31. Fall like a stone.
32. Snake that can't multiply.

DOWN

2. Functional.
3. Trail behind.
4. Write with care.
5. Intestines.
6. Gay floating melody.
7. Drink in the late afternoon.
8. Usual Kingston weather.
12. Department on fourth floor of Watson.
13. Israeli parliament.
14. Somewhat five-sided.
15. Concerned with, to the exclusion of all else.
19. Word for word.
23. Narrows between two shores.
25. There is definitely only one solution here.
27. Hit sharply.
28. Sort of an ostrich.
30. It comes in black, red, yellow, and mostly aquamarine.

Frontier college recruits

Frontier College, a private organization aimed at taking education to remote areas of Canada, plans this summer to recruit 100 labourer-teachers from among students on Canadian campuses. They will be recruiting at Queen's tomorrow night.

Education student, and former Frontier College worker, William Payne said students will be hired to work alongside labourers on rail gangs, in mining and logging camps and in failing communities.

He said Frontier College is "an expression of the concern of university student unions today with social problems outside the immediate university community."

The college is looking for enthusiastic, imaginative and adaptable persons who are able to relate well to others and who are not easily discouraged.

These students will join the communities as co-workers, labouring for their shift as company employees and at the same time sounding out community needs and setting up a useful programme.

About a third of the programme's budget comes from federal and provincial government grants. The rest is provided by donations from the 25 supporting student unions -- including the AMS -- industry, and the general public.

But Frontier College, faced with rising costs, is falling short of its target budget this year.

As a result, Payne said, the recruiting will coincide with a public plea for donations.

The aim for the Kingston area drive is $15 thousand. Donations can be sent to the college's headquarters at 31 Jackes Avenue, Toronto.

Information about Frontier College will be available at 7 p.m. tomorrow night at 126 Jeffery Hall.

INTERNATIONAL WEEK

INDIA NIGHT

Presented By India Association

A VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT PROGRAMME TO CELEBRATE THE REPUBLIC DAY ON SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, AT 7:30 p.m.

Dunning Hall Auditorium

PROGRAMME WILL BE FOLLOWED BY INDIAN SNACKS IN THE STUDENTS UNION
TICKETS AVAILABLE UNTIL JANUARY 26, at 50c EACH FROM INTERNATIONAL CENTRE OFFICE, R. Keshauan 548-7518, 547-5579

WINE AND CHEESE PARTY

Presented By International Club

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2 AT 9:00 p.m.
LOWER LOUNGE OF INTERNATIONAL CENTRE

TICKETS: $1.00 EACH, AVAILABLE FROM INTERNATIONAL CENTRE OFFICE

OPEN HOUSE

Presented By International Club

Sundays - January 30 and February 6, 8:00 p.m.
Upper Lounge of International Centre
Live Folk Entertainment
Free Admission and Refreshments

CHINA NIGHT

Presented By Chinese Club

ON SATURDAY FEBRUARY 5 at 8:00 p.m.
GRANT HALL
A PROGRAMME INCLUDING LION DANCE, CHINESE CLASSICAL MUSIC, CHOIR, CHINESE BOXING "KUNG FU", FOLK DANCES, AND CHINESE FOLK LORE.
TICKETS AND INFORMATION AVAILABLE FROM INTERNATIONAL CENTRE OFFICE.

WEST INDIAN NIGHT

Presented By West Indian Club

MONDAY, JANUARY 31,

8 p.m.

STUDENTS UNION

AFRICA NIGHT

Presented By African Club

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4, at 8:00 p.m.
grant hall
DIRECT FROM AFRICA OTU W"AFRICA DANCE BAND
TROUPE DANCERS: JUJU, ETILOGN
BAR AVAILABLE
TICKETS: $2.00 person
$3.00 Couple
AVAILABLE FROM INTERNATIONAL CENTRE OFFICE

Billy Jack - Superstar -

by Paul Gompertz

The main character in this movie is a half-breed who rates among his many talents the ability to be bitten repeatedly by a rattle-snake, which induces a state of trance during which he utters prophesies; the ability to demolish countless opponents with devastating karate kicks and chops; and a happy knack of being in the right place at the right time.

But hero though he may be, it is not his story, and were the events surrounding him all that the movie offered, it would be a poor movie indeed. He reveals little of himself to anyone, least of all the audience, and although his wry humour and self assurance are at times diverting, he is a classic comic book 'superman'. The movie does, however, have an impact, though it is difficult to know whether there is any value in its reiteration of old problems without the ability to offer any new solutions. It concerns itself with the bigotry of a small town towards a 'Freedom School' on its outskirts, and it illustrates this bigotry with vicious candour. It evokes feelings of frustration and helplessness, especially in a scene where the two factions meet for discussion and do no more than shout each other down, without making any genuine effort to communicate. It is, however, difficult to know whether a further awareness of the problems of incommunication between young and old is going to help anyone, if it is itself incapable of positing any possible solutions. Billy Jack trades his liberty for an uneasy truce between town and school; but this solution is as inapplicable in a general way as the tacit alternative cry of the school's director of 'forgive them for they know not what they do.'

Once upon a time movie characters fell into two categories; the goodies and the baddies, and no matter what the baddies did during the movie, the goodies triumphed in the end. But it is not so here. Billy Jack takes his revenge upon Bernard, the son of the town's pocket dictator (a character who shows a surprising reluctance to shoot horses for someone who can rape and murder), but the source of the problem, both in its human manifestation (Bernard's father) and its pervasive and unseen presence in the whole town, is not tackled at all.

It is a movie made by students for students and had it not confused its levels of approach, it might well have achieved something as a documentary of suggestions for breaking down the barriers between the generations. When stripped of its super hero, its exaggerated and inconsistent characters, and its contrived and violence-inducing plot, it reveals moments of insight into common ground for understanding, most noticeably in a scene where two members of the town council take part in an improvisation session, playing the roles of a son and daughter who have been smoking marijuana, and who are confronted by their irate parents (2 students). They finally get carried away and recognize their 'parents' hypocrisy, which is the nearest anyone comes to appreciating the other party's viewpoint.

If you want to see a movie about a super-hero, those of the James Bond genre will be far more staisfying. If, however, you want the generation gap brought home again, in a violent and intensified atmosphere, maybe it is worth a visit, though the time would perhaps be better spent looking for some answers to the problems of which most people are already aware.

boohoodays

Tuesday, January 25

4.30 p.m.: Legal Vistas presents Prof. R.M. Burns whose topic is "Intergovernmental Relations", in Theatres D & E, Macdonald Hall.

7.00 p.m.: Meeting of Artsci '75 for snow sculpture in front of Ontario Hall.

7.30 p.m.: Interested in CUSO? South-East Asia? Andy Woodsworth, returned CUSO volunteer will be giving a talk slide show on Malaysia. The International Centre upper meeting room. All welcome.

7.30 p.m.: Queen's Univerity Amateur and Electronics Radio Club. VE3VX is holding its first meeting the new year in the upstairs lounge, Clark Hall. All members and interested persons are urged to attend.

9.00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "A Taste of Honey" in Ellis Hall Auditorium.

Snowball Activity Night in Leonard Field. Afterwards - hot coffee and doughnuts in Donald-Gordon Common Room.

Wednesday, January 26

9.30 - 1.30 p.m.: Music Department presents the Kodaly Choral method workshop in Victoria Public School Auditorium.

6.00 p.m.: Athletic Night at the Phys. Ed Complex.

7.00: Meeting of Artsci '75 for snow sculpture.

8.30 p.m.: Music Department presents a student recital in Dunning Hall.

9.00 p.m.: Dance with Bramble in Grant Hall. Admission 25 cents and Snowball button.

Thursday, January 27

4.15 p.m.: Dept. of History presents Prof. Herbert Gutman giving a lecture of "The Development of the American Negro Family" in 517 John Watson Hall.

7.00 p.m.: Campus Movies presents "The Good, The Bad and The Ugly in Dunning Hall.

7.00 p.m.: Bridge Club in McLaughlin Room in the Union.

7.00 p.m.: Meeting of Artsci '75 for snow sculpture.

7.30: The Consumer's Interest Group meets in room 210, Kingston Hall. Prof. Ison of the Law Faculty will talk to the group on investigation of false advertising. Students interested urged to attend.

7.30 p.m.: The Ukrainian Club presents Miss Halya Kuchmij, who will relate her experiences and will discuss field-worker activity for the coming summer as an alternate form of employment.

7.30 p.m.: Medical Sciences Lecture Series presents Pills and Pregnancy and Drugs and Chromosomes in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

8.00 p.m.: Snowball Cultural Night in Dupuis Auditorium. Mathews and Steele on Americanization of Universities.

9.00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "Make Way for Tomorrow."

Friday, January 28

11.30 to 12.20 or 4.30 to 5.30: Films with Lunch in Etherington Hall Auditorium sponsored by the Faculty of Medicine.

8.15 p.m.: 3rd Annual Chalmers Festival of Music and the Arts. Recital by the choir.

8.30 p.m.: Snowball Variety Night on Ice in Jock Harty Arena. Admission is Snowball button and 25c.

9.00 p.m.:Bitter Grounds Coffee House. Fun Nite with local talent. Glen Foster and Jug Band, The Trout, and others. Admission only 50c.

10.00 p.m.:Wine and Cheese Party (after the Variety Show) in Grant Hall. Admission $3.00 per couple.

Saturday, January 29

10.00 a.m.: 3rd Annual Chalmer' Festival of Music and the Arts film festival.

2.30 p.m.: Chalmer's Festival. Children's Theatre presents "The Witch who Stole the Music".

3.30 p.m.: Chalmer's Festival. Organ Recital.

7.30 p.m.: India Assiciation presents India Night in Dunning Hall followed by Indian snacks in the Students Union. Tickets are 50c available from International Centre Office and R. Keshavan at 547-5579.

8.00 p.m.: Chalmer's Festival. Harpsichord recital.

9.00 p.m.: Bitter Grounds Coffee House.

Sunday, January 30

10.30 a.m.: Folk Mass in Dunning Hall. Coffee and doughnuts afterwards.

7.00 p.m.: Folk Mass in Newman House.

8.00 p.m.: International Club presents open House with live folk entertainment in the Upper Lounge of International Centre. Free admission and refreshments.

Bars	Theatres
401 Inn — Terry Gee and More	Capitol — Billy Jack
Pub — Muriel Day and the Night Squad	Hyland — Dollars
Commodore — Street Noise	Odeon — Kidnapped

A Traitor is the Odd Canadian Hero

A Review of a novel by David Helwig as Written by Fulford of the 'Toronto Star'

Among Canadian heroes John Martens, is, to say the least, an oddity. He is a traitor.

Knowingly, he betrays the Canadian government's secrets to a foreign power. Willingly, he lives the life of a secret agent within the Department of External Affairs. Gladly, he accepts the destruction of his career when he is discovered. He knows it was all worth it, and he is proud. "I did what was necessary," he tells us.

David Helwig, who puts John Martens at the core of his first novel, The Day Before Tomorrow, doesn't withhold from him sympathy or understanding, as is customary with traitors in novels of all kinds. Helwig instead reaches into the book, pats the traitor on the back, and says in effect: "There, it's okay. We'll understand." And, more or less, we do.

The Day Before Tomorrow is a very special sort of contribution to the Canadian literature of the moment. For one thing, it isn't incomprehensible, as so many of our new novels are -- it's a solid, straightforward story about a man who does certain understandable things out of reasonably understandable motives. Helwig is clearly as interested in plot as he is in character. Equally he is interested in politics in ways that few fiction writers are these days. He believes people do many things out of political motives, and he wants to explore these motives.

Helwig's novel isn't, however, one of those wordy, gluey, mock-Victorian epics; it's spare and precise, and its story is delivered to us in quick, snapshot-style paragraphs. Helwig, who teaches at Queen's University, Kingston, has already established himself as a poet and short story writer. On this first performance he shows himself clearly an impressive novelist.

John Martens operates in an External Affairs Department that must be, one imagines, very like the real thing. (And watching the expert way Helwig handles it, one marvels in passing at how little Canadian fiction deals with the human beings in our great public institutions.)

These men of External touch on the greatest public events in the world, yet they must deal with them in an atmosphere of bureaucratic caution so stultifying that it could easily produce a kind of collective insanity. These are the men who are regarded by Washington as messenger boys, and occasionally used in that way (as the Pentagon Papers demonstrated.) They are largely important and irrelevant in the world. They are Americans without power, Englishmen without history, Frenchmen without even pretended grandeur. Naturally, they spend a lot of their time being very cross.

To this, John Martens' life adds another dimension of unhappiness. He and his wife endure the sudden, unexplained death of their late, much-wanted first baby. This drives her into herself and him into a state very like a kind of waking death. It is espionage, of all things, that brings him back to life.

Someone from a foreign government, presumably the Soviet Union, approaches Martens. He agrees to spy, and abruptly his feelings return to him. He is delighted to be alive:

"I find there is a remarkable fascination to be working on two levels of the mind at the same time, being two people at once . . . I have a constant double awareness, as in certain kinds of comedy. That is the effect, to make everything comical because of the detachment. Philby must have had an extreme and delighted awareness of this sort . . ."

But, of course, it's more than this John has had for a long time a dim awareness that he had somehow found himself on the wrong side in the Cold War, that the "future" is elsewhere. He believes that to be political is to reach out and grasp this future. "Freedom is being at one with history."

Seen from one angle, as he struggles toward this belief and then luxuriates in it, John is a sympathetic character. But he is also an idiot. His notion that the Soviet Union is the future, and that passing over grubby little NATO secrets from the high commissioner's office in London makes him a new political man, is as deluded as it is self-glorifying. Moreover, he's a miserably inefficient spy. He commits the unforgivable crime of keeping an honest diary. The Russians should be as angry at him as the Canadians.

Later, in jail, John says in self-justification: "I had to step into history however I could, without scruples. You see, it's like a fire. You're either in or out." The person he's talking to is his much younger brother Jake, a Queen's University student who has come to England on behalf of their mother to find out what happened to John.

Jake represents another generation and another kind of political involvement. He can't accept John's future-drunk acceptance of power politics. He believes in, and takes part in, the kind of local anarchist confrontations developed in the 1960s.

Back home in Kingston, Jake participates (admittedly, in a grudging way) in rather pointless little "actions" against the system; while in London he helps a family of poor squatters move illegally into an empty house. This is as far as politics go for him. He faces John across the table in the jailhouse and accuses him of not knowing what he's talking about. He and his elder brother are suddenly very angry at each other. Even among those who hate the system, the generation gap is still a crucial fact of life. On this as on several other subjects, David Helwig has written an eloquent novel.

the commitment of the intellectual by paul baran-

What is an intellectual? The most obvious answer would seem to be: a person working with this intellect, relying for his livelihood on his brain rather than his brawn. Yet simple and straightforward as it is, this definition would be generally considered to be quite inadequate. Fitting everyone who is not engaged in physical labour, it clearly does not jibe with the common understanding of the term "intellectual." For the first definition, broad as it is, applies accurately to a large group of people forming an important part of society: individuals working with their minds rather than with their muscles. Let us call these people intellect workers. The steady proliferation of that group reflects a crucially important aspect of the social division of labour beginning with the early crystallization of a professional clergy and reaching its acme under advance capitalism-the separation of mental from manual activity, of white collar from blue collar.

Both the causes and the consequences of this separation are complex and all-pervasive. Rendered possible by, and contributing mightily to, the continual expansion of productivity, this separation has become at the same time one of the principal facets of the progressive disintegration of the individual, of what Marx referred to as the "alienation of man from himself."

Thus, under capitalism the intellect worker is typically the faithful servant, the agent, the functionary, and the spokesman of the capitalist system. Typically, he takes the existing order of things for granted and questions the prevailing state of affairs solely within the limited area of his immediate preoccupation. This preoccupation is with the job in hand.

To repeat, the purpose of the intellect worker's work and thought is the particular job in hand. It is the rationalization, mastery and manipulation of whatever branch of reality he is immediately concerned with. In this regard, he differs little, if at all, from the manual worker who moulds metal sheets, assembles parts of an engine, or lays bricks in constructing a wall. Putting it in negative terms, the intellect worker as such is not addressing himself to the meaning of his work, its significance, its place within the entire framework of social activity. His "natural" motto is to mind his own business, and, if he is conscientious and ambitious, to be as efficient and as successful at it as possible.

Not that every intellect worker explicitly formulates and consciously holds this view. Yet he has, one might almost say, an instinctive affinity to theories incorporating and rationalizing it. One of them is Adam Smith's time-honoured and well known concept of the world in which everyone by cultivating his own garden contributes most to the flourishing of the gardens of all. In the light of this philosophy, the concern with the whole moves out of the centre of the individual's preoccupation, and affects him, if at all, merely marginally, that is to say, in his capacity as a citizen. And the strength and influence of this philosophy derive from the very important truth that it conveys: that under capitalism, the whole confronts the individual as an overpowering objectified process irrationally propelled by obscure forces which he is incapable of comprehending, let alone influencing.

> "In their capacities as specialists, managers and technicians, the intellect workers (as opposed to intellectuals) believe they have nothing to do with the formulation of goals. They may have some predilections as citizens, but as scientists, experts, scholars, they wish to refrain from endorsing one or another of these 'value judgements.' It should be perfectly clear that such abdication amounts in practice to the endorsement of the status quo."

The other theory which reflects the condition and satisfies the requirements of the intellect worker is the notion of the separation of means from ends, of the divorce between science and technology on the one side and the formulation of goals and values on the other. This position, the ancestry of which is at least as distinguished as that of Adam Smith, has been aptly referred to by C. P. Snow as a "way to contract out." In Snow's words, those "who want to contract out say we produce the tools. We stop there. It is for you, the rest of the world, the politicians, to say how the tools are used. The tools may be used for purposes which most of us would regard as bad. If so, we are sorry. But as scientists, this is no concern of ours." And what applies to scientists applies with equal force to all other intellect workers.

Needless to say, "contracting out" leads in practice to the same attitude as the Smithian "minding one's own business"; it is to substitute for God's invisible hand the more obvious if by no means necessarily more beneficient hand of the capitalist state. The result is the same: the concern with the whole becomes irrelevant to the individual.

Now I submit that it is in the relation to the issues presented by the entire historical process that we must seek the decisive watershed separating intellect workers from intellectuals. For what marks the intellectual and distinguishes him from the intellect workers and, indeed, from all the others is that his concern with the entire historical process is not a tangential interest but permeates his thought and significantly affects his work. What it means is that the intellectual is systematically seeking to relate whatever specific area he may be working in to other aspects of human existence. Indeed, it is precisely this effort to interconnect things which, to intellect workers operating within the framework of capitalist institutions and steeped in bourgeois ideology and culture, necessarily appear to lie in strictly separate compartments of society's knowledge and society's labour- it is this effort to one of the intellectual's it is likewise this effort tellectual's principal fu symbol and as a remind the seemingly autonom morsels of social existen art, politics, the econom and psychic condition o

(and influenced) only if parts of the compreh process.

It is important to re
practice, studiously ideologists, of regarding people as lying outside th
For these "values" and the intellect workers are from heaven. They the aspects and results of the merely be taken cogniz with regard to their origi in historical developmen

And this raises a furth specialists, managers workers believe they ha mulation of goals; nor do preference for one goal
some predilections as cit scholars, they wish to r another of these "valu perfectly clear that such to the endorsement of the "ethical neutrality" that devoting their energies a perfection of means of b

But it could be objected
the question, that the iss
the impossibility of deduc logic alone any statemen what is bad or what contr
against, human welfare.
this argument, it is actua readily granted that there a judgement on what is vancement which would b time and space. But such plicable judgement is w target, and the insistence aspect of a reactionary id constitutes an opportuni improvement in the lot of or inimical to its realiza history from one period to the world to another. The judgements are required speculative questions con general; they have alwa placed on the agenda of onnect which constitutes ding characteristics. And identifies one of the in-in society: to serve as a he fundamental fact that isparate, and disjointed er capitalism- literature, er, science, the cultural e- can all be understood re clearly visualized as otality of the historical

the implications of the ed by the bourgeois
-called "values" held by iew of scientific scrutiny.
al judgements" which to chable data, do not drop es constitute important ical process and need not but must be examined
the part which they play

e. In their capacities as chnicians, the intellect hing to do with the foreel qualified to express a nother. They may have ut as scientists, experts, from endorsing one or gements." It should be tion amounts in practice s quo. It is in the name of ent scientists have been ents to the invention and ological warfare.

s point that I am begging ses precisely because of y means of evidence and cerning what is good or to, rather than militates ver force there may be in side the point. It can be possibility of arriving at or bad for human adlutely valid regardless of bsolute, universally ap-ight be called a false ts indispensability is an
y. The truth is that what r human progress, for d also what is conducive differs in the course of ext, and from one part of ons with regard to which e never been abstract,
ng "good" or "bad" in een concrete problems
y by the tensions, contradictions, and changing constellations of the historical process. And at no time has there been a possibility or, for that matter, a necessity to arrive at absolutely valid solutions; at all times there is a challenge to use mankind's accumulated wisdom, knowledge and experience to attain as close as possible an approximation to what constitutes the best solution under the prevailing conditions.

If we are to follow the "contractors out", the "ethically neutral" minders of their own business then would bar precisely that stratum in society which has the largest knowledge, the most comprehensive education and the greatest possibility for exploring and assimilating historical experience, from providing society with such humane orientation and such intelligent guidance as may be obtainable at every concrete junction on its historical journey. The intellect worker's withdrawal from seeking to influence the outcome of "elections" is far from leaving a vacuum in the area of "value" formation. It merely abandons this vital field to charlatans, crooks and others whose intentions and designs are everything but humanitarian.

It may be well to mention one further argument which is advanced by some of the most consistent "ethical neutralists." They observe, sometimes haltingly and blushing, that after all it is by no means establishable on grounds of evidence and logic that there is any virtue in being humanitarian. Why should one worry about the proverbial "milk for the Hottentots," if such worry causes discomfort or inconvenience to oneself? Isn't the humanitarian position in itself a "value judgement" for which there is no logical base? Some thirty years ago I was asked these questions in a public meeting by a Nazi student leader (who eventually became a prominent SS man and functionary of the Gestapo), and the best answer I can think of now is: a meaningful discussion of human affairs can only be conducted with humans; one wastes one's time talking to beasts about matters related to people.

This is the issue on which the intellectual cannot compromise. Disagreement, arguments and bitter struggles are unavoidable and indeed, indispensable to ascertaining the nature and the means to the realization of conditions necessary for the health, development and happiness of men. But the adherence to humanism, the insistence on the principle that the quest for human advancement requires no scientific or logical justification, constitutes what might be called the axiomatic foundation of all meaningful intellectual effort, an axiomatic foundation without the acceptance of which an individual can neither consider himself nor be thought of as an intellectual.

"An intellectual is thus in essence a SOCIAL CRITIC, a person whose concern is to identify, to analyze and, in this way, to overcome the obstacles barring the way to the attainment of a better, more humane, and more rational social order."

The desire to tell the truth is only one condition for being an intellectual. The other is courage, readiness to carry on rational inquiry to where-ever it may lead, to undertake "ruthless criticism of everything that exists, ruthless in the sense that the criticism will not shrink either from its own conclusion or from conflict with the powers that be." (Marx) An intellectual is thus in essence a social critic, a person whose concern is to identify, to analyze and, in this way, to overcome the obstacles barring the way to the attainment of a better, more humane, and more rational social order. And as such, he is inevitably considered a "trouble-maker" and a "nuisance" by the ruling class seeking to preserve the status quo, as well as by the intellect workers in its service who accuse the intellectual of being utopian or metaphysical at best, subversive or seditious at worst.

The more reactionary a ruling class, the more obvious it becomes that the social order over which it presides has turned into an impediment to human liberation, the more is its ideology taken over by anti-intellectualism, irrationalism and superstition. And by the same token, the more difficult it becomes for the intellectual to withstand the social pressures brought upon him, to avoid surrendering to the ruling ideology and succumbing to the intellect workers' comfortable and lucrative conformity. Under such conditions it becomes a matter of supreme importance and urgency to insist on the function and to stress the commitment of the intellectual. For it is under such conditions that it falls to his lot, both as a responsibility and as a privilege, to save from extinction the tradition of humanism, reason, and progress that constitutes our most valuable inheritance from the entire history of mankind.

It may be said that I am identifying being an intellectual with being a hero, that it is unreasonable to demand from people that they should withstand all the pressures of vested interests and brave all the danger to their individual well-being for the sake of human advancement. I agree that it would be unreasonable to demand it. Nor, do I. From history we know of many individuals who have been able even in its darkest ages and under the most trying conditions to transcend their private, selfish interests and to subordinate them to the interests of society as a whole. It always took much courage, much integrity and much ability. All that can be hoped for now is that our country too will produce its "quota" of men and women who will defend the honour of the intellectual against all the fury of dominant interests and against all the assults of agnosticism, obscurantism, and inhumanity.

(Paul Baran, a well-known socialist, is the author of Political Economy of Growth and (with Paul Sweezy) Monopoly Capital, described by Canadian Dimension as the "most important theoretical works on the capitalist economy that have been published over the past two decades.")

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 38
Tuesday, January 25, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

Editorials and letters

Pierre vs the lazy poor

Prime Minister Trudeau again demonstrated his lack of sympathy, if not his outright contempt, for the poor and unemployed last Friday (see Back Page), in some of his remarks he made while announcing that his government will not provide any more direct federal aid to alleviate poverty in Canada.

He told an audience of Italian immigrants in Toronto that there is work in Canada but "some people may have to go to it or take something at or only slightly above the minimum wage," implying that there would be no problem of unemployment if there were not so many lazy people.

He told another audience that a guaranteed annual income programme would not be introduced because that "might result in people quitting their jobs and taking government assistance instead." Again, the implication is that Canadians are basically lazy people who would immediately jump at the chance to quit working. Evidence often noted by federal Health Minister John Munro indicates that, at least with the present welfare regulations, the vast majority of those living on government welfare money do so not because they are too lazy to work but because they cannot work.

Munro's figures are as follows: 41 percent of those on welfare are permanently disabled; 26 percent are mothers caring for dependant children single-handedly; 9 percent are old people, 8 percent have temporary disabilities and 3 percent are working poor receiving income supplements. That leaves 13 percent who could potentially work. Of these, 54 percent were laid off; 11 percent lost their jobs through strikes, and 13 percent lost their jobs through pregnancy or family difficulties. A further 11 percent are off work for miscellaneous reasons. Only 11 percent quit their jobs; that is, 11 percent of 13 percent or 1.43 percent of all welfare recipients. Moreover, 70 percent of this last 13 percent indicated they would move to get work.

As the Toronto Star editorial from which these figures are drawn said: "Welfare is no picnic; for the vast majority of beneficiaries, it's the last depressing stop on a road of spirit-buffeting defeats and despairs."

Having thus insulted both those on welfare and those still working, Trudeau then had the nerve to comment that "the guaranteed income should mostly come from hard work." This from a man who, until he entered Parliament in 1965, had worked only intermitently, spending one year in a law firm in 1944, and two years with the Privy Council between 1949 and 1951 and 1965 was "underemployed" in the words of his friend Jean Marchand, and who was able to thus avoid work, tour the world, and dabble in political writing simply because he had the good fortune to have been born into a wealthy family (his father's holdings are now estimated to be about $16 million.)

Perhaps it is through looking back at his own prolonged youth that our Prime Minister comes to the conclusion that the possession of a guaranteed source of income lessens one's desire to work. Such a conclusion certainly does not arise from an observation of the objective data about the poor and unemployed, with which he seems unfamiliar.

On the proper role of intellectuals and universities

By Bill Johnston

"The university can do nothing to change the world, outside of it unique and proper function of trying honestly and competently to understand it . . . The only contribution the university can make to basic human problems is to think about them."

- Prof. J. M. Stayer, in a letter to the Journal, Jan. 11, 1972.

"One day, the intellectuals of my country will be interrogated by the simplest of our people . . . On that day, the simple men will come and ask: What did you do when the poor suffered."

- from a poem by a Latin American, in the Dec. 7, 1971 Journal.

"(The faculty) are content to stick to the narrow fields in which they are knowledgeable without concern for the social relevance of what they are doing."

- Bill Johnston, in a Journal editorial, Dec. 14, 1971

As the above quotes indicate, the question of the role of the university and of intellectuals in society has been alluded to on several instances in the Journal this year.

The first quote above is a relatively standard explanation of one conception of the true role of the university in society. The other two imply, without stating it directly, a belief on my part that somehow a university faculty member or an intellectual has a role to play in society that goes beyond mere thinking.

The raising of this question, touched off by the Arts Faculty Board decision last December to not support a series of courses dealing with the problems of conflict, poverty and the environment, and by Stayer's letter and the reply to it last Thursday by Prof. Coleman, revived a debate which has taken in my place in my mind, on and off, for the five years that I have been at Queen's. Should intellectuals confine themselves to thinking about the world, in a cool, detached and rational way that those actively involved in events perhaps cannot, while at the same time taking no direct action on the conclusions they reach or taking no moral stands on the findings they make or the use to which such findings are put? Or, on the other hand, should the intellectuals, who have most carefully analysed a situation, then throw themselves into the midst of it, to act on their conclusions, with the risk that they might thereby lose the ability to stand back and observe the world, and to analyse it in a clear and rational way?

As noted above, I have felt for some time that the first course was unacceptable, but I have never quite been able to reach a firm conclusion about the second. My feelings against "mere thinking" have never been more than a vague hunch, which I have never been able to articulate fully but to which I have nonetheless held more or less consistently.

It was, then, with some pleasure that I found the article by Paul Baran (in Arthur, Trent University's newspaper) which is printed on page 8 and 9, an article which, to me, clarifies and explains the vague hunches I have held on the subject. His analysis of what an intellectual is and what his role must be seems to me to be the clearest, most well-reasoned statement on this subject that I have read or heard of.

Simply stated, Baran's thesis is this: a person is not an intellectual if he refuses to make value judgments about the goals of his work, or the goodness or badness of what he is doing and the possible effects his work may have on humanity, or if he refuses to acknowledge that his work must contribute to the improvement of humanity. Moreover, in this light, the natural role for the intellectual is then the role of social critic for society, criticizing all that does not help to make the world more humane.

It seems to me that Baran has answered the question posed in a letter (from Prof. Coleman) to the Journal last Thursday: "Is it as important that all students (I'd add faculty) at Queen's think seriously about the most crucial problems bearing on the sruvival of human beings as it is that all Math Majors study calculus?" The answer is: it is at least (if not more) important, and to reject that idea is to abandon the prime, and most essential purpose a university has for existence, to be a place for the training and working of intellectuals, as Baran defined intellectual.

Criticism of Razor's Edge misplaced and unfair

Dear Editors:

In reply to Phil Miller's complaint (Journal January 18) about the Razor's Edge, I would say that his article did not cut deep enough.

The Razor's Edge is a place of entertainment -- therefore a luxury. In complaining about the edge Mr. Miller has made the common error of inappropriately assigning a complaint about the high cost of living and also assigning his complaint to the wrong sources.

I am more concerned about the rising cost of necessities such as milk and telephones -- costs which daily push people to the poverty line. In the case of milk dairy profits are steadily pipelined to the U.S. while the Canadian farmer is doled out a meagre subsistence.

In the instance of telephone rates, Bell has actually decreased service -- insisting accounts be paid at their business office rather than at the post office as many paid formerly. Meanwhile, telephone rates continue to skyrocket. Of course, it is probaly mere coincidence that the current attempts to raise rates occurred after Bell moved their head office to Ottawa.

Oh yes, returning to the critique of the Razor's Edge. Considering the highly specialized entertainment at the Edge (as good as that at Le Hibou of Ottawa and clubs in Toronto due to the strong contacts of the managers of the Edge with the blues music world), I belive that $2.50 is a reasonable price for the occasional visitor. If you are interested in being a regular client, you can pay a small amount for a membership and save on additional visits.

It's easy to complain about the high costs of a small specialized business but not easy to see that the high costs are due to a small Kingston population (compared to Montreal where St. Denis exists) and also the astronomical property taxes (through rents) and corporate taxes which any SMALL business must pay.

Furthermore, hustling chicks, writing poetry and relaxing (which Mr. Miller was saying one should not have to pay $2.50 for) can be done on any street-corner if these are Mr. Miller's higher pleasures.

Paul Sansoucy.

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman.
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks to Elspeth Nickle for typing, to the Western Gazette for a late poster, Chris Pappas, the duty man, and news staff.

Letters - criticism of Journal, praise for some students

Dear Editors:

This letter is in response to the article "Israeli Conflict, Nuclear War. . .When" by Edmond Lehmann (Jan. 14.)

The article itself doesn't warrant the effort of my pointing out its distortions and lies, as any one with even an ounce of intelligence would realize it is nothing but vicious degrading swill.

I would like to say, however, that if this is the quality of articles found in this paper, then it will be hard for me to give credence to views expressed in this journal in the future. I am thoroughly disgusted with it and you.

-Louis Florence, Arts '73.

Dear Editors;

I protest with great disgust and indignation the inclusion in last Friday's issue of a meretricious travesty by a Mr. Lehmann, with the biased caption, "Israeli conflict." Any serious student of the Middle Eastern Question--whether he stands on one side or the other--must find this peculiar salad of misinformation repugnant.

With his puerile emotionalism, the author of this wretched mish-mash-- even had he any knowledge of elementary facts -- presents a most bizarrely distorted and preselective opinion.

That may be his privilege: but so is it mine in objecting to his naked lies and crude stupidities. Instead of a fair, mature analysis of both sides, Mr. Lehmann gives us partial, tendentious, reductionistic falsifications.

Could such a one-sided silly hashwork of history bring the world any closer to peace? I am repulsed by the editorial slant and lack of taste in publishing such a simplistic and unbalanced analysis of as tortuous and complex a question as that of the Middle East.

Mr. Lehmann blames "biased mass-media": could this not be an unintended reference to your editorial policy? I hope that the editors will still have the good taste to clear themselves of Mr. Lehmann's obvious prejudice, and to apologise to some readers for the insult implied in its publication.

- E. Galper.

Dear Editors;

Edmund Lehmann is too full of what comes out of the back end of a bull. His article is loaded with grave distortions of basic facts, not to mention serious omissions of important data. I think the study of Abraham and his dream, or more likely his hallucination, is perhaps a fascinating study but is it really relevant to the problems of the Middle East in the twentieth century?

Lehmann claims that the Palistinians were "expelled" from their homeland. They were not. They left because of promises by Arab leaders and especially the Grand Mufti in Jerusalem that the Arab armies would soon drive the Jews into the sea.

The Arabs failed in their quest. Israel cannot logically now allow the free entrance of over one million people who have pledged to destroy the state. Lehmann also fails to mention that a vast majority of the land of Israel before the 1967 War was purchased from the Arabs (at Arab prices) and not taken from them by force.

He implies that Israel conducted a blitzkrieg in 1967 but he ignores the fact that Israel is surrounded on three sides by Arab nations.

The fourth side is bordered by the Mediterranean Sea. Combined Arab populations at the time totalled over 40,000,000-Israel did not even have 3,000,000. A blitzkrieg it wasn't but Israel was able to deal swiftly with attacks in the north, the east and the south.

He implies that Israel blockaded the Suez Canal when in fact it was Egypt that sank derelicts and freighters making the canal impassable to international navigation.

The present situation in the Middle East has very little to do with a dream - real or imagined - that Abraham might have had 3,800 years ago. It is a situation between Israelis and Arabs that has been in existence for less than fifty years.

-Peter Cruickshank

(Ed. note: We agree with the above criticisms of Lehmann's lack of balance and one-sidedness in his account of the Middle-East situation, and acknowledge that, to do justice to the complexity of the situation, an article would have to go into much detail of the part played by the Americans, British, French, Arabs, Russians, and Israelis.

Such a balanced account exists in the book Middle East Crisis by Wint and Calvocoressi, (available in the Douglas Library), which basically concludes that the idea of creating the state of Israel in the midst of Arab territory was an extremely short-sighted, bad idea.

However, this book, and others by observors of the Middle-East (such as Violent Truce by E. H. Hutchinson) points out that most of Lehmann's statements on events of the past 25 years, and particularily relating to the pro-Israel bias in North American media, are correct (if, perhaps, simplistically stated) and that those of Peter Cruickshank, above, are inaccurate.

Moreover, many other observors from the West, who went over to the Middle-East pro-Israel, like Hutchinson, have returned with very little sympathy for the Israelis because of their military aggression.

Finally, we commend Cruickshank for refraining from employing the tactics of Galper and Florence, who give us "instead of a fair, mature analysis", nothing but emotion and indignant words, in a manner far worse than even they accuse Lehmann of.)

Co-ed committee

Dear Editors;

The rapidly changing events surrounding the consideration of a coeducational residence at Queen's seem to have left your illustrious pages somewhat breathless and devoid of public thanks to the group of individuals working to advance this concept.

This is a situation which should be corrected. The Coed-Residence Committee, a joint IRC-WRC team, guided by the chairmanship of Mr. Romans have worked diligently on this complex issue. To them is due our admiration and compliments for their stamina and efforts.

The useful quantitative data produced by this Committee, particularly that which it would seem was the result of the WRC initiative, has equipped the governing Residences Board to make informed decisions concerning this matter. Compliments are therefore due to all those parties responsible for deriving this data.

Although the Residences Board decided unfavourably with regard to the particular proposal brought forward by the Committee, it should be recognized that the Residences Board is itself now actively attempting to build upon the foundations laid by the IRC and WRC by examining the possibilities of utilizing Morris Hall as a coeducational residence.

Without the active support of both IRC and WRC membership, as spearheaded by the Coed-Residence Committee, this would not have been possible.

-Professor R.L.E. Brown
Member, Residence Board.

Volunteers

Dear Editors;

On behalf of Sunnyside Board of Management, I would like to extend thanks to the many Queen's students who volunteer their services at Sunnyside Children's Centre. Their assistance is an important part of the programme.

-Ruth Lash (Mrs.)
President,
Board of Management.

Question and Answers

The new Global Village ad poster for "The Golden Screw: A $4 Ripoff", features an artsy-nouveau female body with succulent lips replacing a vagina. This ad is

(a) gutsy
(b) far out!
(c) senseless
(d) in poor taste
(e) sexist

IF YOU ANSERED (a): You are an honest, sincere but fucked-up male chauvinist.

IF YOU ANSWERED (b): You are a gullible, naive freak who doesn't mind people oppression.

IF YOU ANSWERED (c): You are a person who has tuned out about half of the human race.

IF YOU ANSWERED (d): You are a gutless liberal who's mistaken human pride with human prudery.

IF YOU ANSWERED (e): You see the problem. All that remains is for you to act on your experinece.

-(Guerilla)

the Dormouse

by Alan Broadbent

This is the time of the year when many people who aspire to be student politicians actually begin their careers. For those who are vaguely considering this step into the realm of university machinistics, I would like to briefly outline some of the most fruitful avenues and productive ploys.

First, we might consider the aforementioned avenues. If you are now in first year, you stand the best chance of attaining the pinnacle of success, the presidency of the Alma Mater Society. If the aim is not the AMS presidency, there is a similar route to a student position on the Senate.

In first year, it is vital to secure a position on the year executive, but definitely not the position of president of the year society. Historically, the most lucrative position is one of the social convening roles, this shows well in the future, for it confirms that the aspirant has a past of gregariousness and is a "fun person".

However, the real advantage is to be a power figure on the orientation committee of your faculty. This shows a lively interest in the individuals who come to the University, as well as in the future of the institution, and guarantees the aspirant at least two weeks of daily exposure to the voting constituents. Reputations are made and undone during orientation proceedings.

In second year it is not particularly advisable to be too evident around campus, at least not until February. This is the year for making a reputation as a solid contributor to the life of the campus by being involved in things like curriculum review, the management of the Student's Memorial Union, or something equally unseen.

If the aspirant hopes to make the presidential or senatorial bid in the third year, then February of the second year is the time to start writing letters to the Journal and Golden Words expressing a solid maturity concerning a spectrum of safe issues.

If the aspirant is going to wait until the fourth year to make the bid, then the rest of the second year should be taken up doing this solid committee work. The third year would be spent sitting on one of the obvious committees of the University, or at the outside being one of the AMS commissioners. This latter route is not too highly recommended, for each year the populace seems to want some sort of change from the traditional AMS and they don't take too kindly to "old faces".

There is something to note well here; at some point in the second or third year it is vital to accept and execute some job which you do extremely well, for after this happens it may take people years to get over the shock and recognize what a dolt you really may be.

Also during the third year, you should develop a style that is somewhat kinky, just slightly so, that will separate you from the crowd as someone who is frank and non-traditional.

By the month of March in the third year, or in the second year for those who want to stick to the three year plan, you should be ready to make the final assult. It is too obvious to state that one should assume the role of the humble mechanist. You are just someone who thinks that a job has to be done, and you will accept the awesome responsibility with little thought for your personal life because you know that somebody has to.

All of your campaigning, however ruthless, should reflect this attitude. Gather people around you and instruct them to make your past known to the campus; this is done as a gesture of honesty, so that they will know who they are getting into, but it is done reluctantly because you don't like to blow your own horn. On the sly, perhaps through one of your close friends, set up a devastating political machine which will not leave a trick unturned. This is a great help. But do not acknowledge the presence of the machine; feign disinterest in campaigning by going to bed early, despite the fact that you haven't been in bed before 1:30 a.m. in the past three years. It is a good political sacrifice.

This format will probably get you elected.

Other things can be done according to your desires. Victor Bradley has pulled two of the best this year. First, announce your candidacy early. This is a touchy manoevre, but will show that you want a "good race with lots of time to consider the issues". Victor's next ploy is perhaps the best. Ask for a three day election period: this will strike the obvious metaphor of the crucifixion. On the first day the aspirant will impale himself on the cross of public scrutiny and will arise the third day to grandly lead the masses in a profound and significant way.

These latter ploys are optional, but if proven successful this year will appear in the revised edition of Power Pinnacles, an AMS publication for aspiring young politicos.

FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE

Experimental Intersession Program

May 10 to June 23, 1972

Queen's University will offer an Experimental Intersession Program between May 10 and June 23, 1972. This program has been designed to make available a selection of both introductory and advanced degree courses offered by the Faculty of Arts and Science. Currently registered Intramural and extramural students at Queen's, and applicants who meet the admission requirements of the University and the Faculty, may register in up to two full courses within the Intersession Program.

Biology
12-201 — Introduction to Genetics
Computing and Information Science
22-101+ — Introduction to Computing
22-102+ — Computer Organization and Programing 1
Drama
25-240 — Introduction to Theatre Design
25-320 — Text Analysis
25-330 — Experimental Theatre Practice
Economics
29-210 — Modern Economic Theory
English
32-211 — Chaucer and the Middle Ages
32-221 — Renaissance Poetry and Prose
Film
34-310 — Fundamentals of Film Production
Geography
38-440 — Regional Geography of Latin America
History
46-260 — Canada from the Conquest to World War II
46-276 — Russia: The Quest for Social Justice
Mathematics
55-111 — An Introduction to Linear Algebra
55-162 — Probability and Statistics
55-323 — Complex Analysis
Politics
81-210 — Canadian Government and Politics
81-310+ — Canadian Federalism
81-423+ — Political Communication
Psychology
84-021 — Educational Psychology
84-100 — Principles of Psychology
Sociology
92-122 — Introduction to Sociology
92-274 — The Sociology of Deviant Behaviour
92-352 — Sociology of the Family

Term;
May 10 to June 20 (including Victoria Day)
June 22 and 23 — Examination Period

Class Timetable;
Classes in each full course will be two hours each day, 5 days each week.
Classes in half-courses (indicated above by an + after the course number) will be one hour each day, 5 days each week.
Classes will be scheduled sometime between 8:00 A.M. and 10:00 P.M. Registrants will be asked to express a preference for morning, afternoon or evening.

Registration:
Registration, accompanied by a deposit fee, is required by January 31, 1972. This registration is most important, since individual courses may not be offered if a minimum number of registrations is not received. Moreover, it is improbable that any student who attempts to register later than January 31 can be accepted, and in any such case, a late Registration Fee would apply. Certain courses also have a maximum enrolment limitation.
Students currently registered intramurally in any Faculty or School at Queen's should register through the Faculty of Arts and Science Office, 131 Union Street. All other students register through the Department of Extension, 25 Union Street, Kingston, Ontario.

Eligibility:
Registrations will not be valid unless course eligibility requirements are met by May 10th, 1972. Students are not permitted to register for an Intersession course similar or identical to a course already taken. Not more than two full courses may be taken during the Intersession. Students registering in two full courses may list up to two alternative selections (for which no deposit fee is required) in case a first or second selection is withdrawn due to insufficient enrolment

Fees:

	Non-Refundable Deposit Fees (payable by January 31)	Course Fees (payable by May 10)
For each full course	$25.00	$115.00
For each half-course	$12.50	$ 57.50

Note. Deposit fees will be deducted from the applicable Course Fees when final payment is made.

INTERLUDE

Arts & Science Formal
To be held at the Holiday Inn
Saturday, February Twelfth
Nine to One
Refreshments
The Bob Ayre Orchestra

Eight Dollars per Couple
Tickets go on sale in
John Orr Room
January 31

Chalmers Festival

GOOD MUSIC • FINE FILMS

starts Friday, Jan. 28

Deta s from Chalmers Church Office,
212 Barrie St., phone 546-3263

A ♠ COMMERCE MEN!

Buy your tickets for the Commerce Formal from your year president.

Caesar's Palace

ROUND TABLE, FEB. 12, 8:30 - 1:00 am.
$9 - couple including full buffet. BAR

♠ H A

IF YOU DON'T KNOW DIAMONDS
KNOW YOUR JEWELER

You don't have to know the inside secrets of diamond buying. But you should know a knowledgeable jeweler. Why not get to know us. We'll give you the basic facts about diamonds. And the better you know us, the surer you'll feel. Because we will only let you buy the finest diamond your money can buy.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

Gaels Tie, Lose; Academics Force Mott Out

by Bruce McLeod

Queen's hockey team lost the services of Morris Mott last week. The classy center, who has been the core of the Queen's offence, made a tough personal decision as his thesis work reached a crisis stage.

In two games over the weekend, the rest of the team showed both why they can do well without him, and why they still need him. Against Toronto on Friday night, the Gaels came from behind three separate times to tie the powerful Varsity team, 4-4, getting the last goal with just 48 seconds left in the game. Then in Windsor, they were inept and disorganized in losing to an inferior Lancer squad 6-4.

The Gaels came out forechecking and skating fiercely against Toronto, as all the players felt they had something to prove. Twice within the first two minutes the Gaels almost scored.

But the team still seemed a little nervous at facing the vaunted Toronto Blues, and lacked the confidence to finish off plays in the Toronto end.

It was Toronto who scored first, although not until near the end of the first period. Goalie Clyde Harris was holding the Gaels up at this point. Over-all, he faced 42 shots, and was the games' third star.

The Gaels tied it up at 5:02 of the second period as Stan Galt converted a rebound of a Bob Kindon shot to finish off a nice three-man rush. After that, it settled down into a fairly even game.

There was very little hitting, but play never did open up very wide, as Toronto demonstrated their mastery of the art of hook and grab, and Queen's relied on their relentless forechecking. Colin Loudon's line, and particularly Loudon himself really stood out at this, and it was their digging in the Toronto end, as much as anything, which led to the next two Gaels' goals, both scored by Murray Douglas on similar pass-outs from behind the net.

But before that happened, the Blues had jumped into a 3-1 lead, scoring at the end of the second and beginning of the third period to take control in a fashion which seemed convincing to most of the fans. Not to the Gaels, however.

Over the game, the players had slowly been gaining confidence, and by the middle of the third period, they were definitely carrying the play to the Blues. Douglas' first goal, less than a minute after Toronto scored its third, gave the Gaels new life.

His second, to tie it at 3-3 at 17:52, came at the end of a prolonged siege in the Toronto end, and had the Varsity fans screaming at their beloved team to do something.

At 18:01, the referee gave them their chance with a farcical interference penalty to Stu Lang. The grateful Blues took advantage by scoring within 8 seconds. But still the Gaels would not be daunted. Coach Bob Carnegie sent out Loudon's line, which had been most effective all night, and Loudon made himself the hero of the hour and first star of the game by sweeping up a puck which had got past Toronto defender at centre ice, faking a pass to linemate Bruce Cameron on the resulting 2-on-1 break, and whipping a shot along the ice into the corner of the net.

After a physically and emotionally exhausting game like that, the thing most to be feared in playing a lesser team like Windsor was a letdown, and that is exactly what happened. The Gaels looked inept and confused for the whole game.

Even the goals they scored looked like accidents, instead of the end of well-executed plays. John Smith got two by swiping at the puck after a face-off, and by poking in one which popped out of a scramble. Stan Galt and Colin Loudon got the others.

The Gaels couldn't hold the lad when they had it, and, more importantly, couldn't score when they had to. The last Windsor goal was into the empty net. Here is where the Gaels needed Mott, to steady them down and get them organized. In this game, as opposed to the Toronto one, no one appeared willing or able to take over.

But perhaps it is too easy to blame the Gaels performance on the absence of Mott. A game like the one at Windsor can happen to any team, and one could point in contrast to the previous game, when the Gaels played their hearts out, refusing to be daunted by the slings and arrows of the most outrageous fortune.

I think the question of the mettle of this team without Morris Mott must be deemed still an open one. Queen's still has a lot of talent, and several of the players, notably on the defence, have been maturing rapidly.

The team faces a crowded schedule this week. Tonight they are in Ottawa to play Carleton, who will undoubtedly be smarting from their drubbing last week.

The next night they play RMC as part of the Snowball festivities, and on Saturday face another big game, against a York team that promises to be every bit as tough as Toronto. Queen's fans will be looking for an answer to their questions about the team in these games.

- perry

Colin Loudin - Scores tying goal

Hockey Gals Still In First With Win, Tie

For the spectators at the gals hockey game Friday night at 7:00 pm, there was a fine display of hockey against the red and white opponents from Guelph. The Queen's competitive spirit showed through as they downed Guelph 4-1 and improved on their 2-2 pre-holiday tie with this team.

The game was fast, but the positions were played more consistently than previous games. Karen Howatson was on the top of the scoring list for Queen's. On a breakaway, she drove the puck into the net and left the Guelph goalie to dig it out.

However, Jill Patterson of Guelph did not delay in tying up the score. She picked up the puck in front of the net and shot on goal. Guelph's hesitation on the shot psyched out the Queen's goalie, Wanda Gyde; she fell to the ice prematurely and the puck flew over her head.

Liz Lankin pokes at puck as Guelph goalie sprawls

marshall

Queen's was to take over from here on in. Gwen Harrison, assisted by Cathie Black and Ginny Bachus, netted the puck and put the golden gals in the lead 2-1. In the second period, Ginny Bachus, assisted by Cathie Black, reinforced the Queen's score by adding still another goal. So the period ended with the hockey gals leading 3-1.

In the third period, with nine minutes left to play, Debby Gilmour put an end to Guelph's hopes of ever catching up. After a rush into Guelph's territory and a resulting shot, the puck rebounded across the net with the goalie out of position.

Debby placed the puck in the net behind the goalie on a backhand shot. With seven minutes left in the period, Marg Mutch, of Queen's defensive line, who was hampered by a previous leg injury, twisted her other leg and was assisted off the ice.

Unfortunately, during the game the golden gals acquired four penalties by Sylvia Cameron, Marg Mutch, Ginny Bachus and Debra McCaw. Yet the remaining squad was effective in killing the penalty until the team was back to full strength.

As a result Queen's came out on top with a 4-1 lead when the buzzer sounded. For those interested in more statistics, Guelph outshot Queen's 28-23, but the girls are learning that shooting is necessary to score.

The second game of the weekend for Queen's took place Saturday at 3:00 pm. Once again there were quite a few spectators to witness the event. Although Queen's was not able to score during the game, the golden gals had control of the game as shown by the shots on net; Queen's 29, York 9.

For the statisticians in the audience the score was 0-0 (of course Cathy Wright played her role successfully in net) and the penalties 2-2 -- an all around tie.

The Queen's penalties for tripping and interfering were for Debra McCaw and Ginny Bachus respectively; the York penalties were acquired by Debbie Harding and Dawn Gordham for tripping and slashing respectively.

Saturday's game did not measure up to the high quality hockey of the previous evening. The York game consisted of scrappy play, poor positioning and inaccurate passing -- the effect was total frustration.

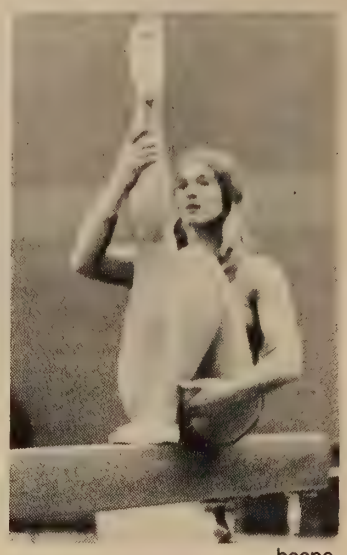
However, Queen's still maintains first position in the inter-collegiate league with Guelph, Western, and McMaster fighting it out for second place.

To report briefly on other women's intercollegiate hockey games at Queen's this weekend, the scores were Guelph over McGill 7-1 and McGill over York 5-0.

In two weeks time, after many more vigorous and exhausting practices, the Queen's golden gals host Western and McGill on Feb. 4th and 5th in the Jock Harty Arena. All supporters are welcome to cheer the ladies on to victory in these last decisive encounters.

Curling Gals Advance In OWIAA Play

Six teams from the Eastern Section of the O.W.I.A.A. met in Ottawa for the first part of the playdowns in Women's Curling.



Queen's stood second at the end of the meet, behind U. of Toronto and ahead of U. of Ottawa, Laurentian, Carleton, and Trent. The top three teams advance to the finals at McMaster in mid-February.

The Queen's team, skipped by Helen MacRae, consists of vice Heather Graham, second Lynda Munroe and lead Cathy Grenville.

GYMNASTICS

Girls edge Ottawa U...

Queen's women's gymnastics team got a strong performance from their junior competitors and went on to edge Ottawa U. by a score of 97.3 to 88.4 in an invitational meet here Saturday. Queen's girls captured the first three spots in all-around competition, with Lee Ann Hoar taking top spot on the strength of a second in floor exercises and thirds in vaulting and beam. Sue Roberts won the balance beam and uneven bars events to take second spot, while freshette Beth Gilbert placed third with a second on the beam and a third in floor exercises. Jill Harrison, another first-year competitor, came second on the bars and tied for the beam, while Laura Scott took second spot in vaulting. Penny Smith ignored a painful case of shin splints long enough to turn in a beautiful routine and capture first place in floor exercises.

- boone

Vivian Symington - Int. All-Around Winner

The intermediate girls, hampered by injuries, were forced to take second place although Vivien Symington came first in bars, vaulting and floor exercises to capture the all-around title. Chris Goodbrand, the only other girl to compete for Queen's at the intermediate level, finished second all-around and second in all events except floor exercises, where she tied for third.

Queen's will host the OWIAA Gymnastics Championships February 12th, and coach Betty Pyear is hopeful that her girls can capture the title this year. Much will depend on how the injuries heal, but fan support will be much appreciated.

... but Men lose to York

In a closely-fought invitational meet at Royal Military College Gymnasium on Saturday, the Queen's Men's Gymnastics Team was edged out by the powerful York University gymnastics squad. Led by Captain Tom Kinsman, the team from York finished the meet with a total team score of 135.25, while Queen's finished in second spot with 131.75 points. Host R.M.C. clinched fifth place with 97.5 points.

Participating in the R.M.C. Invitational Gymnastics Meet were teams from York, Toronto, Queen's, R.M.C. and Oneonta College in the U.S.

York gained significantly in team standings in comparison with its last meet here at Queen's, mainly because of the return of squad star Tom Kinsman, who is presently ranked among the potential candidates for the Canadian Olympics team in 1972. Kinsman placed first in the individual all-around standings with a score of 46.75. He also copped first spot in floor exercises and vaulting, and tied for top honours in rings and horizontal bar. He was followed closely in the all-around standings by Dave Hunter, with 46.05 points. Hunter tied with his teammate for first.

Local Kingston Gymnastics Club competitor Tsong Hsin Chou placed third in the all-around standings with a score of 45.7. He was trailed closely by Queen's gymnast Drew Strickland, who won the Parallel Bars event in an outstanding routine with a score of 8.0.

A rather unusual facet of the meet was unprecedented victory of Queen's on the long horse; with a score of 27.1 overall in this event, Queen's managed to take the vaulting event for the first time in living memory.

Queen's travels this weekend to Cornell for a dual men's meet in Ithaca. The next home meet is the O.U.A.A. Women's Final, to be held on February 12 in the Bartlett Gymnasium. On the same date, the Queen's Men's team hopes to be in contention for top spot at the Men's O.U.A.A. Eastern final at York University.

Aquagals improve

Competing against teams from 18 universities, 10 of them American, the women's swimming and diving team managed to hold their own against much stronger, and numerically superior, opposition. Queen's entered 13 swimmers in 12 events and a lone diver, Carla Lennox, in both 1- and 3-meter diving. Carla reached the final round in both competitions, placing fourth amongst the Canadian schools and 10th overall. The 400-yard medley relay team won the consolation finals to gain 7th spot overall, while the 400-yd. freestyle relay squad was 5th in the consolation finals.

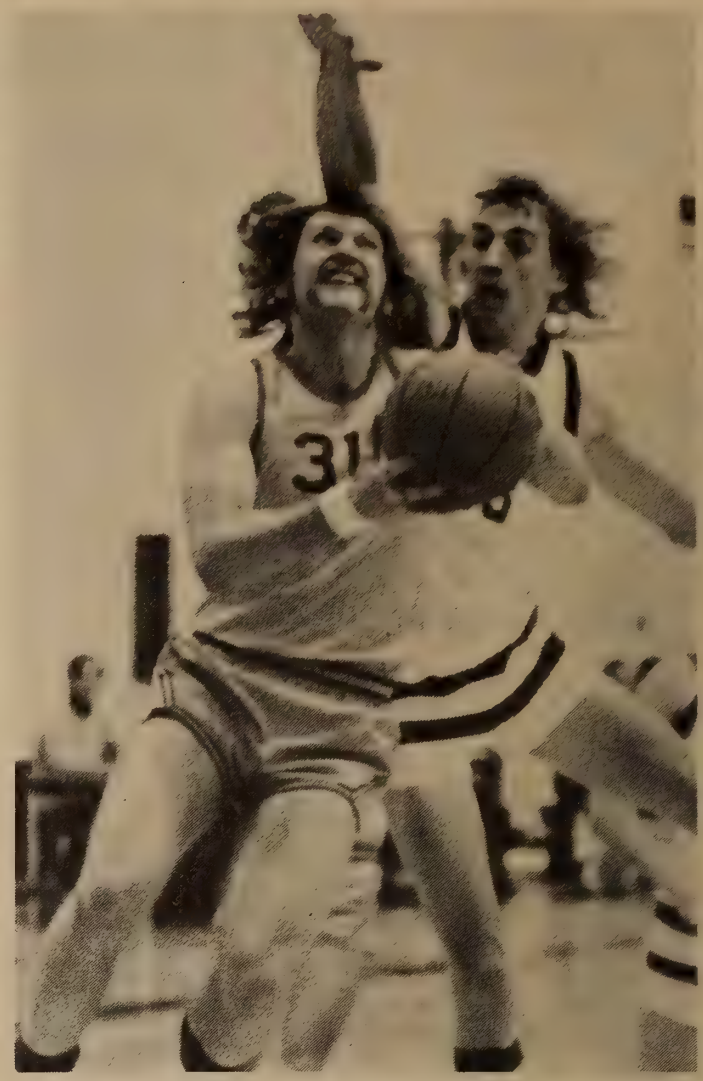
In individual competition, Cathy Brace placed 3rd in the 100-metre and 5th in the 200-metre breaststroke events, Sue Derby came 5th in the 200-metre backstroke final, and Cathy Clark took 5th in the 200-m backstroke consolation.

All competitors entered showed an encouraging decline in event times, and there is growing hope for some outstanding performances in the OWIAA finals in February.

T.O. 83-68 Laurentian 92-72

Gaels Drop Pair Despite Hustle

". . . and at centre, number 32, Joe Davidson" -- so went the introductions, and the 5'7" Davidson took the floor with some glee. However, the rest of the Gaels quickly realized that something was amiss. It seems that Joe wears glasses, while Paul Howard (6'5"), the real starting centre, does not. And so the correct lineup went out to face the U. of T. Blues.



U. of T. could do no wrong. For the first fifteen minutes, everything that hit the rim went in for them, while the Gaels had everything bounce out. The score reached 29-13 before the streak ran its course, and the Gaels started whittling into the lead. Andy Daugulis started to hit, Paul Howard began to control the boards, the lead shrunk to eleven, and then to six, 41-35 at the half, as Stu Bridgeman's ball-hawking produced a couple of steals.

Over the intermission, Toronto seemed to regain their first quarter bounce, as the rims aided them to a 52-40 lead. Gael's Rob Smart was into foul trouble early in the half, and he was fouled out as the Gaels began to rally. Substitute Ian Rawes came out to hit on his first shot, and the Gaels reached 52-48, and then surged to a 56-54 lead. Then disaster struck.

During the first half, the refereeing had not been of the highest quality, even prompting suggestions that Kingston refs were comparatively excellent.

In the second half, Queen's positively began to long for a mere Charlie Pester or Wayne Norris. The Toronto refs showed their true blue colours with a series of five homer decisions (including the proverbially impossible four point play) that presented the Blues with ten points, and annulled two Queen's baskets. Suddenly facing an eight point deficit again, the Gaels wilted. Paul Howard, bumped hard on a rebound attempt, fell on a previously injured sprained ankle, and was promptly called for three seconds in the key. The Blues simply ran away laughing. With two minutes to go, they were up to a twelve point lead, and the Gael attempts to regain the ball by fouling simply resulted in a final score of 83-68.

Daugulis, as usual, led the Gaels with 25 points, followed by Peter Gordon with sixteen and Paul Howard with fourteen. For U. of T., Tony Rudmin led with 23, and Gerry Barker was close behind with 21. Howard's 23 rebounds tied the Queen's school record, as he picked the defensive boards particularly well.

Andy Daugulis - spark plug in first half at Laurentian

It's difficult to blame a fifteen point loss on bad luck and worse refereeing, but these were major factors. The Gaels showed signs of good things to come, with much more discipline and hustle than was shown in last week's losses. But it's a long drive to Sudbury for a Saturday night. . . . and another loss, with at least a few faint rays of hope for the Queen's Golden Gaels Basketball team.

In Laurentian, the Gaels put together a semblance of an offense and the hustle to produce the fast breaks necessary to beat teams which are physically larger than they are.

The team got off to a very slow start and were behind the eight ball as the Voyageurs rolled up a ten point lead before the Gaels made it to the score board.

From that point on, it was an uphill battle to whittle an 18-3 lead down to 4, 47-43, by the end of the first half. Andy Daugulis was the spark plug, leading the team with 19 points in the first half.

He produced some remarkable, under-the-hoop baskets, and his outside shooting was uncanny. Dave Smith was the other Gael threat in the first half, hitting from the outsidie of the Laurentian zone. The combined shooting of the Gaels forced the Laurentian team to come out of their zone at the beginning of the second quarter.

Paul Howard again played a spirited game while hampered by an irritating ankle injury which repeatedly forced him to the sidelines.

The second half was a different story for the Gaels. They ran into stiff opposition from Laurentian's man-to-man defence; the ball no longer seemed to have eyes and the Gaels ran out of steam.

Laurentian's John McKibbon was the dominant force in the Gael's demise, producing 33 points for the V's as well as some tough rebounding.

The Gaels were held to a 29 point second half, while Laurentian pulled away to a 20 point lead. The final score in the game was 92-72 for the V's.

Rookies have a rough time

A rookie-dominated Queen's wrestling team competed in the Guelph Invitational meet this Saturday and came away with valuable experience -- but not much else. Wrestling against older squads from Western, Waterloo and Guelph, the Gael rookies found themselves up against experienced men, and fell by the wayside.

Despite this "luck of the draw", the Queen's squad performed well, showing a continuing improvement. Ted Pordham was the best of these young performers, taking third spot in the 142-lb. class.

Coach John Albinson has high hopes that his charges will be an effective force by the time the OUAA finals roll around next month.

This week, the Gaels host R.M.C. in a Snowball dual meet on Wednesday, then travel to Toronto for a three-way competition with Ryerson and Toronto. Saturday, the matmen continue their road swing with a visit to Waterloo for another head-to-head encounter.

The cadets promise strong competition in all weight classes, so fans should see some good, hard-fought matches Wednesday night.

THE ARTS FESTIVAL NEEDS MUSICIANS

CALL:
Don Campbell, 544-9542
Larry Moore, 544-1571
Hildi Adelhelm, 544-0175

WORK YOUR ASS OFF FOR US!

Frontier College now recruiting labourer-teachers

1. To do HEAVY LABOUR in mines, logging camps, fishing teams, railway and construction locations.
2. To devote all their free time to ADULT EDUCATION: English, French, Mathematics, etc. as well as recreational cultural and community developement programmes.
3. To commit themselves for FOUR HOURS of hard work, 7 days a week.

INFORMATION AND RECRUITING MEETING
WEDNESDAY, JAN. 26,
7 pm
JEFFERY HALL Rm. 127

Both male and female applications will be considered.

Queen's—
A Cultural Vacuum

NOT 3 PEOPLE HAVE VOLUNTEERED TO PLAY CLASSICAL MUSIC FOR FESTIVAL!

CALL:
Peter, 544-7013 or write
Festival '72, AMS Office

REFLECTIONS

Snowball Semi-formal

featuring

Major Hooples'
Brandy
Subway Elvis

Saturday, 29 January
time - 9:00 pm - 1:00 am
place - Grant and
Kingston Halls
tickets - $7/couple

REFLECTIONS

CLINT EASTWOOD

"THE GOOD, THE BAD AND THE UGLY"

DUNNING
THURSDAY
JANUARY 27
7:00 and 9:30 $1.00

A cREaTiVe EXPeRIeNCE in CoMMUnitY LIVing

SCIENCE 44 CO-OP

Information Pub Night Jan. 31

CAMPUS ELECTIONS

February 8,9,10 (except law, meds, theology)

NOMINATIONS:

AMS

President/Vice President (team)
Referenda

Nominations must have the signatures of 200 AMS members and must be in the AMS Office by 5:00 p.m. Friday, Jan. 28-72

Requests for referenda will be accepted until the Outer Council meeting Monday, Jan. 31-72. Requests require 200 signatures of AMS members.

Referenda are presently scheduled on the questions of 1- retaining the $3 concert fee; 2- retaining the $4 Tricolor fee; 3- increasing the university centre fee to $10 4- raising the AMS fee to $9.

ASUS

President/Vice President (team)
Secretary
Treasurer
9 AMS Reps
3 Senators (2 - 2 year terms; 1 - 1 year term)

Nominations must have the signatures of 25 ASUS members and an acceptance by the candidate. They will be accepted until 7:00 pm Jan 30-72 by Marv Bloos, Nancy Hoey, or Doug Donald.

COMMERCE SOCIETY

President Vice-President
Secretary Treasurer
Athletic Stick Social Convenor
AMS Junior Rep AMS Senior Rep
Senator (2 year term - candidate must be in 1st or 2nd year)

Nominations will be accepted until 5 pm Wed Feb 2-72 at Carl Lawrence's Office in Dunning Hall. They require the signatures of 10 Commerce students.

ENGSOC

President (must be in 3rd year)
Vice-Pres (must be in 3rd year)
Secretary (must be in 2nd year)
Treasurer (must be in 2nd year)
Development Committee Chairman (must be in 1st, 2nd or 3rd year)
Senator (2 year term - must be in 1st or 2nd year)

Nominations require the signatures of 50 1st, 2nd, or 3rd year EngSoc members. They may be submitted to the EngSoc Office (Clark Hall 1-4 pm) until Mon. Jan. 31-72 at 4 p.m. If there are fewer than two candidates for a position additional nominations will be accepted at the nomination meeting Monday, Jan. 31 at 7 p.m. in Stirling D. See Golden Words Wed. Jan. 19 for further details.
Note: Constitutional amendments are being considered to relax some of the year restrictions listed below. See tomorrow's Golden Words for details.

GRAD SOCIETY

President
Vice-President
Treasurer
Secretary
3 AMS Reps
Senator (2 year term)

Nominations for all positions except senator may be made at the Annual General Meeting to be held at 8:00 pm Tues Feb 1-72 at Grad House. Nominations for senator require 5 signatures. Forms are available in room 262B Stirling Hall (phone 3198).

REHAB, NURSING see this year's executive for detai

NOTE: Due to the scheduling of the elections this year and the need to provide proper publicity, nomination deadlines CANNOT be extended.

Queen's men qualify for Maple Leaf Games

Queen's thinclads came up with an impressive showing in the qualifying meet for the Star-Maple Leaf Indoor Games, held Saturday at the CNE in Toronto. Both the one and two-mile relay teams qualified for the International event, as did sprinter Hugh Fraser in the 50-meter dash and distance man Kip Sumner in the mile run. Fraser tied the current Canadian record in a time of 5.7 seconds.

Several other Gaels recorded personal bests, but failed to make the Maple Leaf Games standards. Glen Milligan won the long jump with a leap of 6.73 meters, while Dave Jarvis set a Queen's record in the 50-meter high hurdles with a time of 6.9 seconds. Jarvis finished second while teammate Don Price was 3rd.

Starry Gael halfback Gord McLellan made his track debut by making the final heat of the 50-meter dash. However, he failed to qualify for the main Maple Leaf meet.

Based on these performances, the Gaels should stand a good chance of placing high in the College meet, to be held on the afternoon of Feb. 4th. Schools from Ontario, Quebec, and several northern states will compete. The finale that evening will feature several world-class competitors in most events, including sprinters Charlie Green and Paul Drayton.

Returning to the College games for a moment, if Queen's can get reasonable performances out of their men in the field events, the team could have a good shot at the overall title. This has been a consistent weakness with Queen's track squads over the past years, and an up-surge by some young competitors could break Waterloo's domination of the OUAA next year. This meet could be an indicator of future trends.

Swimmers drop meet to Guelph

This Saturday, the Queen's Swimming team was edged by Guelph in a meet that went right to the wire.

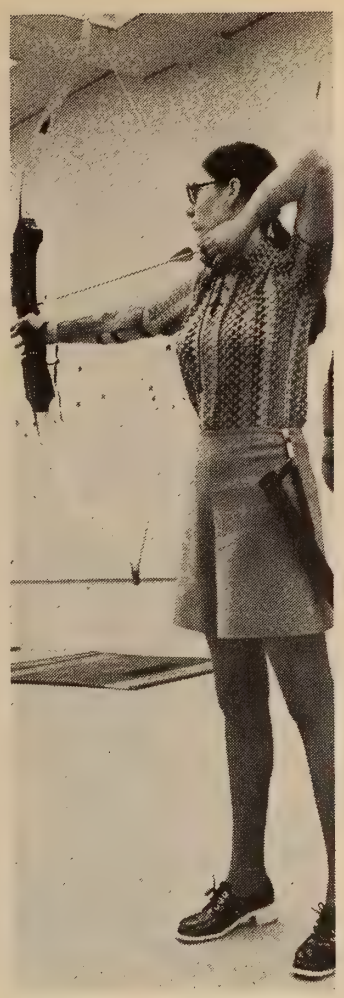
The two teams have been friendly rivals and close competitors for years and this meet was no exception. Every point counted as both teams made a strong bid to win.

Handouts from Queen's were Lucas, McGlocklin, Hurd and Herman who beat Guelph in a neck and neck race in the 400 yard medley relay; John Ker, a strong swimming freestyler, who placed third in the 500 yard and 1000 yard freestyle races; George Craig, who swam to a third place finish in the 200 yard freestyle; and Steve Patterson and Jack Muir, who were the team speedsters in the 50 yard freestyle, placing second and third respectively.

Gord Hurd and Glenn McClocklin, two experienced all around swimmers, finished a strong first and second in the 200 yard individual medley while Hurd added another first in the gruelling 200 yard butterfly. McClocklin, Queen's breast stroke ace won the 200 yard breast stroke going away while Eric Cunningham and Doug Noakes finished second and third behind him completing Queen's shut out in this event.

Rob Herman, veteran freestyler of the team gave the Gaels a first in the 100 yard freestyle while Steve Patterson finished third. Paul Lucas gave Queen's a second in the 200 yard backstroke and Brian Warren finished third in this event.

Queen's divers performed admirably against Mike Hawkes, O.U.A.A. diving champion from Guelph. Tom Caswell, Bill Kirk Patrick and Don McEacheron took seconds, thirds and fourths for the Gaels' in the 1 and 3 metre diving events. Diving, a former sore spot with Queen's has given the team a new strong point and good depth.



The meet at the end of the 3 metre diving was a 4 point separation, with Queen's in favour but Guelph edged the Gaels in the 400 yard freestyle relay which gave Guelph 7 points and Queen's zero. Guelph 60, Queen's 57.

The Gaels travel to Ryerson and Waterloo for two meets on Snow-Ball weekend. Waterloo will be the team to beat and the Gaels will be practising hard this week in preparation.

Senior Gals stymied by Laurentian; lose 55-37

The Queen's Senior Basketball team travelled to Sudbury this past weekend. In their encounter with the Laurentian girls, Queen's never got closer than 10 points to their competitors, down 27-9 at the half and 55-37 at the end of the game.

Laney Marshall led the Queen's team with 15 points. Her counterpart on the Laurentian squad, who had previously played on the Canadian Olympic team, netted 26 points. None of the other Sudbury girls broke into double figure scores. Queen's led in shots from the floor with 73, sinking 20 percent, while Laurentian shot 63 times, netting 22 percent. The big difference was from the foul line. Both teams were evenly penalized, however Laurentian counted 73 percent of their shots compared to a meagre 22 percent average by the Queen's team. The teams met at Queen's before Christmas, with Queen's playing a much more competitive game in their 59-57 loss.

Janet Spence - leads Queen's

Archers good hosts

Queen's hosted a three-way Invitational Archery Tournament here Saturday, and proved to be almost perfect hosts. The Gals finished third behind U. of T. and McMaster, despite a strong effort by Janet Spence, who recorded the second-highest tournament score with 247; Anne Chalmers of Varsity was high with 262. McMaster's Carol Webb recorded the only perfect end of the meet.

Queen's Gals will be in action again February 4th and 5th, in the final indoor tournament of the season to be held at Western.

Coming Events

Wednesday, Jan. 26 - Snowball Meet vs R.M.C. - Badminton, Basketball, Gymnastics, Wrestling, Fencing, Judo, Waterpolo.

Friday Jan. 28 - Badminton - OWIAA Part 11 at Ottawa

Basketball - Ottawa at Queen's - 6:00 p.m.
Bartlett Gym (women's)

Fencing - OWIAA Part II at McGill

Swimming - Queen's at Ryerson

Volleyball - Ottawa at Queen's (women's)
6:00 p.m. in Ross Gym

Wrestling - Queen's at Ryerson

Saturday, Jan. 29 - Basketball - Carleton at Queen's (women's) 1:00 p.m.
- Toronto at Queen's (men's) 8:15 p.m.

Curling - Queen's at Toronto

Hockey - York at Queen's (2:00 p.m.)

Squash - Queen's Invitational

Swimming - Queen's at Waterloo

Volleyball - Carleton at Queen's (1:00 p.m.)

Waterpolo - vs Carleton, 12:00 noon

Wrestling - Queen's at Waterloo

Sports Shorts

W.I.C. News

All W.I.C. events are suspended this week as a concession to the time-honoured social event, Snowball Week. (W.I.C. optimism has, for once, been overshadowed by realistic foresight -- that is to say, who would show up anyway?)

Curling, volleyball and softball continue next week.

Entries for archery are due by Wednesday, Jan. 26. There will be a clinic on Monday, Jan. 31. This is an individual sport which is easy to learn and furthermore, they say it's good for the figure!

Come out for archery, so if he doesn't ask you to the semi-formal, you can shoot him!

Skigals Win

Led by Marg Chaput's strong second-place finish in the women's giant slalom, the Queen's women's ski team captured their section of the fourth annual Waterloo Invitational Meet. The competition was held Friday on the slopes at Collingwood.

Carol Eastmure of McMaster edged out the Queen's star by a second over two runs, finishing with a total time of 83.4 seconds Allison McGreer of Toronto placed third in 86.5 seconds.

Squash Improves

The Queen's Men's Squash team took part in the Waterloo Invitational Tournament this past weekend and placed fourth among the eight universities participating.

The well-established teams of Western, U. of Toronto and York finished 1,2,3 respectively. Top-seeded Hugh Fisher was the only member of the Queen's team to lose his first matches, while Third-seed Nick Gudewill was the only team member to reach the finals. before losing to Western. The team now looks forward to hosting its Invitational Tourney next weekend with five or six universities participating.

Intermediates take 2nd straight B-Ball Crown

Queen's Intermediate Girl's Basketball team collected its second straight league championship Saturday, destroying two community college teams in a round-robin tournament held at St. Lawrence College. The Gals displayed overwhelming superiority in both games, with St. Lawrence and Seneca Colleges.

Against the Big Blue (?), the Queen's Girls rolled up a 74-25 victory, controlling the game at both ends of the court and scoring freely. Jarmila Smola hooped 17 points to lead all scorers, followed by Jean Crichton with 14 and Janet Mitchell with 11.

The second game, against a ridiculously-weak Seneca squad, ended in a (would you believe??) 110-4 rout. Yes, 4. (four), IV ! Jean Crichton had 31 points, Jarmila Smola 26, and Miriam Gordon 12. The rest were scattered.

This, uh, victory, gave Queen's the league title. Now if certain varsity teams would just get the idea.

Men's Badminton team captures York Doubles Title

Ten universities took part in a badminton extravaganza last weekend in York University which involved approximately fifty men and thirty women. At the close of the two-day long competition, Queen's Men's team, long an under-rated force in badminton, collared the doubles title and featured impressively in the singles.

In the men's singles, five Queen's players made the last sixteen. Of these five, James Lim and James Mackie made the last eight as Henry Fei, Dave Howard and J. Abraham all bowed out in close matches. In the quarter-finals, Mackie, playing superbly against the second seed J. Gilbert of Western, lost narrowly in three sets 15-7, 17-18, 9-15 after leading 17-13 in the second game and 8-2 in the third. On the other hand, Lim moved into the semis with a convincing 15-7, 15-3 win over R. Durdar of Western. However, he was then eliminated by first seed P. Geale of Toronto, the eventual singles winner, by a score of 18-14, 15-8, 15-6.

In the men's doubles, 3 Queen's pairs made it to the last 8 but only Fei-Lim made the semis as Mackie-Ong lost to the top-seeded Geale-Ooi of Toronto and Howard-Abraham lost to Gilbert-Kroyne 15-8, 15-6, Fei-Lim then stretched their unbeaten record this season as they amassed their doubles titles with a 15-5, 5-15, 15-5 win over Forbes-Durdan in the finals.

BACK PAGE

CANADA

KINGSTON — The Frontenac school board, the one serving(?) Kingston and area, was one of 11 boards of education in Ontario which was rated as poor on all criteria in a recent survey conducted by the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation.

The survey asked the province's 34,000 high school teachers to rate their school boards on the following four criteria: its attempts to improve educational quality, its teaching conditions, its relations among staff, administrators and trustees, and its fulfillment of local educational needs.

TORONTO — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau ruled out any further direct federal government aid to alleviate poverty in Canada, Friday night in Toronto.

He said guaranteed income — the key recommendation of the Senate provery committee — was too costly and might result in people quitting their jobs and taking government assistance instead.

"The guaranteed income should mostly come from hard work," he said.

Trudeau acknowledged that a guaranteed income plan would eliminate the red tape in social welfare measures, but said that we would be faced with "drastically" increased taxes to pay for such a plan. The cost would be as high as $2.5 billion, in addition to the $7 billion currently spent on social welfare measures, he said.

CALGARY — The Indian Affairs Department is being officially advised to pay Alberta's Blackfoot Indians $33,200 — plus interest since 1877 - as their share of ammunition money accrued since the signing of Treaty Number Seven, the treaty that opened the West to white settlers.

If the Government acts on the recommendation of Lloyd Barber of Saskatoon, Commissioner of Indian Claims, the door may be opened for a series of claims of breach of trust that could conceivably cost the Government millions of dollars.

The ammunition money of $2,000 a year was written into Treaty Number Seven, which was signed by Blackfoot, Blood, Sarcee, Piegan and Stony Indians at Blackfoot Crossing in September, 1877.

Each band was to get $400 a year and the $33,200 award figure is based on the money owing the Blackfoot from 1877 to 1960, the year the band made its first petition. Interest on the money would cover the same period.

At the rate of 5 per cent, interest on the $2,000 per year would be $4 million. At 7.25 per cent it would be $21 million.

OTTAWA — Police prevented a terrorist crisis in Quebec last October that might have had worse consequences than the kidnapping of James Cross and the assassination of Pierre Laporte in October, 1970, Solicitor General Jean Pierre Goyer said Thursday.

The crisis involved a new plot by the Front de Liberation Quebec (FLQ) terrorist organization, he said in an interview.

Asked if the plot involved more kidnapping, Goyer replied: "The same kind of criminal activities that we experienced the year before, and it might have been worse.

"It might have been kidnapping or political assassination."

He said the FLQ plot of last October was prevented by "the rapid intervention of police when the (the FLQ) made some mistakes in their criminal activities.

"We had enough information to really have to consider serious threats during October," he said. "It's largely due to police action if we didn't face too many unfortunate events during last October.

"They (the FLQ) were very active and they were planning very serious activities last October, which was the anniversary of the other (crisis)," he said.

WINDSOR — Premier William Davis Friday established a solid position in favor of greater control of the Canadian economy by Canadians. At the same time he urged a more concerted swing away from resource export toward competition in more sophisticated industries.

But he warned against haste in moving toward economic control, saying it is something to be achieved as long-run policy.

TORONTO — The Toronto Board of Education trustees have asked for a review of the organization of the Department of Education, asserting that the size of its "administratice superstructre" seems inconsistent with the cutbacks it has imposed on local boards.

OTTAWA — Canada had the least inflation last year of any of the 14 leading industrial countries of the world, according to International Monetary Fund figures.

OTTAWA — The 10 provincial health ministers have been given a preliminary report of a study of community health clinics that probably will be the basis for a gradual overhaul of Canadian medical services.

The report comes from a $400,000 study sponsored by the federal department of health. Its task was to examine the feasibility of community clinics, such as those proposed by the governments of Manitoba and Quebec.

The preliminary study indicates that such clinics could not only be the centre for traditional patient-doctor visits but also the focus for public and mental health services.

The report also attacked the fee-for-service system of payment of doctors, a system which leads doctors to specialize, at the expense of general practice, and which also interferes with rationalization of medical services.

OTTAWA — Mediator Noel Hall announced at 6 a.m. Saturday that he has achieved a tentative settlement by 1,750 air traffic controllers across Canada.

The settlement still has to be ratified by members of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association -- a process expected to take about 72 hours.

THE WORLD

WASHINGTON — A concentrated year-long study of Lake Ontario by Canadian and U.S. scientists partly aimed at obtaining new information for pollution control will begin this April.

Participating in the study -- known as the International Field Year for the Great Lakes or IFYGL -- will be hundreds of scientists and other employees of university and Government agencies in both countries.

The over-all announced purpose of the study is to provide a basis for improved lake management, that is, to acquire detailed information about such factors as the chemical and biological processes in the lake.

LONDON — The British Parliament erupted in a row Thursday after an announcement that unemployment had soared to a 25-year peak. One legislator flung a newspaper at Prime Minister Edward Heath and the House of Commons was suspended for 15 minutes before the speaker could calm the shouting, gesticulating lawmakers.

Official figures showed the number of jobless had passed the million mark for the first time since the month of February 1947.

This meant 4.3 per cent of the work force in Britain and 8.9 per cent in Northern Ireland were idle. In Scotland it was 7.1, in Wales 5.8 and in northern England 6.9 per cent.

MOSCOW — Soviet secret police have launched a major crackdown on political opposition with a wave of arrests, searches, surveillance and interrogations in at least four large cities.

Dissident sources report 21 arrests so far. They say they fear more.

In the past two weeks 12 persons have been arrested in Kiev, and seven in Lvov for alleged Ukrainian nationalist activity. A Belgian tourist was arrested in Kiev for "anti-Soviet subversive activity." More than a dozen apartments in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev were raided and searched for anti-Soviet material.

Western journalists have reported being followed or interfered with by squads of plainclothes police.

The police activity coincided with a press campaign calling for greater vigilance against Zionism, political opposition and nationalism.

LIBYA — The "People's Court" of Libya's military regime has put 28 of the country's leading journalists on trial and the government closed all daily newspapers, Wednesday.

The newsmen are charged with corrupting public opinion.

EGYPT — The Egyptian government has sharply reduced spending on non-essentials as part of new austerity measures for the battle with Israel.

President Anwar Sadat has ordered the cabinet to put Egypt on a war footing.

SALISBURY, Rhodesia — Police shot and killed eight black demonstrators Thursday night in a clash that appeared to end any hope that Britain and Rhodesia will be able to implement an independence agreement worked out two months ago.

The government said police opened fire in the eastern Rhodesian city of Umtali after groups of blacks had stoned houses, stores and cars. Fourteen persons were injured. The blacks also halted a train by tearing up the tracks.

The deaths brought to 13 the number of blacks killed this week in demonstrations against the independence terms.

The demonstrations were arranged to coincide with hearings being held by a commission headed by Lord Pearce to determine whether the independence agreement is acceptable to Rhodesia's 5,200,000 blacks.

Under its terms the blacks are to be given a progressively bigger voice in governing the country, but black nationalists contend that the agreement is so vague that it will be possible for Rhodesia's 250,000 whites to manipulate it in such a way that white rule will continue indefinitely.

Prime Minister Ian Smith said Friday night that if blacks rejected the terms of a new settlement of his Government's rebellion against Britain, the white Government would "be happy" to maintain its present laws aimed at maintaining white supremacy forever.

Queen's
Journal

Thurs., Jan. 27, 1972 Vol. XCIX, No. 40

- boag

This pre-Christmas work of art is the closest thing Journal darkroom staff could turn up when asked for a picture of a snow sculpture. And it's Snowball Week . . .

Confused?

This is Journal number 40, like it says. Tuesday's paper was wrongly numbered 38.

Broke?

You will be after next week. Monday is the deadline for payment of the second installment of tuition fees. Payment should be made at the accountant's office in Richardson Hall.

Unemployed?

As an alternative to a job, Queen's offers two summer sessions. Application for the May-June session must be made by Monday.

Insomniac?

Anyone pulling an all-nighter Saturday can go out and look at the eclipse of the moon, which will reach totality at 5:37 a.m. Sunday.

Rehab professor dies

Miss Muriel F. Driver, head of the occupational therapy department in the school of rehabilitation therapy, died Sunday in Kingston General Hospital. She was 53.

Miss Driver had been sporadically ill for some time.

She was well known in Canada and abroad for her work with the World Federation of Occupational Therapy.

Miss Dirver came to Queen's in 1967 to assist in establishing the school of rehab therapy, which opened that year. She was an assistant professor there at the time of her death.

In a statement, Isabel Percival, secretary-treasurer of the Rehabilitation Therapy Society, said, "During her four years here, Miss Driver has been consistent in her drive for excellence, and was instrumental in producing a high calibre of graduate who will carry on her high ideals and patient care."

"She was a very able and devoted teacher," confirmed the Rev. Dr. A. M. Laverty, Queen's chaplain, who presided at a memorial service for Miss Driver yesterday in Morgan Memorial Chapel of Theological Hall.

The interment is this afternoon in Toronto.

Donations in lieu of flowers have been invited for the Muriel Driver Memorial Fund, which will be administered by the university to assist rehab therapy students in the future.

Jordan, Bradley seek top posts in AMS election

Third-year economics student Andy Jordan has announced his candidacy for president of the AMS in next month's elections.

His running-mate will be James Bradley, a fourth-year electrical engineer.

Jordan and Bradley are the second team to announce that they will run for the highest student government offices at Queen's. Incumbent vice-president Victor Bradley is also seeking the position, teamed with second-year drama student Marney Cousins.

Jordan is clubs manager for the AMS at present, responsible for liaison between the executive and the clubs which receive AMS financing. He is also social convenor of the international club.

His student government experience began last year when he sat on the AMS outer council as sophomore representative from the Engineering Society. He was also responsible for AMS clubs within the budget and finance commission that year.

This year, as an arts and science student, he was convenor of clubs night.

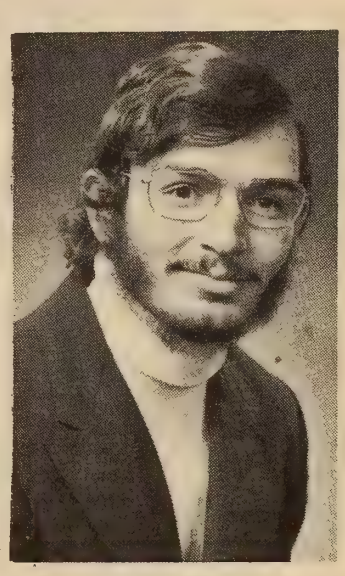
Jordan's other experience includes a year as house manager in the Science 44 co-op, and the pride of designing the tank-and-peace-sign snow sculpture which won first prize in Snowball 70.

Bradley, his running-mate, has been active within the Science 44 Co-op, as house manager, division manager, work schedule manager, and a member of the judicial committee.

He will be in arts and science next year.

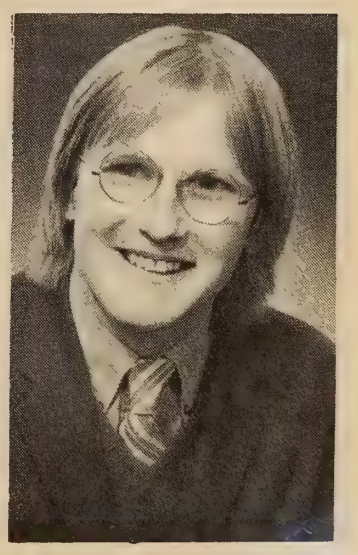
Jordan told The Journal Tuesday that his team's policies had not been determined yet.

Nominations of presidential-vice-presidential teams, which require 200 student signatures, will be accepted at the AMS office (in the basement of the Union) until 5 p.m. tomorrow.



Rumours of possible candidates continued to circulate, but Tuesday evening The Journal was unable to contact anyone else who would say he was seriously considering running.

Voting will take place on campus February 8, 9 and 10; an advance poll will be held February 2, chiefly for education students, who will not be on campus the following week.



Accompanying the presidential election will be at least four referenda about non-academic fees -- the concert fee, the Tricolor fee, the university centre fee, and the AMS fee.

An opinion poll, to guide the incoming executive, will be held then as well.

And most faculty societies -- arts and science, engineering, grads, commerce, nursing and rehab -- will be holding their spring elections at the same time.

Andy Jordan

James Bradley

SERIES SPECIAL

Both Concerts ONLY $4.50!!

Series tickets available to students only, and for sale only Thursday and Friday in the John Orr Room

JANUARY 30, HARTY ARENA

Edgar Winters White Trash
James Cotton Blues Band
Jake Holmes

AND SPECIAL GUEST APPEARANCE
GEORGE CARLIN

ONE SHOW: 8 p.m.
$3.00 with student card
$4.00 general and at door

FEBRUARY 6, GRANT HALL

RITA COOLIDGE
& The Dixie Flyers

TWO SHOWS:
7 p.m., 9:30 p.m.
$2.50 with student card
$3.50 general and at door

No Reserved Seats For Either Concert
Bring Something To Park Your Ass On

New Hours

Your on-campus typing service will be open to handle all of your typing and duplicating needs at these new hours:

Monday - Thursday: 8:30 am - 8:00 pm
Friday: 8:30 am - 4:30 pm

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

Intersession/Summer Session

Ontario Student Awards Program

Students who enrol in Intersession and Summer Session in 1972 are eligible to apply for assistance from the Ontario Student Awards Program if;

a) they attend both Intersession and Summer Session and take a minimum of three full courses of the possible four.

b) it is reasonable to expect that attendance at Intersession and Summer Session will reduce the normal number of sessions needed to complete their degree program by at least one, and none of the courses taken are being repeated.

As with the fall and winter session, awards will be made on the basis of a need assessment under terms laid down by the Department of Colleges and Universities and applicants must meet the normal Ontario residency requirements of the Program.

Further detailed information to potential applicants will be available sometime in February from the Assistant Registrar, Student Awards. Students are reminded however, that registration in the May-June Intersession is required by January 31st even though details on the Ontario Student Awards Program may not be available until sometime later.

Faculty of Arts and Science

EXPERIMENTAL INTER SESSIONAL PROGRAMME

May 10 to June 23, 1972

Queen's University will offer an Experimental Intersession Program between May 10 and June 23, 1972. This program has been designed to make available a selection of both introductory and advanced degree courses offered by the Faculty of Arts and Science. Currently-registered intramural and extramural students at Queen's, and applicants who meet the admission requirements of the University and the Faculty, may register in up to two full courses within the Intersession Program.

Biology
12-201 — Introduction to Genetics
Computing and Information Science
22-101+ — Introduction to Computing
22-102+ — Computer Organization and Programing 1
Drama
25-240 — Introduction to Theatre Design
25-320 — Text Analysis
25-330 — Experimental Theatre Practice
Economics
29-210 — Modern Economic Theory
English
32-211 — Chaucer and the Middle Ages
32-221 — Renaissance Poetry and Prose
Film
34-310 — Fundamentals of Film Production
Geography
38-440 — Regional Geography of Latin America
History
46-260 — Canada from the Conquest to World War II
46-276 — Russia: The Quest for Social Justice
Mathematics
55-111 — An Introduction to Linear Algebra
55-162 — Probability and Statistics
55-323 — Complex Analysis
Politics
81-210 — Canadian Government and Politics
81-310+ — Canadian Federalism
81-423+ — Political Communication
Psychology
84-021 — Educational Psychology
84-100 — Principles of Psychology
Sociology
92-122 — Introduction to Sociology
92-274 — The Sociology of Deviant Behaviour
92-352 — Sociology of the Family

Term;
May 10 to June 20 (including Victoria Day)
June 22 and 23 — Examination Period

Class Timetable;
Classes in each full course will be two hours each day, 5 days each week.
Classes in half-courses (indicated above by an + after the course number) will be one hour each day, 5 days each week.
Classes will be scheduled sometime between 8:00 A.M. and 10:00 P.M. Registrants will be asked to express a preference for morning, afternoon or evening.

Registration:
Registration, accompanied by a deposit fee, is required by January 31, 1972. This registration is most important, since individual courses may not be offered if a minimum number of registrations is not received. Moreover, it is improbable that any student who attempts to register later than January 31 can be accepted, and in any such case, a late Registration Fee would apply. Certain courses also have a maximum enrolment limitation.

Students currently registered intramurally in any Faculty or School at Queen's should register through the Faculty of Arts and Science Office, 131 Union Street. All other students register through the Department of Extension, 25 Union Street, Kingston, Ontario.

Eligibility:
Registrations will not be valid unless course eligibility requirements are met by May 10th, 1972. Students are not permitted to register for an intersession course similar or identical to a course already taken. Not more than two full courses may be taken during the intersession. Students registering in two full courses may list up to two alternative selections (for which no deposit fee is required) in case a first or second selection is withdrawn due to insufficient enrolment.

Fees:

	Non-Refundable Deposit Fees (payable by January 31)	Course Fees (payable by May 10)
For each full course	$25.00	$115.00
For each half-course	$12.50	$ 57.50

Note: Deposit fees will be deducted from the applicable Course Fees when final payment is made.

Deadline for applications is January 31

University housing

The dean of women's office has provided the following chart of university residence accommodation available for 1972-73, indicating the variety of arrangements possible and the application procedures for admission.

ACCOMMODATION	CAPACITY	ROOM AND BOARD ARRANGEMENTS	ELIGIBILITY	APPLICATIONS	DATE APPLICATIONS ARE DUE	ANNOUNCEMENT OF ADMISSIONS
MEN ONLY
Leonard Field McNeill House Leonard Hall Gordon House Brockington	 198 263 176 180	Applicants must take room and board for the full session. Board consists of 3 meals per day Monday to Saturday inclusive.	Priority is given to undergraduates in Arts & Science, Applied Science, Medicine, Business, Nursing, Rehab Therapy, and Theology. If space permits, undergraduates of other faculties may be admitted.	Applications may be obtained and returned in the Desk Clerks' Offices at Gordon-Brockington, Earl St. Residence, Social Centre, West Campus, and the Leonard Hall Business Office.	February 14	March 6
Earl Street Residence	96	Applicants must take room for the full session. Meals are not provided.	Priority is given to undergraduates in Law and Meds and to 2nd, 3rd & 4th year students in A & S, Applied Science, Business, Nursing, Rehab Therapy and Theology. If space permits, undergraduates of other faculties may be admitted.	Same as for Leonard Field.	February 14	March 6
WOMEN ONLY
Adelaide Hall Ban Righ Chown Hall Victoria Hall	102 66 169 775	Applicants must take room and board for the full session. Board consists of 3 meals per day Monday to Saturday inclusive, and 2 meals on Sunday.	Priority is given to first year undergraduates. Second, third and fourth year students may be admitted, if space permits.	Applications may be obtained and returned in the Dean of Women's Office, Victoria Hall.	January 14	Mid March
CO-EDUCATIONAL
Morris Hall	182	Applicants must take room and board for the full session. Board for men and women consists of 3 meals per day Monday to Saturday inclusive.	Priorities are the same as for other residences on Leonard Field.	Applications for men are available as for Leonard Field (above). Women apply through the Dean of Women's Office, Victoria Hall.	February 14	March 6
West Campus Residences	576	Applicants must take room only for the full session. Meals are not provided.	Priority is given to Faculty of Education students and undergraduates of other Faculties registered in their 2nd or subsequent year.	Applications are handled as described above for Leonard Field.	February 14	March 6
Graduate Residence	105	Applicants are offered room only; meals are not provided.	Priority is given to male and female students of the School of Graduate Studies and the MBA programme. If space permits, female law students may be admitted.	Applications may be obtained and returned in the Business Office, Students' Memorial Union.	Individual applications and admissions are dealt with upon request.

Nursing students get more voices

Nursing students have been given formal approval by the university senate of an increase from four to seven of their representation on the nursing science faculty board.

Nursing senator Frances Rancier told The Journal that there is a need for such an expansion, especially for "those whose ears are close to the ground".

In addition to a representative to each of the four nursing years, board members will include the senator, nursing president Jo Forbell, and tentatively, a representative from students in the three-year post-RN course.

"We have been at faculty board meetings since September on an informal basis," Miss Rancier said, "before the senate made our representation formal."

Besides the students, the board includes the faculty members from the school of nursing.

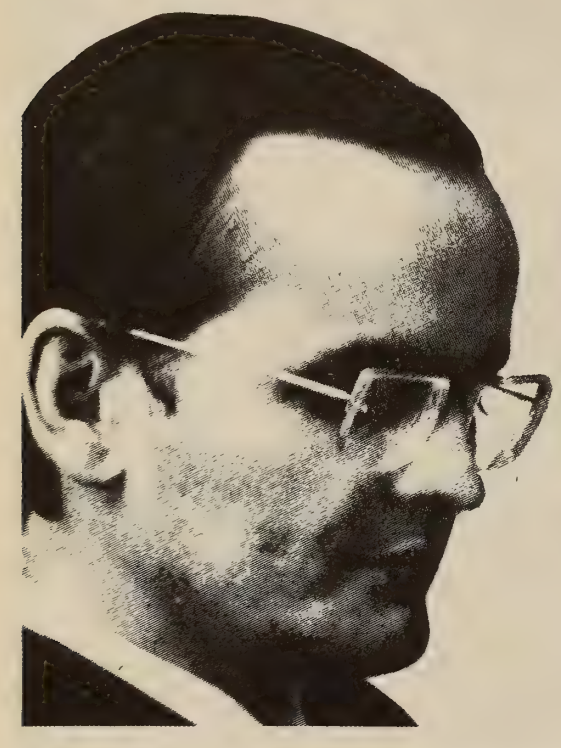
Summer loans available

Ontario Student Awards loans and grants will be available, under certain conditions, to students in summer courses at Queen's this year.

A student who takes at least three courses between the two summer sessions this year, and as a result can shorten the length of his degree programme by at least one winter, can apply for OSAP aid.

Detailed information is available from the assistant registrar (student awards).

BLOOD DRIVE



VICTORIA HALL BASEMENT

FEB. 1,2,3

11: am - 2 pm; 3 pm - 8 pm

"A revolutionary must always be prepared to start

Last December, Pierre Vallieres, one of Quebec's leading ideologues of revolutionary violence, and the author of White Niggers of America, announced, in the form of a 27-page essay sent to Le Devoir, that he was abandoning the FLQ and "armed agitation" and was going to support the Parti Quebecois. Below, Nick Auf der Maur, a reporter for Last Post, looks at the reaction to the Vallieres statement (titled "The Urgency to Choose") excerpts from which are reprinted at right.

MONTREAL - Vallieres' move has been generally well received by Quebec's opposition forces, and reflects the growing desire for unity of the left. His announcement comes at a time when progressive groups - labour unions, citizens' committees, students and unemployed - are beginning to band together, pledged to work for the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of socialism.

Vallieres designation of the Parti Quebecois as the "party of the masses" and the only alternative to the present system, raised some eyebrows in the radical left. But others, notably trade unionists, say Vallieres is merely hastening the creation of a veritable coalition "front populaire" needed to liberate Quebec. The PQ, they say, seems the only viable institution to contain that coalition.

"In Quebec," Vallieres says, "there can be no doubt that armed agitation has nothing to do with armed struggle, which is mass struggle."

The FLQ, a splinter group lacking cohesiveness, means of control and, worse, mass support (as opposed to popular sympathy) has no function, Vallieres says since Quebec is not in a revolutionary situation. This situation doesn't exist since all the other means of liberation, particularly the electoral struggle of the PQ have yet to be exhausted.

"Since October 1970, the 'FLQ menace' has become a political argument which more and more easily justifies clubbings, search warrants, bugging, promulgation of anti-demonstration by-laws, excepional laws, grand army manoeuvres throughout Quebec, rumours of plots, conspiracies, imaginary selective assassinations, frame-up political trials, etc."

The authorities, he says, use this repressive process not so much against the FLQ but against those it knows to be the real threat: the PQ, the unions, and citizens' groups. The War Measures Act of last year was directed against these organizations.

It should be remembered that Vallieres was an intellectual and political force in Quebec even before he embarked on the FLQ course in 1966. In the late fifties and early sixties he had been an associate of Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Gerard Pelletier, Michel Chartrand and others arguing the future of Canada.

Some disillusioned radicals, mostly CEGEP students, believe that the document is a forgery or that Vallieres was somehow forced to write it. But those who know Vallieres dismiss such theories.

Charles Gagnon, Vallieres' long-time revolutionary associate and prison partner, agreed with the argument against "armed agitation" but denounced the call to rally behind the Parti Quebecois.

"Pierre Vallieres," he said, "doesn't know anything about the class struggle. . .his position is objectively reactionary."

Far from rallying behind a "bourgeois party," claimed Gagnon, the working class must build a new, revolutionary, but legal party.

Vallieres' argument in favour of the PQ is intended to prevent the opposition forces in the province from dividing themselves along "national and social" fronts.

Any such separation, he says, "constitutes in reality a division within the same mass struggle, and would compromise its chances for success and reinforce the present regime."

The desire for unity, something Quebec's opposition forces have always lacked, is so strong that it appears most revolutionaries will come to accept Vallieres' new position while the rest of the left welcomes it.

Within days of the statement, the Louis Riel cell of the FLQ issued a communique renouncing its own use of violence and hailing Vallieres as "the thinker of the Quebec revolution."

Reaction from the Parti Quebecois, naturally, was more restrained.

PQ leader Rene Levesque praised Vallieres for his "courageous gesture" and "lucid reflection," adding that he hoped it would help to bring about a more peaceful climate, amenable to democratic change.

Le Devoir publisher Claude Ryan, said Vallieres' self-criticism also contains certain lessons for the authorities.

"If the call of Vallieres is heard," he wrote, "the established power will no longer be able to fall back on a phantom to justify its own abuses and impotence. It will finally have to face up to its real adversaries, in democratic debate."

The Urgency to Choose

(1) THE STRATEGY OF THE REGIME:

One of the political implications of popular agitation today is an enormous potential for rupture. That is not enough, however, to set off a real revolution but leads to confrontations which those at all levels of power will oppose with increasingly tough repression. If the Parti Quebecois did not exist and if it did not make the effort to channel this growing discontent toward a precise objective (independence and in-depth transformation of economic and social structures) capable of mobilizing the immense majority of Quebecois, the counter-offensive would already have had tragic and harmful consequences for the development of the liberation struggle (which is a revolutionary struggle) and thus for all Quebec workers. The risks of general demobilization and of a return to the Great Darkness (the Duplessis era - tr.) would then be considerable. This could be a decisive victory for Canadian colonialism and American imperialism.

That is why those in power are more openly seeking a confrontation which, they hope will furnish the occasion to crush the Quebec people by force by destroying the organizations they have created to liberate themselves: the PQ, the trade unions, citizens' committees, etc. The October 1970 crisis gave those in power a 'general repetition' of this classical scenario, at a moment when the organization which had through its action set off the crisis had no means of sustaining a long offensive against the power-holders nor to offer the Quebec people the strategy and the arms which would have helped it resist oppression, and still less the method of revolutionary action which would have helped it reach its goals: the conquest of power and the construction of a new society.

Had it not been for the joint action of the Parti Quebecois, the trade unions and all of Quebec's progressive forces, the 'permanent danger of reaction and back-tracking which is always floating over a society in transition' (Rene Levesque, Le Devoir, 29.11.71) would have become concrete and the FLQ would have had to assume before history the odious responsibility of having offered the exploiters of the Quebec people the dreamed-of opportunity to strike it a blow which might be fatal.

The irreparable has fortunately not taken place, because those in power were taken by surprise, took too much time to react, and did not really succeed in resolving the contradictions which exist between the different levels of decision-making and within each of these levels. But the crisis will nonetheless have furnished them the chance not only to 'frighten people,' but also and above all to resolve some of its own contradictions by achieving, around the central State, the sacred union of exploiters against the Quebec population.

If ever the FLQ were to offer the power-holders a new chance to promulgate the War Measures Act against Quebec, all levels of power would this time be prepared, while the FLQ for its part could once again have no control over the process it would have set off. It would, as in October 1970, have to rely upon the PQ and the trade unions to resist the repression exercised against everyone. In short, it would condemn the people to the defensive, to withdrawal and fear. It would in fact guarantee what it pretended to fight: repression. Worse yet, it would condemn the entire population to lose any form of initiative, to undergo passively the counter-attack of those in power and to depend upon the good-will of the authorities.

The army of the established power should not be provoked in the name of the people when one does not oneself have an army in which a people can recognize itself, be consciously integrated, and by a collective fight be led toward the conquest of political power and the realization of its social objectives. And for such a people's army to organize, develop, and conquer, the people must first objectively have no other choice but to take up arms, must be conscious of it, and must have developed within themselves a political and military leadership fully capable of assuming the heavy historical responsibility of guiding the entire people toward certain victory.

(2) THE ELECTORAL PROCESS

In 'Revolutionary Warfare: a method' (1961), Che Guevara stresses that it should never be excluded a priori that a revolutionary change in a given society can be started by an electoral process. All the better, it should be added, if this change can be achieved totally by this process. Armed struggle as a revolutionary strategy and a mode of mass political action cannot be initiated or developed if the masses think they can achieve their aspirations by a given electoral process. The revolutionary is he who can find a strategy and tactics adequate for the existing objective situation and who is capable of foreseeing those that will be appropriate when a chance in the objective situation radically modifies the balance of forces facing each other and, at the same time, imposes new modes of action upon the masses, be it to take hold of political power or to defend what they have already conquered.

tart over again" * Vallieres quits the FLQ

In the present situation it would be an impardonable error for the partisans of a real social revolution in Quebec to underestimate or, worse, to deny what the Quebec people can gain by the strategy which has been defined by the Parti Quebecois and which, for the first time in Quebec, allowed broad sectors of the population to participate directly in a process aiming for the conquest of power and by this collective practice to understand the mechanisms, implications, limits, dangers and possibilities of it: briefly, to become aware of the strengths and weaknesses of their means of action, and of the importance of their unity and solidarity in the face of what threatens them indistinctly and seeks to divide them to better dominate and exploit them.

Who will deny the merit of Rene Levesque's assertion that in Quebec 'the struggle for national emancipation must be carried on in the classic disorder of a social revolution" and that we must consequently find the means of leading the national liberation struggle and the social liberation struggle 'while not forgetting that without national freedom we shall have neither the maturity nor the instruments needed to carry through any social, economic or cultural renovation which is not illusory or truncated?' (Le Devoir, 29.11.71)

If it is not in the interest of the majority of Quebecois that the trade unions now set up a second mass party which would distinguish itself from the PQ only by its phraseology and which, moreover, by its opposition to the PQ would constitute a brake to the political and social emancipation of the Quebec people that the FLQ continue the action undertaken since 1963 which served as a detonator in October 1970 to the crisis we all know of?

Is it in the interest of the Quebec people that the armed agitation of the FLQ as practised in Quebec for the past eight years, continue to affirm itself mythically as armed struggle when in reality it has none of the fundamental characteristics of a real armed struggle, and objective conditions do not permit and do not require the development of such a struggle in the current scheme of things

The answer is a categorical no.

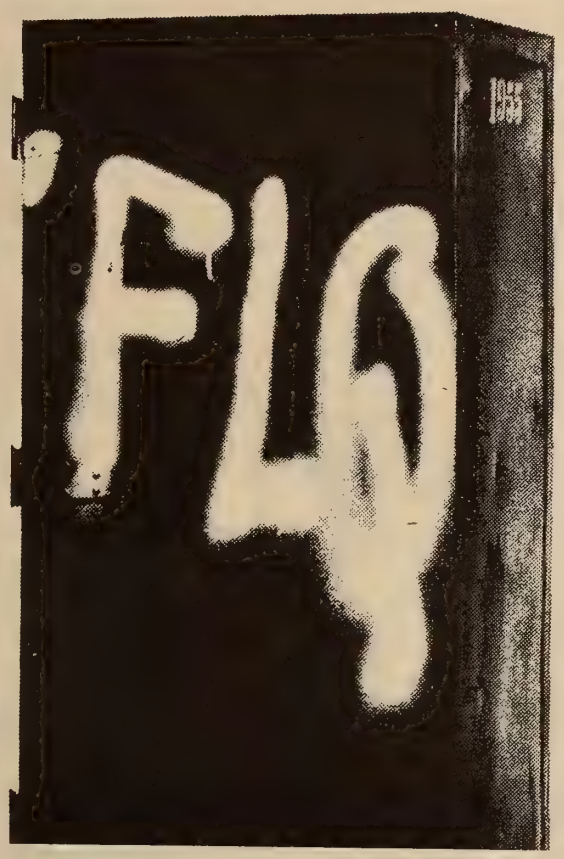
(3) WHY THE FLQ SHOULD NOT EXIST

The intellectual conviction that an armed confrontation will be inevitable one day or another (even if it is based upon a very profound analysis of the total situation) can justify recourse to armed agitation as a method of revolutionary political action in the present situation, modified by the October crisis. If ever it was justified in the past, as a revealer of a condition of domination and of a resolute will to get out of it, armed agitation, just like the unarmed agitation of those who confuse the breaking of a window with a conscientious, positive, and mobilizing political action, is today counter-revolutionary.

Now that the balance of forces appears to us such as it is objectively, armed agitation, far more than a simple political error or a simple 'aberration' has become an ideal means of 'trapping' and of sabotaging the development of the liberation struggle:

1) by denying the objectively liberation character of the electoral process that the Parti Quebecois practises (and not as it is practised by the parties of the dominating class) at this stage of the liberation struggle;

2) by removing the mass struggle content from the armed struggle that the Quebec people may one day be constrained by the adversary to join in collectively to defend their freedom and to choose their mode of political action, which becomes indispensable for a people or a majority only when the peaceful processes of the conquest of power are forbidden by dictatorship, military occupation, and total repression;



3) by denying the necessity for the masses to exhaust all democratic means before passing to an armed method of political action, to a guerrilla strategy which requires of them the greatest sacrifices at the same time as a very high degree of political consciousness and combativity (see on this subject the first pages of 'Guerrilla Warfare' by Che Guevara, hardly suspected of opportunism!)

4) by hiding the character of prolonged struggle of any liberation process by a romantic presentation of a possibility or an imaginary outlook of revolution or of short-term victory;

5) by dividing the efforts of those who are fighting the same enemies and who can hope to conquer only by constantly strengthening their unity;

6) by substituting any long term strategic vision with the incoherence of an agitation practised for itself and for the 'kicks' it gives the delinquent who lies dormant in each of us;

7) finally, and crowning the rest with an incalculable irresponsibility, by furnishing the established authorities the chance they seek to promulgate the War Measures Act so as to apply a strategy of force (of armed force) against the Quebec liberation movement as a whole, through the expedient of a decisive counter-offensive ostensibly led against the FLQ 'revolutionary war,' if possible before the Parti Quebecois acquires the legitimacy which would render it politically invulnerable not only through the widespread electoral support it could gather from the Quebec masses these next years, but also and above all by the conscious integration of these masses to a daily struggle on all fronts: political, economic, social and cultural.

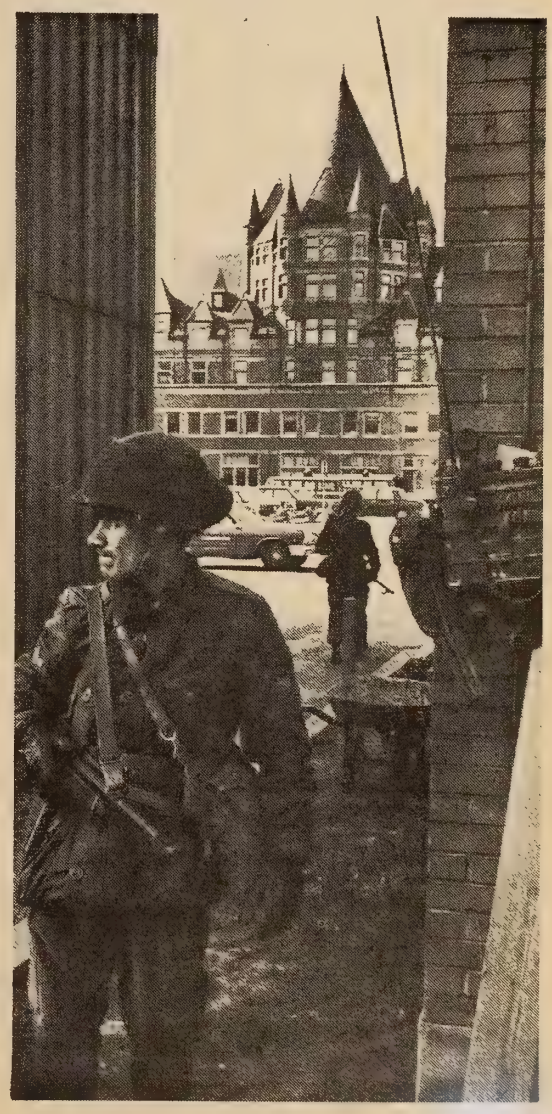
For all these reasons, which are founded neither upon opportunism nor upon sentimentalism and still less upon fear of action, but only upon an objective analysis of a concrete situation, there is no need to fear the clear and vigorous affirmation that the FLQ, 'symbol' rather than liberation organization and guerrilla 'myth' rather than popular resistance, no longer has any reason to exist today.

(4) THE NATURE OF ARMED STRUGGLE

No one has, or has ever had any real power of decision within the FLQ, since the FLQ has always been only a gathering of groups or cells having little or no communication between them and having in common only the choice of the three letters FLQ. There were in the sixties efforts to build an FLQ organization. They all failed, not because of the FLQers themselves, but because of the objective conditions which, while favouring armed agitation, did not allow and still do not allow the setting off, implantation and development of that form of mass struggle, the armed struggle.

The confusion between armed struggle (which is a mass struggle requiring a certain number of conditions which do not currently exist in Quebec for its birth and development) and armed agitation has led to these abortive efforts to structure the FLQ and all these contradictions painfully fought by those within the FLQ who, while rejecting anarchism and individual terrorism, have long believed that an armed struggle could develop from a highly structured 'core' of revolutionaries, independently of the particular objective conditions that this path to armed struggle imposes when, by other means, it has no chance of developing or of achieving its political and social objectives or even of existing.

It took them a long time, a very long time, to realize, at the very heart of their practices and of their contradictions, that an armed struggle can only be a mass struggle conducted by means other than electoralism when the latter cannot function normally or cannot function at all, when the masses can gain nothing from it, when they are fully aware of this and when they have nothing to lose and everything to gain by engaging in a revolutionary war. We are not yet at yet at that stage in Quebec and no FLQer, I think, would say the contrary.



But every FLQer, has often believed, on the other hand, that although Quebec was not in a revolutionary situation, an organization of armed struggle could, all the same, form and implant itself while expecting that the situation, once it became revolutionary, would mechanically allow it to develop. They were forgetting that an organization is not only born from the revolutionary will of those who dedicate themselves to the task of building it but above all from a real need of the masses in a given situation and not in just any situation.

And that is why there has never been an FLQ organization as such, but only cells or little groups, limited in number, personnel and means, without organic links between them, without a directing 'core' and without a real strategy. Cells or groups, products of the Quebec soil and products of the first stage of the liberation struggle, from 1962 to 1968 (year of creation of the Parti Quebecois), during which the first phase of the rapid development of the political consciousness of the Quebec masses expressed itself chiefly in and by agitation.

Since 1968, this continual development of political consciousness has overtaken the stage of agitation to engage in that of mass organization within a structured party, the Parti Quebecois, which has become today (but not necessarily for eternity) the main political expression of the Quebec masses and at the same time its strategic political force. It is thus to the PQ that comes, at this stage of the struggle and perhaps for several years, the responsibility of political leadership of the mass struggle for the interests and aspirations of the masses which have created it and without whose support it could neither develop nor last as a mass party.

* quote from White Niggers of America.

(First of a series on Quebec.)

CLASSIFIEDS

FOR SALE: first term chemical engineering texts. All were hardly used. That is why I transferred. Call Ted at 546-7272.

SCIENCE 75: check your jackets. Someone took my jacket by mistake from Um-pa-pa Saturday night -- size 36. If you know about it phone Claude, 544-7053.

PAT: Happy birthday!

FOR SALE: Lange standard boots. Good condition. Three years old, carrying case included. Best offer. Phone 544-7197.

WANTED TO RENT for 72-73, a 4-bedroom apartment or house for 4 girls. Cheap, close to campus. Phone 544-8536, 544-8523, 544-8538, 544-8537.

HEE HEE HO ha haw ha ho hum ha ha haw. Laughing box asked to own up by phone or in person tonight at 10. Pleeease!

WANTED: female manager for sports team. Call retiring manager, Joe, 547-3053. Signed Eagle, Geraldine, Bear, Rocks, Hurdles, Carsoni, Jock, Lofty, Tuna, Hermant, log, Hamburger, Yuccer, Dog and little Noites, and the Big G.

HI-FI STEREO speakers for sale. 1. Wharfedale "Dovedale" 5. 6 months old, 3-way system. teak finish. 2. Bookshelf speakers, coaxial air suspension, good bass response, 10x11x16 inches. 3. Altec Lansing 15" bass, super magnet, in enclosure (unfinished), bass guitar or stereo applications. Call 544-3685.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY to George the Red, the second-year sex symbol from his friends, colleagues, and fellow inmates of the Animal Farm asylum for hopeless oddities of pub-crawling-itis. May your mustache continue to grow and prosper and may it never get caught in your fly.

JUNK: save it for Festival 72 collage. Broken glass, tin cans, magazines, t.p. rolls, cardboard tubes, material scraps eggshells, any interesting junk welcome. Leave before February 3 at 128 Earl Street or in Polson Room boxes.

WANTED, 4 or 5 bedroom house for next year by Queen's girls. Call 544-8535 or 544-8500.

LOST: Friday morning, on campus, set of keys for Ford, Volvo and misc. Call collect 358-2029.

WANTED: information leading to the capture of a 4-bedroom apartment. Call Lynn 544-8262, Sandy 544-8273.

HELP! Jordan-Bradley urgently require helpers from all parts of campus -- all faculties, all disciplines. Anyone having any spare time please help. Call Marilyn 549-2310 after 6 p.m.

LOST: Bell and Howell 35 mm Canon FX. Friday, January 14 (?) vicinity Student Union, library or English department. Call 544-0659.

FOUND at the Um-pa-pa smoker, 1 umbrella, 1 scarf, 2 single gloves and 2 pairs of gloves. Phone Dave Wilder 544-7196.

ARTS 73 come out and snow sculpture next Tuesday and Wednesday night beside Agnes Etherington. "Refreshments will be available to those who work. Bring your own snow. Information: Ted Ashbury, 542-4747.

LOST on Tuesday, January 24, 3 important keys in a dark brown leather snap-open keycase. Finder please contact Doug at 544-7031 and be eternally blessed. Reward.

SUNDAY SUPPER and panel discussion on Rhodesia. Supper will begin at 5:30 and cost $1. Discussion to follow at 7:00 will feature Frank Okah and Kenneth Mufuka (grad student from Rhodesia); to be held in basement of International Centre, sponsored by African Liberation group of SCM.

MISSING: one pair Big John insulated work boots, mistakenly taken at skating Monday afternoon. If you have them please phone 544-7620

WANTED TO BUY: a computer science textbook, Computer Organization and Programming, by C. W. Gear, McGraw-Hill. (It was used last year in 22-261.) Please contact Sharon, 544-8069.

ARTS 73 STUDENTS: Please mail in donations to chaplain's trust fund by February 13! We need your support

WHOEVER REMOVED my Science 74 jacket from Grant Hall Saturday night, I want it back, please. I need it. Call T. Sweet, 544-2745

FOR SALE: Long ski boots, size 10½. 544-7917

SIX WEEK LAB puppy available. If interested, call 549-1285

ALISON: happy birthday from the staff

BRIDGE CLUB tonight in the McLaughlin Room

WANTED: 3 or 4 bedroom house or apartment for next year for Queen's girls. Call 544-8935 or 544-8500

THE TRUE NORTH BLUEPRINT

a trilogy of plays by Louis Capson

Tues. Feb. 1: TO BECOME A DRUMMER
Wed. Feb. 2: I LOVE YOU BILLY STIKER
Thurs. Feb. 3: IN SEARCH OF THE LAST PARADIDDLE

performed by CREATION 2

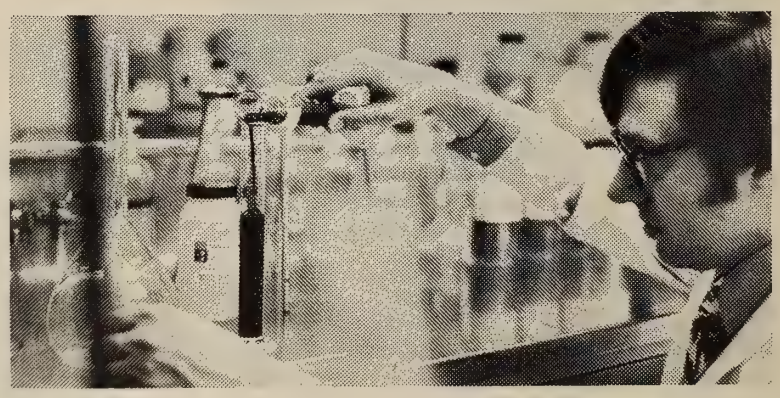
GRANT HALL
QUEEN'S THEATRE

FEB. 1, 2, 3
8:30 p.m.

50c admission each night
In conjunction with Festival '72

Graduate Student Society

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING



Feb. 1st 8:00 pm
Grad. House, 157 King St., E.

COME AND HEAR WHAT THE G.S.S. HAS BEEN DOING- A FREE BEER FOR FIRST HUNDRED PEOPLE.

NOMINATIONS for President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, A.M.S. Reps. (3) will close at this meeting.

All Graduate Students Are Urged To Attend.

Hoechst thinks ahead

Breakthrough Medicines

Canada is an important link in the worldwide Hoechst network in 114 countries. Hoechst has over a century of research and experience in developing breakthrough medicines throughout this geographical spectrum, with its vastly differing living conditions and its diverse medical problems. Breakthrough medicines that are not only effective, but reliable.

Hoechst in Canada has a modern pharmaceutical manufacturing plant at Varennes, near Montreal. Hoechst products include oral antidiabetics, diuretics, antibiotics and anaesthetics, as well as veterinary pharmaceuticals and vaccines, and diagnostics reagents.

Pioneering Diabetes Research

Hoechst is proud of its pioneering contributions in the field of diabetes. The company's work in this area reaches back to the early years of the century before the discovery of insulin by Drs. Banting and Best in 1921. After the discovery, Hoechst was the first company to be granted a license to manufacture insulin in Europe. In 1955, Hoechst discovered tolbutamide (Orinase®), the first oral antidiabetic, changing the life style of millions of adult diabetics.

Helping Build Canada

Products and ideas from Hoechst have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. As an affiliate of the worldwide Hoechst organization, Canadian Hoechst Ltd. has a full century of research and achievement to draw upon. In Canada, Hoechst is an autonomous company employing Canadians to serve Canadian needs.

Hoechst in Canada concerns itself with supplying both the present and future needs of Canadians. The range of products and services covers the spectrum through industrial chemicals, dyestuffs, plastics, printing plates, human and veterinary medicines, pharmaceuticals, and textile fibres. Hoechst products and services, Hoechst techniques and know-how in these fields, combined with a large international fund of experience, have given the company a reputation for expertise which takes constant striving to live up to. Hoechst thinks ahead.

HOECHST

REG. T.M. HOECHST

HOECHST

Canadian Hoechst Limited
4045 Côte Vertu
Montreal 383, Quebec

40 Lesmill Road
Don Mills, Ontario

Journal presents your morning news

The library

Effective this week, there are new regulations for the lending of materials from the reserve room of Douglas Library.

The greatest change is in the use of 24-hour books, which will now be due 24 hours after the time and date stamped in the back of the book, rather than (as at present) at 10 a.m. the next day.

This allows a student to have a book for a full 24 hours instead of just a part of that time, as the rules allowed before.

Three-hour books are still due three hours after the time stamped in the book. Material checked out overnight is now due one hour after the library opens the next day. This means such books are now due at 9 a.m. weekdays or 1 p.m. Sundays.

The fine system has been changed to make fines easier to calculate. Fines for all reserve room material are now 25c per hour or any fraction of an hour, and there is no maximum fine.

The new rules were implemented at the request of students, associate librarian T. D. Phillips said. The extension of the 24-hour loan period to a full 24 hours gives students sufficient time to make full use of the books, he added.

Phillips pointed out that the new rules will be easier on students who prefer to work late at night, they will not now have to rush down to the library to return books by 10 a.m.

Mrs. Margaret Clark, the chief reserve room librarian, said the new system will be easier for the library staff as well. Instead of a large number of books coming in at 10 a.m., the volume of books should be fairly even during the day, she said, and staff will be able to sort them as they come in.

Miss Hope

Willemina Wyngaarden, a second-year student nurse at Kingston General Hospital, was chosen Miss Hope 1972 on Saturday in a contest sponsored by the Canadian Cancer Society.

She was among 14 regional contestants judged on appearance, personality, intelligence, and knowledge of cancer.

As Miss Hope, she will make speeches, visit hospitals, and figure in the promotion for the Cancer Society campaign in April.

During the year, Miss Wyngaarden will promote the idea that there is hope against cancer, and will try to stimulate student nurses' interest in cancer care.

When she graduates from KGH she intends to specialize in pediatric nursing.

REMEMBER
HELP YOUR RED CROSS
TO HELP

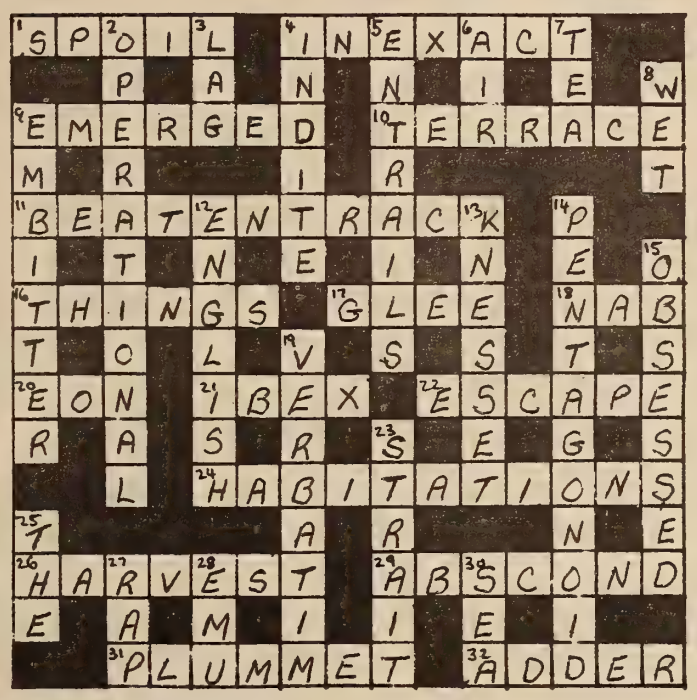
Girl attacked

An unidentified Queen's student was indecently assaulted in Kingston early last Thursday morning, The Whig-Standard reports.

The Kingston paper said the girl was forced into a car on Earl Street near University just after midnight and released near the traffic circle almost two hours later.

She did not require hospital treatment, and police are investigating, The Whig-Standard said.

Liona Boyd guitar concert



by Warren Chapman

The recent attendance of the classical guitar concert featuring the little known Liona Boyd is a testimony to the rising popularity of the guitar as an instrument meriting serious artistic consideration. Born in England, Miss Boyd is a comely fourth year student of the Bachelor of Music program at the University of Toronto Faculty of Music. She has the distinction of being chosen recently for master classes with the world-reknowned Julian Bream.

The concert's programme, obviously chosen with considerable forethought, was heavily imbued with the lyricism of Spanish composers such as Piyol and Mateo Albeniz. Effective contrast of mood was provoked by pieces ranging from the finely chiseled texture of a Bach sonata to the unfettered pictorialism of a transcription of Modest Moussorgsby's "The Old Castle". Although technically Miss Boyd left much to be desired, she displayed a sensitivity to the colour, and tone of the music that presages the development of a sensitive interpretive artist. This was bountifully evident in her presentation of the translucent, delicately coloured fabric of Isaac Albeniz's "Sevilla", one of a series of impressionistic pieces from the composer's "Suite Espagnols" that includes the perhaps better known "Granada". The series of picturesque tableaus suggested by Moussorgsky's "The Old Castle" and the sultry harmonies of Torroba's "Madronos", a piece combining the grace of Madrid and the majesty of Castilla, lend further credence to Miss Boyd's felicitousness. The artist evoked an intensely personal rapport between her music and her audience.

Due to the apparent success of this concert, it seems obvious that any future endeavours involving promising young music students would be warmly received at Queen's. Good music and good prices, (fifty cents with a student's card), what more could one ask for?

Solution to Tuesday's puzzle

TEMPUS FUGIT

So like now is the time to put your career together!
See your Nalaco man—
he'll be on campus
January 31

nalaco puts the pieces together . . . for life.
NORTH AMERICAN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY
The Career Company

Business Administration, Commerce, Arts or Science grads: Ask at your placement office for Nalaco Career Kits, & arrange for an interview.

The AMS and the International Clubs Present:

A SIMPOSIUM
ON CURRENT ISSUES OF INTERNATIONAL INTEREST

- What is happening in Rhodesia
- Could Mujubur accept Butho's offer
- And a couple more

All in 90 minutes or less!
BY students from where it is happening
When: Wed. Feb 2; 7:00 - 9:00
Where: Queen's Pub
What else: BEER!!!!
CHAIRMAN: ANDY JORDAN

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 40,
Thursday, January 27, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters

angels on a pin

Some time ago, I received a call from a colleague who asked if I would be the referee on the grading of an examination question. He was about to give a student a zero for his answer to a Physics question, while the student claimed he should receive a perfect score and would if the system were not set up against the student. The instructor and the student agreed to submit this to an impartial arbiter and I was selected.

I went to my colleague's office and read the examination question: "Show how it is possible to determine the height of a tall building with the aid of a barometer."

The student had answered: "Take the barometer to the top of the building, attach a long rope to it, lower the barometer to the street, and then bring it up, measuring the length of the rope. The length of the rope is the height of the building."

I pointed out that the student really had a strong case for full credit, since he had answered the question completely and correctly. On the other hand, if full credit were given, it could well contribute to a high grade for the student in his Physics course. A high grade is to certify competence in Physics, but the answer did not confirm this. I suggested that the student have another try at answering the question. I was not surprised that my colleague agreed, but I was surprised that the student did.

I gave the student six minutes to answer the question, with the warning that his answer should show some knowledge of Physics. At the end of five minutes, he had not written anything. I asked if he wished to give up, but he said no. He had many answers to this problem, he was just thinking of the best one. I excused myself for interrupting him, and asked him to please go on. In the next minute, he dashed off his answer which read: "take the barometer to the top of the building and lean over the edge of the roof. Drop the barometer timing its fall with a stopwatch. Then, using the formula S is equal to ½at2, calculate the height of the building." At this point, I asked my colleague if he would give up. He conceded, and I gave the student almost full credit.

In leaving my colleague's office, I recalled that the student had said he had other answers to the problem, so I asked him what they were. "Oh yes," said the student. "There are many ways of getting the height of a tall building with the aid of a barometer. For example, you could take the barometer out on a sunny day and measure the height of the barometer, the length of its shadow, and the length of the shadow of the building, and by the use of the simple proportion, determine the height of the building."

"Fine," I said. "And the others."

"Yes," said the student. "There is a very basic measurement method that you will like. In this method, you take the barometer and begin to walk up the stairs. As you climb the stairs, you mark off the length of the barometer along the wall. You then count the number of marks, and this will give you the height of the building in barometer units. A very direct method."

"Of course, if you want a more sophisticated method, you can tie the barometer to the end of a string, swing it like a pendulum, and determine the value of "g" at the street level and at the top of the building. From the difference between the two values of "g" the height of the building can, in principle, be calculated."

Finally he concluded that there were many ways of solving the problem. "Probably the best," he said, "is to take the barometer to the basement and knock on the superintendent's door. When the superintendent answers you speak to him as follows: "Mr. Superintendent: Here I have a fine barometer. If you will tell me the height of this building, I will give you this barometer.""

At this point, I asked the student if he really did not know the conventional answer to this question. He admitted that he did, but said that he was fed up with university and college instructors trying to teach him how to think, to use the "scientific method", and explore the deep inner logic of the subject in a pedantic way, as is often done in the 'new mathematics', rather than teaching him the structure of the subject. With this in mind he decided to revive scholasticism as an academic lark to challenge the Sputnik-panicked classroom of America.

-Anonymous (1967)

Thanks to whomever dropped this into our mail.

WRC

more of the massive macli missive:

Dear Editors;

The letter from the WRC in last Friday's (Jan. 14) Journal deals with two areas of concern. One is coed residence to which I replied on Tuesday and the other is the ASUS formal.

As an effort to remove barriers to communication, the letter of the WRC not only failed, but, as a result of obscured and omitted facts, presented even further obstacles.

The idea that was presented to the WRC from the ASUS, was that the ARTS formal be held in Vic as a Levana dance. (Levana for the uninitiated, was the name of the women's arts students association before it integrated with the ASUS in 1968) A levana dance implied that it would be a girl ask guy affair.

The ASUS and the WRC went their separate ways over the summer and returned. At the ASUS meeting of October 7, Debbie Ostler informed the ASUS executive that unless the formal was called a Levana formal, it could not be held in lower Vic.

The WRC is correct when they say that the motivation behind the idea of a dance in Vic was that 1st and 2nd year people who do not ordinarily attend formals might attend an informal formal, and the girl ask boy format would increase the formal's location and time (the weekend of Feb. 14).

The WRC at an open meeting held on October 20, announced plans for a poor man's formal in Vic in February. Debbie Ostler was at the meeting and afterwards she spoke to Cindy Davidson and told her that in fact the formal was the ASUS levana dance and not a poor man's formal which implies no sponsor.

Cindy offered workers to help the ASUS and everything seemed set. The new Dean of women in conversation with Miss Ostler could see no problem possibly arising from the Formal's location. Apparently, however, there was a problem.

When next talking to Miss Davidson, Miss Ostler was informed that the WRC did not want the ARTs formal held in Vic. The reasons given at that time were fear of theft, the fact that the WRC didn't want out of residence people in residence and that Vic hall was the home of the girls who lived there and it didn't seem right that their privacy should be invaded.

Planning was well advanced by this time and the ASUS was forced to move the formal out of Vic and to the Holiday Inn. The ASUS executive was informed on November 25 by Derek McLean. This is all covered in Clay Rubec's letter to which the WRC makes specific reference.

Marv Bloos, ASUS pres., was understandably upset, as was I (as was the entire ASUS executive). We felt that if Vic was indeed the home of those who lived there that it should be their decision as to whether a dance is held in their basement.

Further, the idea that someone was going to spend $20 just to facilitate the absconding of a $2.50 ashtray seemed to us to be mildly absurd as did the argument that the WRC feared out of residence people in residence because the dance was to be held during open hours. It was decided that a petition be circulated in Vic to get 100 signatures asking for a WRC referendum.

I contacted Cathy Robertson who began collecting the names. Two weeks later when talking to Miss Robertson, she told me that she had withdrawn the petition because the dance was being held in Vic. This was, of course impossible, but she maintained that a girl ask boys poor man's formal was in fact being held in Vic on February 11.

I checked with Marv and Debbie Ostler both of whom discounted the story, but upon further investigation, I discovered Miss Robertson's information to be correct.

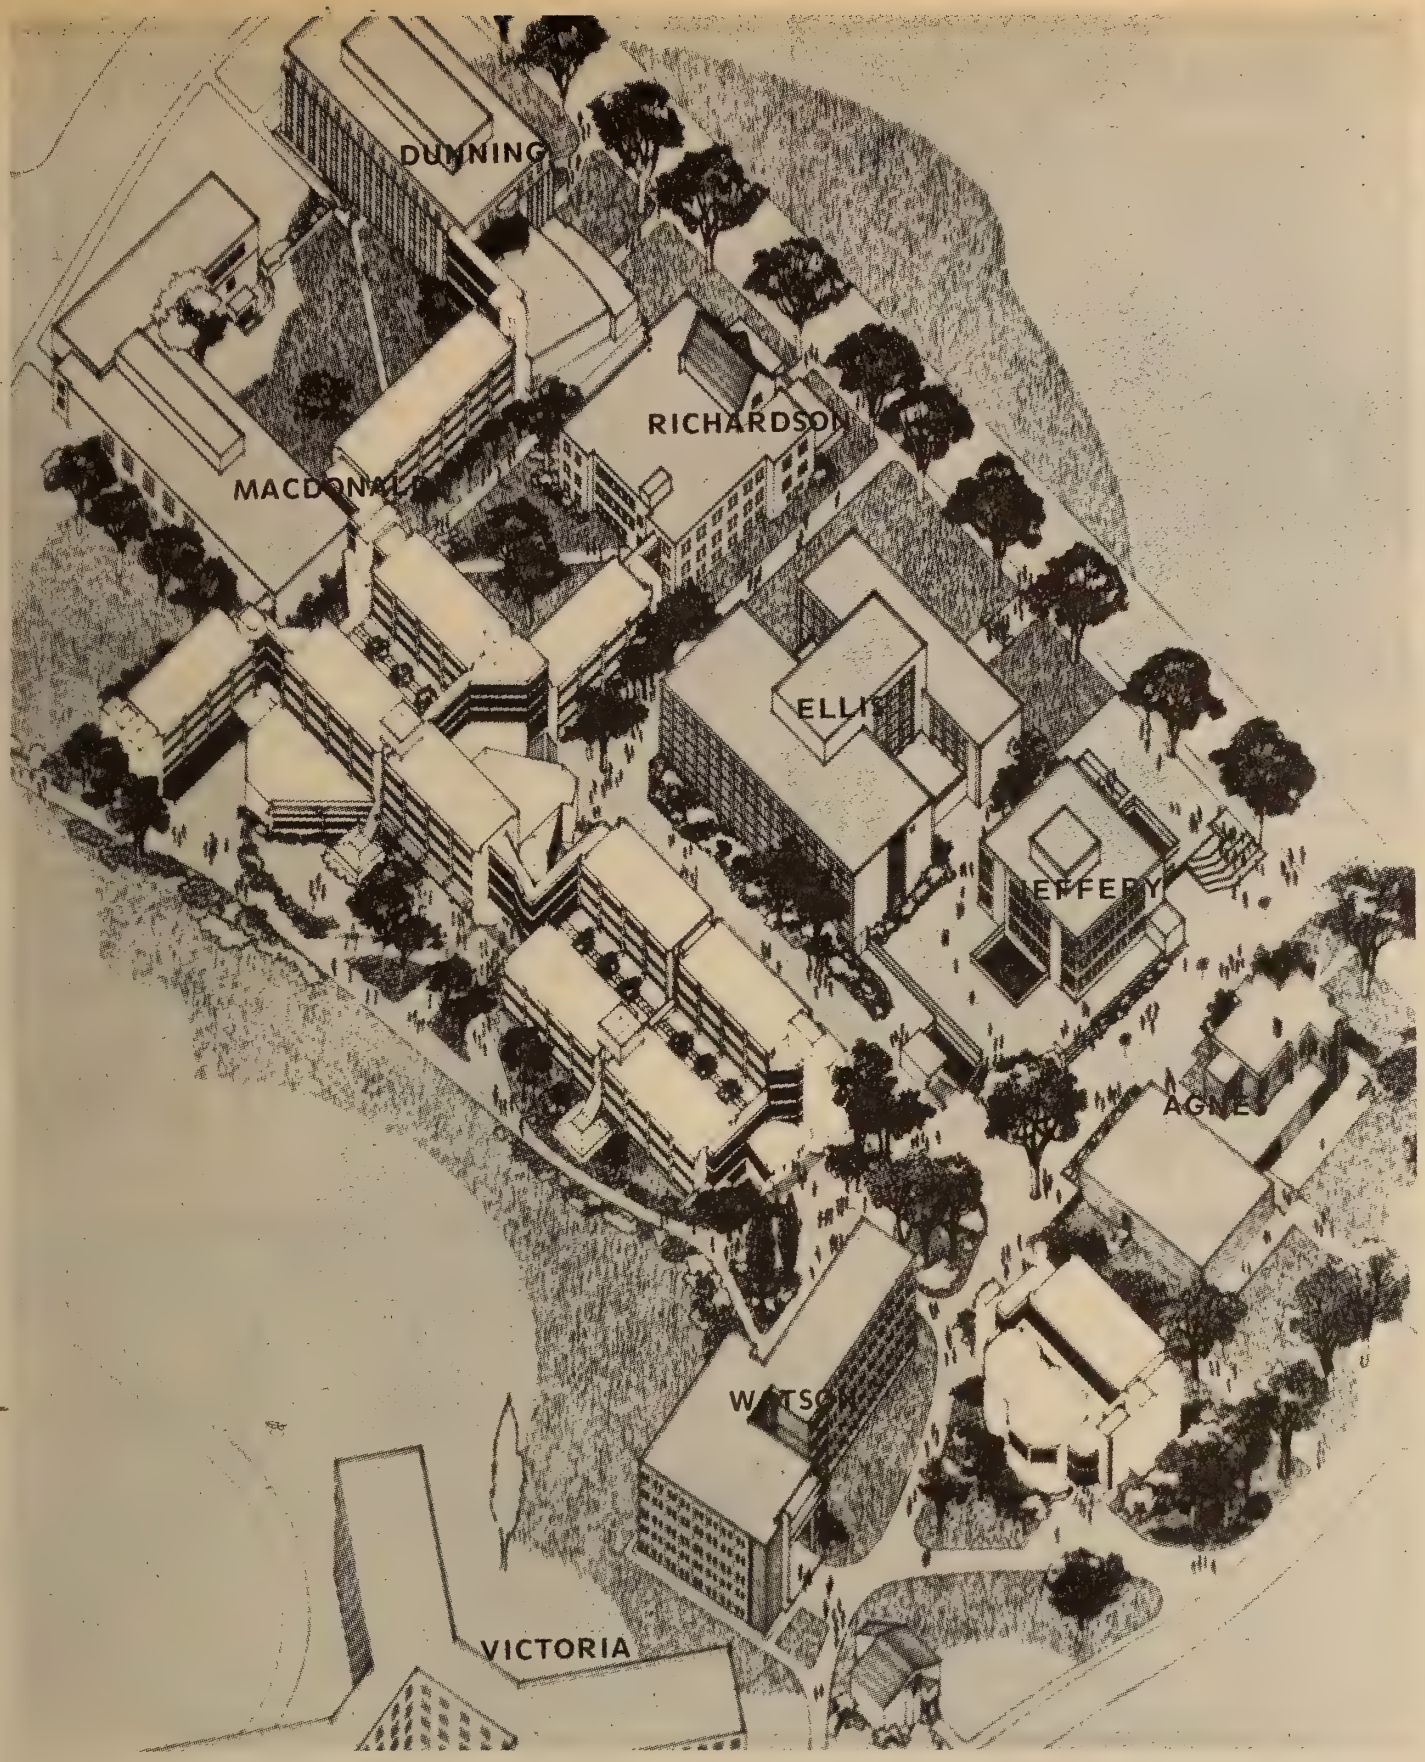
Now we come to the part of the story omitted by the WRC. I phoned Roberta Walker on Monday Dec. 13. Roberta Walker is a 2nd year student who thought that there should be a poor man's formal in Vic and that it should assume a girl ask guy format. She approached the WRC and they agreed, after they had barred the Arts formal being held there.

The date settled on was February 12 because this date would allow a Valentine's day motif to be employed. Miss Walker was assured by the WRC that the date in no way conflicted with the Arts formal, and that there would be no conflict between the WRC and the ASUS. Both Mary and Nancy Hoey were informed of the new dance by me later that evening (Dec. 13) and both reacted with understandable shock.

Now we return to the WRC letter where it picks up the action. At a meeting held later that week with Dean Reid, Cindy Davidson and other members of the WRC, Nancy Hoey and Debbie Ostler were asked to drop the arts formal and go into the poor man's formal.

Now the impression created by the WRC's letter is that the ASUS refused to have anything to do with a dance in Vic and that we pulled our support out of Vic. This is patently false. The WRC did not want the ASUS in Vic, and they told us that there could be no arts formal in a women's residence.

After thus having fouled us up by making us move off campus, they then agreed to sponsor another dance on the same night without even informing us. They then ask us to drop out of the formal and go in with theirs. I seriously doubt whether we could have joined in even if we had wanted to.



I suppose it would depend on the WRC's definition of "bad faith", but I cannot help but think that WRC acted in a totally inexplicable manner throughout this entire affair.

The arts formal is being held at the Holiday Inn and the price is $8 instead of $5. The poorman's formal is apparently going to be postponed until March, although that would seem to be too late in the year for effective organization.

-Terry Macli

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Construction of the arts-social sciences complex is to begin this month; the first, $5.2 million phase should be ready by June 1973. This phase will provide 176,000 square feet of space in the interconnecting buildings shown, and another 24,000 square feet in the music building southeast of Watson Hall. The complex will connect with Macdonald Hall, Dunning Hall and Richardson Hall.

Yang-yin man speaks on role of women, food

by Pat Spence

Any man who is attracted to cooking is a homosexual, and no real woman wants to go outdoors, an expert on macrobiotic food said Tuesday at Snowball week's first "cultural" event.

Jean Clarke, owner of a natural food store in Montreal, explained his statement in terms of the yang-yin theory of opposites, which he said is central to the idea of macrobiotic food. Clarke said he had been a macrobiotic for five or ten years.

Clarke told about 25 listeners in Dupuis Hall that five thousand years ago a man named Fucci was sitting in front of a fire, wondering why the flames went upwards. He explained that the fire, being a yang form, is attracted to air, which is yin.

Similarly, he continued, woman is yin -- and spiritualistic -- while man is yang and materialistic, and the two therefore attract one another.

Applying the theory to food, Clarke explained that yin is represented in the extreme by drugs, and yang by red meat. The parents of this generation fed them red meat, Clarke pointed out, and were materialistic; accordingly, the new generation is attracted to drugs, spiritualism and yin.

The macrobiotoc philosophy is that the extreme in food causes extremes in the mind -- paranoia. Because grain is the centre or balance on the yin-yang food line, that is the main substance in a macrobiotic diet. One can even eat poison if it is balanced with the opposite extreme, Clarke said.

He said the biggest fault with people today is specialization; because a man needs others to perform their specialty for money, people become materialistic. He added that people unwisely leave cooking for machines to do.

According to the yin-yang theory, Clarke said, woman, as yin, should be attracted to fire and to cooking, and man, as yang, should be attracted to the air and the out-of-doors. But such values are often reversed in modern life, he pointed out.

He said the kitchen is getting

continued on page two

SNOWBALL

Tonight:
Variety Night, Arena, 8:30
Wine and Cheese, Grant, 10:
Tomorrow:
Reflections in Grant
Refractions in the Union
Sunday:
Edgar Winters concert, Arena, 8:00

Queen's Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 41 Fri., Jan. 28, 1972

Yang and Yin, continued

smaller, and "the woman is leaving her rightful place by the fire." Clarke said that every time in history that women have left the kitchen, war has broken out.

Asked about his own domestic arrangements, Clarke said he did his own cooking because he is unmarried and his mother does not approve of macrobiotic food.

Another listener suggested that in the middle ages, when the diet was mainly grain and women cooked all day, there were extensive wars and religious uprisings. This had a different cause, Clarke replied: the women cooked their food too long and used too much salt.

A discussion on the status of women followed. Woman always win in quarrels, Clarke said, but because they are yin they should accept.

He continued that man cannot argue with woman because she knows what infinity is intuitively, whereas a man must study it and discuss it. When a woman tries to study it she only becomes confused, and so she should just accept, Clarke declared.

Asked how bad food causes bad cells, Clarke gave this explanation: chemicals in bad food pretend to kill the cells, but instead they recover and reproduce into bad cells. The whole process takes ninety days, and as a result sickness is common in April, ninety days after Christmas feasting.

The discussion closed with consideration of the properties of yin and yang.

Tories open problem desk

The Queen's Progressive Conservative Club is setting up a "problems desk" in the Union

Bob Stead, Queen's politics student and secretary-treasurer of the Students Association of Ontario, said the service will run every Wednesday from 9:30 to 11:30 am in the John Orr Room of the Union.

Any problems or suggestions about the policies and programmes of the Ontario government will be taken, and referred directly to the appropriate cabinet minister, Stead stated.

The new service will also be a centre for distributing information about the government, and will serve as a referral desk when possible, he said.

Stead pointed out that the new effort is an attempt to improve communications between the government and students.

The service will also include referral of messages to Progressive Conservative party members in Ottawa.

Camp Outlook seeks volunteers

"Outlook" is a canoe-tripping camp which brings together students from Queen's and from the younger segment of the community.

For the past two summers a number of volunteer Queen's students have guided an almost equal number of Kingston youth through the wilderness of Algonquin Park.

Outlook is a source of adventure for most of its campers. During the ten days of confronting the challenge of the north, campers experience a growing sense of achievement and of the necessity for cooperation in all aspects of the trip.

Many of the campers are from a depressed economic and social background. Campers are referred through social agencies with the hope that their Outlook experience will provide an interesting and memorable time from which they will profit. The project values the interaction of guides and campers and continued contact through a follow-up programme.

Outlook is now attempting to organize a weekend of winter camping. Small groups of Queen's students and of campers will find themselves crossing the terrain of the lake district north of Kingston on snowshoes or crosscountry skis.

Outlook, begun by Queen's student Ron Kimberley, has rallied support through the efforts of "Padre" A.M. Laverty and of many students. The camp's vitality is dependent upon support and participation by students.

Anyone interested in information about Outlook, or interested in participating as a guide for either winter or summer camping, should contact the secretary in the Outlook office on the second floor of the Union.

Prison lecturer to visit

Dr. Jean Vanier, a Canadian lecturer-theologian who now works with the mentally retarded, will visit Kingston early next week to visit penal institutions in the area and deliver two addresses, one downtown and the other in Ellis Hall.

Vanier is the son of the late governor-general Georges Vanier; he is also a published poet and holds a doctoral degree in theology.

Speaking of his work with the mentally handicapped, Vanier says in the preface to his most recent book, Eruptions to Hope, "They have shown me what it is to live simply, to love tenderly, to speak in truth, to pardon, to receive openly, to be humble in weakness, to be confident in difficulties, and to accept handicaps and hardships with love. And, in a mysterious way, in their love they have revealed Jesus to me."

Vanier will speak at 4.30 next Tuesday in Ellis auditorium.

Excitement!

The ever-exciting AMS will meet Monday evening at 7:00 in the McLaughlin Room of the Union. All students are welcome to watch their student government in action. Exciting moves will probably be shown in instant replay as members of the executive argue for hours about whether they were legal.

Snowball is going

St. James' Church
UNION and BARRIE
KINGSTON

9.00 a.m. - HOLY COMMUNION
11.00 a.m. - MORNING PRAYER
7.30 p.m. - HOLY COMMUNION

PIZZA FACTORY
544-1221
Open Tues. - Sun.
Free delivery within city limits

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15

16 POSITIONS

and they are open to any ASUS member
WE NEED 1 President and vice president (team)

1 secretary
1 treasurer
1 secretary
9 AMS reps
3 Senators (2 for 2 years)
3 Senators (1 for 1 year)

Nominations with 25 ASUS signatures and the candidate's acceptance, will be accepted by Marv Bloos, Nancy Hoey, Doug Donald or in the AMS Outer Office, until 7:00 pm, Sunday January 30, 1972. Call Doug for Information 542-5590.

Graduate Student Society
ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING
Feb. 1st 8:00 pm
Grad. House, 157 King St., E.
COME AND HEAR WHAT THE G.S.S. HAS BEEN DOING- A FREE BEER FOR FIRST HUNDRED PEOPLE.
NOMINATIONS for President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, A.M.S. Reps. (3) will close at this meeting.
All Graduate Students Are Urged To Attend.

BLOOD DRIVE

VICTORIA HALL BASEMENT

FEB. 1,2,3

11: am - 2 pm; 3 pm - 8 pm

Committees plan what the university centre will offer

by Mary O'Rourke

The university centre users' committee is at present working towards a report demonstrating the need for the proposed facilities, to be presented to the academic vice-principal some time before next fall. To gather and organize information on specific needs, four sub-committees have been formed to deal with particular areas.

The work of these sub-committees includes both study of information and submissions received by the earlier university centre planning committee, and current research into the space and facility needs of various campus groups. The committees, welcome written or verbal communication from individuals and organizations on campus, and stress the need for cooperation from all quarters in order to make the centre answer the needs of everyone concerned. In addition, public meetings are coming up in the near future to encourage general participation in discussing these needs.

The first sub-committee is concerned with food-service and lounge areas. In addition to working on facilities in the centre itself, the users' committee has tried to coordinate such commodities in the new arts-social sciences complex so as to make it function as a sub-centre of the main building. They hope to develop it to a wider activity and usage level than departmental lounge and recreation areas now enjoy. The people to discuss these matters with are Tom Holloway, Commerce '75, or J. Bennett, professor of electrical engineering.

The second sub-committee is concerned with commercial and recreational facilities and is chaired by education student Robert Warner, and by Daniel Soberman, dean of law. This committee is working in close ccooperation with the Kingston planning department on the possibilities of services such as a bank, a post office, and various stores. This is no small proposal, as establishment of a commercial area in the new centre would even involve re-zoning of the land involved.

Research on recreational facilities in comparable university centres has been conducted, and considerable advice has been received from Queen's current recreational program director, Howard Pierce.

Vital space requirements for Student Services, currently scattered over campus, are being co-ordinated by a third committee chaired by C. W. Jones, director of physical plant, and Jill Davidson, Sociology '73. Student services include facilities such as student health and psychological and career counselling, presently located anywhere between Stuart Street and 165 University Avenue.

The fourth sub-committee deals with space for student and university organizations in general. The committee is headed by Sue Dowler, English '74, and Bob Poole of the Alumni Association. It has set up a questionnaire covering in detail the requirements of different organizations, and is currently processing it. Miss Dowler stressed, however, the need for club and organization representatives to contact subcommittee in order to elaborate their specific requirements and ideas.

Students will be asked February 8, 9 and 10 to vote on a referendum to increase the present $5 university centre fee to $10 for the next three years, in an attempt to raise the $500,000 which students have pledged towards the building. Even so, student contributions will cover only a minor part of the approximately $3 million cost of the centre; the rest will come from the university and from alumni.

Summer courses listed, spanning four sessions

Following is a list of the courses Queen's intends to offer for credit between April 1972 and September 1972.

This is a tentative list; revised and detailed information will be available from the faculty of arts and science, at 131 Union Street, or the department of extension at 25 Union.

Four sessions are involved:

"Inter" is the intersession running from May 10 to June 25 on the central campus. Registration deadline is January 31.

"Summer" is the regular summer session running from July 3 to August 11 on the central campus. Registration deadline is June 15.

"Venice" is the May-June school in Venice; registration information is available at 129 Watson Hall.

"Bermuda" is the July-August summer school in Bermuda, operated through the department of extension.

Anatomy: summer 311
Ancient History: summer 195
Art History: summer 021, 130; Venice 245
Biology: inter 201; summer 101, 203
Commerce: inter 212; summer 101, 111, 221, 381
Computing: inter 101, 102; summer 101, 102, 201, 301
Drama: inter 240, 320, 330; summer 100, 141, 231
Economics: inter 210; summer 110
Engineering Drawing: summer 333
English: inter 211, 221, summer 010, 110, 211, 226, 260, 271, 280
Film: inter 310
French: summer 100, 221, 230, 336 (all subject to change)
Geography: inter 440; summer 110, 120, 326, 430
Geology: summer 014, 333, 337, 349
German: summer 100, 200
History: inter 260, 276; summer 125, 260, 266, 271, 351
Italian: Venice 100
Mathematics: inter 111, 162, 323; summer 004, 111, 121, 162, 213, 223, 323, 370
Music: summer 210, 342, 330
Philosophy: summer 110, 111, 245, 255
Phys Ed: summer 332
Physics: summer 040, 110
Politics: inter 210, 310, 423; summer 130, 276, 370
Psychology: inter 021, 100; Bermuda 240; summer 022, 100, 200, 232, 240, 251
Religion: summer 131, 151, 211, 241
Russian: summer 100, 110
Sociology: inter 122, 274, 352; summer 122, 233, 274, 352
Spanish: summer 100

SERIES SPECIAL - LAST CHANCE
THIS WEEKEND ONLY
BOTH CONCERTS FOR $4.50

Sunday, January 30, Harry Arena
Edgar Winters, James Cotton, Jakes Holmes, George Carlin
One Show - 8pm, Students $3.00, General and At Door $4.00

Sunday, February 6, Grant Hall
Rita Coolidge and The Dixie Flyers
Two Shows - 7, 9:30 pm - Students - $2.50 General and At Door $3.50

Series tickets available in John Orr Room Friday, 11am - 3pm, Saturday, 11:30am - 3pm. Sunday, 12:30 - 3pm General tickets at House of Sounds and Tremblay's.

Fine arts policy is discussed

The senate committee on fine arts and public lectures held an unexciting public meeting Tuesday to hear views on the development of university activities in these areas.

R.G. Harrison, chairman of the committee, said, "We are concerned with finding new terms of reference which meet the needs of the campus."

The major concerns of the meeting were communications throughout campus, commitment to the community, and ultimately whether significant changes in the committee's policy could be financed.

Joyce Nelson, representing the department of film studies, suggested that publicity of fine arts events be handled by a central organization. Individual flyers with details of special events were also recommended.

The meeting was told by P.H. Watson of the faculty of education that there is a possibility that a box office will be built in Dunning Hall with a kiosk outside. "If this did occur, it would be a first-class spot to distribute information," he said.

At present, the Queen's Gazette is responsible for giving bulletins about fine arts events. However, Dan Lang pointed out that students are not sufficiently aware of this medium to use it. "They must be made more so in future," he added.

Lang also commented that he hoped a general manual on how to organize an event would be printed in Who's Where next year. The manual suggested would indicate whom to see, where to advertise, and how to finance an event.

This was aimed not only at improving communication, but also at ensuring that organizing expertise at the student level be carried on.

It was agreed that further steps should be taken to develop the relationship between the university and the Kingston community.

Ralph Allen, director of Agnes Etherington art centre, commented that campus events are introverted. "We must view the university community as part of a larger community and direct ourselves to this larger community," he said, suggesting that more effective advertising is necessary for this purpose.

Dr. Istvan Anhalt, head of the music department, suggested that arrangements be made with the Frontenac County Board of Education to involve the area schools in concerts, as the art centre already is doing.

Increased interaction with St. Lawrence College of Applied Arts and Technology was also recommended.

J.A. Euringer, director of drama, brought the meeting around to economic considerations. He commented, "With the day-to-day struggle for shekels, how are we going to go about reaching out to the community, valuable as it is?"

The committee came to agree that not all the suggestions would require more money, but some areas rather needed reorganization.

Four briefs had been submitted by mail to the committee, coming from Rod Robertson of the department of drama; Dr. D. DeF. Macintosh of the school of phys ed; public relations director Larry Moore; and Euringer. The briefs are still confidential, the committee announced.

Oral and written comments are still welcome before a final report from the committee comes to the university senate in May.

⊗ election

The Aesculapian Society has announced that meds students will hold their elections February 17. Nominations are due February 4 and require two signatures for executive members or ten signatures for the student senatorship.

Most other campus student governments will be holding elections February 8 to 10, as previously announced.

Law student is acquitted twice

Queen's law student Neil Sharpe was acquitted last week -- for the second time -- on a charge of driving with more than 80 milligrams of alcohol per unit of his blood, following a three-car accident last June 25.

Sharpe was originally arraigned in November on a charge of impaired driving, but was acquitted on insufficient evidence. A breathalyzer test is not considered a test of whether a driver is able to control his car.

Following the November trial, police laid a second charge, accusing Sharpe of violating the law which makes it illegal to drive with more than 80 mg of alcohol per unit of blood in the body.

Judge P.E.D. Baker acquitted Sharpe on the second charge, on the basis that the certificate of analysis presented in court did not properly identify the solution used in administering the breathalyzer test.

The identification certificates police have been using are standard in all cases and show only a lot number. The Ontario Court of Appeal gave an acquittal in a similar case January 14, ruling that an error in law existed when the solution was identified on the certificate by lot number alone.

In acquitting Sharpe, the judge ruled that no proof had been shown that the test was not administered on an approved instrument, as Sharpe's lawyer had claimed.

Commenting on his decision, Baker said, "I am constrained by the decision made by the higher court to dismiss the charge on that basis."

Arts 73 donations asked

Arts 73 students are being asked for private donations to enlarge the fund which the graduating arts year will present to the university in honour of "Padre" A.M. Laverty.

The gift coincides with Laverty's 25th year as chaplain at Queen's. The money collected will be used to supplement a general loan fund which the chaplain administers.

Members of Arts 73 sold Science Formal raffle tickets last summer and was allowed by Science 72 to keep a portion of the profits, totalling more than $300.

Other year societies have contributed as well, as have alumni. An arrangement to sell tickets for the commerce Casion Royale raffle during Christmas vacation was less successful.

An informal presentation February 4 will honour the "padre"; presidents of faculty societies, and several members of the university administration, will be present.

The Arts 73 class gift will be turned over to the padre at their graduation dance in March.

REMEMBER
HELP YOUR RED CROSS
TO HELP

7:30 p.m.
Dunning Hall
Monday January 31st

JULIUS CAESAR

STARRING
MARLON BRANDO, JOHN GIELGUD
JAMES MASON, JEAN SIMMONS
LOUIS CALHERNE

ADMISSION - $1.00

THE TRUE NORTH BLUEPRINT

a trilogy of of plays by Louis Capson

Tues. Feb. 1: TO BECOME A DRUMMER
Wed. Feb. 2: I LOVE YOU BILLY STIKER
Thurs. Feb. 3: IN SEARCH OF THE LAST PARADIDDLE

performed by CREATION 2

GRANT HALL
QUEEN'S THEATRE

FEB. 1,2,3
8:30 p.m.

50¢ admission each night In conjunction with Festival '72

off the record

by Dick Loney

The followup album by Badfinger, to their sleeper NO DICE, called STRAIGHT UP, and it's a twelve point testament to this British group's outstanding vocal and instrumental style. You may begin to be turned off by the frequency with which the hit "Day After Day" is beamed at you over the prevailing AM stations, but the album contains as much variety of melody and tempo as goes into the production of most current chart-topping l.p.'s.

Speaking of production--eight of the tunes herein were produced by Todd Rundgren, whose album RUNT on Bearsville-Ampex certainly substantiated his aspirations to production finesse. The other four outings have the musical guidance of George (BANGLA DESH) Harrison, and of course in the formative stages of Badfinger's career, Paul McCartney offered them a song "Come and Get It" and some directional aid.

"Sweet Tuesday Morning" is one of the softer things included and its melody is laid upon guitar solos that have more in common with the style of flamenco than the rock roots you might expect. It's with the Harrison-produced "Day After Day" that the affinities with the big, full sound of the Beatles' version of "Something" and "My Sweet Lord" are reflected, particularly in the fill-in background vocal.

Until Dick Biondi (remember the Sound of the Hound at WKBW Buffalo?) of Chicago's WCFL picked up on "Day After Day", Badfinger was more or less an underground soft-rock group, but listen to STRAIGHT UP-Apple SW 3387 and you'll realize why the Badfinger bandwagon is gettin' a little crowded.

Since their phenomenal success with TOMMY, the Who have been responsible for three albums--the first, WHO'S NEXT, Decca DL 79182, was a studio session which proved that Tommy was not the flash-in-the-pan fluke of sometimes genius. MEATY BEATY BIG AND BOUNCY, Decca DL 79184, is a rock fan's compendium of fourteen of the Who's greatest hits, with a few obscure flip sides thrown in for extra measure. All of the good ones are here--"I Can't Explain", "My Generation", "The Magic Bus", and "Substitute" right up to the more recent "Pinball Wizard" and "The Seeker" Now you won't have to search through the dusty, scratchy stack of old 45's to hear some vintage Who.

Latest from the Who camp is John Entwistle (bassist) with his SMASH YOUR HEAD UPON THE WALL, Decca DL 79183. Keith Moon is the only Who-member to aid Entwistle on this solo album. Best of the numbers has to be "Ted End", which leads off side two in a quiet fashion, leading into the wilder heavy sounds of the more standard Who-fare on "No. 29 (External Youth)"--with its extended bass solo which verifies John's place as one of the better rock bassists. As on the WHO'S NEXT album, Entwistle handles all of the brass chores--Flugelhorn, trumpet, and trombone, and the keyboard duties as well. "I Believe In Everything" is perhaps the most successful vocal on the set, with about six tracks mixed in with John singing all the parts in admirable fashion--the finish to the tune is a kinky digression into a spirited pub-sing of "Rudolph The Red-Nosed Reindeer" ending the album on a festive note indeed!

Cowboy, is not the title of the latest John Wayne epic, (it is actually, pluralized) but is rather the name chosen by six musicians from the American south-east: 5'LL GETCHA TEN is an album recorded at Macon Georgia and Sheffield, Alabama, featuring the most sophisticated country-rock stylings since Poco began "Picking Up The Pieces" that remained of the Buffalo Springfield.

Cowboy's second album in the space of one year deserves far greater praise than that accorded it in a recent Rolling Stone mag review. Here are twelve songs, any one of which contains the type of close vocal harmony associated with Crosby Stills Nash and Young in their happier times --the shame of the matter is that until Cowboy scores heavily with a single on the teenybopper dominated "charts", they will remain a semi-obscure group whose only future can be turning out excellent, though poorly-selling l.p.'s. And we've all seen groups who couldn't make a buck fold in quick order.

The songs of Scott Boyer, delivered with the soft lilt of Cowboy's string sound of country without the twang of nasal voicings are about friends, mothers and love, and it's difficult to single out one as being more impressive than another--the twelve tunes are noteworthy for their easy-listening, relaxing qualities with none of the harshness which always seems to intrude just so that an album maintains allegiance to rock n' roll.

Don't look for Cowboy's album on the best-seller racks; you won't find it there--but find it you should, just for the sake of your ears--COWBOY--5'LL GETCHA TEN, Capricorn, SD 864.

One of the bigger name Canadian folk artists who does manage to drop by Kingston once in a while is Murray McLauchlan. His album SONG FROM THE STREET, is jammed with the type of tunes which began to be picked up on by Tom Rush and some of the bigger names in the folk world. Aided by a group of Toronto based musicians who very ably aid Murray, he spins out such songs as "Child's Song" and "Honky Red" which reflect that feeling for nostalgia which is so much a part of his approach to writing a song of living in a world dominated by "sixteen lane highways" (the urban sprawl of the Toronto area so much a part of the dreams of small-town youths) and "empty-headed prose."

Agnes

to Feb. 15: Venetian Prints of the XVIIIth Century on exhibition

Feb. 3: Opening of exhibition of paintings by 12 contemporary Scottish painters at 8:00.

Theatres

Capitol - Billy Jack
Hyland - Dollars
Odeon - Carry On Henry

ripoffdays

Friday, January 28.

11:30 to 12:20 or 4:30 to 5:20: The Faculty of Medicine sponsors "Films with Lunch" (Holography, Window to the Future, and X-Ray Ultrasound and Thermography in Diagnosis) in Etherington Hall Auditorium.

8:00 p.m.: GSS Film Club presents, "Through a Glass Darkly."

8:15 p.m.: 3rd Annual Chalmers Festival of Music and the Arts. Recital by the choir.

8:30 p.m.: Snowball Variety Night on Ice in Jock Harty Arena. Admission is Snowball button and 25c.

9:00 p.m.: Bitter Grounds Coffee House. Fun Nite with local talent. Glen Foster and Jug Band, The Trout, and others. Admission only 50c.

10:00 p.m.: Wine and Cheese Party (after the Variety Show) in Grant Hall. Admission $3.00 per couple.

10:00 p.m.: Fruit and Cheese party at Christian Youth Centre, Barrie and Johnson, sponsored by Queen's Christian Fellowship. All welcome.

Saturday, January 29.

10:00 a.m.: 3rd Annual Chalmers Festival of Music and the Arts. Film festival.

2:00 p.m.: Queen's Christian Fellowship meeting in Ladies' Reception Room of Brockington House. Guest speaker Don Freeman will discuss "The Bible as Modern Literature."

2:30 p.m.: Chalmer's Festival. Children's Theatre presents "The Witch who Stole the Music".

3:30 p.m.: Chalmer's Festival. Organ Recital.

7:30 p.m.: India Association presents India Night in Dunning Hall followed by Indian snacks in the Students Union. Tickets are 50c available from International Centre Office and R. Keshavan at 547-5579.

8:00 p.m.: Chalmer's Festival. Harpsichord recital.

9:00 p.m.: Bitter Grounds Coffee House.

Sunday, January 30

10:30 a.m.: Folk Mass in Dunning Hall. Coffee and doughnuts afterwards.

2:00 p.m.: Queen's Christian Fellowship meeting. See Saturday.

7:00 p.m.: Folk Mass in Newman House.

8:00 p.m.: International Club presents Open House with live folk entertainment in the Upper Lounge of International Centre. Free admission and refreshments.

8:00 p.m.: Women's Liberation Meeting at 183 University Ave. Discussion on Marriage, male-female relationships, and the family. All women welcome.

Monday, January 31

7:00 p.m.: French Club meeting on the third floor common room at the Union.

7:30 p.m.: The film "Julius Caesar" is being shown in Dunning Auditorium. $1.00 Admission.

8:00 p.m.: The West-Indian Club presents West-Indian Night. Come and hear West-Indian poetry, literature and see Folk-dancing. Maybe a fashion show. Music, dancing and punch at the Polson Room.

Tuesday, February 1.

11:00 to 2:00 and 5:00 to 8:00 p.m.: Blood Drive in Victoria Hall basement.

7:00 and 9:30 p.m.: Campus Movies presents Genesis II, part 1, in Dunning.

7:30 p.m.: Chronicles XII presents Strangers in the Studio Theatre. Tickets available at Queen's Drama Dept.

7:30 p.m.: Biology Society sponsors Linus Pauling on Science film, discussion afterwards. Earl Hall, room 114.

9:00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "If".

Wednesday, February 2.

11:00 to 2:00 and 5:00 to 8:00 p.m.: Blood Drive in Victoria Hall basement.

2:00 to 5:00 p.m.: Faculty of Medicine presents a Symposium on "The Management of Pain" in Etherington Hall Aud.

7:00 and 9:30 p.m.: Campus Movies presents Genesis II, part 2, in Dunning.

7:30 p.m.: Chronicles XII. See Tuesday.

Thursday, February 3.

11:00 to 2:00 and 5:00 to 8:00 p.m.: Blood Drive in Victoria Hall basement.

7:00 and 9:30 p.m.: Campus Movies presents Genesis II, part 3, in Dunning.

7:00 p.m.: Bridge Club meeting in McLaughlin Room of Union.

7:30 p.m.: Medical Sciences Lecture Series presents "Non-Medical Drugs and Social Policy", by Dr. Heinz Lehmann, in Etherington Hall Aud.

7:30 and 9:00 p.m.: Chronicles XII. See Tuesday.

8:00 p.m.: Arts Festival presents poetry, music and drama in the Union, of films in Dupuis.

9:00 p.m.: Dept of Film Studies presents "The Letter".

Friday, February 4.

8:00 p.m.: Arts Festival. See Thursday.

8:30 p.m.: The African Night featuring the Otu Highlife W'Afrika Dance Band, the "African" Juju and Atilogu Troupe Dancers and The Talking Drum. Bar available. Dress is optional and all are welcome. Admission is $2.00 single and $3.00 per couple.

Creation 2 at Queen's

Creation 2, a rising Toronto-based theatre group will be presenting True North Blueprint under the direction of Louis Capson. The trilogy of plays is to be 'delivered' in sequence in Grant Hall at 8:30 p.m. on the evenings of Tuesday, February 1, Wednesday, February 2, and Thursday, February 3. The following is excerpts of an article by Urjo Kareda of the Toronto Daily Star. It will give you an idea of the quality of performer, and performances you can expect to participate in.

The trilogy speculates about a technological, fascist future for Canada. Part I, To Become a Drummer describes the progression by which a failed artist finds an outlet for expression in political dictatorship. Part II, I Love You, Billy Striker, is an attempt to sift together myths of past and future. Part II, In Search of the Last Paradiddle, shows the numbing victory of technology; the ultimate goal is the smoothest possible functioning of the machine.

Something called The Perfect Number functions as a deity; worship is directed toward "the power and the glory of the number." In a world of plastic immortality, there is "no more dead and gone."

But even this machine is not perfect. Although the past has been banished, occasional fragments will not be suppressed. Occasional misfits - called "witnesses" - follow the fearful impulse to be themselves, to open their mouths and to believe their eyes. Certain citizens still carry nightmare memories of the past, but beg to be allowed to keep them. Even the ritual execution of "witnesses" carries a sensuality which should not have infiltrated this technological system.

Although The True North Blueprint has technically been written by Louis Capson, it has obviously grown out of the ensemble style evolved by the Creation 2 company (of which Capson himself is the director). Their performing technique is really quite dazzling, a superbly-controlled combination of physical expressiveness and vocal invention.

The plays are fragmentary because the excitement of the style is in the swiftness with which scenes flow in and out of one another, in the rapid, hard-edged transitions between effects.

It is fantastic to see a company of actors performing with such unified rhythm and versatility. Moreover, it is interesting that this remarkable ensemble style can be modulated to humor and warmth (as it certainly was in To Become a Drummer) as well as to the freezing vision of a computerized future (the seven sequences of the final play called "imputs").

The language is like the performances, at its best when it is deft, swift and hard-edged. It would be very difficult to separate the play from the actual performance, because the two complement one another so fully.

That is why, perhaps, the most conventional of the three parts - I love You, Billy Striker - was so disappointing. Its vague, tiresome dialogue didn't summon up the crackling physical style which represents Creation 2 at its best. A contrasting feeling for the middle section is absolutely necessary, but Capson needs to work to bring reflective language under control.

The True North Blueprint, for all its flaws, is an important event. For once, a company of actors has developed an original, idiosyncratic style and has worked intelligently to relate that to a serious consideration of our national experience.

Festival 72

MOVIES, FILMS, DRAMA 1 ART DEMONSTRATIONS, CREATIVE DANCE, PHOTOS MUSIC

Feb.3,4,5,6 8-Midnight Student's Memorial Union

The Improvisational Group of the Music Department will be making a unique contribution to Festival 72. The International Centre will be the site for an exploration in the possibilities of sound. The presentations involve the use of a variety of electronic equipment, including a moog synthesizer. An unstructured format permits the element of chance which lends a new dimension to this art form.

The film portion of Festival 72 will be held in Dupuis Auditorium this year. Several student-made films will be presented. Every film is the creative expression of each individual involved. There will be two screenings Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. Come and share with us another area of creative and personal expression.

Two hours of underground films will be shown between 8:00 and 10:00 p.m. on Sunday evening and will be screened again between 10:00 and 12:00 p.m. There will be a number of shorts such as "Happy Birthday Lenny" and "Oh Dem Watermelons" by relatively unknown directors followed by Jean Luc Godard's "Sympathy for the Devil" which has been called various things from "a major movie experience" to "apocalyptic political pornography". The films are unusual, and since they are not normally or regularly screened in commercial cinemas, chances to see them are rare. All films are subject to change.

Total involvement of audience is the theme of Festival 72's music. A broad cross-section of musical forms, new atmosphere and an emphasis on jamming after the performance are the reasons. The improvisations of jazz, the emotional uniqueness of blues, the easy pleasures of folk and the rythm of rock will be presented. Some performers are back from Festival 71, some are new. The large second floor common room is again the place. Sunday night has been reserved for several, well-known performers.

Classical music will also be featured in Festival 72. Classical guitar, piano duets and solos, cello and voice will be offered in the International Centre for at least two evening recitals.

A vast array of arts and crafts skills will be demonstrated in the east second floor common room. Students are invited to learn macrame, batik, collage-making, metalwork and clay work by utilizing the available supplies. Demonstrators will be working continuously throughout the evenings. The informal atmosphere is designed to promote individual free expression and personal enjoyment of these arts and crafts skills.

This busy and informal atmosphere will also prevail in the Polson Room. Tubes of newspaper held together with tape provide an unusual medium for a creative newspaper sculpture. Communal effort in this workshop will expand the sculpture to fill the entire room.

The Horse and Wagon Puppet Theatre, presently residing in Kingston, will be a unique addition to Festival 72. They will present a thirty-minute mythical drama, "The King's Story", in Wallace Hall, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. This novel form of theatre should be intriguing for the Queen's audience.

One ought not to be so proud;
for a fortune in lies spent in a penny arcade much resembles
Andy Warhol at the Tate.

Peter Jensen

Your memory has become so much my companion
That it begins to consume your person.
Time past and time present,
Memories and the reality
Have drawn so far apart
That there was a moment today
When I didn't realize
That the figure I stared at across the street
Was you.

Fiona Telford

Festival 72's exhibition of art work, photography and c be a most unusual presentation of the talents of Kingsto
The T.V. Room on the Union's second floor will be tra into a hanging garden of collage, mountings, paintings, macrame and wool tapestries, silkscreening, potter
jewellry and leatherwork.

A special drama presentation will be offered in the Mc Room. Five students will be performing a play entitled " Indian" from Legends from the Eskimo.

Poetry readings will be conducted in the third floor room, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings.
members will be giving formal readings at schedule
Students and the listening audience are invited to rea
Burgert Roberts, author of a collection of poems entitle Walker", will be visiting Queen's and will contribute his Saturday and Sunday evenings.

A detailed Festival 72 programme will be availabl
Student's Union February 3 giving specific times, places,

People sharing their talents for the enjoyment of other expressing themselves creatively and artistically - Festi you.

Sloppy and amused
I slurp out my laughter
as you stumble
with drunkeness
through the periods where my arm
does not even hold you up.

Drool
A last long yawn
And my curses
will follow the pain that I might pass along

Remember
what it is that counts
more than yourself.
Me.
I am more selfish
than you.

N.N. Campbell

Library Stacks
as dust gathers on open book pages: the scratching of a stockinged thigh

Al Breakey

So I went alone and sat on a rock and smoked a cigarette
Sitting close enough to hear water and laughter
Close enough to laugh but up a little to keep my feet dry
And as I threw off my burnt-down ash
I saw two people pass knee-deep in water
Holding hands

Nancy Johnson

shame on the apples which cling to bare branches, this the first day of snow

Al Breakey

island journeys

"the lip of our rented boat kissed the island" -Gwendolyn Macewen-

Our stay- our island- we landed first carried floating for four days days daysdays. Its granite skin was warmed every meal

(it was an island in more ways as we were sent off by more than one hand)

We liked the coast and the coast liked us several rice meals later two ducks splashed silently
signalling our sharing of their home a bright star in the east singing the beginning the evening spectacle is starting

Purdy's starry holes in black tissue paper were washed ashore
Instead the orange life provider in the sky solemnly gave order and assent the lights in the blues beamed
-wind carried aheat blast from twigs aflame
Rather than a visual spectacle
rick and i had front and center seats for a sound theatre with an ever shifting stage
We were about to lay claim to the price tag that western man has put on visual perception

'''' '''' Tssstsikgouutreeef foomssshhhfffttttt muuuuuuuuuua aaahhhhrrrrrr ruussppfffpof

''' '''''

the next morning the sound of livingstill starred silently for us

puff of breath
in March fragile
!instantaneous!
in seconds dispersed
then borne away forever on the wings ever
of time ever...
love

a.m. yarrow

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 41
Friday, January 28, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters:

on intellectual commitment and Info Kingston

Dear Editors;

Mr. Johnston, in several recent articles, has been concerned with the "social relevance" of the work done by scholars and intellectuals. Their labours, it would seem, are not sufficiently connected with the major problems of our day, and some of their explanations of the functions of academic enquiry are suspected of masking an indifference to the injustices and sufferings of the "real world". "Mere thinking", as Mr. Johnston puts it, is not enough: the intellectual should be a doer, a social activist, a direct agent of change.

The concern of Mr. Johnston for "the improvement of humanity" would surely be shared by all serious members of the university community. This concern for human betterment can, of course, be expressed in a great many ways. For some people the outlet for concern is political action against social injustice; for others it is social work, medical practice, community organisation, child care, and the like; for others still it is the promotion of cultural and recreational activities.

But these activities do not exhaust the possibilities for creative human endeavour. Human betterment also involves the cultivation of the imagination; an educated appreciation for the varieties of cultural experience, both past and present; the training of the critical intelligence and a respect for evidence; and the enhancement of human potential for rational enquiry. Without these qualities life would be a pretty poor thing, nasty and brutish if not necessarily short, and these are the values to which intellectuals must give their primary commitment. If they don't, who will? If the universities fail to defend these values as their top priorities, what other institutions are going to do it? God knows (and students too no doubt) that universities are imperfect places, that professors are fallible and sometimes overbearing fellows, that prejudice and smugness are too often discovered: but this reflects not at all on the correctness of the university's distinctive commitments, but only on our need to honour them more zealously and more consistently.

This does not mean, of course, that intellectuals cannot or should not devote some of their energies to practical problems. Obviously many do, as readers of page seven of the Globe and Mail and followers of the Waffle movement may have noticed. But the point is that such activities are, and must be, matters of free choice, particular channels for the expression of concern which may be appropriate for some men, inappropriate for others. They flow out of a person's educated understanding and his personality: they cannot be forced upon him. Concern for humane values can be just as well expressed through a serious study of Romantic poetry, or existentialism, or social anthropology: the professors of such subjects are already concerned; they need feel no compulsion to take to the streets, whatever fashion their students may be following.

The confusions in Mr. Johnston's thinking stem largely, I think, from his narrowly utilitarian view of intellectual work. This is the problem with his call for "relevance". The relevance which he seems to have in mind is only one dimension of the total intellectual spectrum. A much more vital relevance is the sort which Mr. Baran discusses and which Mr. Johnston appears to confuse with social activism: the relevance of a trained intelligence which rejects the stock response and stereotyped descriptions, which is skeptical of the pious rhetoric of established authorities, and which subjects conventional wisdom, of old and young alike, to the rigours of critical examination.

-Robert Malcolmson,
Assistant Professor
of History

Dear Editors;

The article by Baran, "The Commitment of the Intellectual," and the accompanying editorial by Bill Johnston, are more perceptive and incisive than the diatribes on the same subject which appeared in the December 14, 1971 issue of the Journal.

In fact, I am almost completely in accord with the views expressed by Baran provided that he is willing to generalize "capitalist system" to include other structured systems governed by ideologies.

However, the "commitment" referred to by Baran has little to do with superficial crash courses proposed here and elsewhere as palliatives. Radical changes may indeed be necessary. Six superficial lectures on each of a number of topics are hardly radical.

It is because I fervently believe that it is "... as important that all students at Queen's think seriously about the most crucial problems bearing on the survival of human beings as it is that all Maths Majors study calculus...", that I am opposed to superficial and popular treatments of these problems.

The programme involving Dr. Alcock and Stanley Burke is a commendable effort but I take it for granted that such programmes are part of the normal life of a university and not as never-to-be repeated special events.

-David B. McLay

Dear Editors;

It was unfortunate that you saw fit to publish the article "Call Information Kingston For The Facts" (The Queen's Journal, Tuesday, January 18, 1972) without properly checking for the facts yourselves.

As a Director of the Social Planning Council of Kingston and District I challenge you to produce supporting evidence for your claim that "The Kingston social planning council has attacked Information Kingston".

The Social Planning Council is indeed seriously concerned that the administrators of the federal Local Initiatives Program made no apparent attempt to involve any representative group from this community in their assessment of the particular needs for this type of information service.

However, to suggest that open hostility exists between the Social Planning Council and Information Kingston is irresponsible reporting and serious misrepresentation of the current relationship between these two bodies.

The Social Planning Council staff has in fact met with members of the Information Kingston staff on more than one occasion to offer assistance and advice on methods of gathering information about this community. This co-operation is continuing.

-D.W. Bacon,
Department of Chemical Engineering.

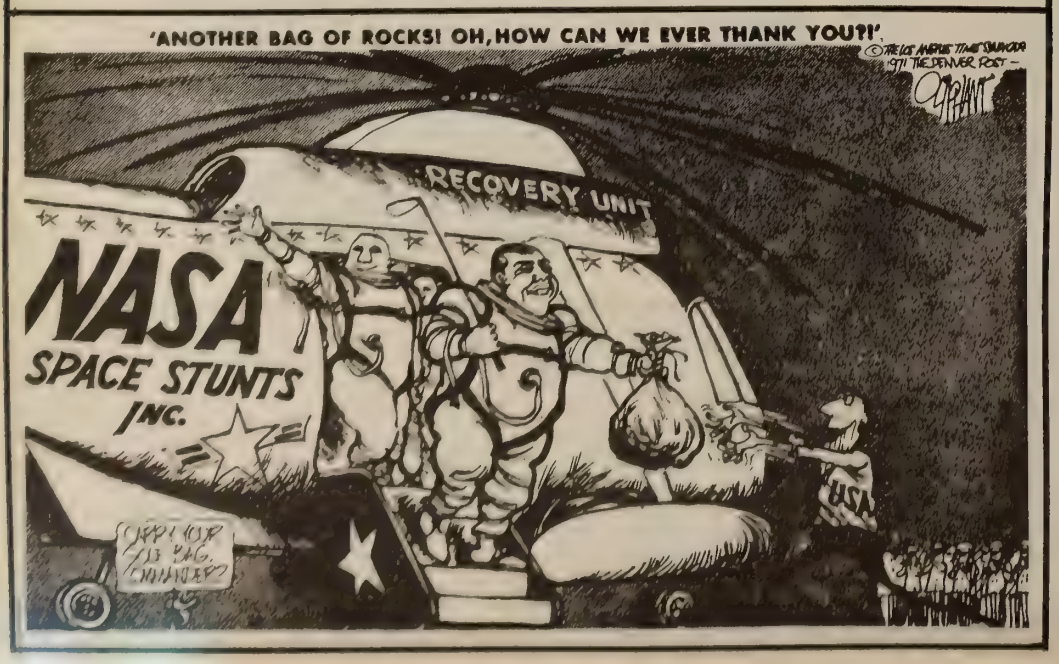
Beats U.S. rock-collecting

Canadian goal save world's villages

The other day President Richard Nixon bragged a bit about going to build a "space shuttle," a kind of celestial bus, which will cost American taxpayers $5.5 billion. It's another American first. A still little-known Canadian first is the International Development Research Centre whose president, Dr. William David Hopper, is a hard-headed agricultural economist. The centre is quietly aiming to help save the world's villages, where most of the people on earth still live. That makes its work more vital that Mr. Nixon's space bus, unless you believe moon rocks are worth more than people.

The research centre is Lester Pearson's infant and is about 15 months old. It spends its time looking into matters like peasant crops, fishing, and village industries. The main idea is to train up indigenous specialists who'll work with their own people to strengthen the centuries-old skills of local farmers, fisher folk and artisans, in Latin America, Asia and Africa. The centre would naturally like to believe that it may emulate such a brilliant breakthrough as the recent introduction to Asian peasants of new high-yield strains of rice and wheat, financed by the Rockefeller and Ford foundations. Even without that kind of breakthrough, however, the centre is firm in its faith that, by providing knowledge and helping people to help themselves, it can make a vital contribution to saving, from looming destruction, rural areas around the world. If those areas do go smash, the consequences will include large-scale famine and disease, and probably wars as well.



The centre is a public corporation; the people of Canada are its shareholders; the world's poor people are its clients. It expects to cost $6 or $8 million a year (Canada's total foreign aid is about $425 million annually.)

The Canadian shareholders could draw rich material dividends. For instance, current testing of various cold-weather grains may eventually turn up an alternative crop for our prairie farmers.

All such spin-offs will, of course, be welcome. But the centre's motivation remains aid for aid's sake; not for improved trade, or for military or diplomatic advantage, but to help people.

It seems as good an idea now as when Lester Pearson first thought of it. Better even than a space shuttle.

-(Toronto Star, Jan. 26, 1972)

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks this issue to Bob and Jennifer, Hildi who typed centre stuff and Chas who laid it.

Book review

You and the Law, Law, Law

"The law belongs to the people it governs, not just to the courts, the lawyers or the police. The courts, police and lawyers forget that often enough. So does everyone else."

-Law, Law, Law

by Bill Johnston

"An eminent doctor appearing before a Canadian judge once protested that it would be impossible for the lay mind to understand the particular medical situation involved in the case. Retorted the judge, who in relation to the medical profession was a layman, "I shall understand very well if you explain it in good English."

-Globe and Mail, Sept. 2, 1971

It is perhaps ironic that it should be a judge giving that piece of advice to the doctor, because, as a judge, he is also a member of a profession, the legal profession, which has long employed a complex form of jargon whose main effect, if not purpose, is to confuse laymen.

For reasons of both history and of professional status (a desire to preserve the position of lawyers as the only source of information on legal matters), legal writing generally employs a peculiar hybrid English (part Latin, part English, part convolution) which makes it extremely difficult for the average person to decipher in order that he may learn what his legal rights are.

Fortunately, a number of attempts have been made to overcome this problem, one of the most important of which has been the production of a number of books and pamphlets of law for the people, designed to make it possible for the average person to read the basic laws which he must follow. One example is a book called Law, Law, Law, published by the House of Anansi, written by Toronto lawyers Clayton Ruby and Paul Copeland and on sale at most bookstores for $1.25. Another is You and the Law, published by the Alma Mater Society, written by Mary Jane Mossman (while she was a law student here) and distributed free to students from the AMS office. Both are now in their third additions, having been expanded and-or revised since the first editions appeared in 1970.

Their purpose is ably summed up in the introduction to Law, Law, Law, "The law belongs to the people it governs, not just to the courts, the lawyers, or the police. The courts, police and lawyers forget that often enough. So does everyone else. This handbook spells out the mutual responsibilities that apply when you and the law get acquainted. Fair play may well prevail in these encounters, but it's much more likely if both sides understand the law."

The two books go through much of the same material, although the bigger Law, Law, Law contains information on certain types of law which You and the Law does not, at least not yet. Each covers a person's rights in meeting the police, including the laws relating to questioning and the types of questions which a person does not need to answer, and the laws relating to arrest, bail, search of a person and his residence, drug laws, liquor laws, and the problems relating to having a criminal record. However, although the same basic material is covered, there is a distinct difference in attitudes displayed by the authors. There is a definite note of distrust for some of those who enforce the law in Law, Law, Law. Ruby and Copeland comment that "law-abiding citizens of the middle-class should realize that there are law-abiding citizens of other classes and of certain minority groups . . . (who) have discovered, painfully, that law enforcement can express prejudices which have nothing to do with the law." None of this scepticism is found in the Mossman booklet, and it tends to make Law, Law, Law more interesting to read than the AMS publication, without interfering with the factual presentation.

Another, similar difference between the two books is that Ruby and Copeland make use of some sarcastic barbs to ridicule the more inane of our laws, particularily Ontario's peculiar liquor laws. An example: "Under the Ontario legislation, you are not permitted to transport a bottle of liquor - open or sealed- to a friend's house, whether as a gift or for a party. The friend may, however, journey to your domicile, there receive the liquor, and take it back to the party at his house. It is thus that the public's morals are safeguarded by the government of Ontario."

Both of these books are easy to read, and will give you a good idea of what your legal rights are in a number of common situations. In fact, they should probably be considered compulsory reading, especially for students who are more likely to be the subjects of police questioning and harassment than older, more straight-looking people. Neither are, of course, intended to replace lawyers (both, in fact, frequently recommend that you contact a lawyer if you are in any kind of trouble with the law) but will give you an idea of what to do until the lawyer can be reached.

Which of the books is better? The Ruby and Copeland book is a little more enjoyable to read, and is the more complete of the two, although the AMS publication will be revised again this spring or summer to add more information on areas not presently covered. Also, the AMS publication has been considered as good enough by student councils at other universities that nearly 30,000 copies have been sold outside of Queen's. And, of course, the Mossman booklet also has that advantage most dear to the hearts of students- it is free. The big disadvantage, at least at present, of the AMS booklet is that it does not cover Landlord-Tenant law.

Below is a brief summary of some of the areas covered in one or other or both of these books. Though such a summary can do little more than give you a hint of areas in which you may have had (or may be having) your legal rights violated, that is enough if it leads you to check these books or with a lawyer (or with the law students legal aid office) and you are able to correct the situation or avoid it in the future.

Generally, you never need to answer questions from a policeman unless 1) you are the driver of a car, in which case you must produce a driver's license (or give your correct name and address as identification) and automobile insurance card when asked; 2) if you are involved in a car accident which causes more than $200 damage, you must give police such information as is necessary for them to complete their report on the accident; and 3) if an officer asks you to justify your presence in the place where you are found, you must tell him what you are doing, or under particular circumstances, you might get charged with vagrancy. "Nothing" is not a good answer.

You can be picked up for vagrancy if you are found 1) wondering abroad, 2) with no apparent means of support (having a job, owning a car, having rent receipts to prove you pay rent, living with your parents or having money are evidence of possession of means of support), and 3) unable to justify your presence when asked to by a policeman. To be charged with vagrancy, you have to meet all three criterion. You can also be arrested for Vagrancy (B), which is panhandling and much easier for a policeman to get you on.

If arrested, you should give no information, except perhaps to assert that you are innocent. An officer, to arrest you, must tell you that you are under arrest- if you ask him- and he must tell you what you are being charged with- again, if you ask him. If you ask these questions and are not given an answer, you are justified in leaving, although it may be safer to go along with the policeman, making it evident to any people around that you are going against your will and asking them to leave their names at a certain place so that you can contact them later when you sue the officer for an unlawful arrest. If the officer touches you while making an unlawful arrest, he can also be charged with assault.

If an officer has a search warrant and appears at your door, do not let him in until you have seen the warrant and have assured yourself that it is for your address and for that day. A search warrant does not entitle an officer to search any persons in the building, although, if the warrant is issued under the Narcotic Control Act, he may search anyone found in the building.

The same applies with a Writ of Assistance, except that they are not issued for particular addresses or for particular dates, but are assigned to RCMP officers for the duration of their careers. The Narcotics Control Act gives officers with a Writ of Assistance the right to search persons found in a dwelling. Your ordinary rights regarding arrest and questioning by police are not changed by the simple fact that an officer has a Writ of Assistance or a search warrant.

If arrested and taken to the police station, you are allowed to make as many phone calls as are needed to contact a lawyer. You may have to ask to use the phone, however. You should also ask to be granted bail.

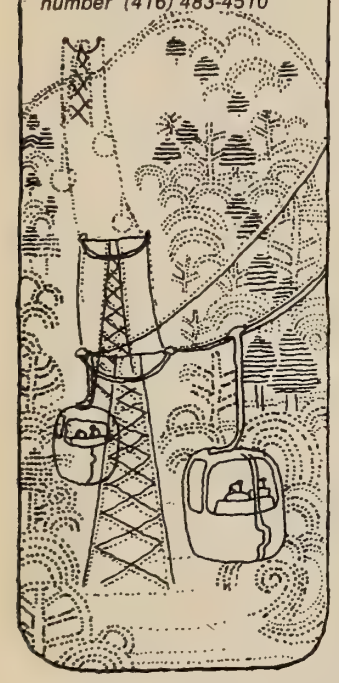
In seeking out a lawyer, you should apply to a legal aid office, which will issue a certificate for legal aid authorizing the lawyer of your choice (from a list which includes most of the lawyers in the province) to work for you, if your financial situation is such that you qualify for assistance. You should make sure that your lawyer is both competent and familiar with the area of law involved in your case. Also, if you think your lawyer has charged you too much, you may take your bill to the local Supreme Court office, where the bill will be 'taxed' (checked over) with the possibility that it will be reduced or left intact. It will not be raised.

Under the new Landlord Tenant Act, you, as a tenant, are protected in the following ways (among others.) If you fail to pay your rent, your landlord cannot lock you out of your apartment or seize your possessions, at least, not without a court order. A landlord must keep his rented premises in good repair so that they are fit for habitation and comply with the health and safety standards set by law. If he fails to do this, a tenant can make application to a court for authorization to make any repairs that are necessary, at the landlord's expense, or for an order that the landlord have such repairs made. A tenant may also be able to make necessary repairs himself and deduct the cost from his next rent payment, although a court may decide later that the repairs were unnecessary, in which case the tenant will have to pay.

Unless there is provision to the contrary in a lease, a landlord may not enter a rented premises without first giving written notice 24 hours before he plans to enter.

Regardless of the provisions of a lease, a landlord cannot forbid a tenant to sublet his apartment.

A tenant cannot be evicted from his apartment unless his landlord has given him a week's notice (if he pays by the week) or a month's notice (if he pays by the month.) In the latter case, for instance, you as tenant do not have to leave until a month after the next time you pay your rent if your landlord informs you tomorrow that you are evicted. (If you pay your rent tomorrow, you have exactly one month left in your place.)



A landlord cannot evict you for making too much noise, although if he gives you proper notice, he can evict you for no reason or any reason. If you have a lease for a fixed term, then you cannot be evicted for making noise unless that is provided for in the lease.

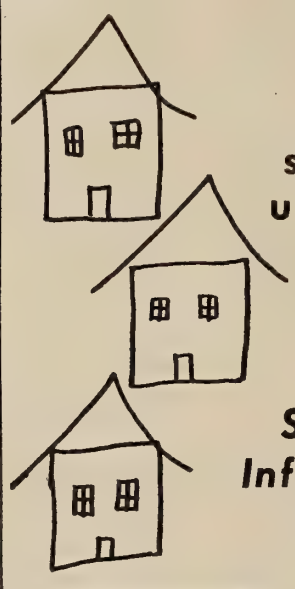
If you become aware that or suspect that you have venereal disease, you have a legal obligation to see a doctor to get treated and to not expose other people to any danger of infection. You can be jailed for up to a year for violating that provision. If a medical officer of health has reasonable grounds for believing that someone has been infected with VD, he can direct them to report to a physician, and failure to so report could result in the person being jailed for not less than seven days and not more than a year.

If you get convicted of any offence, even if you do not go to jail or if you get a suspended sentence, you will have a criminal record, which will prevent you from being allowed to enter certain professions and from working in, among other fields, the civil service.

Mont Ste-Anne

Skiing costs less and is more fun
MORE AND BETTER SKIING THAN EVER
8 INCHES OF FRESH SNOW ON A BASE OF 4 INCHES.
TOTAL: 12 INCHES
For free brochures and information, write to:
Mont Ste-Anne,
P.O. Box 40,
Beaupré,
Province of Québec
Toronto ski reports phone number (416) 483-4510

REMINDER



The second installment of fees due by January 31, 1972 can be paid in person at the Accountants' Office, Richardson Hall.

If you find it more convenient to mail your cheque to the Accountants' Office, please record your student number on the face of your cheque.

AWARENESS 72

is the People, Politics, Power, Poverty Symposium being held at Queen's from Feb. 1 - Feb. 17.

From Feb. 1 - Feb. 11, a set of Seven Films will be shown across campus on topics closely related to the discussions that will follow (Feb. 8 - Feb. 17). Films are FREE, and students are urged to attend. Details of Films, Times and Places will be forthcoming.

People must be willing to share ideas, speak up, attend meetings work to make the co-op worthwhile

Science 44 Co-op Information Pub Nite Monday: Jan 31

Career Seminar Series 1971 - 72

Alma Mater Society
and the
Career Planning & Placement Office
presents

CAREERS IN LAW

January 31st, 1972
Smaller Common Room
Students' Memorial Union
At 7:00 p.m.
GUEST SPEAKERS
Professor L. Robinson
Professor J. Johnson
Mr. B. McCashim (3rd year Law student)

This seminar is open to all students but will be of special interest to those in their first or second year

Faculty of Arts and Science

EXPERIMENTAL INTER SESSIONAL PROGRAMME

May 10 to June 23, 1972

Queen's University will offer an Experimental Intersession Program between May 10 and June 23, 1972. This program has been designed to make available a selection of both introductory and advanced degree courses offered by the Faculty of Arts and Science. Currently-registered intramural and extramural students at Queen's, and applicants who meet the admission requirements of the University and the Faculty, may register in up to two full courses within the Intersession Program

Biology
12-201 – Introduction to Genetics
Computing and Information Science
77-101+ – Introduction to Computing
77-102+ – Computer Organization and Programming I
Drama
75-240 – Introduction to Theatre Design
75-320 – Text Analysis
75-330 – Experimental Theatre Practice
Economics
77-210 – Modern Economic Theory
English
77-211 – Chaucer and the Middle Ages
77-221 – Renaissance Poetry and Prose
Film
34-310 – Fundamentals of Film Production
Geography
38-440 – Regional Geography of Latin America
History
46-260 – Canada from the Conquest to World War II
46-276 – Russia: The Quest for Social Justice
Mathematics
55-111 – An Introduction to Linear Algebra
55-162 – Probability and Statistics
55-323 – Complex Analysis
Politics
81-210 – Canadian Government and Politics
81-310+ – Canadian Federalism
81-423+ – Political Communication
Psychology
84-021 – Educational Psychology
84-100 – Principles of Psychology
Sociology
92-122 – Introduction to Sociology
92-274 – The Sociology of Deviant Behaviour
92-352 – Sociology of the Family

Term:
May 10 to June 20 (including Victoria Day)
June 22 and 23 – Examination Period
Class Timetable:
Classes in each full course will be two hours each day, 5 days each week
Classes in half courses (indicated above by an + after the course number) will be one hour each day, 5 days each week
Classes will be scheduled sometime between 8:00 A.M. and 10:00 P.M. Registrants will be asked to express a preference for morning, afternoon or evening
Registration
Registration, accompanied by a deposit fee, is required by January 31, 1972. This registration is most important since individual courses may not be offered if a minimum number of registrations is not received. Moreover, it is improbable that any student who attempts to register after that January 31 can be accepted, and in any such case, a late Registration Fee would apply. Certain courses also have a maximum enrolment limitation.
Students currently registered intramurally in any Faculty or School at Queen's should register through the Faculty of Arts and Science Office, 131 Union Street. All other students register through the Department of Extension, 25 Union Street, Kingston, Ontario.
Eligibility
Registrations will not be valid unless course eligibility requirements are met by May 10th, 1972. Students are not permitted to register for an intersession course similar or identical to a course already taken. Not more than two full courses may be taken during the Intersession. Students registering in two full courses may indicate two alternate selections. (For which no deposit fee is required) In case a first or second selection is withdrawn due to insufficient enrolment.
Fees

	Non-Refundable Deposit Fees (payable by January 31)	Course Fees (payable by May 10)
For each full course	$25.00	$115.00
For each half course	$12.50	$ 57.50

Note: Deposit fees will be deducted from the applicable Course Fees when final payment is made.

Deadline for applications is January 31

THE WHOLE NEW WORLD OF BANKING

Find out what it's all about. Pick up our brochure at your placement office.

Interviews
Feb. 1

Bank of Montreal
The First Canadian Bank

W.I.C. Jogathan Results

Placing		Total Laps
1-PHE		782
2-Arts '74		279
3-Nursing		189
Top Joggers
1-Pat Jamieson	PHE	440
2-Elise McIntyre	Arts '74	79
3-Barb Sedgewick	Comm	60
Debby Toaze	Arts '75	60
Patty Wren	PHE	60

The total number of laps run was 1,673. This converts to 209 miles.

Synchro Swimmers to Windsor

A twelve woman synchronized swim team is travelling to the Windsor sectional meet on January 28 and 29. Competition will consist of stunt work, solo, duet, and team routines. Queen's earned consistent firsts with their team routine last year, and tied for second in the finals. The girls will be competing for a spot in the finals this weekend.

CLASSIFIEDS

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

SINCE ELROND has been asked to extend its membership application deadline, that's what we've done. Be sure to get your application in soon so that we can contact you.

ELROND FOOD: in response to questions about eating arrangements in 12- and 6-man houses, box lunches will be offered and the Board of Directors will be considering making lunches optional.

LARGE HOUSE wanted for next year, urgent. Contact Pat 544-0475.

LOST: burgundy crocheted hat last Thursday night between Ellis and Union. Contact Daphne, 544-9019.

BITTER GROUNDS coffee house needs people to help run the place next year. If you are interested come to our meetings, Wednesday nights, Jackson Lounge, at 7:00 p.m.

SUNDAY SUPPER and panel discussion on Rhodesia. Supper will begin at 5:30 and cost $1 per person. Discussion will begin at 7:00 and feature Kenneth Mufuka (grad student from Rhodesia), Frank Okoh and others. These events will be held at 165 University Ave. (student affairs centre) rather than at International Centre as previously announced.

LOST: one ring, gold band, opal, 2 small rubies, great sentimental value. Call 544-8515.

ATTENTION SPCT Members: organizational meeting January 31, 9 pm in Carapace Hall auditorium. Bring your membership fee.

LOST: ladies black leather wallet. Finder phone 544-8061.

PRIVATE ROOM in apartment available with two others. Rent $60 a month starting February 1. Call 542-2041.

I DAVE HURLEY do hereby formally proclaim that Frank Murphy has more innate sagacity than I ever gave him credit for!

APARTMENT TO SUBLET from May 1 to September 1. One bedroom, large living room, 5 minutes from campus, 549-1482, $140 month.

FOUND ON SKI BUS (Whiteface trip), one pair warmup pants. Owner call 544-7158 or 544-8721.

HI-FI STEREO speakers sale. 1. Wharfedale Dovedale 5, 6 months old, 3 way system, teak finish. 2. Bookshelf speakers, coaxial air suspension, good bass response, 10x11x16 inches. 3. Altec Lansing 15" bass, super magnet, in enclosure (unfinished), bass guitar or stereo applications, call 544-3685.

HOCKEY GAELS BLOW CARLETON GAME 4-3

by Bruce McLeod

Queen's Golden Gaels played their second embarrassing hockey game in a row on Tuesday night, knuckling under to Carleton Ravens 4-3 in Ottawa. The win for Carleton ended an eight-game losing streak.

This was the same team that the Gaels humbled 13-1 only a week ago. Carleton wasn't any different as the Gaels' coach Bob Carnegie said, "They played ----- hockey; we just played ----ier.". Queen's looked dispirited from the start, and never really in the game. They were being beaten to the puck, and, what's worse, muscled off it. They were taking too long to shoot, and this, along with their poor positional play, lost them a lot of possible scoring chances. The defence, which had shown signs of improvement in past games, played its worst. Even the normally reliable Graham Closs was directly responsible for one Raven goal, and took a penalty in the final minute of play to kill the Gaels' chances of a meagre tie. Bob Smith was constantly being caught out of position. As in the game against Windsor, the defence was trying to stick-check the puck, and missing the man completely.

The Carleton offence was scarcely awesome, managing only 21 shots on Clyde Harris, but many of those forced Clyde to outstanding saves, as the Raven forwards were allowed plenty of freedom of action when they did get in close. All four Carleton goals were scored by players left untouched in front of the net. They finished the first period leading 2-0, as Steve Gross had a foolish pass right in front of his own net go off his skate to a Carleton forward, and Stu Lang failed in a desparation dive to prevent a passout to the Ravens' hustling captain Terry McCarthy, who made no mistake on a power play goal.

The Gaels showed some signs of life in the second period. They actually tied the game before the halfway mark, with Bruce Cameron potting his own rebound on a two-on-nothing break set up by Murray Douglas, and Clin Loudon's first goal, as he wheeled and fired a high backhand over the fallen goalie. But they couldn't sustain it, and before the end of the period, it was Carleton who scored again, getting a rebound after Clyde had made a series of close-in saves.

Again, at the end of the period, John Smith led the Gaels in some impressive hitting that seemed to portend good, but it was Carleton who scored what proved to be the winning goal within a minute of the third period. Colin Loudon, the only consistent scorer the Gaels have now, got his second by slapping the puck off a Carleton defender's skates at 8:46, but the Ravens managed to discourage any further ambitions with vigorous forechecking. The game ended on a note of total frustration.

The once-proud Queen's Golden Gaels evinced a complete lack of spirit in this game. They had no excuse of tiredness this time. The players didn't have enough pride in self and in the team to play well against even an inferior team. I don't think the problem is the loss of Morris Mott, as a player; although that has to make a difference, it shouldn't be that great. It's that they can't seem to convince themselves that they don't have to rely on him. The team needs a new spiritual leader, and so far none has been willing to emerge.

The Gaels, who could now have a record of 8-2-1, and a commanding hold over Laurentian in the fourth and final playoff spot, are 6-4-1, and looking over their shoulders. There aren't many easy games left, as Queen's must face powerful York twice, and Toronto, Laurentian and Ottawa again. Tomorrow afternoon it's York who have only lost once, 4-3 to Toronto, here for a 2:00 game. The Gaels must salvage from this at least their pride.

ST. ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Reverend Max V. Putnam, B.A., D.D., Minister
Christopher C. Hunt, ARCO, Director of Praise

10.00 a.m. Young Adult Bible Study
11.00 a.m. Morning Worship

7.00 p.m. Evening Worship
7.30 p.m. "Radio Ministry" CKLC

8.15 p.m. Youth Fellowship

TUESDAY, 7.30 p.m.
Bible Study

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15

16 POSITIONS

and they are open to any ASUS member

WE NEED
1 President and vice president (team)
1 secretary
1 treasurer
1 secretary
9 AMS reps
3 Senators (2 for 2 years)
3 Senators (1 for 1 year)

Nominations with 25 ASUS signatures and the candidate's acceptance, will be accepted by Marv Bloos, Nancy Hoey, Doug Donald or in the AMS Outer Office, until 7:00 pm, Sunday January 30, 1972. Call Doug for Information 542-5590.

Duplicating

In addition to its complete range of typing service, your on-campus typing service has a 3600 111 Xerox for long-run, 'presentation quality' copying, a 720 Xerox for short-run, quality copying, and Ditto copying facilities.

The Student Typing Service

STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

CONTACT LENSES

MARC F RAYMOND

CERTIFIED FITTER
By Appointment At
265 King St. E.
KINGSTON

Shorney OPTICIANS
542-1747

A HOUSE OF MANY MANSIONS

Science 44 Co-op
Information Pub Nite
Monday Jan 31

BACK PAGE

CANADA

MONTREAL - Pierre Vallieres walked the streets of Montreal openly Tuesday after 135 days in hiding as a fugitive and one night in jail after he surrendered to the police Monday.

Valliers, 34, appeared in court Tuesday morning, 15 hours after he had driven up in a taxi to the door of the Quebec Provincial detention centre and given himself up. He had been sought by police ever since he had jumped bail in early September and had gone underground.

Vallieres, charged with counselling a criminal act (kidnapping and murder), is released upon five conditions of behaviour and his promise to appear in court on March 6, when a date is to be set for his trial.

Vallieres indicated that he still believes that a socialist society is essential for Quebec and that the achievement of independence will be the catalyst that will bring about a socialist society. He also said that he now realizes that there will not be a socialist society without the liberation of women, that for there to be a free and egalitarian society, women must "live out their ideal and men must change."

MONTREAL - Police Chief Jacques Saulnier has been the subject of at least four disciplinary investigations since 1966, the Quebec Police Commission was told yesterday.

Senior officers of the city police force testified that, each time, Saulnier was cleared by former chief Jean-Paul Gilbert, who recently was appointed to the National Parole Board.

All but one document relating to the investigations have been removed from police files, the officers said. Some papers were destroyed in a space-saving cleanup and others were last reported in Gilbert's possession.

The single remaining report, introduced at yesterday's hearing, confirms an article in Le Devoir that led the Quebec government to order the inquiry.

HALIFAX - Nova Scotia Indians within three weeks will probably get exemption from provincial sales tax on goods purchased on federal reserves in the province.

Although the on-reserve exemption may soon take effect, the minister said the tax commission will continue to press for sales tax collection on other purchases.

WINNIPEG - Hydro-electric power developments in Northern Manitoba are sounding the death knell for the buried and mostly unstudied record of prehistoric man.

In the winter of 1975-76, Manitoba Hydro is scheduled to begin a low-level diversion of waters from Southern Indian Lake into the Nelson River.

This diversion, coupled with flow controls on Lake Winnipeg, will affect the natural history of an area the size of Nova Scotia, says Oscar Mallory, director of the Churchill Diversion Archeological Project.

"The long, varied and dynamic cultural history of Canada cannot be discovered and understood through the study of Grecian, Roman or Near Eastern ruins. Nor can it be gleaned from information accumulated in adjacent countries like the United States and Russia.

LONDON, Ont. - A family cannot be deprived of welfare because the man of the house refuses to work, the city council's social and community services committee ruled Monday.

The committee agreed with R.S. Pierce, director of social services, that welfare should be issued to familes of men who refuses to work because "there is no humane solution to the problem."

Pierce said excluding the man alone from welfare might lead to family hardship and possibly break up the family.

He said the approach to welfare "has changed drastically in the past few years and possibly we should be prepared to accept the fact that some individuals will not work.

"Some who refuse to go to work may have psychological problems that we're not equipped to assess."

OTTAWA - Government regulatory agencies don't do an adequate job of protecting the public interest because they tend to reflect the views of the industries they police, Justice Minister John Turner said Monday night.

For that reason, he said in an interview, he would like to see the government hire "public interest" lawyers to "represent the people—the traveller, the radio listener, the TV viewer, the consumer" at agency hearings of all kinds.

TORONTO - Brian Clow was back at work for the North York Board of Education Wednesday morning—as a teaching assistant with a research team at the board's Almore Annex building, near Downsview Airport.

Mr. Clow was offered the job by Kenneth Mawson, assistant director of education, Tuesday afternoon. The board had voted Monday night that Mr. Clow be given "professional non-classroom duties" until the end of this school year. It also decided to terminate his probationary contract next August unless he cannot find another job. In that case the board would employ the 25-year-old English teacher "in some capacity" until June, 1973.

Mr. Clow was suspended from Don Mills Collegiate Institute in October, after his conviction for possession of marijuana.

Mr. Clow will be paid the same salary he earned as a teacher—$10,100 annually—since he is under the same contract with the board.

He said he had no immediate plans to apply for a teaching position with another board for 1972-73, but he is worried about the evaluation procedures the North York administration will use to determine whether he will teach there next year.

OTTAWA - The final report of the LeDain drug inquiry commission will be issued as a series, with the first part—on the treatment of drug effects—available Wednesday.

The release ends a long period of uncertainty about when the report would appear. The five-man commission is headed by Gerald LeDain, the dean of Osgoode Hall Law School.

In June, 1970, the commission published a major interim report that recommended a general liberalization of Canada's drug laws but stopped short of recommending the legalization of marijuana or any other drugs.

Its final report was due last May, but Mr. LeDain several times asked for extensions of the deadline because the report was not ready.

TORONTO - Canada's greatest danger is not U.S. economic domination but our selfish internal squabbling, the chief spokesman for the Canadian manufacturing industry said Monday.

Gerard Filion of Montreal, president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, said in a speech prepared for delivery to a Canadian Club luncheon in the Royal York Hotel that the "road to Balkanization" is in sight.

THE WORLD

WASHINGTON - Consumer advocate Ralph Nader accused the Nixon Administration in a lawsuit filed Monday of unlawfully raising the federal price-support level for milk in return for $322,500 in contributions from the dairy industry to various Republican campaign committees.

The suit said that most of the receiving committees had been created covertly, with opaque or misleading names, to bank the milk money "for the renomination and-or re-election of the incumbent President, Richard M. Nixon."

The Nader suit charged that the price support increase—a reversal that followed by two weeks an Agriculture Department decision not to raise the milk subsidy—had been granted illegally in March, 1971, for "extraneous" political reasons and under "improper and unlawful influences."

The crucial "influence," which preceded by days or weeks a sudden outpouring of nearly a third of a million dollars in dairy industry contributions to the Republicans, was described in the suit as a White House meeting on March 23 at which President Nixon and former Secretary of Agriculture Clifford Hardin met a dozen dairy leaders.

WASHINGTON - Representative Shirley Chisholm (D, N.Y.) who on Tuesday announced her candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination, says she is smart enough to know she cannot win but feels she is uniquely suited as a power broker to assure that youth, women and blacks and other minorities have a voice in the party.

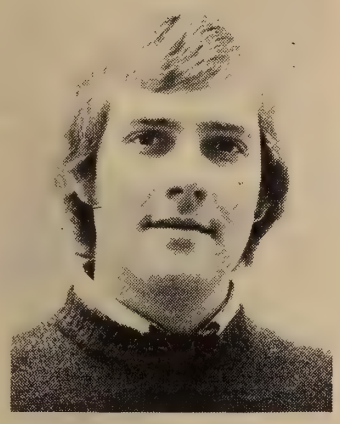
Mrs. Chisholm said she will enter four primaries—Florida, North Carolina, New York and California—and file delegate slates in a number of other districts in an effort to win the support to make her presence felt in Miami.

"I'm the underdog, the dark horse literally and figuratively. But I don't think the Democratic convention will ever be the same because Shirley Chisholm dared... people are interested in this new kind of voice in America."

As a woman and a black political leader, Mrs. Chisholm said, she sees herself as realization of the American dream.

PEKING - With less than four weeks to go before they receive President Richard Nixon, Chinese leaders have demonstrated that they continue to regard him with profound distrust.

An article carried by the New China News Agency Tuesday night poured scorn on the President for claiming that he is seeking to build a generation of peace, and accused him instead of pushing the United States into a competition with the Soviet Union for world domination.



The article, analyzing the State of the Union address and a companion message Mr. Nixon delivered to Congress last week, charged the President with uttering "empty promises" in an effort to deceive the U.S. people.

FOUR TEAMS RUN FOR PRESIDENT

Two teams of candidates for the AMS presidency and vice-presidency announced themselves Friday, bringing to four the number of teams who will appear on the ballot next week.

One team is Greg LeBlanc and Wally Palmer; the other is Michael Simpson and Anthony Layton.

Michael Simpson

Anthony Leyton

LeBlanc is a third year economics student who began at Queen's as a member of Science 73 and served on its executive. This year he is manager of the House of Commons and House of Lords (the student pub in the Union) and has supervised its expansion from one room, three nights a week, to two rooms and a much larger schedule of operation.

Palmer is a law representative to the AMS outer council; he has been on the executive of Law 73 and previously that of Science 70 (he was president when in third year). For the AMS, he is campus activities commissioner, the member of the inner council concerned with Snowball, homecoming, concerts, bands, athletics and the like.

A platform statement issued by LeBlanc and Palmer says the AMS should "be re-emphasized away from strictly services and concern itself more with the broader issues of education and awareness of Queen's students".

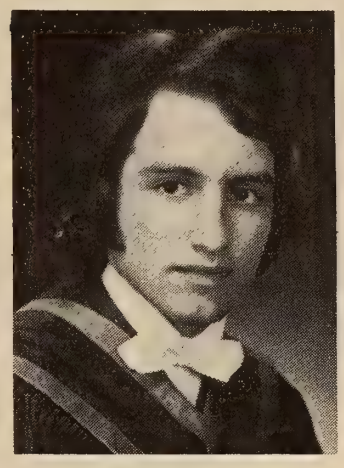
It puts emphasis on the proposed Queen's Student Agencies to manage services including the pub, and says QSA should also coordinate the hiring of students for jobs as AMS constables, in the library, and refereeing intramural sports.

"Job placement should be based on need and qualification -- not on favouritism," it says.

LeBlanc and Palmer say they favour expansion of the AMS education commission "to effectively broaden the scope of education from strictly academics to total awareness".

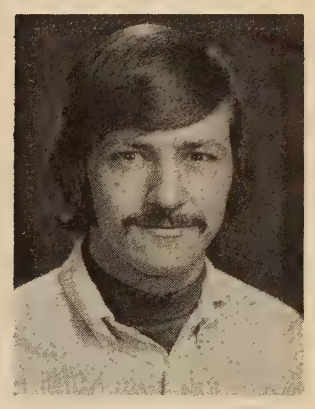
And, "the character of the AMS should not be limited to services, but should be an extension of the personalities of all the students of which it is made."

The other team, Simpson and Layton, have announced themselves as "the illogical campaign for the logical voter".



They favour "the establishment of free socialist enterprise characterized by competitive communes on campus".

They propose "the printing of Q-Bucks which will be fully refundable for Canadian dollars, as legal tender for AMS-sponsored functions, so that you can reveal your real preferences around campus".



The Simpson-Layton ticket also advocates "the creation of the Alma Mater Mutual fund, the profits from which shall be used to pay all AMS staff salaries, to lift the pressure of the fee burden from your shoulders".

Other promises include free multi-coloured rose-tinted glasses for all students; a World Hockey Association franchise for Kingston; new shoes for all standing committees; a pamphlet on how to trap, for those without fur coats; and "we promise not to know".

Simpson is a third-year economics student; Layton is in second-year philosophy. Both list as their qualifications, "Observational expertise; members of the Apathetic Anonymous at Queen's; socially registered; not over-qualified."

Greg LeBlanc

Wally Palmer

Two teams had previously announced that they would be candidates: Andy Jordan with James Bradley, and Victor Bradley with Marney Cousins.

Polling will be February 8 through 10, with an advance poll February 2.

Platforms and pictures of all candidates will appear in a special issue of The Journal Monday, February 7. That issue will also include the candidates in faculty society elections for arts and science, applied science, grad studies, commerce, rehab and nursing.

Notice to all candidates

Candidates in next week's elections are reminded to appear at the Journal office tomorrow night between 7 and 9:30 p.m. to have pictures taken. Each candidate should bring his platform statement (200 words maximum) at that time. Any candidate who cannot come must contact John Solman, 544-0401 or 547-3178, in advance.

Queen's Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 42 Tues., Feb. 1, 1972

Artsci candidates

Following is an unofficial list of candidates for the arts and science election next week.

For president and vice-president (team): Dave Armstrong with Mike McKelvey; Ted Cape with Barb Palk; Glenn Hall with Anna Alexander.

For secretary: Wendy McKeown.

For treasurer: Wil Kranenburg.

For senator (two-year): Guillaume Bissonnette, Rob MacKnight. (Two to be elected.)

For senator (one-year): Jim Chauvin, Stewart Searle.

For representative-at-large: Hildi Adelhelm, Terry Joyce, Terry Macli, Ian McIntyre, Clay Rubec, Ross Sutherland, Bruce Trotter, Roy Kirkpatrick, Jim Thompson, Anne Heffernan, Steve Sibold, Maureen New, Kathy Turner, Kathy McSweeney, Bill Kirby, Leslie Bankes. (Nine to be elected.)

Dropout rate at Queen's lower than last year

by Bob Mutrie

Queen's has not been seriously hit this year by mid-year dropouts. Up to the present, 161 students have withdrawn from Queen's -- compared with 171 in the same period last year.

These statistics reflect the calibre of students who come to Queen's, according to Rudy Ziola, assistant registrar for records. "Being a smaller university, we can apply higher standards and be more selective," he said.

While other small universities, such as Laurentian, are having serious problems with increasing numbers of withdrawals, Ziola said, Queen's is nearer to urban centres and so has more applications from which to choose students.

Registrar George Leech commented that Queen's enrollment has been fairly constant since last year, and that under normal conditions the number of withdrawals should not increase.

Dr. Albert P. Fell, associate dean (studies) of arts and science, said he was concerned with the actual number of students leaving Queen's. There have been 102 withdrawals in arts and science this year, compared with 112 last year, he said.

Fell said that more and more students are becoming disillusioned with the university system. The B.A. degree is not as useful as in the past, he said, and no longer guarantees a job. Many students, Fell went on, really don't know what they want when they decide to come to university, and plan to "sort themselves out" when they get here -- but fail.

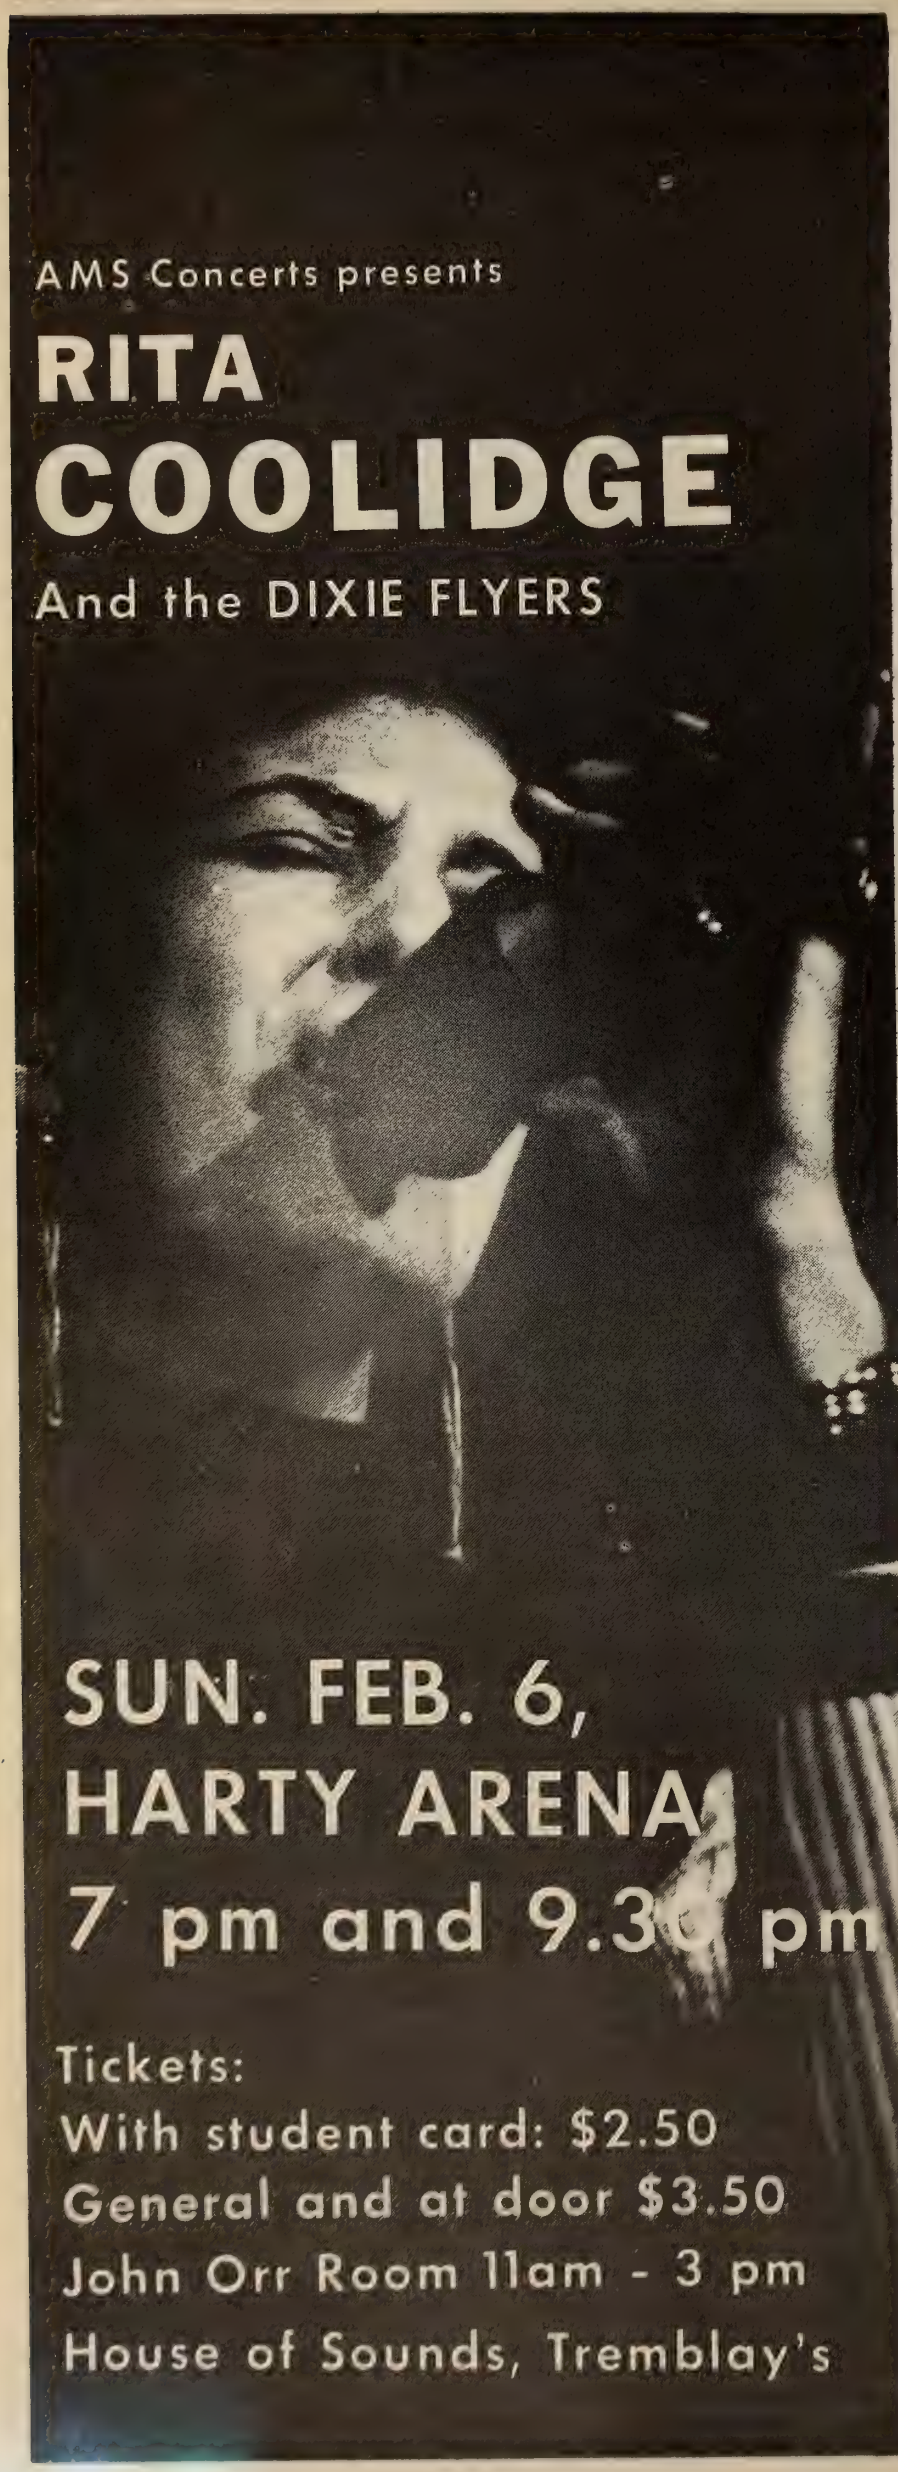
The arts and science office, Fell said, advises students who are unhappy with their courses to stop rather than to "plough through" something they have no use for.

Carl Lawrence, student advisor in the school of business, was more optomistic about withdrawal statistics.

"We encourage students to stay," he said, "by facilitating transfers to and from other faculties, or helping students to continue their degrees in more time if necessary."

The school of business, Lawrence said, has been able to keep withdrawals to a small number through the policy of "evaluating every student on an individual basis" and measuring every case on its own merit.

"Of 114 students registered in their second year of the degree programme last year, we now have 108 in this year's third year," Lawrence said.



R. F. Browne, administrative officer for the faculty of applied science, said he has concentrated on keeping withdrawals to a small number and helping potential withdrawals to complete their degrees instead.

"The faculty of applied science has maintained a flexible policy of accepting increasing numbers of students from the faculties of arts and science and commerce in mid-year," he said.

Browne said his office has recently adopted a new attitude toward students who fail at Christmas. The major aim, he said, is to "salvage a wasted year" for such students. Browne said he encourages students to drop weak courses, especially if the student does not need them.

"We have also developed a five-year degree programme for about fourteen first-year students this year," he said.

continued on page two

Dropouts, continued

Every applied science student, Browne said, is given a multiple-choice test at the beginning of the year on the basics needed for each course. This has helped to pinpoint students who may have trouble with their courses, he said.

The test this year made an accurate prediction of Christmas marks in three out of five cases, Browne said.

He added that he interviews personally every student who faces academic problems. There are also remedial tutorials financed by the university, Browne said, to help students raise their grades in many courses.

"We have been running this policy programme for two years now," Browne said, "and it has shown marked success in keeping the number of withdrawals low."

There were 33 withdrawals from the faculty of applied science this year, compared with 29 to this time last year.

Senate okays parking garage

Last Thursday's meeting of the Queen's University Senate resulted in the acceptance of a number of reports, completed and otherwise, and the approval of the underground parking garage beneath the Lower Campus field

The decision to approve the parking garage was reached with little discussion after R. J. Kennedy, Vice-principal (Administration), outlined the same information which has been made available to the AMS, the Faculty Association and the Alumni Association, all of which had previously expressed approval of the plan.

However, a note of caution was introduced by Dr. J. A. Bennett about the prices which will have to be paid for parking on the Queen's campus after the parking garage is completed. He indicated that the difference in parking fee between those parking underground and those parking on the street would have to be made small if the university is to expect anyone to want to pay to park underground, and he calculated that parking fees would probably have to increase from their present $80 per year to about $160. Kennedy commented that "he's right in the ballpark."

Kennedy added that, since the cost of the garage will be about $2 million, a charge of about $23 per month would have to be levied against those parking in the garage and around the new Health Science Complex that the garage is primarily designed to serve.

The underground parking proposal now needs only the approval of the Board of Trustees before implementation of it can begin.

An interim report from the Subcommittee on Course Evaluation was received by Senate. The Chairman of the committee, David Holden, a sociology professor, indicated that a full report cannot be made until replies from various letters the committee has sent out are received, and that, in any event, the full report will not be ready in time for its suggestions to be incorporated into the Arts and Science course guide, since work on that guide is now well under way.

Also received and approved for planning purposes was the latest set of Queen's enrollment projections, prepared by the Senate Committee on Academic Development. The fulltime projections, for the year 1977-78, for each faculty, are as follows: Arts and Science will increase from its present 4,025 to 4,460; Applied Science (undergraduate) from 1,349 to 1,470; Medicine from 272 to 289; Nursing from 124 to 230; Rehab Therapy from 112 to 180; Law from 388 to 400; Education from 640 to 900; Commerce from 535 to 530 (a decrease); M. BA. from 110 to 220; and Grads from 836 to 1,100. Total university full time enrollment will grow from the present 8,439 to 9,779.

Green zone most popular

Everybody wants to park in the same place: that, basically, was the conclusion of a study made in November by the university parking office. Results of the study were announced last week.

For a controlled period in November, holders of university parking permits were allowed to park wherever they wished, without the usual colour-zone restriction applying. The result was a concentration of cars in the green zone at the centre of the campus and an oversupply of empty spaces elsewhere, especially in the black (northeast) and orange (northwest) zones.

Part of the survey was carried on without use of the parking lot south of Miller Hall; it was available at the time but has now become a construction site, and the planners wanted to simulate conditions which would exist for some time.

During that part of the study, their report says, "the total number of available spaces was exceeded by the number of vehicles that parked in the green zone.

"In contrast, the black area experienced an average over-supply of 105 parking spaces, the orange area experienced an average over-supply of 100 spaces and the blue area experienced an average over-supply of 33 spaces."

The red, or west campus, area was not surveyed.

There are 266 black spaces, 316 orange ones, 220 blue ones, and 221 green ones.

About 70 percent of the cars which parked in the green zone (176 out of 257 on one day) held green permits; most of the rest held black ones.

The report states: "Colour permit interchanges in all but the green zone more or less nullify."

But, "the greatest significance appears between the black and the green zone with a net transfer of an average of 69.0 permits from the black zone to the green zone. The orange and blue zones contribute a net average of 13.7 and 6.0 permits to the green zone."

The report summarizes the advantages and disadvantages of changing from a zoned to a no-zone system, and concludes that the present system should be kept.

It is suggested, however, that more studies be carried on to look for other possible systems. One suggestion is a two-zone system: "The green zone could be denoted as a separate zone with all other colours as the second zone.

"It may further be possible to permit green permits to be valid in any colour zone and all other colour permits to be valid in all other colour zones except green."

Canadian jobs need trained Canadians, speakers say

by Rachel Edwards

Canadian universities for a new Canada was the topic of discussion at the second Snowball cultural event last Thursday. Two professors from Carleton University, James Steele and Antonio Gualtieri, presented their points of view on the de-Canadianization of Canadian universities.

Steele, an Associate Professor of English, is the co-author with Robin Mathews of the book The Americanization of Canadian Universities, which was published in 1968.

Gualtieri is an Associate Professor of Religion at Carleton, and is very much concerned with Canadian nationalism.

Steele began by outlining the factors that have led to the current situation in Canadian universities.

He said that the proportion of Canadian citizens teaching in Canadian universities has decreased in the last few years and is rapidly diminishing. In 1961, 75 percent of the professors were Canadian, but in 1971, the percentage of Canadians was only 61 percent.

The survey taken in 1971 is somewhat misleading though, he said, as it includes about 40 Bible Colleges and the part-time medical teachers in hospitals.

There are also many non-Canadians in graduate studies, especially at the PhD level, he said. About 50 percent of all PhD students are Canadian, but at the M.A. level the proportion is higher.

Steele said that Canadian graduate students face the toughest employment situation in the world. No other country tolerates foreign students to the extent that Canada does, he said, which provides stiff competition for Canadians seeking a job in their own country.

At the moment, the curriculum of Canadian schools is the biggest problem..The material being taught is not Canadian, and does not have a Canadian point of view, he pointed out.

He cited the case of his own children who are being taught from readers that are 90 percent American content. These readers are designed to condition children to the middle class, capitalistic ideas of the United States, he said.

In trying to determine how much time should be spent on Canadian studies, Dr. Steele did a survey of the calendars of two other universities.

He said that he discovered that at Harvard, Cambridge, and University College in Nairobi, Kenya, at least 30 percent to 40 percent of a student's time was spent on studies of his own country. He suggested that Canadians should be more inward looking, but not as much as Harvard or Cambridge.

Dr. Steele put forth some suggestions as to how the current problem should be solved. He said that the Economic Council of Canada should provide forecasts to indicate the number of new appointments in each discipline that are likely to be made and the number of Canadians who should be trained to fill these positions.

This material is available, he said, but the graduate schools must use it in order to ensure that there will be trained Canadians to fill the jobs.

Dr. Steele pointed out that many of the large multi-national corporations who contribute funds to the governments are against the training of Canadians to fill the jobs. For them if it is much cheaper to import people from the United States, where there is a large surplus of trained people already.

In closing, he said that if we want to remedy the present situation "we must exert very strong pressure indeed".

Dr. Gualtieri approached the problem of de-Canadianization from a philosophical and Christian point of view.

He suggested that it is important to know the history of one's country because "it is the arena in which God achieves redemptive purposes for mankind."

"Man needs society" he said, "We come into existence as part of an ethos and through this we decide our priorities." It is important to preserve this culture he said, because when you destroy a culture, you destroy the personality of a people.

He used as an example the Indians of the MacKenzie Valley who have had the white man's way of life thrust upon them. They are now faced with alcoholism, family breakdown, and promiscuity, he said.

"If you care for a people, you must care for the culture that has reared them," he said.

Dr. Gualtieri said that many critics of nationalism have taken delight in how cosmopolitan Canada is. Other critics have expressed the fear that Canadian nationalism would lead to the type of situation that existed in Nazi Germany.

Nationalism is subject to perversion, he said, but that is no reason to discard it. The fact that food is used for gluttony does not mean that we should stop eating, he pointed out.

Nationalism should be an affirmation of our heritage he said, not a narrow-minded statement that "we're better than you are"

In the discussion that followed, Dr. Steele pointed out that the Canada Council Act provides funds for scholarship in Canada, not for Canadian scholarship on Canadian problems and issues. Until this situation is changed, foreign students will receive funds for studies not related to the Canadian way of life.

"The Canadian community is unique in the world because they have been presiding over their own extinction", Dr. Steele said.

Dr. Gualtieri closed the discussion by saying, "All one can do is proclaim the word and hope that it will strike a responsive chord."

Trees planted, destroyed on campus

More trees are being planted on campus than are being cut down, despite the demolition of diseased elm trees, The Journal was told last week.

A spokesman for the Queen's department of physical plant said university staff have cut down 32 trees infested with Dutch elm disease. Such trees are quite dangerous, he pointed out, since they become quite brittle. They also infect other trees with a bark-beatle which spreads from tree to tree. Under Ontario law, such trees must be destroyed, he said.

Two maple trees which were rotten have also been removed, and some trees have been taken down at construction areas such as the site for the arts-social sciences complex, he said. But every tree cut down is replaced by at least one tree somewhere else on campus, he said.

He pointed particularly to an extensive tree-planting programme on the west campus. The new trees are twelve-year-old nursery trees, he said.

But the spokesman said he is disgusted to notice that of every 25 new trees planted, five or six are destroyed within a month -- not by weather, but by students.

Many of the trees being cut down around the campus are on city property, not that of the university, he said. Accordingly, they are cut down when necessary by city workers, not by the university.

It costs about $400 to remove a large tree, the spokesman said.

AMS ELECTION
ADVANCE POLL
For anyone who will not be able to vote during the regular polling peroid (Feb. 8, 9, 10).
WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY 2
DUNCAN McARTHUR HALL 12:30 pm - 4:30pm
Student Union (opposite coffee shop) 12 noon - 1:00 pm

BLOOD DRIVE
VICTORIA HALL BASEMENT
FEB. 1,2,3 11 am - 2 pm; 3 pm - 8 pm

SEX Information SERVICE

information available about:

The Pill
Other Birth Control Methods
Abortions
Adoption, Counselling

165 University

(2 doors behind the UNION)
3 -11 pm
547-2806
student staffed

The Science Formal

COMMITTEE IS NOW ACCEPTING IDEAS FOR NEXT YEARS SCIENCE FORMAL. SO SUBMIT AN IDEA...AND IF YOURS IS CHOSEN, YOU WILL WIN A CASE OF BEER.
SUBMIT IDEAS c-o CLARK HALL, ENGINEERING SOCIETY OFFICE.

LADIES ELECTROLYSIS

Avoid shaving, tweezing, or the use of dipilatories. Have your eyebrows styled and unwanted hair removed permanently by electrolysis. Physicians recommend our work. For a free consultation and information call

HARRISON SALON 542-5595

CASINO ROYALE RAFFLE

FIRST PRIZE: One glorious week in the Mecca of Nevada, Las Vegas, All Expenses paid, plus $500 to spend.

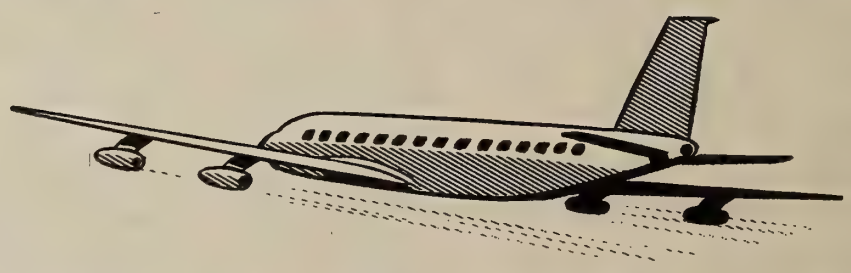
SECOND PRIZE: $300 stereo

THIRD PRIZE: 20 Albums of your choice

TICKETS $1.00
Available from any Commerce student in the Dunning Hall Foyer or meal lines

TOP COMMERCE SALESMAN will receive 4 26'ers of his choice.

DRAW FEB 11



IF YOU'RE A DUNCE ABOUT DIAMONDS WE'LL HELP YOU GET SMART

Don't feel stupid if you're dumb about diamonds. They're not your bag. But you can learn from us. We'll show you how excellence of clarity, cut and color decides the value of a diamond. How a fine diamond beams with brilliance. And we'll never be dunces and sell you a dull diamond.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

ONLY 45 PLACES LEFT

QUEEN'S READING WEEK, FEB. 19 - 27
(ASOC and AMS Travel)

FREEPORT, BAHAMAS
(Thirty Queen's Co-eds Can't Be Wrong)

- Roundtrip Air Canada DC-9; Free Bar
- 7 nights in Freeport Inn, 5 minutes from Casinos
- Double occupancy; kitchenettes available
- All transfers between airport and hotel; taxes; gratuities
- Free Bar for one hour each afternoon

$189.00

CONTACT AMS OFFICE IMMEDIATELY !!!

GOLF SCUBA DIVING TENNIS

WRC voting is Thursday

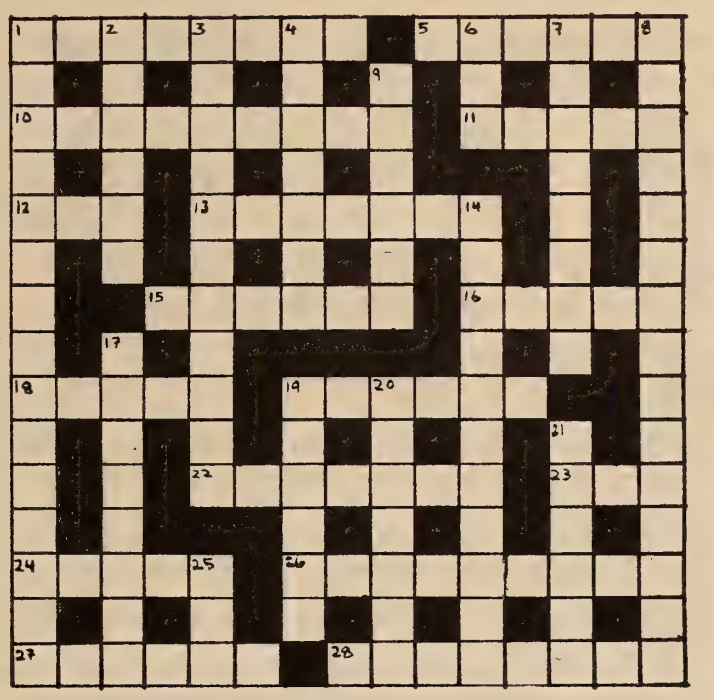
Elections will be held this week and next for the 1972-73 executive of the Women's Residence Council.

Voting is Thursday for a WRC chairman to succeed Cindy Davidson. There are two candidates: Pat Rae, a second-year sociology student who lives in Ban Righ Hall, and Kiloran German, second-year history student and proctor in Ban Righ Hall.

The other positions are to be filled next week. For the first time, there will be four block chairmen, rather than two, for Victoria Hall; a block chairman for Chown and one for Adelaide-Ban Righ will also be selected along with a WRC secretary-treasurer.

Topic is the Negro family

An American social historian described the development of the American Negro family to a small audience Thursday afternoon at Queen's.



Dr. Herbert Gutman said his comments were a summary of the work he has done so far on a book about Negro family development, particularly in the years immediately following the 1864 emancipation of the slaves.

He said the registrars of some southern states had been very helpful in answering such questions as how family situations differed between farm slaves and "elite" or household slaves. It was discovered that two-parent families were as abundant in the one class as in the other.

It was also found that younger Negroes modelled themselves after their parents rather than after their masters, Gutman said.

He noted that 48 per cent of couples maintained relationships lasting more than twenty years, despite the absence of any official ceremony, and that after emancipation almost all Negroes registered marriages even though about two out of every five individuals had known other relationships.

Journal crossword puzzle of the week

ACROSS
1. A little shade
5. Assistant to a rabbi
10. Gateposts
11. Pay money
12. Fish eggs
13. Place boats tie up
15. Period of communication with spirits
16. Intelligent (or, hurt)
18. Sound of a doorbell
19. Hunt for
22. Boat with triple oars
23. Necessary with reel
24. Edible intestines
26. Crude, like Evangeline's forest
27. The lone one rode a white horse
28. Cute expression on freshette (2 words)

DOWN
1. On the black market (3 words) words)
2. Smashed
3. Carrying over from one line of verse to another
4. Parody
6. Widely criticized organization
7. Utterly without alcohol
8. The Colours (4 words)
9. Property left in a will
14. Former ananuensis
17. Eyeball expansion
19. Scant
20. Western hemisphere
21. The Russian truth
25. Optic

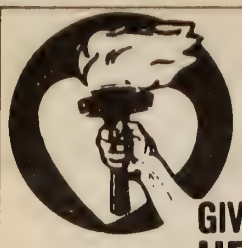
UBC Graduate Program
In Business Administration
(MBA, M.Sc., Ph.D.)

Students with a high second class standing who are interested in a career in business, government, or industry, are invited to apply to the Director of Graduate Studies, Faculty of Commerce and Business Administration, University of British Columbia, Vancouver 8, BC

A faculty representative will be on campus to discuss the programme with interested students on Thursday, February 3, 2:30 - 5:00 p.m., in Room 215, Dunning Hall.

UP TO 50% OFF - SPECIAL DISCOUNTS - HALF PRICE FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS

PLAYBOY		NEW REPUBLIC		ECONOMIST		MANCHESTER GUARDIAN
7 mos.	$ 6.00	NEW YORKER		1 yr.	$33.60	1 yr.	$12.00
1 yr.	$ 8.50	EBONY		TIME		READER'S DIGEST
2 yrs.	$16.00	1 yr.	$ 7.00	25 wks.	$ 2.97	1 yr.	$ 1.99
3 yrs.	$22.00	NEWSWEEK		1 yr.	$ 6.00	COMMENTARY
ESQUIRE		34 wks.	$ 4.75	2 yrs.	$12.00	HOROSCOPE
8 iss.	$ 3.00	1 yr.	$ 7.00	SPORTS ILLUSTRATED		PSYCHOLOGY TODAY
1 yr.	$ 4.33	2 yrs.	$14.00	1 yr.	$ 7.50	SKY DIVER
14 iss.	$ 5.00	U.S. NEWS & W.R.		APARTMENT IDEAS		1 yr.	$ 6.50
VOGUE		23 wks.	$ 2.75	ATLAS		ATLANTIC
SKIN DIVER		1 yr.	$ 6.00	BETTER HOMES & GARDENS		9 iss.	$ 4.00
1 yr.	$ 7.50	2 yrs.	$12.00	GOLF DIGEST		1 yr.	$ 5.25
COSMOPOLITAN		SATURDAY REVIEW		HOUSE & GARDEN		HOT ROD
CONSUMER REPORTS &		34 wks.	$ 4.00	VILLAGE VOICE		SEVENTEEN
CANADIAN CONSUMER		1 yr.	$ 6.00	1 yr.	$ 5.00	TRANS-ACTION
1 yr.	$10.00	2 yrs.	$12.00	RAMPARTS		1 yr.	$ 5.75
NURSING OUTLOOK		HARPERS MAGAZINE		8 iss.	$ 4.75	HOCKEY NEWS
1 yr.	$ 9.60	1 yr.	$ 4.25	1 yr.	$ 6.00	TV GUIDE
CAVALIER		BAZAAR		NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC		1 yr.	$ 6.00
1 yr.	$ 9.50	1 yr.	$ 6.25	1 yr.	$10.25	MECHANIX ILLUSTRATED
PENTHOUSE		CAR & DRIVER		GRADE TEACHER		1 yr.	$ 2.50
1 yr.	$ 8.00	HAIR DO & BEAUTY		1 yr.	$ 8.50	ROLLING STONE
2 yrs.	$14.00	MOD-POP PHOTOGRAPHY		CANADIAN FORUM		SWIMMING
CHATELAINE		MOTOR TREND		1 yr.	$ 2.50	1 yr.	$ 8.00
MACLEANS		SPORT				NEW STATESMAN
SATURDAY NIGHT		SUNSHINE				1 yr.	$17.00
1 yr.	$ 1.50	1 yr.	$ 3.50
CYCLE
LADIES HOME JOURNAL
McCALLS
SKI
1 yr.	$ 3.00
AMERICAN HOME
MODERN BRIDE
SKIING
1 yr.	$ 2.00
BRIDE'S MAGAZINE
GLAMOUR
MADEMOISELLE
REDBOOK
SKATING
1 yr.	$ 4.00



PLUS MANY, MANY MORE - JUST ASK. RATES SUBJECT TO CHANGE. CIRCLE CHOICES. ENCLOSE CHEQUE OR M.O. MAIL ORDER TO: L.C.C. INTERNATIONAL AGENCY, LTD. C.P.O. BOX 4, STN. "F", TORONTO 285, ONT.

NAME _____ (please print)
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ ZONE _____ PROV. _____
COLLEGE _____ Class Year _____
SIGNATURE _____
GIFT CARD MESSAGE _____

Career Seminar Series 1971 - 72
Alma Mater Society
and the Career Planning & Placement Office
presents
CAREERS IN COMPUTING
February 2nd, 1972, at 7:00 p.m.
in
Smaller Common Room
Students' Memorial Union
guest speaker

Mr. W. Jenkins
Director of Computing Centre
Queen's University

This seminar will be of interest for all students who are interested in eventually working in the computing field

Canadian Heart Foundation
ANNUAL FUND DRIVE

600 CANVASSERS REQUIRED FROM
QUEEN'S STUDENTS, KGH NURSES, HDH NURSES
FOR CANVASS OF KINGSTON

GIVE... so more will live
HEART FUND

FEBRUARY 6th, 1972
LEONARD DINING HALL
12:00 - 4:30 p.m.

AMS PROCLAMATION
ELECTION

Voting will take place on the following questions on February 8, 9 and 10, 1972 at times and places to be announced later. An advance poll will be held on Wed. Feb. 2 (see page 3).

Election of AMS president and vice-president (as a team). One of four teams must be chosen. The teams are: Victor Bradley and Marney Cousins; Andrew Jordan and James Bradley; Gregory LeBlanc and Wally Palmer; Michael Simpson and Anthony Layton. In each case the first name is the presidential candidate and the second the vice-presidential.

Four referenda are also to be decided. Each question must be answered yes or no and the results are binding on the AMS. All four questions concern non-academic fees and any change from the existing conditions as a result of the voting will automatically result in a bylaw change. The questions will be: (1) Shall the $3.00 concert fee be continued? (2) Shall the $4.00 Tricolor yearbook fee be continued? (3) Shall the university centre fee be raised from $5.00 to $10.00 for the Academic Years 1972 to 1975 inclusive at which time this fee will terminate? (4) Shall the AMS specific fee be raised from $6.50 to $9.00?

SKI CLUB SPONSORS:

Ski Mont. Ste Anne

Sunday Feb. 20, to Friday, Feb. 25, (Reading week)

Total Cost: $80.

(includes meals, accomodations, tows, return bus)

Tickets on sale in John Orr Room
Starting Tuesday, February 8, 7 p.m.

THE TRUE NORTH BLUEPRINT

a trilogy of plays by Louis Capson

Tues. Feb. 1: TO BECOME A DRUMMER
Wed. Feb. 2: I LOVE YOU BILLY STIKER
Thurs. Feb. 3: IN SEARCH OF THE LAST PARADIDDLE

performed by CREATION 2

GRANT HALL
QUEEN'S THEATRE

FEB. 1,2,3
8:30 p.m.

50¢ admission each night In conjunction with Festival '72

NOTICE

SNOW REMOVAL
QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
PARKING REGULATIONS

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY PARKING REGULATIONS STATE IN PART.

"FROM DECEMBER 1, 1971, TO MARCH 31, 1972 INCLUSIVE, VEHICLES PARKED ON THE CAMPUS BETWEEN MIDNIGHT AND 7.00 A.M. WILL BE TOWED AWAY IF THEY IMPEDE SNOW REMOVAL OPERATIONS"

Cabaret Is Coming

presented by
QUEEN'S MUSICAL THEATRE

FEB. 9-12, KCVI Aud. 8 p.m.

Tickets:
Students $1.50, others $2.00
at Union, Door, Music Dept.,
House of Sounds

FILMS

Awareness '72

A series on the Anatomy of Poverty Being shown Today Through February 11

See festival days or flyers around campus for exact times and dates

Alinsky Went to War
Best Damn Fiddler
Things I Cannot Change
World of One in Five
Time of Man
Earth and Mankind Series (6 films)

FREE ADMISSION

Chalmers Festival

By Jim Wilson

To too many churches, music consists of sleepy choirs on Sunday morning and art - well, maybe a few stained glass windows. This past weekend showed that at least one Kingston church is defiantly countering this principle. The Chalmer's Festival of Music and the Arts - held appropriately at Chalmer's Church - presented choral and instrumental concerts, on exhibition of modern and Eskimo art, a children's play and a screening of a number of films of local, domestic and foreign production.

The festival opened Friday night with a concert by the Chalmer's Choir. In works by Victoria, Kuhnau and Lenel they showed that a church choir can be moulded into an instrument of striking beauty. The person responsible was their director, David Cameron.

The motet and mass "Omagnum mysterium" by the Spaniard, Victoria, opened the concert. Interspersed with movements from a sonata for strings and continuo by Stradella, one was allowed to contemplate the mystery of the mass. Although marred by slight pitch difficulties, the work was presented with great effect.

Kuhnau, the composer of the next work, was the immediate predecessor of J.S. Bach at St. Thomas, Leipzig. Although this man's work has, in general more historical interest than musical, the cantata "Gott sei mir gnadig" shows that he was a man of no mean talent. It has been said that anyone can make great music come off, but a real musician can make any music great. The choir sang with majesty and precision. A fault (must we always find fault) lied not with the choir. From this listener's viewpoint the string accompaniment seemed inadequately prepared. A minor point - for they performed well nonetheless.

The last work on the programme was the song cycle, "Lord of Lyfe" by the modern Franco American composer Ludwig Lenel. Let it be said that this was the highlight of the evening.

On Saturday the festival continued with an organ recital by Mr. Cameron in works by Frescobaldi and his pupil Froberger, Kugnau and representatives of the period 1946-56. Mr. Cameron plays with dash and fire, one can forgive the few technical errors with such enthusiasm.

Perhaps at this point one can emphasize the most enjoyable aspect of all these concerts. These people enjoy their music - and this pleasure of making music was successfully transmitted to the audience. Here were concerts where the performers really cared - somewhat of a difference from many concerts one attends.

The first weekend of music concluded with a harpsichord recital by Brian Start. On an instrument of his own construction, he played works by Handel, Scarlatti and Haydn. The Handel and Scarlatti came off well and were played with sensitivity and style - two occasionally contradictory terms. The surprise of the evening came with the sonata by Haydn; whose work is not usually associated with the harpsichord. This succeeded well and one wishes that there were more opportunity to hear this composer on this instrument.

The festival, as mentioned above, also consisted of a showing of selections from the work of the young Kingstonian artist, Sharon MacLennan and also works of Eskimo sculpture from the collection of Dr. and Mrs. A.M. Bryans. These were shown after each of the concerts, and along with coffee made for an informality that was most appreciated.

A presentation of the childrens' play and the screening of a number of Quarry, N.F.B., and foreign films completed the programme for this busy weekend.

The festival continues next week in abbreviated form (the scheduled performance of Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas" has been postponed to some time in March) with a photographic exhibition and a folk service and concert.

For those who missed the first weekend - keep an eye out for "Dido" - it should be good.

Bars	Theatres
Pub - Ricky Day	Capitol - Billy Jack
Commodore - Sarofeer	Hyland - KamaSutra and Out of Touch
401 - Busted	Odeon - Carry On Henry.

* AWARENESS 72 *

is the People, Politics, Power, Poverty Symposium being held at Queen's from Feb. 1 - Feb. 17.

From Feb. 1 - Feb. 11, a set of Seven Films will be shown across campus on topics closely related to the discussions that will follow (Feb. 8 - Feb. 17). Films are FREE, and students are urged to attend. Details of Films, Times and Places will be forthcoming.

* *

festivaldays

Tuesday, February 1.

11.00 to 2.00 and 5.00 to 8.00 p.m.: Blood Drive in Victoria Hall basement.

3.30 p.m.: "Northern Ireland; Present and Future" by J. B. McCartney, Law prof., in Theatres D & E of Law School.

6.00 p.m.: Science '44 Co-op Coffee Hour. Drop in for a cup and view co-op living. 397 Brock St., 318 William St. or 128 Earl St.

6.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72: in Brockington main common room is "Alinsky Went to War" and "World of One in Five", and in Leonard recreation room is "Earth & Mankind Series" (1-3).

7.00 and 9.30 p.m.: Campus Movies presents Genesis II, entire showing in Dunning.

7.30 p.m.: Chronicles XII presents Strangers in the Studio Theatre. Tickets available at Queen's Drama Dept.

7.30 p.m.: Biology Society sponsors Linus Pauling on Science film, discussion afterwards. Earl Hall, room 114.

8.00 p.m.: AMS Annual Turkey Shoot. The quarry are the AMS hopefuls, and bloodhounds the Queen's Debating Union and the artillery assorted brands of mud. In the McLaughlin Room of the Union.

9.00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "If", in Ellis.

Wednesday, February 2.

11.00 to 2.00 and 5.00 to 8.00 p.m.: Blood Drive in Victoria Hall basement.

12.00 to 1.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness 72 presents "Earth and Mankind Series" No. 1 and "Best Damn Fiddler" in the International Centre.

2.00 to 5.00 p.m.: Faculty of Medicine presents a Symposium on "The Management of Pain" in Etherington Hall Aud.

5.30 to 6.30 p.m.: Information about co-op living available at Ban Righ and Leonard common room. Kids from Science '44 co-op will be there to talk with you.

6.00 p.m.: Science '44 Co-op Coffee Hour. See Tuesday.

6.30 to 8.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Alinsky Went to War" and "World of One in Five" in the main common of Brockington.

6.30 to 8.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Earth & Mankind Series" (4-6) in Leonard rec. room.

7.00 and 9.30 p.m.: Campus Movies presents Genesis II, entire showing, in Dunning Hall.

7.30 p.m.: Chronicles XII. See Tuesday.

7.30 p.m.: Symposium on International Affairs with students discussing current events of their countries of origin. Student Pub. Beer available.

8.00 to 8.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Man on the Assembly Line" in Leonard recreation room.

8.30 to 9.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Best Damn Fiddler" in the Red Room.

9.00 p.m.: Wine and Cheese Party presented by International Club in the Lower Lounge of the Centre. Tickets are $1.00, available from the Centre office or at the door.

Thursday, February 3.

11.00 to 2.00 and 5.00 to 8.00 p.m.: Blood Drive in Victoria Hall basement.

12.00 to 1.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Alinsky Went to War" and "Earth and Mankind Series" no. 2 in the International Centre.

4.30 p.m.: The Physics Dept. presents topics in Physics for undergraduates, a lecture by Prof. Sayer on "The New Semiconductors" in Stirling C.

6.00 p.m.: Science '44 Co-op Coffee Hour. See Tues.

7.00 and 9.30 p.m.: Campus Movie of the Week presents Genesis II, entire showing in Dunning.

7.00 p.m.: Bridge Club meets in the Seminar Room of the Computing Center.

7.30 p.m.: Queen's Mining Club presents mining orientation night for first year engineers in Nichol Hall.

7.30 p.m.: Medical Sciences Lecture Series presents "Non-Medical Drugs and Social Policy", by Dr. Heinz Lehmann, in Etherington Hall Aud.

7.30 and 9.00 p.m.: Chronicles XII. See Tuesday.

8.00 p.m.: Arts Festival presents poetry, music and drama in the Union, films in Dupuis.

8.00 p.m.: Scottish evening presented by The Art Centre and St. Andrew's Society featuring paintings, hospitality food, Highland and Country dancing, pipe music and bar.

8.30 to 9.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Best Damn' Fiddler" in the Red Room.

9.00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "The Letter", in Ellis.

Friday, February 4.

12.00 to 1.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness presents "Best Damn Fiddler" and "Earth & Mankind Series", no. 3, in the International Centre.

6.00 p.m.: Science '44 Co-op Coffee Hour. See Tues.

7.00 to 8.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "World of One in Five and "Things I Cannot Change" in Dunning Aud.

8.00 p.m.: Arts Festival. See Thursday.

8.30 p.m.: The African Night featuring the Otu Highlife W'Afrika Dance Band, the "African" Juju and Atilogu Troupe Dancers and The Talking Drum. Bar available. Dress is optional and all are welcome. Admission is $2.00 single and $3.00 per couple.

8.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Time of Man" in Dunning.

8.30 p.m.: Dance with Toby Foss in Leonard Hall. Tickets 50c in meal lines. Beer 3-$1.00.

FESTIVAL Artists bring art, photos for exhibit to 128 Earl St., or Mr. Saunder's Office, 1st floor union 9-5. Deadline is Wed, Feb. 3 at 5 p.m.

This Month at Agnes

February 1 - 15

A collection of very fine etchings by Canaletto, Piranesi and Tiepolo, circulated by the National Gallery of Canada. Views of Venice and its environment by Canaletto, prints from the Imaginary Prisons Series by Piranesi and from the Capricci and Scherzi Series by Tiepolo.

Februrary 3

12 Scottish Painters - this exhibition will show the highly individual style of each of the participating artists. There is no "School" of Scottish painting although most of the works are figurative, each in its own way.

Scottish evening at 8:00 - With the cooperation of the St. Andrew's Society of Kingston, the opening of the exhibition of 12 Scottish Painters will become an event of Scottish hospitality with pipe music, Highland and Country dancing, food and a bar.

February 6

Art Centre Concert - Randall Marsh, baritone and Margaret McLellan, pianist, will perform "Die Winterreise", a cycle of 24 songs by Franz Schubert in two parts, composed in 1827 to poems by W. Muller. This concert, about a rejected lover's lonely journey, will begin at 3 p.m.

The rest of the month's happenings will be printed later.

The de-Canadianization of Queen's

It is happening , and it can be stopped

By Bill Johnston

Canadian universities should, in themselves, be institutions of Canadian studies, James Steele, co-author with Robin Mathews of The Struggle for Canadian Universities, said here Thursday in commenting on the Canadian Studies programmes which many universities, including Queen's, are considering setting up.

To what extent is Queen's an institution of Canadian studies? There are many indications that this university is less than an ideal in this regard and that the de-Canadianization of Canadian universities, which Steele was speaking of Thursday, is a phenomenon which has not escaped Queen's as much as many people might like to think.

Today, roughly 52.5 per cent of the faculty members teaching Arts and Science courses here are Canadians (taking the country in which a person's first degree was received as being the country of which he or she is a citizen. This is, admittedly, a less than precise measure but since the administration has not volunteered any figures on faculty citizenship in the past two years, this measure will have to suffice. Judging by the administration figures on citizenship released two years ago, the country-of-first-degree method probably underestimates the percentage of Canadians by no more than 7 per cent.)

The percentage of non-Canadians is now about 47.5, with Americans making up 14.5 per cent of the faculty and non-Canadians from other countries making up about 33 per cent.

These figures represent a decline in the percentage of Canadians of about one per cent over the past three years. The increase in the percentage of Americans is about 2.25 over three years.

These figures indicate that, although Canadians constitute much less than an overwhelming majority in the Arts faculty here, the small decline in their numbers does not indicate that their position as a majority, overall, will be undermined, at least in the near future.

There are some other indications that this somewhat optimistic conclusion may be wrong. Hiring practices are one. Over the two year period 1968-69, 50 per cent of those hired were Canadians, and Canadians accounted for just over 52 per cent of the net change (professors hired minus professors who left) in the Arts faculty.

In hiring for the present academic year, the percentage of Canadians hired declined to just under 44 per cent, and Canadians accounted for only 35 per cent of the net increase in faculty. The net change in faculty between this year and last was only 23, while it was 107 for the earlier, two year period, but the figures nonetheless suggest that the hiring of Canadians is not an Arts faculty priority.

Another indication of the same thing is found in looking at the citizenship of department heads (again using the country-of-first-degree method.) Last year, 20 of the 31 departments in the Arts faculty had Canadian department heads, the other 11 being non-Canadian (and, incidentally, non-American.) With only three changes in department heads, the situation now looks quite different. Only 17 of the departments have Canadian department heads, and 14 have non-Canadians as head, one being an American.

(It has long been a recommendation of Mathews and Steele that all administration posts, from department head right through to chancellor, be open only to those holding Canadian citizenship. Their reason for this is that the Canadian government delegates certain legislative and juridical functions to universities, and thus persons exercising these functions (ie, the administrators) should have the same qualifications as voters.)

Moreover, while the majority of professors may be Canadian by first degree, the vast majority (over 75 per cent) received their most senio outside of C most detaile academic c teaching in thus likely t

and knowle
Arts faculty ticularly rel

The main faculty mem of subject m
will present
tention that related to th and, thus, t likely than teaching o to Canada.

...And now
History 339

This type itself felt
economics,
history, pol
these cours exists to Canadian.

Between of Canadia Queen's has 53.5 Seven to fill posit have non-C represent le
The perce between th department

To what e
Canadian c mined by e courses off often outda descriptions the followin course is ju Canadian p evident tha centrate on being consi department offered this

English (37
History (50
Economics (4
Art History (9
French (20)
Geography (3)
Politics (3)
Sociology (3

(Courses only if it problems o

At most, courses off
have Canad their study

Is this fig high? Since too much c

ees (MA's and PhD's) Since professors do their concentrated work of their it least before they begin ng for these degrees, it is major areas of interests the vast majority of the bers is in areas not par- Canada.

n over the citizenship of a ates, of course, to the type nd points of view he or she tures. It is Steele's con- on's citizenship is closely of work he or she will do, -Canadians are much less ns to have any interest in ching on material related in Canadian and American ct is most likely to make urses like art history, sh, French, geography, nd sociology, since it is in the greatest opportunity t material particularly r and last, the percentage ese eight departments at ed by two per cent, down to ent of those hired this year these eight departments s as heads, and Canadians 50 per cent in four of them. of Canadians decreased r and last in six of the o these departments offer ? This can only be deter- g calendar descriptions of which are, unfortunately, d - or are simply poor at is offered. Nonetheless, es can be arrived at, if a o be related to Canada or s if its description makes it course will focus or con- ian aspects of the problem (figures in brackets after are the number of courses

	Canadian courses		Canadian or N. Am. courses
	3	8.1 pct.	4	10.8 pct.
	10	20.0 pct.	10	20.0 pct.
	3	13.3 pct.	4	16.6 pct.
	1	5.3 pct.	1	5.3 pct.
	1	5.0 pct.	1	5.0 pct.
	1	3.0 pct.	4	12.1 pct.
	2	33.3 pct.	12	33.3 pct.
	3	10.6 pct.	5	17.9 pct.

cluded as North American rs likely that Canadian rial will be included.)

only 16.6 per cent of the these eight departments ations as a major focus of low? Or perhaps even too people would contend that ation on Canadian subjects would provide too narrow a focus of study, it might be worthwhile to look at the number of courses offered by other universities. In his speech last Thursday, Steele provided some figures for Harvard, Cambridge, and University College, in Kenya, the first two, at least, of which are hardly regarded as being parochial in their outlook. At Cambridge, about 50 per cent of courses taken in history are English history; 62 per cent of the required courses in Economics are on the economics of Britain; and 66 per cent of the literature studied in English is British. At Harvard, 25 per cent of the history courses are American; 50 per cent of the economics courses are specifically American; and 20 per cent of the English courses are on American literature. At University College, 66 per cent of the history taken is African, with many of the courses being Kenyan; 17 per cent of the economics courses deal with African problems; and 20 per cent of the literature taught is Kenyan.

Queen's, with its 20 per cent of history courses being Canadian, 13 per cent of economics courses dealing with Canadian problems, and eight per cent of its literature dealing with Canadian literature, thus falls below all three of these universities on all three subjects.

Moreover, one could graduate, with an honours degree from Queen's in history, sociology or politics without having taken more than one course dealing with Canada, and need never take a Canadian course in art history, economics, English, French, and geography to graduate, with an honours degree, from Queen's.

Canadianizing Queen's

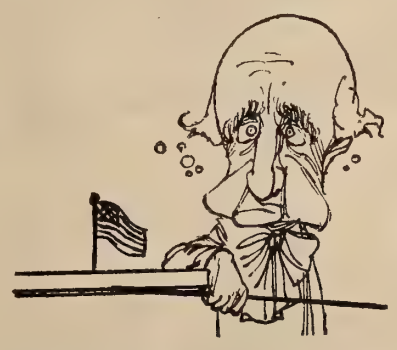
Given this situation, what can be done to improve Queen's as a Canadian university? The first thing that should be noted in this regard is that the administration does not seem to be particularly concerned about the problem of de-Canadianization or to have recognized that there is a problem. As noted

... havin' completed the 'Merican-half o' this course...

earlier, no figures on the citizenship of faculty members have been released by the administration since early 1969. (Such figures, broken down by department and faculty, should be published each year.)

The only apparent administration action seems to be a move to set up a Canadian studies programme. This move is said to be led by R. L. Watts, Dean of Arts, and thus, there is a fairly good chance of that such a programme will be set up. When created, a Canadian studies programme would allow students interested in Canada to take a cross section of Canadian courses from the various departments which offer them, instead of concentrating his study in one department.

Aside from its appearance as a minority group programme, similar to black studies programmes, which have the main purpose of allowing a university to say, in effect, "Well, that takes care of Canada; now let's get on with the important subjects," such a Canadian studies programme is limited in its impact to those already very interested in Canada. For them, it is a great idea (although only an extension of an arrangement already in existence for students taking history and politics), since it allows them the opportunity to more or less ignore the traditional departmental boundaries in pursuing knowledge of direct interest to them.



But such a programme does not even touch those who have little interest in things Canadian, or those who are primarily interested in only a particular field. These people can, as noted above, manage to graduate from this institution without ever gaining any more insight into this country than they came here with. For a Canadian university, this is clearly unacceptable.

The most apparent alternative is to make it compulsory for students taking majors or minors in departments which have courses in Canadian problems to take a certain minimum number of courses on Canada. Although the idea of increasing the number of compulsory courses is obviously repugnant to some professors here, such a move would not be without precedent here and certainly there are many precedents for such action in other places. Both the politics department and the history department explicitly require a person to take at least one Canadian course, whether he or she is taking a major or a minor in that department. In both those departments, this minimum number of Canadian courses could well be raised to four or five for those taking majors, and two or three in the minors. This would still be a less onerous requirement than that at Cambridge, which requires history majors to take all history courses first year, all of them English, and mostly English history second year.

For most of the rest of the departments, this idea would not work because there are, at least at present, just too few Canadian courses. It will thus be necessary to create new ones, a task which should not prove to be too formidable, given the amount of Canadian material still untapped.

The French department, for instance, has for several years listed two courses in Canadian literature in the calendar, while only offering one. Thus, at least a second course is possible there. A further Canadian English course could be created dealing only with French-Canadian literature (in translation.) A course on Indian and Eskimo culture could be encouraged in the department of sociology. Positive incentives could be employed to encourage the development of ideas for Canadian courses, and complaints about the lack of Canadian material should not be allowed to stop this, as it is part of a professors task not only to teach but also to search out the material in his field.

But before such a push for Canadian content could succeed, it will be necessary for the university to take steps to increase the proportion of Canadians teaching here. With the growth in the enrollment of the university slowing down, it is likely that the numbers of new faculty needed in the future will be less than in the past, it should be easier for Queen's to carry this out.

... We have one week left to cover the Canadian half...

However, it will take a conscious policy of hiring Canadians to increase the proportion of Canadians, because a number of forces are at work which may further weaken the already weak position of Canadian graduate students. One is that the percentage of non-Canadians in Canadian graduate schools is now about 50 per cent. Another is the slow down in hiring of American graduates, a slowdown which began in the United States even earlier than in Canada, and which means that there will continue to be a great number of non-Canadians seeking work at Canadian universities, at least some of whom will be applying in Canada simply because they cannot find work in the United States and who will return there to take the first good offer.

The challenge to be a Canadian university

It might be argued that all of the above suggestions are unwarranted because the problem of de-Canadianization just is not that much of a problem at Queen's. It is certainly true that Queen's is not, yet, in the bad position of many Canadian universities which are literally dominated by non-Canadians and, more particularly, Americans.

But it is exactly this fact which makes it possible that these measures might work here and which adds importance to their implementation. For Queen's has some excellent Canadian departments, and owes at least some part of its good reputation to its excellence in Canadian work. It is thus in the position of having something worth saving at the same time as it is able to do so. It could become a centre of Canadian work, if this were generally desired by those here.

Canadians have a unique contribution to make to the world - their own culture, heritage, history and nationality, which, if it is perhaps hard to define, is, nonetheless, different from any other and thus of value. By becoming a centre for the study of things Canadian, Queen's could thus make a contribution to both Canada and the world in producing graduates particularly knowledgeable in the field of Canadian work, and not just in economics, history, sociology, etc.

Alternatively, the smug assumption, in this regard, that things are o.k. at Queen's could help to ensure that Queen's will be just another competent North American university, with nothing in particular to distinguish it from other old, established institutions either north or south of the border.

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 42
Tuesday, February 1, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters:

Back to forced pregnancies?

Last Thursday an incident occurred in the Supreme Court which could set back the cause of women's civil rights 10 to 20 years. (See back page.) An injunction was granted which "temporarily" restrained a woman, on behalf of her husband and the "infant plaintiff" (i.e., the unborn child), from having an abortion. A temporary restraining order only prevents the respondent from acting until the matter is settled by trial, but seeing as the matter may take a year and a half to get to court, the order may as well be permanent.

Whether or not the woman had decided against the abortion (as the judge claimed) is beside the point. This injunction may give men the idea that they still have more control over a woman's rights than she has, and deny her access to rights that are legally hers.

The Association for the Review of Canadian Abortion Laws is highly critical of this ruling: "We are afraid that this will set a precedent whereby any husband, even if he is mentally unbalanced, could force a woman to bear an unwanted child." The Association is also critical of the persecuting lawyer, David Dehler, a member of Alliance for Life, an anti-abortion group. The national director of ARCAL noted that while Alliance for Life and other such groups feel that birth control education is a private matter and therefore do nothing about it, they are only too willing to make abortion matters public.

One of the peculiarities of this case is that a legal ruling was made which overturned a medical ruling which has been designated as being legal by the revised abortion laws. If this practice is going to continue why have medical boards to award therapeutic abortions (as few as they are) been set up? Just to have their expert opinions shunted aside by the courts?

Another peculiarity is that a ruling such as this, in effect, condemns a woman to unwanted pregnancy. The lawyer, Dehler, seems to think he has some sort of Messianic mission to become the "guardian" of all unborn infants 4 to 24 months old. Who guards the mothers of these unwanted children, or the children, after they are born? The Globe and Mail last year reported that childbeatings in New York City increased 500 percent between the years '66 and '70, and doubled again in the first fix months of '71. Childbeating is not restricted to New York City, I contend that it would have been better if those children had never been born.

I am beginning to think that obstetrics research could be put to good use discovering ways in which men could be outfitted so that they could become pregnant. Perhaps if Mr. Dehler and the judge who ordered the injunction had to go through several months of looking like the back of a bus and then being caged with 4 or 5 children for several years while all their training went to waste, they might have more sympathy with women with forced pregnancies.

Abortion is the least of many methods of birth control. Leaving aside any moral objections I might have against it, we must consider that it is surgery, and surgery entails risks of infection and even death. Better methods than even the Pill, with all its attendant negative side affects, must be made 100 percent available. Men have always dominated the research world. If they don't like abortions either, they should find better ways of preventing pregnancies. They made the laws that kept birth control information and devices from the people; they should change the laws. Until then they should quit being holier than thou.

Symbolic garbage?

Dear Sir;

On many occasions I have noticed "Queen's University" monogrammed on the garbage bags around campus. Is this just a simple waste of money or is there some deeper symbolic connection between this university and garbage?

-Michael Simpson,
Arts '73

Racist Variety on Ice

Dear Editors:

Boo Hoo to Snowball Variety Night on the Rocks!

This show displayed some of the fine talent we have on the Queen's campus, but one regrets the lack of good taste exhibited during the performance. I refer not to the use of profanities, which have almost become a part of our way of life, but to the deplorable lack of sensitivity exhibited in two 'Little Black Sambo' routines.

One realizes that most of that was said during the evening was in jest, but nonetheless one resents the use of the stereotypic image of the black man. First, the 'Coon', (a play of words on the name of the mistress of ceremonies) made the scene, all dressed up as an Aunt Jemima figure. Then came a black chorus which, although part of a satire on the religion of money, exhibited characteristics associated with the Negroes by Southern United States demagogues, namely sexual promiscuity and the Negro as simpleton.

What were the black members of our community thinking when they saw these slights on their people?

The 'prejudice' exhibited in the case of Snowball Variety Night was undoubtedly unintentional, but then one must think about the playful way stereotypic images are cast about in our society today. In the past men have suffered mainly because they could be labelled, and thus depersonalized.

The university community is above such things as were mentioned. If it is not, then one wonders where our so-called liberal, open-minded society is headed.

-Clifford Yanover

University responsibility

Dear Editors:

One can agree with most of the content of the letters of Professors Malcolmson and McLay in Friday's Journal, as I personally inclined to do, and yet feel that they have failed to face squarely the key issue of your December editorial. This asked what is the responsibility of the University as such.

Much of the discussion, of your editorial and of the abortive motion in the Arts and Science Faculty Board, like Baran's article and the letters of Malcolmson and McLay, deals with personal responsibility. I agree that, ultimately, this is of paramount importance in a healthy and sane society. However, this is not the issue which the motion of Professor Franks and myself sought to raise.

Professor McLay says that he fervently believes that it is "as important that all students at Queen's think seriously about the most crucial problems bearing on the survival of human beings as it is that all Maths Majors study calculus".

It is a simple fact that the regulations of this University require that all Maths Majors study calculus and, therefore, they do so. However, it is not apparent to me that all students and staff at Queen's are engaged in an equally well-informed discussion of the problems of conflict, pollution or poverty in our society. The University takes a clear stand on calculus. Should it do so on conflict, pollution and poverty?

Professor McLay has told us what measures he is opposed to. Is it not an obligation for him and like-minded members of the University to suggest the measures which the University as such should take to promote an informed discussion of these issues?

The alternative is to say that these issues are not of over-riding public concern and, in the spirit of the Protestant ethic, should be a matter merely of personal predilection.

John Coleman,
Head, Department of Mathematics.

Sure there are jobs

OTTAWA - As Prime Minister Trudeau said last week in Toronto, there ARE jobs available in Canada.

Last December 24, according to a Montreal Star article Saturday, the "government's own manpower department published its first study of job vacancies in Canada. It disclosed that there were 38,000 unfilled fulltime jobs available and 5,700 parttime or temporary jobs."

"There are 530,000 Canadians looking for work."

If all those unfilled jobs were taken, the unemployment rate would not even drop half a per cent.

'WELL, IF I WERE PREGNANT I CERTAINLY WOULDN'T HAVE AN ABORTION!'

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks this issue to Bob Mutrie, Rachael Edwards, Pat Spence, Pat Muldoon, Maureen New.

The poem "Island Journeys" was written by Robert Prince.

Middle East

Dear Editors:

After reading the article by Edmond Lehmann (January 14th) and the ensuing letters and editorial reply in your issue of January 25th, there are several points that I feel should be raised with regard to: 1) What appears a clear case of bad judgement, 2) what is probably an instance of journalistic irresponsibility, and 3) what may be a case of either crude insensitivity or calculated bigotry.

Your reply, with a passing nod at the complexity of the Middle East crisis and a caveat against oversimplification, goes on to do exactly the latter in your casual dismissal of Cruckshank's argument as "inaccurate" and your crude misunderstanding of the sensibilities behind Florence's and Galper's emotional letters.

A situation in which the 'facts' are not only complex but highly ambiguous in their import demands rather more cautiously reasoned judgement. Virtually no unbiased account of the Arab-Israel conflict exists and since the 'facts' can be interpreted to fit almost any position, an 'objective' judgement by any casual and relatively uninformed observer is difficult indeed.

The irresponsibility of your reply is in its smug and patronizing tone of editorial wisdom when your position and sources are so obviously partisan. Needless to say, a very different view of the Middle East emerges if you read Walter Laquer, James Parkes, and Theodore Draper rather than Wint, Calvocoressi, and Hutchinson.

The issue involved, however, goes deeper than the question of biased oversimplification of a grievous human tragedy under the guise of editorial judgement. Lehmann's article, whose substance you support, constituted a gross racist slander.

The 'facts' employed in that article were secondary to its main purpose: the maniuplation of a distorted Jewish stereotype to serve as the basis for the insinuation of a diabolical Jewish conspiracy threatening the world with nuclear holocaust. In so doing Mr. Lehmann has employed, with slight variations, two of the classic techniques of the modern anti-semitic propagandist.

The first is the belittling of Jewish history and belief .('The Dream of Abraham', etc.) so that the easily documented salience of Jerusalem and Israel to Jewish belief during the tortured 2000 year history of the Diaspora can be dismissed as little more than an offensive fiction invented by the Jews to advance their nefarious designs.

The second theme of Jewish conspiracy has a long and infamous history. The classic version of recent history has been the Protocols of the Elders of Zion, fabricated by the Czarist police as a justification for the Russian pogroms of the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

It also appears from the political right in a denunciation of 'Jewish' communism, and from the left in diatribes against 'Jewish' capitalism or 'Wall Street'. The intent of these stereotypes is to play upon fear and ignorance in a manner that contributes to the dehumanization of Jews as individuals and their reincarnation as diabolical and demonical monsters.

The development and use of these images and their role in the slaughter of Jews in both medieval and modern Europe is analysed at length in Norman Cohn's excellent Warrant for Genocide.

Criticism of the Israeli government and its policies is certainly the province of responsible journalism. As, I might add, is criticism of Arab governments and their policies. What is illegitimate is the condemnation of a whole people through the use of negatively charged stereotypes and innuendoes.

The trust of Lehmann's article is against Jews, not simply against Israel, and as such constitutes racist calumny rather than fair or informed criticism. To reinforce my point, let me note that the images used in Lehmann's piece are on the same order as an article on blacks that would use thinly veiled stereotypes of black inferiority and innuendoes about black sexuality and their rapacious desire for white woman.

If you would refrain from publishing an article of that sort, then there are reasonable grounds for questioning your decision to publish the Lehmann piece. By associating yourself with that article in your editorial reply you have become party to a gross insult to a portion of the community.

The depth of that insult is reflected in the anguished letters of Messrs. Florence and Galper which you dismiss with such insensitivity and lack of comprehension. Isolated as he is in the remote fastnesses of the prairies, where the outside world is only dimply perceived and poorly understood, Mr. Lehmann's callousness and ignorance can perhaps be understood.

No such excuses can be made in this ostensibly more cosmopolitan and sophisticated setting. If you have unwittingly involved yourselves in Lehmann's anti-semetic slur, then an apology seems clearly in order.

If the offence was consciously intended then it would perhaps be better to admit it so that the community will know where you stand and be able to judge accordingly.

Bruce J. Berman

(Ed. note: No doubt the decision to run Lehmann's article was a mistake, which made our attempt to justify it difficult. We intended simply to point out that Lehmann's facts were not entirely wrong. Being anti-Jewish is not one of our faults, in spite of your suggestion, though we are less than enamoured with the Israeli government or state.)

Canada - virgin or rapist

By Richard Osler

"The belief, that social and political development will inevitably follow economic development, even in a colonial situation, is perhaps not so naive as disingenuous."

Dimension, August '71.

The above quote raises the key issue in looking at Canada's position in regard to foreign economic development and investment in the under-developed nations of the world. Canada has long advertised herself as a chaste young nation full of piety and knightly actions. Canada, the peace worker, Canada the panacea and good samaritan. With this image in mind one can hear the self-righteously indignant tone of Canadians demanding their economic freedom from the United States and condemning our southerly neighbour for their rapacious attitude towards us.

This emotional cant is all very well until one examines virgin Canada and discovers that she is not so chaste after all, and that we too exhibit nasty traits which have tarnished our Cinderella image in the eyes of many nations in the world.

Canada too owns substantial interests in foreign countries and Canada too is exploiting countries in the name of economic development and in the guise of a conescending Good Samaritan trying to aid her neighbours. As a Colombian newspaper puts it so aptly, "Canada is hypocritical. They pretend to be generous when they give foreign aid to under-developed peoples when their main aim is to stimulate their own economy. When Colombians repay the loan ($15,000,000 to construct the Alto Anchicaya Hydro Electric Dam) they will have paid with their own money to create jobs for Canadians, not for Colombians."

In looking at Canada's main areas of investment and control in the world, which primarily include the Caribean and African countries, one must go beyond the scope of "naivety" and suggest a convenient myopia which enables Canada to show two different faces to the world, each blithely ignorant of the other. However, due to violent reactions by people's fighting Canadian domination, especially in the Caribbean, we are becoming aware of the Dr. Jeckyl aspect of Canada that has previously been so well concealed.

The Carribean region gives the most cogent insight into the harmful effects of Canadian foreign investment and control. Even with our magnificent aid and economic help unemployment ranges from 12 to 25 percent and 20 percent of the work force work less than 32 hours a week. The truth is that this region, with its many economic concessions to industry is ideal for industrial profit margins created by using labour-saving-machines, and paying ridiculously low wages. All too often the companies making a killing feel no economic or social responsibility for the country they are working in. For example, the bauxite and aluminium mined in Jamaica and Guyana and turned by the Canadian aluminium industry into finished aluminium contributes, for every dollar of finished aluminium, 83 cents to the Gross National Product of Canada and 17 cents to that of the Caribbean.

Another company, Cooper Canada, set up a Barbados subsidiary which enjoys duty-free imports and a ten-year tax holiday. They were able to produce pairs of hockey gloves, for 35 cents a pair, which would cost $1.40 to make in Canada.

Canadian banks controlling 85 percent of the banking in the region and Canadian insurance companies controlling 70 percent of the area's businesses also have the annoying habit of using West Indian savings for Canadian projects.

Canada's nice position in the Caribbean is hidden "behind a smokescreen of good corporate citizenship and more jobs" as seen in the Department of Industry, Trade, and Commerce, Foreign Trade magazine which might as well be a 'guide for painless exploitation at only cents a day.' Below are some typical comments from this vapid journal whose political and social naivety is frightening. "Canadian Aid in Jamaica is increasing and Canadian exporters can participate profitably in this programme and at the same time make a meaningful contribution to Jamaican development (?)" (Question mark mine.) "Canadian Aid to the Caribbean Region is the highest per capita compared with all other areas of the world. This coupled with the traditional affinity of Canada for the Caribbean and its proximity, makes it a logical area for Canadian firms to seek business."

Canadian Aid therefore seems geared to helping Canadian companies strike it rich and to teaching them how to unwittingly engender a social backlash of the nature already in incipient stages that will abruptly curb such naivety and myopia as seen in Foreign Trade Magazine.

Even grand hotels, 13 of which are owned by Canadians, help maintain this parasitic relationship by importing large amounts of food geared for North American taste buds and by importing building materials so that 40 percent of tourist profits are used in import costs. The tragedy is that these imports could be developed easily in the Caribbean if foreign aid monys were used to the advantage of the recipient and not the giver, who wishes to keep under-developed countries underdeveloped.

As one Canadian magazine says, "Foreign investment leading to control of sections of the economy may exacerbate the very problem of unemployment that it was invited to cure." This is what Canada wants to happen in the Caribbean and we wonder why Trinidadians had the cheek to throw bricks through Bank of Nova Scotia windows.

Another flaw in Canada's Big Brother image is that of Canadian industrialists Oakes Taylor and now K.C. Irving who have set up paradise down in the Caribbean to escape Canadian taxes. These 500,000 to 750,000 dollar homes look totally incongruous as they overlook the metal and mud shacks the natives live in. One wonders where Canada's 500 millions in investment and aid has gone. It is certainly not hard to guess. It is hard to help an economy if a company pays token wages, no taxes, no duties, exports all its profits and products and uses native tax money to build its road and service conveniences.

On top of company rape of the Islands as seen by Alcan's plant operations and control of 48,000 acres of Jamaican land by Falconbridges' $195,000,000 investment in the Dominican Republic, individual abuses are icing on the cake. In Jamaica alone individual Canadians own 8,000 of its developable acres; Canadians own big housing developments where the average house costs $700,000; and Canadians plan to build a city of 100,000 beside Nassau to include five 'necessary' golf courses and a 'necessary' resort hotel.

What does our government think about this? If its actions are any indication, our policy is not so benign as it appears in Foreign Trade Magazine. One salient example was the coincidence of 850 Canadian troops landing in mountainous Jamaica for tropical training manouevres just after the riots at Sir George in protest of Canadian racism. The Cinderella image is getting fairly dim. It is a situation which, as stated in Last Post, "differs little from colonial slavery in which the source of wealth is foreign and white, the source of labour, local and black."

At the moment the Caribbean stands docile, an economic paradise whose over 20 large companies including Seagram's Distillery, Bata Shoes, and Salada Foods, help develop, in a magnanimous manner, the Caribbean economy. It is a credulous claim dramatically belied by all available facts. If aid consists of the sale of resources to foreign investors instead of the development of a cadre of native-owned and run businesses, then we are aiding the Caribbean region magnificently.

Soon more than windows and computer centres will be destroyed if Canada and Canadians don't peep out from behind their mask of indifferent virgin saintliness and rectify an intolerable situation. By comparison the Americans in Canada look like saints (which they most definitely are not.)

The refined Canadian tourist is rapidly growing into our perjorative image of American tourists, and as Last Post comments, the day is coming when the nice Canadian who wouldn't hurt a soul except to fill his own pockets will find his "jolly larks disturbed by the smell of gunfire.

Classifieds

AVAILABLE IMMEDIATELY, 2 bedroom townhouse, stove, frig, clothes dryer included. Lease available for next year. Phone 544-5427 or 544-4548.

BEAUTY ON blades: does age matter? If yes, forget it. If no, RSVP 544-7107. Runner.

TONIGHT, Tuesday, Feb. 1 at 8.00, there will be a meeting for the campaign organization of the LeBLanc-Palmer mobilization team in the small 2nd floor common room of the Union. We care. Do you? Help make your student government work for you.

REWARD $20 for anyone who finds us a 5 or more bedroom house for next year. Phone 544-7032 or 544-7044 any time.

WE would like to acclaim Miss Nancy Brandt, more popularly known as Brandy, as Miss Snowball Queen 1972.

SCIENCE 44 Co-op coffee hour, 6.00 nightly. Anyone welcome to drop in for a visit at 397 Brock St., 318 William or 128 Earl St.

WANTED: 4 or 5 bedroom apartment. Willing to sublet during summer months. Call 544-5432.

LOST: at wine and cheese party, Grant Hall, right brown rubber boot, name inside. Call Brian Judge 546-9515.

FOR SALE: Sony TC122 stereo cassette tape deck with two F98 mikes $130. Sansui SS2 stereo headphones $22. 63 Austin "Mini" as is $250. Phone 549-2521 or 544-1571.

JUNK: save it for Festival 72 collage. Broken glass, tin cans, magazines, t.p. rolls, cardboard tubes, material scraps, eggshells, any interesting junk welcome. Leave before Feb. 3 at 128 Earl Street or in Polson Room boxes.

FOUND: a suede purse at Grad House Friday, Jan. 28. Owner call Mrs. Oran 549-0705 and identify.

GIRLS desperately need five-bedroom house for next year. Call Suzette or Sharon at 544-8556 or Marilyn at 544-8419.

Baha'i firesides every Thursday 8.00 p.m., upper meeting room, international centre.

THE ECUMENICAL Institute - The Toronto region is holding a weekend course in Existential Christianity in Kingston February 11-13. Further information and applications call Ray Baumgart: 542-9289. Costs subsidized by A.S.U.S. Other Events Committee

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

INTERLUDE

Arts & Science Formal
To be held at the Holiday Inn
Saturday , February Twelfth
Nine to One
Refreshments
The Bob Ayre Orchestra

Eight Dollars per Couple
Tickets go on sale in
John Orr Room
January 31

Science 44 Co-op Open House Sat. Feb. Fifth

A co-op belongs to the people who use it. These customer-owners set the policies, control the business, sharing this control equally.

Graduate Student Society
ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

Feb. 1st 8:00 pm
Grad. House, 157 King St., E.
COME AND HEAR WHAT THE G.S.S. HAS BEEN DOING- A FREE BEER FOR FIRST HUNDRED PEOPLE.

NOMINATIONS for President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, A.M.S. Reps. (3) will close at this meeting.

All Graduate Students Are Urged To Attend.

QUEEN'S SKI CLUB SPONSORS:

Ski Edelweiss

(Day and Night Skiing)

COST $7.50 (day tow and bus , nite tow $1.50 extra)

Tickets; John Orr Room, Thurs.Feb. 3, 7 p.m.

Bus leaves Vic at 6:30 a.m.

Thesis and Essay Typing

Your on-campus typing service can fulfil all of your typing needs quickly and at competitive prices. Xerox and Ditto duplicating is also available for your convience.

The Student Typing Service

STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

TRANSCENDENTAL MEDITATION

AS TAUGHT BY

MAHARISHI MAHESH YOGI

Transcendental meditation is a natural spontaneous technique which allows each individual to expand his mind and improve all aspects of his life.

Introductory Lecture
By Gregg Wilson
Wednesday, February 2, 8:30 p.m.
Stirling Hall — Room 412C
Students' International Meditation Society of Queen's University
For further info — 542-4693

AFRICA NIGHT

Presented By African Club

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4, at 8:00 p.m.
grant hall
DIRECT FROM AFRICA OTU W"AFRICA DANCE BAND
TROUPE DANCERS: JUJU, ETILOGN
BAR AVAILABLE
TICKETS: $2.00 person
$3.00 Couple
AVAILABLE FROM INTERNATIONAL CENTRE OFFICE

The AMS and the International Clubs Present:

A SYMPOSIUM ON CURRENT ISSUES OF INTERNATIONAL INTEREST

- What is happening in Rhodesia
- Could Muiubur accept Butho's offer
- And a couple more

All in 90 minutes or less!
BY students from where it is happening
When: Wed. Feb 2; 7:30 - 9:00
Where: Queen's Pub
What else: BEER!!!!

CHAIRMAN: ANDY JORDAN

Gaels stun Blues with 50 point comeback

After 20 minutes of Saturday night's contest with a surprising U. of T. squad, things looked bleak, to say the least. The Gaels had hit on just 6 of 34 shots from the field, and owned the short half of a 28-16 score.

Besides, the whole team looked (and was playing) like some body had slipped a stiff shot of Librium into the water bottle. They were, to coin a phrase, lethargic. Only some quasi-inspired defense (and some Toronto turnovers) kept the margin down to 12 points.

—boon

Peter Gordon-16 pt. second half

Offensively, the Gaels appeared baffled by Varsity's 2-1-2-zone, which was very effective in keeping forward Andy Daugulis and centreman Paul Howard away from the hoop, and could not buy an outside shot, from anybody. About the only thing Queen's did not do was get into foul trouble, for a change.

Fortunately, whatever hex had been cast on the team wore off at half-time. What appeared to be an entirely new squad started the second half, playing a tough, ball-hawking zone defense, and shooting, would you believe, 60 percent from the floor.

Peter Gordon pumped in 16 points, mostly on 25-to-30 foot jumpers that started to loosen up that T.O. zone. Daugulis got hot, with 18 points, mixing outside shots with some fine work underneath as gaps started to show in close.

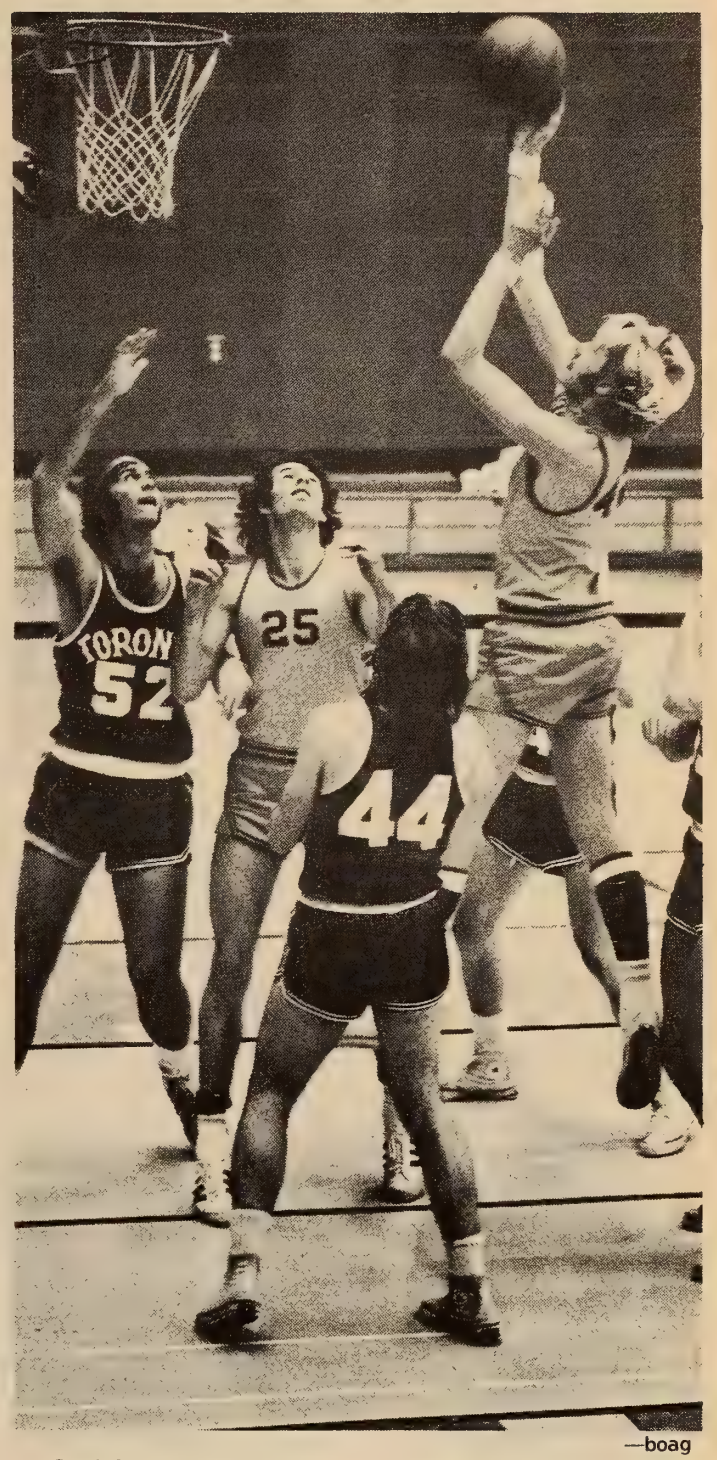
Paul Howard moved out to a high post, and added 14 points, mostly on feather 20-footers that led one observer to comment that "if the Gaels had a centre, Howard would be a great forward." (Actually, he's not a bad centre, either.)

In addition to much improved shooting, the Gaels started to hustle on defense. Guards Peter Gordon, Dave Smith and Stu Bridgeman began picking up steals, Howard, Daugulis and Rob Smart started to dominate the defensive boards and get a fast break working, and the Blues started looking bothered.

In fact, Varsity managed to pick up two technicals, they got so excited. The Gaels tied the score at 46-all early in the final quarter, broke on top 47-46 moments later on a foul shot by Daugulis, and never looked back, running up a 16-point margin of victory, 66-50; this also means that Queen's holds a one-point edge in the series between the two clubs, just in case a playoff berth comes to that.

Only five players drew blood for the Gaels. Daugulis finished with 24 points, Gordon had 18, Howard 16, and 12 rebounds, Dave Smith added 6 points, and Rob Smart 2 (the first two, at that.)

2nd Win of Week



This comeback was the second court victory for the Gaels this week. Wednesday night, Queen's dumped RMC 66-42 in a game marked by bad refereeing and scrappy play. This contest was the exact opposite of the Saturday thrillers, with the Gaels running up a 22-point lead in the first half and never looking back.

Also, all 12 players who dressed played, and all 12 scored. Peter Gordon had 13 points to lead all scorers, while Daugulis added 11, Smart 8, and Paul Howard, who was bothered by ankle problems, 7. The rest were well distributed amongst the bench strength.

Despite their explosive second half, the Gaels still made mistakes. In particular, they threw the ball away eight times on positively atrocious passes. Only their defense prevented this from becoming a real factor. And there is no real excuse for a 6-for-34 half.

The Gaels are now 3-4 in league play, and have a tough row ahead of them. They have games with Ryerson and Ottawa U. (here next Friday and Saturday), Carleton and Ottawa U. (in Ottawa in two weeks), and York (Feb. 18th).

They need a clean sweep, or at worst, 4 wins and one loss, to be reasonably certain of making the playoffs. After that, you play them one at a time. If they can continue to play like they did in the second half against T.O., the Gaels will have a good chance. If not, the season will be a short one.

—boag

Gael Centre Paul Howard (42) goes up for two points as Blues get bluer. Rob Smart (25) looks on.

W.I.C. News

Having given participants a rest last week, the W.I.C. schedule is in full swing again.

Volleyball continues on Tuesday with the following schedule:

7:15, Arts '73 vs Rehab., Bews Gym; 7:15, Arts '75 vs. Law, Bews Gym; 7:30, Arts '74 vs. Nursing, Ross Gym; 8:15, Meds. vs. Nursing, Bews Gym; 8:15 P.H.E. vs. Rehab., Bews Gym.

Indoor softball begins on Thursday, Feb. 3 at 7:15.

A squash clinic will be held on Wednesday from 9:30 to 10:30 p.m. Entries for the squash tournament close on Thursday and the tournament will begin on Monday.

Entries for swimming also close on Thursday with the swim meet being held Monday, Feb. 7 from 7 to 9:30 p.m.

With such a wide variety of sports from which to choose, it is hoped that everyone can find something to take part in!

Volleyball Gals Split Games

Queen's Women's Volleyball team hosted teams from Ottawa U. and Carleton on Friday and Saturday respectively. In Friday's match, the Queen's girls downed Ottawa in four games with scores of 15-10, 15-7, 10-15, and 15-4. The win was largely due to the strong service of the Queen's girls.

Betty Smith and Jane Patterson were standouts offensively for the host team. Ottawa was unable to mount an attack, due at least partly to the superb defensive play of Nancy Mills.

Queen's did not fare so well in Saturday's match. The girls won the first two games 15-7 and 15-6 before dropping the third game 13-15. The next game went to Carleton by a large margin 8-15, but Queen's fought back, only to lose the final game by only a 13-15 decision.

The largest factor in the loss was the absence of the powerful serving which gave them their in the previous night.

The performance of the team this weekend has given them confidence for next week's matches against York and U. of Toronto.

Injuries Cripple Wrestlers

John Albinson's wrestling team had a round weekend, to put it mildly. For starters, Gary Brown was injured in practice and could not compete. Then two MacArthur students discovered their teaching would take them out of town - and out of competition. Not bad so far, eh?? It gets worse.

In a meet with Ryerson, York, and U. of T. (sort of), Steve Brown was injured, forcing him out of action at least for the weekend. Another Gael standby was forced to miss the Saturday dual meet with Waterloo for personal reasons.

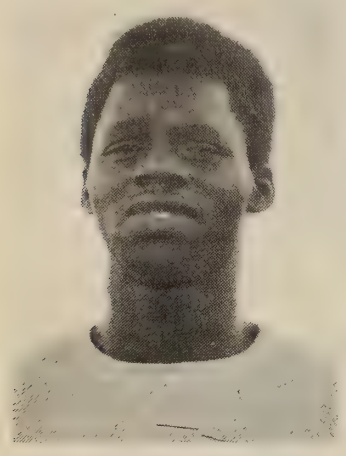
With this much - diminished squad, Queen's did what they could - which wasn't all that much. Joe Bush and Mike Dwhytie managed to pin their opponents in the Friday action, while John Johnson was the only victor against Waterloo.

Classifieds

ROOM available for 1 or 2 good people in commune close to university; into liberation politics. 544-9426.

FESTIVAL '72 needs batik demonstrators. Please contact Carol Rogers 549-0858. Expertise not necessary.

XCIX, Page 525



This is the 525th page of Queen's Journal, volume XCIX, and with it The Journal sets a record. The highest number of pages produced in any previous academic year was 524, put out during The Journal's Golden Age in 1968-69. (That year it took us 45 issues to do it; this year we've done it in 42.)

When The Journal began in 1873 it promised to "infuse a livelier interest into...College life" and "afford information upon subjects deeply interesting to every Student". We still try.

Fraser, Jarvis win as Cornell buries Gaels

Cornell University racked up its 12th straight dual meet victory Saturday by overwhelming Queen's, but the Gold trackmen drew blood in defeat. Several outstanding individual performances paced the Gaels, but they could not match the great depth and versatility of the Cornell thinclads.

Sprinter Hugh Fraser continued his winning ways by taking the 60-yard dash in a time of 6.3 seconds. The times of the six finalists were all between 6.3 and 6.5 seconds, giving a good indication of the competitiveness of the meet.

Hugh Fraser-Another Win

Hurdler Dave Jarvis, another Gael who qualified for the International Star-Maple Leaf games this weekend, easily won the 60-yard high hurdles in a time of 7.6 sec.

Kip Sumner, who will be running in the mile in the Star games, led most of the way in the 1000-yd run, before bowing to Cornell's Jim Brailles in the final few yards. Sumner took second spot in 2:14.3.

Another miler, Brian MacDonald, turned in a personal best time of 4:18.5 to grab another close second to George Alexander of the Big Red, who finished in 4:13.0.

One of the pleasant surprises of the meet was the performance of sprinter Peter Fedyczko, who won the Junior Varsity 60-yard sprint. He turned a time of 7.0 seconds to capture this event.

Cornell's power was very evident in the middle-distance relays, normally a happy hunting ground for Gael trackmen. The deep (and fresh) Cornellians swept both the 1- and 2-mile relays, in times of 3:28.8 and 7:59.0 respectively. The Gaels managed 3:29.9 and 8:01.5 respectively.

Dave Jarvis-easy going in 60 yd hurdles

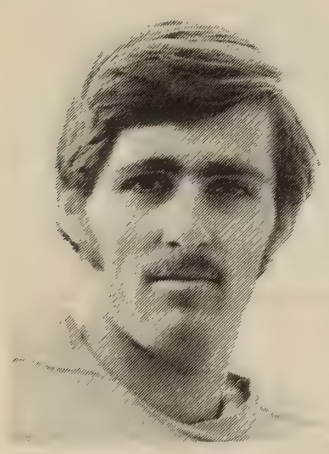
In the field events, long-jumper Axel Becke managed a second in his specialty with a leap of 21'7¾". Glen Milligan ran into foul trouble and failed to qualify for the finals in the event when his best jump of 22'10" was disallowed.

This weekend, the Gaels will have a full team entered in the college-division events of the Star-Maple Leaf games, in the Toronto Gardesn, while Fraser, Jarvis, Sumner, and the relay squads will carry the Tricolor in the International games that evening.

Anyone who is a track buff would be well advised to scrape up the price of admission to see some world-class track action.

Gals Just Miss

Four teams met at McGill for the second part of the Women's Fencing competition. The top two teams from this meet advance to the finals in Ottawa.



At the end of the meet Ottawa U. was the clear winner; however Queen's was tied with McGill for the second playoff spot. The number of indicators by each team was used to break the tie.

McGill earned the chance to advance to Ottawa by this criterion and Queen's ended up third, out for the season.

Fourth in the competition was the team from Carleton. The top fencers for Queen's were Mary Ford and Patty Manly.

Skiers Capture OUAA Nordic Crown

This past weekend the Men's Nordic Ski Team competed in the Carleton Invitational Ski Meet held at Camp Fortune. The Nordic events of the meet (cross-country and jumping) also decided the 1972 Ontario University Athletic Association champions.

Dave Campbell—leads team

After coming a close second for the past few years the Queen's team finally captured the coveted title by a strong team effort.

The cross-country race was held on Friday afternoon over an 11 km. course on a very icy track, snow conditions being far from ideal. Dave Campbell had an excellent race with a second place finish in a time of 51 min. 13 sec., only 25 sec. behind the leader.

This gave him 99.2 F.I.S. points (Federation International du Ski) out of a possible 100. Right behind him in third place was Al Maddox with a time of 51 min. 55 sec. and 97.8 points. Ross Wilson, skiing in his first year for Queen's, finished fourth with a time of 52 min. 31 sec. and 96.7 points.

Rounding out the Queen's entries were Chris Gilliatt in eight, gaining 90.7 points, and Peter Cook in ninth, gaining 89.0 points. Queen's best three men beat Toronto's first man and all five skiers beat their third man.

The point totals of the top three skiers for each team were added for the team totals, giving Queen's a sizable margin over its nearest competitor U. of Toronto.

The final event of the meet was on Saturday afternoon on the intermediate jump at Camp Fortune. Although the team knew it had little hope of winning the event it was a matter of staying close enough to U. of T. to protect their margin from the previous day's racing.

Chris Gilliatt had the best jumps for Queen's with a point total of 80.0 and a fourth place finish. Right behind in fifth place was Peter Kopp, with 79.9 points, who was jumping despite a recent knee injury. Peter Cook was just behind him with 77.9 points. Dave Campbell was eighth with 70.3.

Once again the points of the best three competitors of each team were added for the team totals. Although Toronto finished one, two in jumping they were unable to overcome the lead Queen's had from the cross-country racing.

The final point totals were very close -- Queen's with 531.5, Toronto 527.4, and Carleton a fair ways back with 489.9.

As well as the O.U.A.A. trophy, the team brought back the Carleton Invitational Nordic Ski plaque for the best team performance. Individual awards for Nordic combined were won by Chris Gilliatt with 170.7 points for second place, Dave Campbell in third place with 169.5 points and Peter Cook in fourth place with 167.8 points.

Badminton Rookies Show Well

The Queen's Women's Badminton team travelled to Sudbury this past weekend to compete in a tournament sponsored by Laurentian. This was the second tournament of three used to determine the Ontario Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Association champions. In the meet held at Queen's before Christmas the Queen's girls won all events.

The tournaments are run so that the schools get together and each team plays all other teams which it has not met before. Using this method it is very difficult to determine a winner until the end of the third tournament. In this second meet Queen's faced teams from Laurentian, Waterloo, Waterloo Lutheran, and York. All of the other teams had already played one of the five teams before except Queen's. Queen's therefore played four games in each rank and category while the others played only three.

Queen's sent six competitors to the meet. They were ranked from first through sixth singles. As well all of the girls played doubles badminton, with three pairs for that competition. Queen's won all four games in both fifth singles and third doubles. Mary Robbins, a first year student, was involved in both of these sweeps. In the doubles she played with Patricia Mackimmie, also a first year student.

The final section of the tournament will be held in Toronto February 18 and 19, the beginning of Reading Week.

GENESIS II

Dunning Aud. Admission $1.00
February 1,2,3. 7:00 and 9:30
A Queen's Cineguild Presentation

PUB DANCE
WITH TOBY FOSS
Friday
Feb. 4th
8:30 - 1:00am
Leonard Hall
Beer 3/$1
Tickets: 50¢
in residence
meal lines

HOCKEY GAELS SHINE . . . IN DEFEAT

by Bruce McLeod

Queen's Golden Gaels lost a hockey game on Saturday afternoon, but they must have regained a measure of their self-respect. The Gaels showed guts and determination in being edged by a stacked York team, 5-4.

What's more, they showed a lot more class than the former pros on the Yeoman squad, who were constantly disputing the referee's calls, and were given to displays of childish temper.

Nevertheless, this was one of the most exciting and best-played games of hockey Queen's fans have seen in a long time, and the capacity crowd responded with a standing ovation at the end of the game. The Gaels found themselves down 3-0 before the midway mark of the first period, as nothing seemed to be going right for them.

Brent Imlach got the first one after only 49 seconds, as his slap shot from the point got through a mass of players at the side of the net.

The Queen's defence was caught napping on the second goal, and the team appeared shaken by the turn of events. But as has happened before, the Gaels took the measure of their opponents.

In spite of the score, the play had been fairly even, and at 13:38, on a power play, Queen's began to assert themselves, with Colin Loudon taking a pass at the side of the net, faking the goalie to the ice, and then sliding it under his leg.

John Smith narrowed the margin to 3-2 before the period ended, as he kept digging at the puck in front of the York goalie, and finally managed to shove it through.

This goal, while it upset the York team, brought the Gaels' fans to vociferous life, and at 2:48 of the second period, Murray Douglas, who played a key game both ways for the Gaels, sparked one of the loudest and longest cheers heard yet from the normally quiet Queen's crowd by swooping in around the defenceman and popping the puck up high over the goalies' shoulder to tie the game.

Loufin (9), Douglas (15) - brilliant two-way play

This goal came just after the Gaels had done a superb job of killing off a penalty, something they've done well all year, and it looked as though the tide had turned. But despite several good chances, the score remained tied at the end of the period.

The third period was penalty-filled, as feelings had been running high all game, and Queen's had a chance to put on the power play early, as York's George Kemp got a penalty for blatantly delaying the game, shooting the puck out of the playing surface to relieve pressure in his own end.

But Colin Loudon was tagged with a hooking penalty scant seconds later, and it was York who scored, as Kent Pollard, who had been effective for York all game, got around Steve Gross with a nice fake and flipped the puck over Clyde Harris' shoulder.

It was ironic that Gross should be the goat on this one, as he had been one of the standouts for the Gaels. This seemed to break something for York, and four and a half minutes later they scored again, on a power play, with the puck taking a crazy bounce right on to the stick of Brent Imlack, who swept it under the falling Clyde Harris for what turned out to be the winning goal.

Harris, although he had appeared shaky in the early going had settled down well, and couldn't be faulted on these two goals.

This was at 9:11, and from this point, the Gaels put on a tremendous display of pressure, that had the crowd on its feet much of the time. Murray Douglas scored his second from the slot at 16:58, when Queen's had a man advantage.

York still had a man in the penalty box for much of the rest of the game, and the puck was seldom out of the York end of the arena, but, although they came tantalizingly close on several occasions, they just couldn't score.

The return of Morris Mott to the line-up obviously sparked the Gaels' offence. It is a curious effect, touching not only his own line, but the others as well.

—boag

John Smith -- 1 goal, 2 fights

Mott played a great game, as he seemed to be all over the ice, setting up plays in one end, and blocking shots in the other. But, although he got assists on three goals, it was his teammates who scored all four Queen's goals.

This game also marked the return of veteran defenceman Mike Lynch. The Queen's defence was still spotty, sometimes playing airtight hockey, sometimes giving the puck away with amazing generosity. Hopefully, with Lynch's return, the Gaels can develop two steady sets of defencemen.

People will look back at the Gaels' record this season and shake their heads in bafflement at the inconsistency that marks it. They play great hockey against their most powerful opponents, and yet lose to teams such as Lutheran, Windsor and Carleton.

Coach Bob Carnegie must find some way to solve this inconsistency if the Gaels are going to finish in the playoffs in this tough East division. And they will still have to do it, for most of their games, without Mott.

Synchronized Swimming 5th

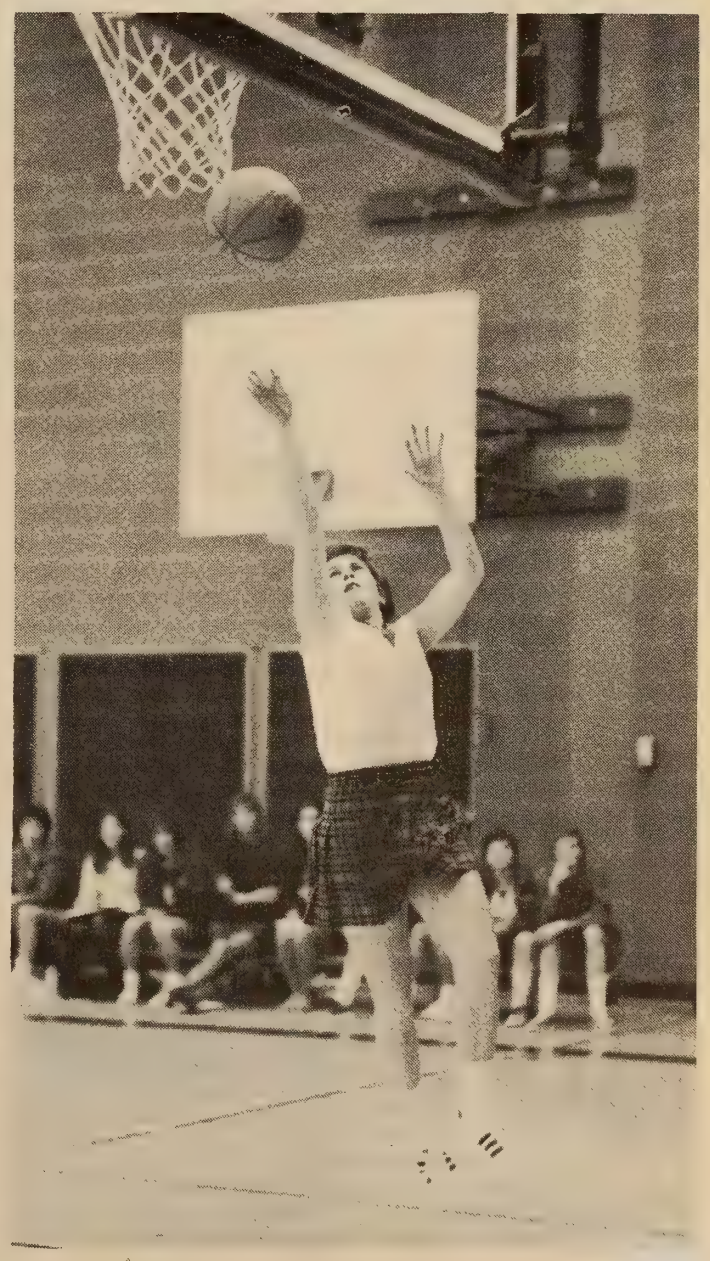
Despite "technical" difficulties affecting Windsor's underwater sound system, Queen's synchro swim team managed to grab 5th spot in the OWIAA Sectional competition on Saturday. Heather Demeza took 6th spot in a field of 24 in the individual figures, while duet pair Vicki Gilliatt and Ruth Jay placed a disappointing 4th out of 13. In the team competition, the aquagals finished 3rd in the 8-school field.

Team members are hopeful that, given the existence of an adequate sound system, some firsts may be forthcoming in the OWIAA finals Feb. 18th. Incidentally, that is the start of slack week, so those in the Windsor area could consider coming down to cheer on the girls. Even two fans would be an improvement.....

B-Ball Gals Split Again

In an even game, little things matter. Like foul shots. A bad night at the free-throw line went a long way towards costing the Golden Gals a much-needed win with undefeated Ottawa U. in a game here Friday.

Coach Brenda Mackie switched her charges out of their usual zone defense, and the tight man-to-man coverage worked, containing Ottawa's outside shooters through most of the game. The teams were tied at the half, 28-28, but Queen's had missed all but three foul shots.



The lead see-sawed back and forth in the third and early fourth quarters, with the Gals leading by as much as four points, mostly on fast-break buckets by freshman star Laney Marshall. Then the roof fell in. Ottawa U. took advantage of several turnovers to tie and then go ahead.

With three minutes to go, Ottawa called time-out, then went into a tough press. The Gals started throwing up bad outside shots, and Ottawa ran away with a win, 54-47.

Laney Marshall led Queen's with 12 points, while Karen Carson added 11 and Sue Higgins 9. Ottawa's Coleen Dufresne led all scorers with 15 points, while Liz Jeffery potted 12 for the winners.

The Gals gained a measure of revenge Saturday, dumping Carleton 75-38 on the strength of a 17-point performance by Sue Higgins. Karen Carson had 15 points and Laney Marshall 14 to round out the Gals' big guns. Unfortunately, the surge was a little late.

The girls finish off their season next weekend with home games against Toronto and York. The Friday game will form a good doubleheader with the men's Ryerson contest, so come early (Game time is 6:00 PM) and watch the girls in action.

—perry

Laney Marshall drops in another layup

BACK PAGE

CANADA

OTTAWA - Legally available heroin for maintaining addicts, use of methadone, therapeutic communities, chemical antagonists to block drug effects and alternative life styles all have a place in drug treatment, the LaDain drug inquiry commission reports.

This is the main conclusion of the treatment section of the final report of the LeDain commission, published Wednesday. It describes drug treatment as a field in which there is no universal cure and there are too many conflicting claims of success.

Commission chairman Gerald LeDain said Wednesday the main message of the report is that drug treatment is in a very primitive stage.

"It is a sombre picture, showing very limited results, very discouraging ones in some areas and some encouragement in others.

The treatment report recommends that heroin should be made available in special, very strictly regulated clinics to help a limited number of patients to withdraw from the drug, if this cannot be achieved in any other way.

The report also endorses methadone maintenance programs - in which methadone is substituted for heroin - but under much tighter controls than those currently in force.

Instead of being available to all physicians as it is now, methadone should be administered only in special clinics after stringent tests to ensure that the patient is really dependent.

"But we must recognize that methadone programs are an admission of failure. They're a last resort," Mr. LeDaine said.

OTTAWA - In what is probably the strongest official attack ever made on the competence of the Canadian medical profession, the LeDain drug inquiry commission has accused Canadian doctors of totally failing to respond to the country's drug problems.

The commission's report on drug treatment, published Wednesday, says Canadian doctors are divided, indecisive, and poorly prepared to deal with non-medical drug use and do not even understand it.

The report says that medical education, both undergraduate and continuing, has utterly failed to keep pace with the growing problems of the use of mind-altering drugs and doctors have virtually abandoned the field to non-medical personnel.

SUDBURY - International Nickel Co. of Canada (INCO), the world's largest and richest producer of nickel and Sudbury's principal employer, announced Friday that it will lay off 725 mines workers within the next few days.

Another 1,240 jobs, bringing the total to 1,965, will be phased out over the next three months.

A company statement said the cutback "was necessitated by the need to avoid a further build-up of inventories."

The president of the local of the United Steel Workers of America was extremely concerned because his men would begin to lose some hospitalization benefits on the first day of the lay-off and insurance benefits within 30 days. He also noted that "a year ago our men were working double and triple shifts and six days a week. Now they are laying people off."

MONTREAL - The Quebec Bar Association has asked to be excluded from the provincials government's proposed Professional Code, which it says could make the legal profession a tool of politicians.

Leaders of the 4,500 member association said that the code if applied to the legal profession, would jeopardize the democratic rights of the individual before the law.

The bill is designed to supervise and impose specific standards on a number of professions, ranging from physicians and town planners to dieticians, surveyors and chiorpodists.

The spokesman said the bill allows the government to have access to lawyers' files, which can be seized without warrant. They said that the code, if adopted could weaken the position of a client when he is opposed to the state.

ONTARIO - Judge Lieff, of the Supreme Court of Canada, ordered a temporary restraining injunction against an unnamed Quebec woman on behalf of her husband and the "infant plaintiff" (unborn child). The restraining order forbade her to proceed with her therapeutic abortion at Riverside Hospital, Ottawa. A restraining order against the hospital and her general physician and obstetrician was also made.

The woman was not in court, nor was she represented by counsel, as she and her husband had "patched up their differences," according to Judge Lieff. Legal authorities say that this case does not establish a precedent as the case never got to the court for a final injunction. However, the national Justice department is studying the case.

TORONTO - Ontario's commission on post-secondary education would make the present system more accessible but has failed to question the system itself, according to a commissioner.

David Black, 26, one of two student representatives on the 13-member group made public his complaints Friday in a statement which was also mailed to Douglas Wright, chairman of the commission.

"The absence of any discussion of quality from the...report is striking, requires explanation and must call into question the value of the commission's recommendations," Mr. Black said.

The report includes 72 recommendations which would make higher education and degrees more available and would increase Government control over the education system.

Mr. Black said the commission has basically called for expansion of the present system without explaining it in enough depth. He said many people, apparently including the Government, are using the old rationale that universities will promote economic growth and increase social mobility. But these ideas have been thrown into question.

LONDON, Ont. - Ontario is "serious consideration" to 12-month probationary licenses for all new drivers, Charles MacNaughton, minister of transportation and communications, said Thursday.

Probationary licenses, for an interim period between passing a driver examination test and being granted a permanent license, would apply to all age groups, MacNaughton told a news conference.

"If the driver has a clean record after his first year he could then apply for a permanent license," he said.

"If he has had convictions or lost demerit points, then we would have to review his eligibility for a permanent license and perhaps extend his probationary period or take other appropriate actions."

TORONTO - China has signed a contract to rent the 60,000 square feet of display space in the Queen Elizabeth Building to show its products, life style and culture at this year's Canadian National Exhibition. It will be the largest display ever by a foreign Government during the exhibition.

LONDON, Ont. - Transportation Minister Charles MacNaughton drove a snowmobile for the first time Thursday. He climbed aboard during a snowmobile safety demonstration near here, hit a stop sign and sent five photographers scattering for safety.

THE WORLD

WASHINGTON - President Richard Nixon's administration has concluded that spending billions of dollars to rebuild U.S. air defences against attack by an aging and declining force of Soviet bombers is a losing proposition, sources say.

Despite a proposed election-year increase in overall military spending - including an increase in one major new bomber defence project - a number of high-ranking administration officials say privately that a longer-range decision has been made not to pour additional billions into an extensive new shield against bomber attack that the air force - and to a lesser extent, the army - have been pressing for.

"The Soviet bomber threat just isn't there any longer," says one top official.

Since the early 1960s, the U.S. has let radar and anti-bomber missile defences decline steadily to about a third of their former level.

One official says the U.S. will continue to modernize some parts of its ground-based radar network. But the total defences now envisioned are far short of what the air force is pushing for.

BELFAST - Terrorists machine-gunned an off-duty policeman to death Friday, the third constable to die in the last two days during a guerrilla offensive in Northern Ireland.

Four masked gunmen believed to be members of the outlawed Irish Republican Army (IRA) drove into a Belfast gas station in the Roman Catholic Ardoyne district and fired eight shots at the policeman while he was repairing his car, then sped away, police said.

Two Londonderry policemen were shot dead Thursday in a similar attack.

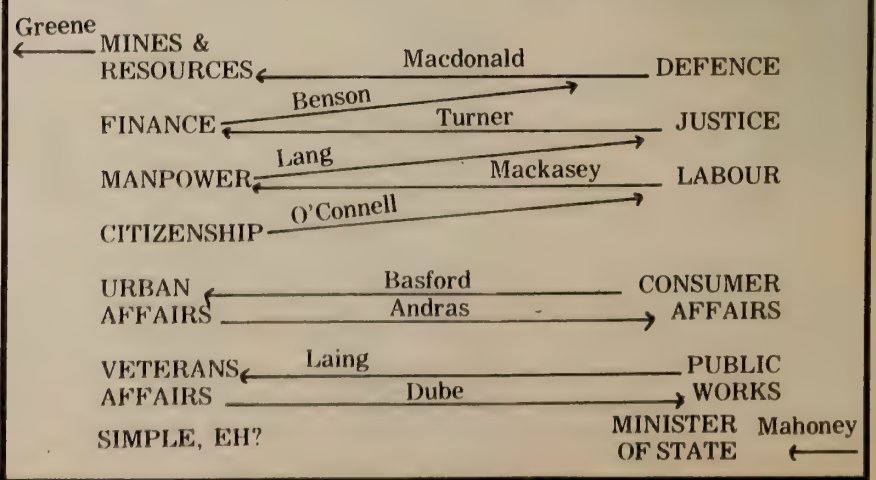
Friday's victim was the fourth policeman and the 12th person to be killed this year. The death toll in Ulster since violence broke out in the summer of 1969 now stands at 218.

NEW YORK - Former President Lyndon Johnson said in a television interview broadcast Thursday night that limiting the U.S. presidency to a single, six-year term might be in the best interest of the United States. At present, a president may serve one or two four-year terms. Mr. Johnson, who served one full term and just over a year of John F. Kennedy's term, said a man who knew he had only one chance to get his program through and who did not have to play to any political group might do a better job.

OTTAWA - Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau dealt himself and the Liberal party four big, highly political aces when he shuffled his cabinet Friday in preparation for the election expected this spring or fall.

His first big card is the improvement of cabinet strength in the West - where the party is weakest - and the disillusionment with Trudeau himself, even among party members, is running high.

Then by easing Edgar Benson out of the finance portfolio and Ron Basford out of consumer and corporate affairs, he removed two of his main obstacles to the currently sluggish collection of campaign slush funds from the business community.



By shuffling the cabinet so drastically as to involve 12 ministers, many in top portfolios, Trudeau will probably succeed in giving a rejuvenated image to a government whose popularity is falling in the Gallup polls, even though the cabinet has only one new member.

And in playing the fourth ace, the surprise switch of John Turner from justice to the difficult finance portfolio, Trudeau has, if history is any judge, ended or at least put an almost insurmountable barrier in the way of the strong challenge Turner was making behind the scenes to take over Trudeau's job eventually.

Although Turner takes over the finance portfolio at a time when the economy is improving, the post has traditionally been a graveyard for politicians.

So the shuffle, the first of major consequence since the Trudeau government was elected in 1968, is basically a shrewd reaction to political realities in this pre-election period.

(Toronto Star)

AMS disputes poll locations during calm Monday session

Only two arguments shattered the calm of student government Monday night in one of the year's shortest AMS outer council meetings.

One argument arose over a motion from Inter-Residence Council chairman Ian Nordheimer, proposing that polling booths for next week's AMS elections be placed in residence meal lines. This is a longstanding controversy in which Nordheimer and other advocates of -- in the phrase of meds rep Andy Pipe -- "Pipe's Principle of Polls for the People" have opposed a faction led by Marv Bloos and favouring an equal chance for in-residence and out-of-residence students to encounter polling places during the three-day election.

After long discussion, in which both sides aired their views and chief returning officer John Solman said he opposed residence polls for technical reasons, Nordheimer won. Ban Righ and Leonard meal lines will be among the poll locations during the three days of voting.

The other controversy came after the council was asked to approve a $200 grant to a student group which wants to set up a telephone distress centre at Queen's to begin operation in September.

Scott Anderson (Third-year commerce) and Linda Williams (first-year psych) had asked for the grant to train volunteer phone-answerers during the summer; the budget they presented indicated that a $1500 grant would be requested for operations during 1972-73.

The telephone distress centre, AMS president Pat Riley told the council, would operate from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. and give out a phone number students could call for comfort, counselling, referral or someone to talk to.

Some council members opposed the project, saying it was a duplication of services already offered by on-campus counsellors and by Kingston General Hospital. Meds rep Andy Pipe said more use should be made of KGH facilities and staff, and pointed out that in a serious case the centre could only refer a student to an existing service.

The AMS support for the project was turned down by the council.

A grant of $1500 was approved, with little disagreement, for use by the drama guild in renovating rooms and setting up a "little theatre" above the AMS' Heffalump boutique at 231 Princess Street.

Drama guild president Owen Moulton said the available theatres and rehearsal rooms in Theological Hall are used beyond capacity and said the Drama Guild expects to have the new theatre pay for itself from the admission fees charged to "at least a show a week" there.

The $1500 grant approved, covering most of the renovation expense, will come from the special AMS reserve fund, released by the special AMS general meeting held in December for subsidy of a pamphlet on housing or "other worthwhile ventures".

Heffalump boutique manager Jane Corkin presented the meeting with a financial statement indicating that the boutique, started early last summer by the AMS, is not stabilized as a profitable venture yet. Council members generally indicated they were not satisfied with Miss Corkin's figures, however, and asked for a more detailed report at the next council meeting, which is scheduled for February 14.

Meds rep Pipe, who represents the AMS on the university health council, reported on the recent activities of that body. He said the psychiatric wing of the student health service expects to move soon to give the medical wing more room; the new location has not been chosen but may be the ground floor of Chown Hall.

Another recent concern, Pipe said, involves students who come to Ontario from elsewhere and are not covered by health insurance during the three-month OHIP waiting period. Such students are responsible for their own medical bills, Pipe said, and there have been cases in which they have been reluctant to pay. He said the health council hoped to establish a policy on such cases.

The outer council set up two committees -- one to study the recently released bookstore report and prepare student comments on it, and the other, to be headed by president Pat Riley, to study and comment on the report of the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario (Wright Commission).

The AMS took almost unprecendented action by rejecting a set of minutes presented for approval. At the suggestion of grad rep Graham Millington, council sent the inner council minutes of January 23 back for reworking.

Other minor points were discussed and the meeting adjourned less than two and a half hours after it had begun.

Festival 72

is only one of the major social-cultural events happening on campus this week. It's International Week, the Casino Royale raffle is in high gear, a Rita Coolidge concert is coming, Cabaret is around the corner, and it's almost Arts and Science Formal time.

Science fee up

The Engineering Society raised its every-student fee from $8.50 to $10.50 at its general meeting Monday night.

The decision, made by the approximately 25 people at the meeting, can be appealed by petition until tomorrow, engineering returning officer Bruce Miller told The Journal. After that it is binding and the new fee will be collected from all engineers beginning next fall.

The meeting also broadened the qualifications for holding office in EngSoc.

solman

Attentive, aren't they? Oddly enough, they weren't listening to the AMS presidential candidates; the attraction was White Trash, which played Sunday in the arena.

Queen's Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 43 Thurs., Feb. 3, 1972

Candidates

These are the candidates in the applied science election next week.

For treasurer: Michael Robson, Kerry Clark.

For development committee chairman: Brian Sterling, Warren Workman.

The other positions were acclaimed: president, Steve Mansell; vice-president, John Macdonald; secretary, Steven Tovee; senator, Greg Weston.

The Engineering Society will vote February 8 to 10 along with the AMS and five other faculty societies.

CHALLENGE

Andy Jordan and James Bradley are challenging all AMS presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates to take part in an open question and answer period Monday Feb. 7, 8 - 10 pm. in Stirling C.

Thesis and Essay Typing

Your on-campus typing service can fulfil all of your typing needs quickly and at competitive prices. Xerox and Ditto duplicating is also available for your convience.

The Student Typing Service

STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

PUB DANCE

WITH

TOBY FOSS

Friday Feb. 4th
Leonard Hall
8:30 - 1:00am
Beer 3/$1

Tickets: 50¢
in residence meal lines

Canadian Heart Foundation
ANNUAL FUND DRIVE

600 CANVASSERS REQUIRED FROM
QUEEN'S STUDENTS, KGH NURSES, HDH NURSES
FOR CANVASS OF KINGSTON

FEBRUARY 6th, 1972 LEONARD DINING HALL 12:00 - 4:30 p.m.

SKI CLUB SPONSORS:

Ski Mont. Ste Anne

Sunday Feb. 20, to Friday, Feb. 25, (Reading week)

Total Cost: $80.
(includes meals, accomodations, tows, return bus)

Tickets on sale in John Orr Room
Starting Tuesday, February 8, 7 p.m.

Festival 72

Movies, Underground Films
(Dupuis Hall)
Creative Drama, Art Demonstration
Photography & Art, Classical Music
Creative Dance, Art Demonstration,
Music-(Student Memorial Union)
Feb. 3,4,5,6 8:00 P.M.-Midnite

Programmes available at door
Bitter Grounds Tonite In The Pub

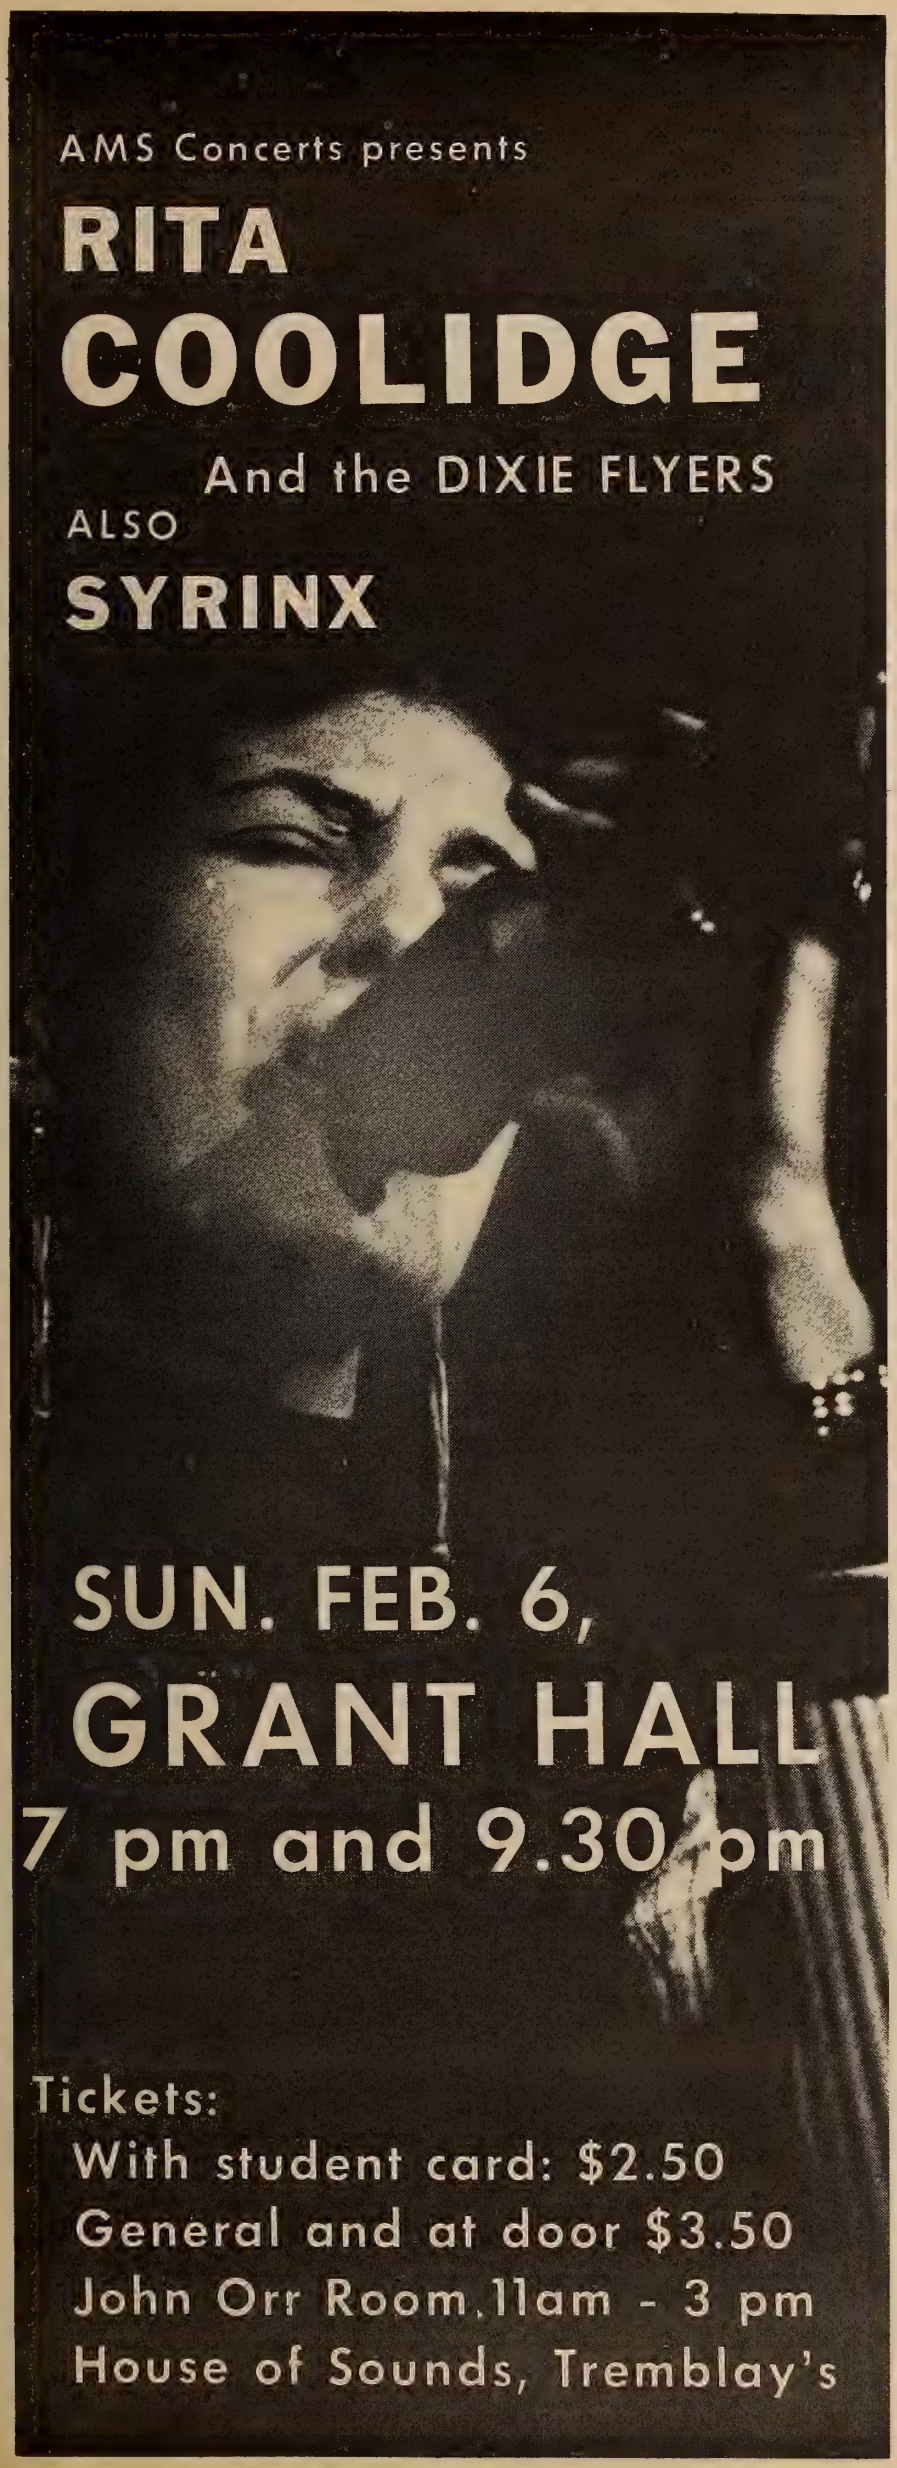
AWARENESS 72

Tues. Feb 8th 7:30, Dunning Aud. Poverty in Kingston

Wed. Feb 9th 7:30 Ellis Aud The Emperor's New Clothes - with Dr. Norman Z. Alcock

Thurs, Feb 10th 7:30 Grant Hall People, Politics, Power Poverty

Mon. Feb. 14th 7:30, Rm. 201 Kingston Hall Queen's - A Hotbed of Apathy



Tues. Feb 15th 7:30 Grant Hall People Before Paper with Stanley Burke

Thurs. Feb 17th 7:30, Rm. 128 Jeffery Hall Chto Delat-What to Do assessment and reaction

BLOOD DRIVE

VICTORIA HALL BASEMENT

FEB. 1,2,3 11 am - 2 pm; 3 pm - 8 pm

Discipline report is done

The Queen's Senate has finally finished considering the Report on Grievance, Discipline and Related Matters, nearly a year after that report was made public and two full years since the committee that produced it was created.

The final matter which had to be dealt with was the question of appeal by faculty members of decisions relating to salary and promotion.

A lengthy debate on this subject began with a motion from the Senate Committee on Appointment, Promotion, Tenure and Leave that such appeals not go through the normal channels for grievances established in the Report on Grievance. This includes an Ultimate Tribunal composed of an outside arbitrator as chairman, assisted by two persons, as the ultimate appeal.

In introducing that motion, J. W. Grove, head of the Appointment Committee, indicated that appeals of promotion and salary decisions should follow the procedures laid out in section IV of the Statement on Academic Freedom and Tenure. Only faculty members and members of the administration are involved in appeals by this procedure, and the ultimate appeal is to the principal.

Grove also indicated that his main objection to the use of the Ultimate Tribunal as the final appeal was that it has an outside arbitrator on it who might not be familiar with the particular questions involved in a promotion or salary dispute.

R. L. Watts, who had been head of the committee on Grievance, indicated that he felt that the procedures favoured by Grove were overly formalistic, requiring much written notice of decisions and desire to appeal. He also said it involved a difficult technical distinction between grievances relating to employment, which would be appealed as Grove suggested, and grievances relating to, for instance, poor teaching, which would be appealed through regular grievance procedure.

He noted that, since there is little real difference between the two types of grievance, since employment questions are inextricably tied up with questions of teaching ability, use of only one procedure would be more practical and simpler.

Trisha Jackson also noted that the grievance procedures outlined in the Grievance Report do not rule out informal appeals by faculty members to their department heads, or to the administration.

In the end, the Grove motion was defeated. In its place, section 50 of the Grievance Report was passed with an amendment to read as follows: "Appeals against decisions relating to salary and promotion which do not involve matters of tenure should fall into the normal grievance channels, except that they should not proceed by way of the Filter of Utimate Tribunal."

The Senate then passed section 57 of the Grievance Report, which implements the report and ends the Senate's consideration of it.

Nursing orienteers . . .

The Nursing Science Society has chosen its orientation co-chairmen for 1972: Kathleen Ledoux and Janet See, both first-year students in the four-year nursing programme.

There are fourteen volunteers for the committee, Miss Ledoux told The Journal, of which some will be organizers and some will be Caeps.

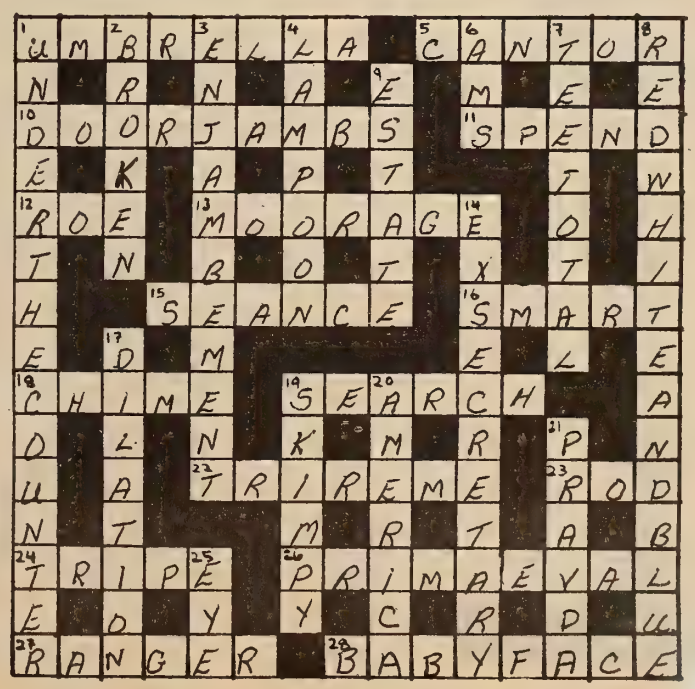
The Caeps each lead a group of nursing freshettes during orientation week, and organize functions outside the arts and science programme in which nursing also takes part.

"Our goals for frosh week this year," Miss Ledoux said, "are to have fun, get to meet everyone, and let the campus know that there is a faculty of nursing."

. . . and candidates

These are the nursing candidates for next week's election.

Vice-president: Roxy Blair, Anna Duncan.



Secretary: Kathy Martin, Judy McCarthy, Judy Powell.

Treasurer: Ginger Comission, Tessa Frost, Carol Sly, Kate Yule.

AMS Rep: Jo Forbell, Barb Gay, Heather Pursey.

Acclaimed were president Janet Warner; Senator, Bev Moir; CUNSA Rep. Janet Jeffrey; athletic stick, Gail Moonie; social convenor, Sandy Fisher.

Solution to Tuesday's puzzle

killing man . . .

On a continent where suicide is still generally thought of as being illegal, the negligent attitude prevalent towards doing oneself to death by bad habits is uncomprehensible. One of the major problems of over eating, in combination with cigarette smoking and lack of exercise, is atherosclerosis, or clogging of the arteries by deposits of cholesterol.

The root cause of the increase in the prevalence of atherosclerotic disease may be "progress." North American success in overcoming infectious diseases has made it possible for man to live longer. At the same time, technology has provided him with an abundance of rich food and drink that he can obtain with very little expenditure of muscle energy.

To wait until a person is actually suffering from the effects of cholesterol build-up is to wait too long. A remedy directed solely to persons who do reach medical care after an attack, even if it could guarantee their surviving this acute attack, would have only a feeble impact on the awesome toll of people who die of coronary artery disease. For those lucky enough to reach the hospital alive (one in five does not) and then survive the hospitalization, another attack is the rule.

Sudden death is common in atherosclerosis. Furthermore, more young people die of this disease today. Of the 866,000 people in the United States who die of causes other than accidents per year, more than 165,000 succumb to coronary heart disease. Three men for every woman die this way.

No direct cause for atherosclerosis has been determined, but an indirect link has been attached to: body weight, blood pressure, exercise, cigarette smoking, and diet. The most promising approach to early, continuous, enduring prophylaxis is through one or more controls designed to interrupt the chain of circumstances which appears to promote the atherosclerotic process. There is ample precedent for this approach in preventive medicine in the control of infectious and nutritional-deficiency diseases.

Treatment:

Reduction of cigarette smoking:

Discouraging the use of cigarettes must be a prominent feature of any comprehensive programme of life-style control designed to prevent atheroslerosis. The cigarette habit is associated with an increased risk of all major manifestations of athersclerosis. Furthermore, it makes a unique contribution to coronary disease independent of other risk factors. Just as the cause of atherosclerosis involves multiple environmental host contributors, so must its prevention be broadly based.

Exercise:

Assessment of the risk of disease, using various indices of habitual energy expenditure, has indicated that sedentary men are more susceptible to coronary attacks than physically active men. The least active men of one study (The Framingham study, an epidemiological investigation of cardiovascular diseases, begun in 1949), comprising fifteen per cent of the males in the study, had about three times the risk of those most actively physically. Physical exercise is also indicated in a general weight reduction programme.

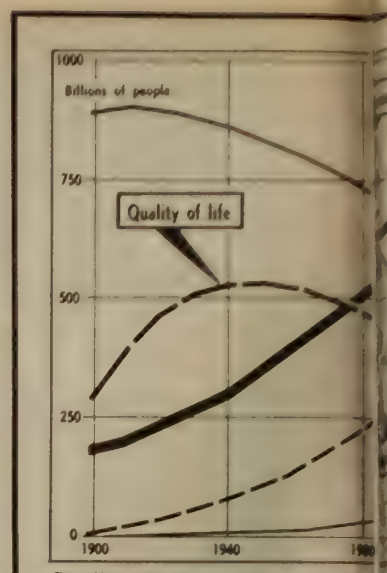
Diet:

While it is hard to pin down the exact components of the North American diet which are the major contributing factors to high atherosclerosis and coronary attack, it is generally indicated that there must be a radical change in the over-al North American diet. With the same advances in food science and technology by which we have so dramatically increased both the quality and quantity of our dietary protein, minerals, and vitamins, we have also increased the calories, saturated fat, cholesterol, sucrose, and salt to a remarkable degree. It is also pertinent to add that since more people are now living to late adulthood, more people than ever before are exposed to these arherosclerosis-inducing agents than ever before for many decades.

In one sense, we have been captives of the past. In the light of the broad findings of the study at Framingham, it is now time to question whether the standards if nutrition of a century ago are appropriate for today's sedentary, sheltered, and somewhat automated society. Do principles of animal husbandry designed to produce big, fat livestock apply to humans - intended neither for draft work nor for the kill? Perhaps this is what we have inadvertently been doing.

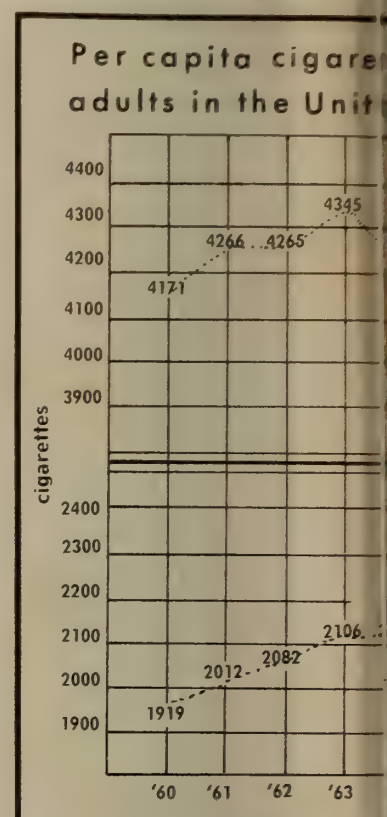
Curtailing the incidence of coronary artery disease would mean a drastic change from our present dietary pattern to one featuring principally cereals and bread products, legumes, fruits, and vegetables. To achieve a substantial reduction in dietary cholesterol, heavy dairy and meat consumption must be de-emphasized and replaced with fish, fowl, and small quantities of lean meat. Eggs and dairy produce would have to be drastically curtailed. Eliminating dietary cholesterol almost automatically cuts down saturated fat intake, since cholesterol only occurs in animal foods which usually contain saturated fat.

There is much resentment in some quarters at the suggestion that the "natural" diet be tampered with, even in the hope that this will reduce atherosclerotic mortality. This is based not only on skepticism concerning the rationale and the existing evidence for such an endeavour, but on fear of unknown hazards. The skeptics fail to take into account the modifications in the national diet over the past century. There has been a preciptous decrease in complex carbohydrates - bread, cereals, potatoes, and legumes - formerly the chief source of calories (60 - 75 per cent). North Americans now get fewer than 45 per cent of their calories from carbohydrates. Now, we feed this carbohydrate to livestock, which we then eat instead. This has resulted in a high consumption of dairy products and meat; 40-45 per cent of calories are taken in the form of fat, over half of which is saturated. Also, the average North American now consumes 12 - 15 grams of salt daily, about three times as much as he needs. Intake of eggs, high in cholesterol, rose in the '40's and '50's, then decreased in the early '60's. Margarine has replaced butter to some extent, but since much of it has been hydrogenated, margarine has not contributed to a lowering of the saturated-fat content of the diet. Nor have non-dairy cream substitutes made largely of highly saturated cocoanut oil.

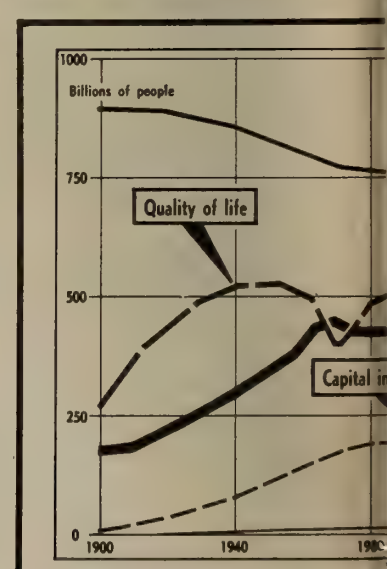


Individual action:

We are faced with the pragmatic problem of deciding when we have reached the point where action is warranted, taking into account the gravity of the situation, the incomplete state of knowledge, and the uncontrolled changes already taking place. Until some modification of the national diet is finally agreed and implemented, those interested in lowering their blood cholesterol value can attempt this by low-fat cookery which emphasizes fish, poultry, and lean meats, and by avoiding organ meats, butter, whole milk, and fatty cholesterol-rich cheese, all in moderate servings, with fruit substituting for artificially sweet desserts at the end of the meal. For persons with high cholesterol values, particularly those with associated hypertension, impaired glucose tolerance, obesity, and the cigarette habit, this becomes a matter of some urgency. When such persons cannot adhere to the indicated diet or fail to respond to it, pharmacological agents may become necessary, such persons are highly vulnerable to coronary attacks and strokes. Again, diet is only one aspect of the prophylactic effort which must also include avoiding cigarettes, reducing weight, correcting hypertension, and undertaking a sensible exercise programme.



Based on recent information, the diet most generally acceptable and suitable for the moderate hypercholesterolemia so prevalent in the North American population would probably have the following characteristics:



1. Calories just sufficient to maintain a lean body weight.
2. Total fats below 30 per cent of calories.
3. Substitution of polyunsaturated for saturated fat to achieve a P-S ratio of 2:1.
4. Cholesterol intake under 250 mg. daily.
5. Limited intake of simple, refined carbohydrate.
6. Table salt intake below 4 gm. daily.

Epidemological and experimental studies have failed to show that the rich North American diet is nutritionally superior. There is little reason to doubt that a fat-controlled diet is nutritionally sound.

Predicted behaviour of world sy natural resources depletion conti industrialization decline.

Situation of world systems if equ
birthrate reduced 50 per cent in 1 cent, pollution down 50 per cent, c

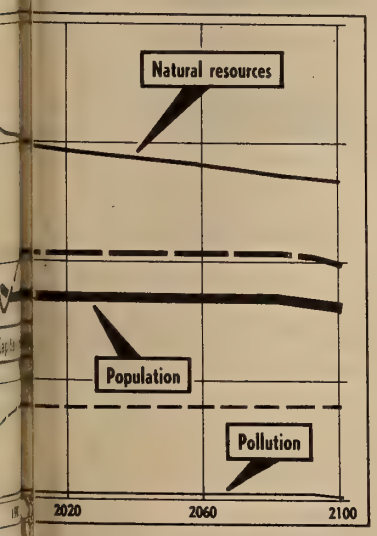
The destructiveness



. . . and the world

current trends are not checked. As lity of life and then population and onsumption by ates and Canada

(no growth) policies adopted - ural resource use reduced 75 per vestment cut 40 per cent.

Many people, in reading about the dangers of pollution or unimpeded growth in population and industrialization, tend to be turned off by the apparently alarmist nature of much of what is written, which suggests that the world has only 20 or 30 or 50 years left to live.

Yet, recent work with a computer model of the world which has been used by a group of researchers at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to determine what could happen in the next century if present conditions continue, suggests that these "alarmist" views might well be right.

The work which led to this conclusion was supported by the Club of Rome, an international group of people concerned about the looming problems threatening mankind (and which includes in its select membership Canadian Senator Lamontagne, who headed the Senate committee on Science Policy, and Robert Uffen, Dean of Applied Science here.) The work was directed by two MIT professors, Jay Forrester and Dennis Meadows and will be published within the month in a book called The Limits of Growth.

The computer model which was developed was an attempt to document the interrelationships among certain key factors of the world's social system, which govern living standards and quality of life. Five basic elemental factors are involved: population, natural resources, pollution, capital investment and the fraction of capital investment devoted to food production. The interaction of these individual systems on each other results in what Dr. Forrester calls the quality of life, which includes such things as the material standard of living, food supply, degree of crowding and pollution.

Using their computer model, the group's primary conclusion was that man cannot avoid catastrophe if the current trends continue. Dr. Meadows described the situation in these words: "Right now, we are like a man driving a car at 60 miles an hour on a winding mountain road while looking out the rear view window. A crash cannot be far off."

A number of rather startling conclusions have been reached by the researchers:

- There is NO possibility of sufficient cultural and technological progress during the next 100 years to support this planet's projected population. Since the population's doubling time is 32 years and decreasing, there will be a profound deceleration in the number of people sometime within the next 60 years.

- There is NO possibility that the vast majority of people in developing countries will ever achieve the living standard of those living in the developed world.

- People in western nations are now enjoying as high a quality of life as they will ever know. The prospect now is for a marked decline in living standards within the next 30 or 40 years.

- A highly industrialized society may be non-sustainable. Viewed from a century in the future, Dr. Forrester contends, the present efforts of underdeveloped countries to industrialize may be unwise." These countries may be much closer now to an ultimate equilibrium with the environment than the western world.

- Industrialization may at the moment be doing more harm to the world than population growth.

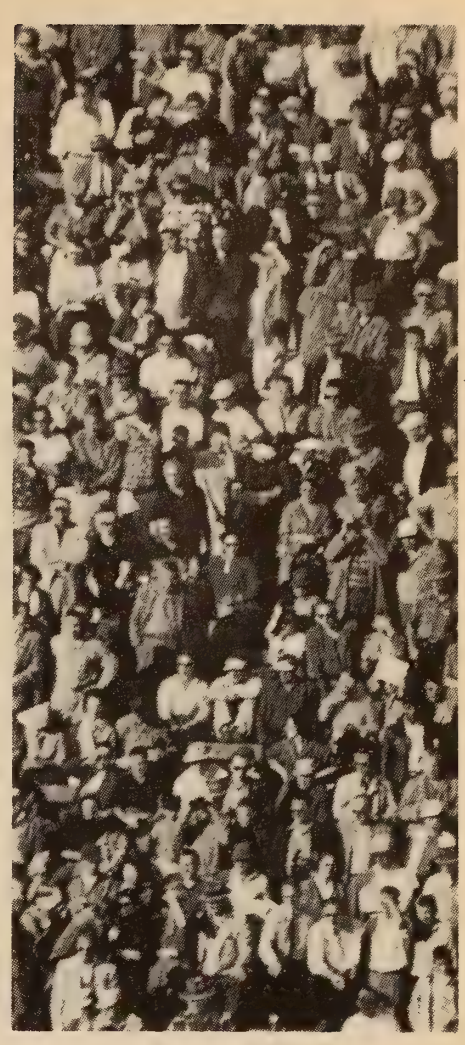
- There is NO ideal long-term population level. Rather, there is an entire set of trade-offs between personal freedom, material and social living standards and the population level. Since the stock of resources on this planet is limited and diminishing, we are confronted with the need to recognize that more people implies lower living standards.

- Birth control alone may be self-defeating. If it results in more food and a rise in standard of living, the very pressures that made birth control acceptable will be relaxed and the population would begin to climb again.

- In theory, there is no fundamental human value which cannot be better achieved through a substantial reduction of the population.

- There is a very strong probability that the transition to global equilibrium will involve a traumatic decline in population.

What will happen if no action is taken to change the situation? Dr. Meadows described the result as a collapse which would occur just after the year 2,000 and would take the form of a sharp drop in population, resources usage, quality of life and capital investment and a rise in pollution, all of which would occur because there are no mechanisms in existence which would bring the present growth to a smooth stop. Instead, industrialization and population would be suppressed by declining resources.



Growth would not stop at this point, however. Instead, what would happen is that, instead of having an orderly transition to some feasible state, we will overshoot the physical limitations and then be forced into a traumatic decline back to some level of population and industrialization which can be supported by our physical environment, which would then be sorely depleted.

Meadows noted: "If it so happens that we begin by exceeding the absorptive capacity for pollution, the pressures will take the form of radical increases in death rates due to impurities in food, water and air, decreases in crops and fish catches ... and significant reduction in the effectiveness of investment due to high costs of controlling the high pollution in all input factors. These pressures will only cease when levels are reached which are acceptable to the physical environment. It is like the explosion of an algae population in a nutrition medium: the growth only stops when the algae are poisoned by their own wastes."

It appears at present that the crisis will most likely be started by the depletion of our natural resources, which would lower the quality of life and in turn, would lead to a decline in the birthrate.

Dr. Forrester contended, however, that finding substitutes for natural resources, which would allow the standard of living to be maintained at a high level, would only postpone the eventual crisis for several years until the pollution problem became too great. In fact, he contended that any attempt, such as finding substitute fuels, or avoiding for a while a pollution crisis, which deals with only one system of the five in his world model, will fail, only producing a delay before the inevitable end of growth.

As long as people continue to think in terms of growth, the researchers contend, there will be no happy ending. But there is a way out if an equilibrium model, under which population and capital investment are stabilized, is used to replace the growth model.

In this steady state a constant number of people would have a constant quantity of physical objects for all of the future. Since the aim is to create a system that would last a long time, the state of equilibrium must be characterized by minimal consumption of non-renewable materials and by minimal emissions of non-degradable wastes. This is essential to maximize the time available before resources are depleted. To achieve this state, the researchers calculated that there will have to be reductions of 40 per cent in capital investment, 50 per cent in the birthrate and pollution, and a 75 per cent reduction in resource usage. Food production would also be reduced about 20 per cent.

Dr. Meadows added: "In this equilibrium mode of human civilization, science and technology will be busily developing ways of constructing products which last very long, do not emit pollution and can easily be recycled. Competition among individual firms may well continue, the only difference being that the total market for goods will no longer expand. In work, emphasis will be on repair and maintenance, rather than on new production."

"Although equilibrium implies non-growth of all physical activities, this will not be the case for cultural activities. Freed from the preoccupation with material goods, people may throw their energy into development of the arts and sciences, into the enjoyment of unspoiled nature, and into meaningful interactions with their fellow man."

The task required is enormous. But Meadows noted that "to recognize that the task confronting mankind is enormous is not to say we shouldn't think about it now. Ten years from now there will be still fewer resources and more people and, if we act, equilibrium will still be 60 or 70 years away."

s of modern living

Condensed from Nutrition Today (article by Dr. Wm. B. Cannel, M.D.), The Montreal Star (article by David Oancia) and The Christian Science Monitor (article by Richard A. Nenneman), by Bill Johnston and Leslie Kaye.

Classifieds

ARTS 73 STUDENTS - remember the chaplain's trust fund is our graduation gift - get your donations in soon.

FOUR-BEDROOM HOUSE or apartment required by four girls next year. Please call 544-6085.

DO YOU HAVE any ideas on what you would like to see in terms of a bookstore at Queen's University? Come out and tell us on Tuesday, February 8 in John Watson 517 at 7:30 p.m.

WHAT IS FASTER than counting with your fingers, more powerful than an electronic calculator, able to sum a thousand numbers at a single keystroke? Is it an abacus, is it WATFOR , , , NO, it's APL-360. Watch tomorrow's Journal for details.

ARTSCI 74: are you looking for a different way to spend a dull, quiet Sunday afternoon? Then come to the Charlie Chaplin Flicks this Sunday, February 6 in Ban Righ common room. It's free for any member of Artsci 74. There'll be silent movies, a romantic fireplace, lots of food - generally a great time. Come out and bring a friend.

LOST: tan-coloured female puppy, 7 months, last seen Saturday evening on Earl near University. Please call 544-1585.

THAT 4-BEDROOM apartment still eludes us. If you have any information leading to its capture please call Lynn 544-8262, Sandy 544-8273.

LOST: 1 black male poodle, miniature size, red collar with "Toronto rabies vaccinated" on it. 544-3201.

LOST: brown leather purse containing contact lens case, etc., in vicinity of Jock Harty Arena on Friday January 28; please contact C. Maydan at 544-0375.

ALISON: Happy Birthday for Feb. 2. Keep smiling - it could be worse. We're with you all the way!

REWARD TO WHOEVER returns or gives information concerning my Science 75 jacket taken from Um-pa-pa. Claude, 544-7053.

$15 REWARD for information leading to the acquisition of a 4-bedroom house for September 72. Phone 544-7052 after 6:30 p.m.

RIDE TO QUEBEC CITY wanted for three for February 11-13 weekend. Will share gas. Please call 544-5841.

KIRGHIZ STUDENT from Jerusalem requires viscous beeswax. Peter Taylor 544-7606.

WANT A ROWFY PUPPY DAWG? FREE? Or a huge refrigerator? Call Scotty or Gino at 549-0765 (new number) or drop around to their new pad at 261 Colborne St., Apt. 3.

HELP WANTED: part-time clerical work, accuracy required, $2 hour. Interviews 7, 8, 7:30 p.m. room 238, Interim Admin Building

REWARD $20 for anyone finding us a five or more bedroom house. Call 544-7032 or 544-7044 any time

LOST BETWEEN 190 University and Freddy's, one opal earring. Please return to Journal office or call 542-5072 Much gratitude

WANTED 6 or 7 bedroom house for 7 girls for next year. Call 544-8435 or 544-8440

THOSE LOOKING for permanent or summer jobs that require the submission of a personal resume should contact Page Resumes at 549-1384 for assistance. A well-prepared personal history is a great way to introduce yourself

Pregnant and distressed?
We can help you!
BIRTHRIGHT
546-LIFE (5433)

THE TRUE NORTH BLUEPRINT

a trilogy of plays by Louis Capson

IN SEARCH OF THE LAST PARADIDDLE

the concluding play

performed by CREATION 2

will be presented
TONIGHT
Thursday, February 3rd
GRANT HALL 8:30 pm.
50¢ admission charge each night

awareness 72

Films: Feb 1-11

on human rights, poverty, population, growth and pollution -- see Flyers on Campus. For Class Room Bookings of these films, call 547-6146.

Events: Feb. 8- Feb. 17

with Brian Hill, and Ian Adams (authors of the Real Poverty Report), Stanley Burke, Norman Z. Alcock, George Webb, and others -- See Campus Flyers and Posters.

A LAS VEGAS LIBATION

Monday, February 7
2nd floor Common Room
8:00 pm - 12:00 midnite
Beer 3/$1.00
Adm. 25¢

Senate Task Force on the Role and Operation of a Bookstore

OPEN MEETING

to discuss the interim report and any ideas you have on the bookstore services at Queen's University.

Tuesday, February 8th
John Watson 517
7:30 pm.

Cabaret Is Coming

presented by
QUEEN'S MUSICAL THEATRE

FEB. 9-12, KCVI Aud. 8 p.m.

Tickets:
Students $1.50, others $2.00
at Union, Door, Music Dept., House of Sounds

A NIGHT TO REMEMBER!!!

(It comes once in a "blue moon"!)

THE AFRICA NIGHT

featuring

1) The Otu Highlife W'Afrika Dance Band
2) The "African" Jùju and Atilogu troupe' dancers
3) The "Talking Drum"

at
GRANT HALL
(Univ. Av.) Queens
Friday, FEB. 4th at 8:30 pm.

—BAR AVAILABLE—

TICKETS ($2 Single,$3 Couple)
At The Door

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

The Science Formal

COMMITTEE IS NOW ACCEPTING IDEAS FOR NEXT YEARS SCIENCE FORMAL. SO SUBMIT AN IDEA...AND IF YOURS IS CHOSEN, YOU WILL WIN A CASE OF BEER.

SUBMIT IDEAS c-o CLARK HALL, ENGINEERING SOCIETY OFFICE.

GSS Film Club Presents

Bergmans "THROUGH A GLASS DARKLY"

FRI., FEB. 4, 8:00 pm

ELLIS HALL AUDITORIUM

3 DAY SALE

50% OFF!!

All New Books

x x x

All Records $3.50

(Sets: $3.25 a disc)

THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY

NONESUCH

Book Sellers

255 Princess Street

(open daily 9:30-5:30

Thurs - Fri 9:30-9:00)

Read some nice words today

earth child endive
panegyric rain fiddlehead love yes pomegranate
antimacassar cauliflower

There now, don't you feel better already?
Look, if you slow down, and take the time to catch up with yourself, you get more out of life. Right?
And that's why we brew Club Ale slowly:
You get more out of it that way.

Club Ale

At Formosa Spring, we won't hurry our beer.

If you have some favourite nice words, send them to us. (Formosa Spring Brewery, Barrie, Ontario) And we'll pass them along.

Queen's
Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 43,
Thursday, February 3, 1972,
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

letters:

University Centre - yes

Dear Editors:
DATELINE, 1975 -- Students of Queen's can no longer be seen wading down to the bank on rainy Friday afternoons. Not only is there a bank on campus but professors and students are seen having a steak sandwich and a beer in the friendly atmosphere of a new pub.

An improved bookstore, music listening areas, table tennis, drug and gift shop and many other convenient services are under one roof, that of the University Centre.

If this is to become a reality, then the co-operation of the students is necessary. A proposed concept for a University Centre at Queen's was presented to the Alma Mater Society in the spring of 1969.

The concept was one proposed to involve the total university community. It would serve to bring the students, faculty, administration and alumni together. The concept was one which would stimulate the academic and intellectual environment at Queen's by providing a place where students and faculty could meet in an informal setting.

The AMS has proposed to increase the individual student contribution per year to ten dollars from five. A rip-off, you say! The AMS has pledged $500,000 toward the project by 1975 -- under one-sixth of the total cost.

At present rate, we will only be able to collect $300,000 by this date. It has been argued that this increase is unfair because over one-half of the students will not be here when the Centre is completed.

If students of past years had supported this philosophy, then we would not enjoy the facilities that we presently have. It is the Alumni and the University which have pledged the larger proportion of the required capital.

As student representatives to the University Centre Users Committee, we ask for your support of the referendum on February 8, 9 and 10.

The Queen's University Planning Study is on reserve in the Douglas Library. This report details in an interesting and readable way the over-all concept of your Centre.

- Jill Davidson, Sue Dowler, Tom Holloway, Robert Warner.

University Centre -not yet

Dear Editors:
I don't think Queen's should build the university centre.

Not for a long time yet, anyway. Not until people know what they want and agree that they want it -- and not until there is enough money to pay for all of it, not bits and pieces and second-best compromises.

Plans for the university centre are very vague, in public that is. The planners keep saying they are still in preliminary stages. But that is a very familiar claim.

It's the old "we don't know what it will cost till we know what we're building, but we don't know what we'll build till we know what we can spend" double-bind.

And one day the secret committee will announce what it has in mind, and the rest of the world will discover that it's too late for any changes to be made.

The one thing about which there is no secret is that not everybody will get what they want. Money is the reason. Not everybody who wants an office in the university centre will get one; bookstores won't get all the space bookstores really need; some recreational facilities will be squeezed out. That's what happens on a limited budget; that's life. Sure.

At the AMS meeting Monday, for instance, there was talk about the student health service moving into the university centre. Or since space is so expensive, maybe they could have a temporary or permanent home somewhere else, with less expensive renovation costs instead of the high cost of construction.

It would be unwise to build a university centre unless it can hold everything in one place -- health service and offices and bookstores as well as recreational rooms and pubs and shopping councourse.

As long as facilities are scattered about campus it won't be a "centre" anyway. We seem to be surviving fairly well with services scattered everywhere -- why not go on that way and save a few million dollars?

In a few years it might even turn out that Queen's needs something else a great deal more than a new building of that kind.

- Chris Redmond.

James Cotton

Dear Editors:
Many things will be written and said about James Cotton's Blues Band.

For the people who were there, "Get it on, Jim," says it all.

It's funny what people can do when they get it together. It's been a long time comin' here.

- A. Friend.

on premeds, the pub and a yang-yin yo-yo

Dear Editors:
The realities surrounding an established tradition can always be summarily terminated by a simple majority vote in a decision of policy. But something that is not so easily laid to rest is the memory of that same tradition.

And, so it is with the eradication of Premedicine as a viable entity at Queen's. In five, fifteen, or fifty years this deletion will certainly mean little in functional terms -- Queen's will still be producing good M.D.'s.

But in a certain non-descript emotional sense, to any doctor who was ever a part of a Premeds class at Queen's this loss will never be able to be completely justified.

Never again will tomato exchanges be engineered on the lower campus; never again will there be Meds frosh rebellions; and never again will the 'kangaroos' be able to perform in Frosh Court.

No more will disgruntled frosh, convinced that initiations are degrading and "immature", develop into "mature" sophomores and, at the next initiation, gleefully hand out more exacting punishment than they themselves had received the year before.

The long-lasting friendships established with fellow classmates in those early years, the class cohesion and loyalty, and the establishment of a distinct blue-leather identity will all be lost in the shapeless flood of red and yellow jackets.

The decision to pursue a professional career at an early age and the subsequent acceptance into the medical faculty in first year university usually precipitated in Premedical students a tendency toward self-eulogising which was often displayed as smugness.

However, although less than acceptable in absolute terms, this smugness may perhaps be justified if it is viewed as an unconscious manifestation of intense pride -- pride in their chosen profession, pride in their Faculty, and pride in themselves.

The Aesculapian Society was founded 99 years ago on principles which were set down "to increase the harmony and good feeling amongst the students . . . and to form a band of union in after years".

Certainly, this recent interruption in the continuity of the Aesculapian Society will serve only to weaken this "band of union" by about a third.

- Kent McKinnon, Meds '73.

Dear Editors:
This is really an open letter to that unknown mandarin hidden somewhere in the boggy morass of the Queen's student government, who is responsible for the policy and management of the student pub. This letter is directed to you because I am weary of "I don't know I just work here" answers every time I try to make some sense out of this organization.

Essentially my complaint is that I regard the pub as a place where one can go either for a relaxing drink or a serious all-out drunk; to this end it should be a convenience. In fact, it is a most frustrating experience, as anyone who has arrived after 10 p.m. will attest.

The line-ups are constant and slow-moving at best, and are particularly annoying because so many people 'cheat' to get in by leaving their coats outside and pretending that they are returning from the bladder run. There is no check on this at all, which means in effect that the more honest you are, the longer you wait. By the time you finally get inside, you are either too mad to have that relaxing drink or too late to get properly gunned.

Therefore, could I have some answers to these questions please? Why does a university with 8000 students have two rooms with a maximum capacity of about 200 people? Is it because the pub loses money (surely not), and if it is making money, why the reticence about expanding? Why is it not open Friday and Saturday nights (contrary to popular belief, not everyone at Queen's is automatically busy going to dances etc. those nights)?

Why is Wallace Hall not used at least once or twice a week? If the answer is that it might not make money, why not at least try it and see if any nights are profitable? If you can only get a limited number of banquet licences, why not get them for larger rooms i.e. Wallace?

And if it really is impossible to acquire better facilities at least stop compounding the problem by not checking people who are supposedly returning from getting a load off their minds. It would be very simple to stamp hands, or hand out numbers that the constables would collect from anyone returning from the washrooms -- no tickee, no drinkee.

I would be the last to offer a bribe to anyone connected with any form of government, but if you could solve my problem before it erupts into a BIOC (Big Issue on Campus) and the alcoholics seize the Principal's Office, I would be most happy to buy you a beer.

- Thirstingly yours,
Tony Keenleyside.

Dear Editors:
Freedom of speech and expression of opinion is, it says here, a Good Thing. That there are limits to this fine sentiment was amply demonstrated by the report last Friday (28th January) in the Journal on "Ying-Yan man speaks on role of women, food".

How, I ask myself, can someone who is either severely mentally retarded or a hood fencing heroin in lettuce be given a) time in a lecture hall, b) space in the Journal and presumably c) an honorarium? Assuming the report by Pat Spence was accurate, Jean Clarke, owner of a Montreal rabbit-food shop (I'm sorry, a natural food store) was clearly macroidiotic, not as was reported, macrobiotic.

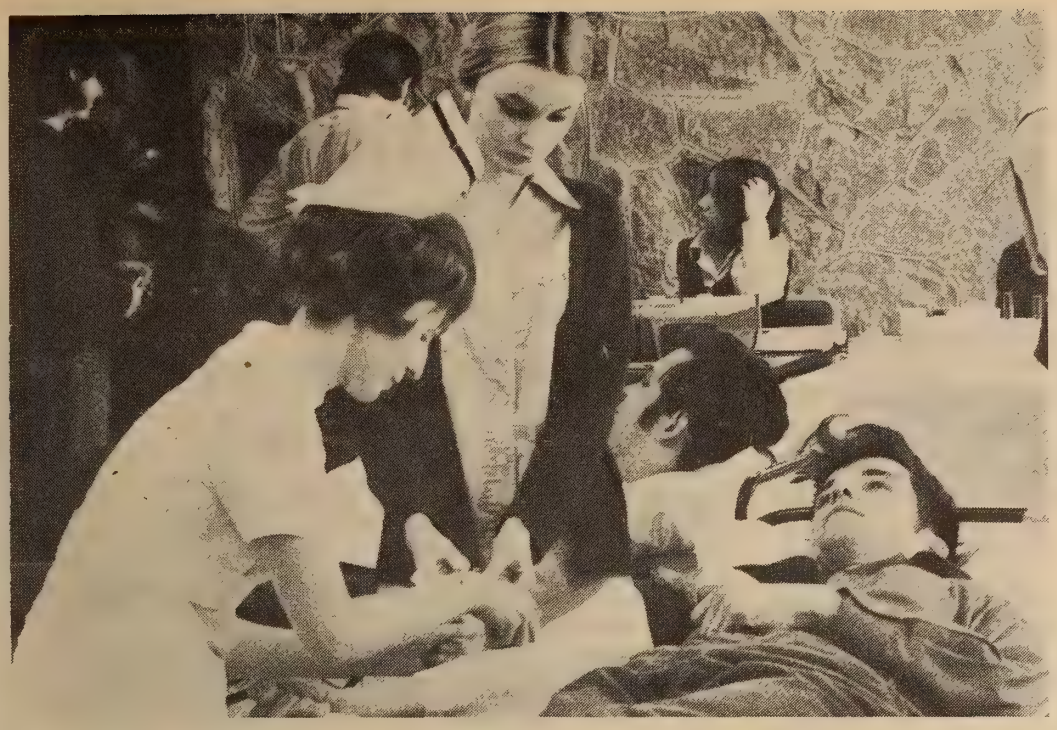
Fire, says he, goes up because "fire being yang form, is attracted to air, which is yen". Since air surrounds a campfire hemispherically, the flames should emanate radially, instead of preferentially upward. Ergo, the Yang-Yin theory is a load of honourable crap.

Anyone with more than two brain cells to rub together can see the is-was talking absolute rubbish. Lame answers about women in the middle ages cooking too long and with too much salt causing wars is too much for anyone above I.Q. 30.

Everyone is entitled to their moronic opinions but to be PAID to promote such tripe, under the guise of Snowball week's "first cultural event" is just shovelling shekels down ye proverbial drain.

Pay me half the amount, and I'll gladly give you a lecture on the influence of eating Martian crab grass on the sex life of an aardvark (And they'll tell you it is 'ard wark . . .)

If the Snowball week fund is looking for ways to waste money I suggest the most efficient is to burn it with smokeless fuel. Pat Spence is not altogether blameless, either. Instead of taking up about 15 column-inches of Journal space he-she should have simply written (more accurately).



"Some nut soaked Snowball week".

Anyone for steak?

- Otto Matik.

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

The blood drive, from Tuesday to Thursday this week was sponsored by the Nursing and Engineering Societys' in the basement of Victoria Hall.

Queen's
Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 44 Fri., Feb. 4, 1972

Graduate candidates

Following is an unofficial list of candidates for the graduate election next week.

For President: Doug Pritchard
For Vice-president: Stuart Clark
For Secretary: Cindy Presse
For treasurer: Charles Serrao
For Senator: John Aitken
For representatives-at-large: Keith Sangster, Bob McRae, Alfred Kormann, Dave Dodd.

Commerce candidates

Following is an unofficial list of candidates for the graduate election next week.

For president: John Telgmann
For vice-president: Bob Patterson, Dale Johnston
For treasurer: Jeff Mitz.
For athletic stick: George Smith
For senator: Jim Dinning
For Senior AMS representatives: George Craig, John Green, Alan Coxwell.
For Junior AMS representatives: Tony Wolman, Ken Wong.

Nursing candidates

There have been some changes in the nursing candidates for the election.

For president: Janet Warner, Bev Moir
For vice-president: Hania Duncan, Margaret Orr, Judy McCarthey
For secretary: Kathy Martin, Judy Powell
For senator: Roxy Blair
For representatives-at-large: Heather Pursey, Jo Forbell
All other positions are as announced yesterday.

Engineering referendum

This referendum will be included in the ballot of the Engineering Society.

Choose only one of the following:

a) that the president of the Engineering Society shall receive no honorariam

b) that the president of the Engineering Society shall receive an honorariam of $200

c) that the president of the Engineering Society shall receive an honoraria to cover his academic tuition fee (currently $625)

d) that the honoraria shall be as follows

i) President of the Engineering Society $200

ii) the four other members of Inner Council $100 each.

Vanier talks about the "insanity of the sane"

By Mary O'Rourke

Dr. Jean Vanier, philosopher and theologian, who has spent the last eight years working with the mentally handicapped and the outcasts of society, spoke of his experiences to a full house at Ellis Hall, Tuesday afternoon.

Dr. Vanier, who had just finished visiting Bordeaux Jail in Montreal, and was on his way to Millhaven and the Kingston Women's Prison said: "It is always interesting to go behind bars, whether they be of the prison or the mental hospital. I am interested in meeting the deeply wounded of our society . . . I am impressed by them, and like to talk with them." He cited the example of a black man whom he had met recently in Bordeaux, who called the prison "chezmoi" and said he had learned a great deal there, had met many wonderful people, and had had a much better experience than he had ever encountered outside.

Dr. Vanier then talked of a visit to a mental hospital: "Its funny, you know. When the directors of the hospital greet me, they're a bit taken back by my casual appearance, but they're still very functional and impersonal and say how honoured they are to meet me. Yet when I go to see the 'incurables', they simply come up and offer their hands and say 'What's your name' and immediately a personal communication is established. But its considered 'normal' to be distant . . . that's how upside down our world has become".

Dr. Vanier cited as further evidence of the insanity of the sane, the fact that in that same hospital one young nurse had been left to care for 70 'incurable' men. "Touch, of the eyes, or of the hands, is a very important form of communication . . . Each of those 70 men craves attention and obviously one young girl can't provide enough to go around." A further example of this same insensitivity, said Dr. Vanier, is the total lack of privacy afforded to mental patients. "Solitude is very important in the lives of people . . . times of solitude are the times when we ask ourselves 'Who am I?', and commune with the Eternal. At the same time, communication with humans is very important." The only place patients can find any privacy, he said, is the bathroom. In illustrating the effect such a fact can have on people, Dr. Vanier said it has been shown that disturbed children often compare themselves to 'the excrement of the Universe', and experience a total feeling of worthlessness.

Another institutional phenomenon that disturbs Dr. Vanier is the inviolability of prisons: "It's not playing the game! All these modern modes of protection, dogs and guns, and doors and doors and doors and electronics and barbed wire -- destroy hope. The psychology this induces is not just a sense of worthlessness, but it makes the inmates feel that they are also dangerous persons."

"Who's mad?" Dr. Vanier suggested that we should all meet some normal people -- "They're very funny!" He said that at Troily, his home for mentally handicapped adults in France, they meet all different types of 'normal' people. Like people who donate televisions that don't work and shoes with holes in them, because they feel that somehow the handicapped won't notice . . . or the Pious ones who praise in a stupid fashion to make themselves feel less guilty -- "The analysis of their behavior is that in regarding me as superhuman because I live with these men, they thus regard the wounded as sub-human, and excuse themselves from having to give them the same justice and regard as other men."

. . . Or the distant ones . . .

"There are a lot of them . . . they're distinguished by their sadness; you know that that's one of the great marks of maturity in our society. As students, you're just learning to be sad because you're the in-between group. Anyway, I remember one man who saw Jean-Claude - a wonderful fellow, always laughing and playing jokes; not much good work-wise, but a great guy - some call him a mongoloid, but he's really just Jean-Claude. Well, just as I was finishing an interview with this man in my office, Jean-Claude came in laughing, as usual. When he left, the man turned to me with a face down to there and said, 'Isn't it sad!'"

"Then there are the Technical types; they've been to school. This type always wants to see the file before the person . . . there's a great danger in meeting them this way, and not through their eyes, their demeanor, their voice." Dr. Vanier told of the training-school group from Paris that asked to visit, saying "We're particularly interested in the sexuality of your men.""Well, we're particularly interested in the sexuality of educators," replied Dr. Vanier. A rather stunned silence ensued at the other end of the line.

But there's a serious point revealed here. "There is a great need to delve into our society and discover why we have fear and a feeling of estrangement from one another. It is these feelings that lead us to justify ourselves by inferiorizing others, just as the educators felt that our men do not require the same human dignity as 'normal' people."

"The men at Troily, like all the wounded, live constantly in a state of feeling worthless and unimportant, just as we all have such moments. The essential thing a wounded person wants is to be respected for his being as it is -- for his gestures, or his small accomplishments. Others, like the workers at Troily, can give them this feeling of worth by looks, touches, and such small things. It is the tiny things, not the big ones that are important in this life."

"The bringing of worth is the bringing back of a deep feeling of confidence; making the discovery that we are not made just to do things, but to give life by very simple means. The helping of one man by another is the union of life calling forth something much deeper than efficacy."

"Most of our work is based on activity which has its root in fear -- the flight from communion and from meeting people. But we will begin to live only when we hear the cry of the wounded, that silent

Continued on page 3

Classifieds

WATCH FOR and save your Q-Bucks. You will need them in order to play the new political game "ILLOGISTICS", to be released Monday.

From one ninety nine
William Street
We offer thanks
To those whose feet
On Friday last
Moved to our party.
We hope the next
Will be as hearty.
So dry out quickly
Take a long leak
And we'll refill you
Post reading week.

THOSE LOOKING for permanent or summer jobs that require the submission of a personal resume should contact Page Resumes at 549-1384 for assistance. A well prepared personal history is a great way to introduce yourself.

HELP WANTED - Part time clerical work, accuracy -required, $2-hour. Interviews Feb. 7, 8, 7:30 pm Room 238, Interim Admin. Bldg.

LOOKING FOR a new place to live and a new way of living? Science '44 Co-op Open House Feb. 5

WANTED urgently - a house for 4 male students for next year. Call 544-7600, 544-7382 or 544-7383.

WANTED: Two bedroom apartment for next year. Urgent. Please contact Penny or Jennifer at dinner time. 544-9472.

SUE: we apologize for ever letting anyone know your fantastic drinking ability. Pete & Bob WANTED FOR next year - a two bedroom apartment near campus. Please phone Pete 544-7170 or Bob 544-7471.

WANTED: Two bedroom apartment for next year. Must be contacted immediately in order to settle agreement. Call 544-8767.

ANYONE interested in joining the committee wich runs Bitter Grounds Coffee House should come to our meetings - Wednesdays at 7:00 pm. Jackson Lounge (Clark Hall). Or come up to bitter grounds and ask.

KIRGHIZ STUDENT from Jerusalem requires viscous beeswax. Peter Taylor 544-7606.

AN INVITATION TO BITCH: Remember in September when you purchased all your books for your courses - did you enjoy the experience? Do you have some suggestions concerning the bookstore service at Queen's? Come to the open meeting of the Senate Task Force on bookstores and let us hear them. Tuesday, Feb. 8th in John Watson Hall 517 at 7:30 pm.

THAT 4-bedroom apartment still eludes us. If you have any information leading to its capture, please call Lynn 544-8262 or Sandy 544-8273.

FREE Quart of BEER with yearcard when you "Vote and Bloat" - Arts '73 elections, Feb. 8 7:30 at 7:00 Dunning 14 and 8:30 the pub.

THE ECUMENICAL Institute - The Toronto region is holding a weekend course in Existential Christianity in Kingston February 11-13. Further information and applications call Ray Bourgeart 542-9989. Costs subsidized by A.S.U.S. Other Events Committee.

WATERBED'S finest quality, 5 year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

Casino Royale Happenings

MONDAY FEB. 7 - LAS VEGAS BEER BASH Second Floor Common Room 8 pm, Beer 3-$1.00

FRIDAY FEB. 11 - RAFFLE DRAW
Tickets $1.00 - available in Dunning Hall Foyer and from all Co-merce Students.

FIRST PRIZE: Trip for two to Las Vegas - all expenses paid plus $500.

SECOND PRIZE: $300. Stereo

THIRD PRIZE: Twenty albums of your choice.

FRIDAY NIGHT
Commerce Hockey Tournament - Harty Arena 8:30 pm

SATURDAY FEB. 12: "CAESAR'S PALACE"
Commerce Formal at the Round Table
Tickets $9.00 Phone: Phill Grubbe 548-7153

ASUS

MEET THE CANDIDATES NIGHT

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 7th

7:30 P.M.

STIRLING D

ALL ASUS CANDIDATES WILL BE PRESENT!
ITS YOUR CHANCE TO MEET YOUR CANDIDATES! PLEASE USE IT!
26 PEOPLE HAVE SHOWN THEIR INTEREST! HOW ABOUT YOU!

Now that you can fly to Europe for peanuts, here's how little you shell out to get around:

$130 for Two Months of unlimited rail travel in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland.

You shell out $130, and get a Student-Railpass. All you need is the bread and something to show you're a bona fide student between 14 and 25.

Our Student-Railpass gives you all that unlimited rail travel on the 100,000 mile railroad networks of those 13 countries. For two foot-loose months. So with low air fares and Student-Railpass you've got Europe made.

Our Student-Railpass gets you Second Class travel on our trains. You'll find that there's very little second class about Second Class. Besides being comfortable, clean, fast, and absurdly punctual, the European trains have some other advantages for you. They take you from city center to city center, so you don't have to hassle airports. And the stations are helpful homes away from home, with Pictograms that give you information in the universal language of signs, and dining rooms, bookstores and other helpful facilities.

Now, here's the catch. You can't get your Student-Railpass or the regular First Class Eurailpass in Europe—you have to get them before you leave the country. So see your Travel Agent soon. Meanwhile, send in the coupon for a free folder, complete with railroad map.

Prices quoted in U.S. dollars.

STUDENT-RAILPASS The way to see Europe without feeling like a tourist.

Eurailpass is valid in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland.

Eurailpass, Box 2168, Toronto, 1, Ontario 193A - Feb. 72

Please send me your free Eurailpass folder with railroad map. ☐ Or your Student-Railpass folder order form. ☐

Name_____ Street_____

City_____ Apt._____ Zone_____ Prov._____

STUDENT - RAILPASS

AVAILABLE FROM

ASSOCIATION OF STUDENT COUNCILS

44 St. George St.; Toronto 5; 962-8404

Also available: Student flights to Europe and Within Europe, car rentals, International ID cards, tours, student hostels, jobs abroad, etc... All at student prices.

Insanity continued

cry, and discover that we can love. Diplomas and intelligence can be the vehicle to activate this love, but they can't substitute for it."

In conclusion, Dr. Vanier said, "I believe I can bring them peace if I allow myself to be loved by God."

In addition to being director of the home at Troily, Dr. Vanier is also the author of three books, "Tears of Silence", "In Weakness Strength", and "Eruption to Hope", in which he says: "Living with Raphael and Philippe and many others who have become my brothers and sisters, I began to understand a little better the message of Jesus and his particular love for the poor in spirit and for the impoverished and weak ones of our society. I have learned much from them and feel deeply indebted to them.

What's happening on campus?

Exam timetable

The first draft of the spring final examination timetable was posted by the Registrar's Office on Tuesday.

There are two important changes in the final examination timetable this year. First, it is based on the class timetable slot system rather than on the previously used method comparing student registrations on the computer. And the time available for examinations in the Faculty of Arts and Science and in the Schools of Business, Nursing, Physical and Health Education, and Rehabilitation Therapy has been reduced by one week. This will result in the scheduling of some exams during the evening.

The production of the 1972 timetable was the work of an Examination Working Group under the Chairmanship of Professor C.D. Pearse of the Department of Mathematics. The group was established by the Senate Committee on Academic Procedures in September, 1971.

Suggestions for timetable design for future years from staff or students would be welcomed by the Group. Any comments or questions or individual scheduling problems with regard to the April 1972 final examination timetable should be directed as soon as possible to the Office of the Chief Examination Proctor, Room 12, Richardson Hall.

prison health study

Dr. Botterell, former Dean of Medicine at Queen's University has been asked to study the health care system in Ontario prisons.

"I have very little knowledge of the problem but have the advantage of an open mind, he told the Journal.

The investigation follows a recent recommendation by a coroner's jury inquiring into the death of Stephen Getson in the Don Jail on November 16.

Getson an inmate of Toronto's Mimico and Don Jails died of a ruptured spleen. The Jury found that death had followed the excessive use of force by prison guards while the young man's spleen was severely swollen by mononucleos.

Pollution probe

"We aren't doing a heck of a lot," Roy Hutchison, co-ordinator of Pollution Probe told the Journal.

This results from money problems and the lack of a full time staff. He commented that students do not have enough time to make Pollution Probe a viable organization. "Therefore, we hope to get it into the hands of the community."

A glass and metal collection was to be attempted over the christmas holidays. However, the metal collection had already been done and there was no place to put the glass once collected. The project had to be scrapped.

Pollution Probe is presently in the process of setting up information depots. There will be two or three on campus and at least four downtown.

Hutchison said that this was aimed at creating community interest in the project so that they will eventually take over its operation.

Volunteers needed

The Canadian University Students Overseas is looking for Canadians with degrees, diplomas, tradesman's papers or their equivalent as volunteers for service in other countries, Andy Woodsworth, a returning volunteer stated.

Woodsworth told a group of students and faculty Tuesday night that CUSO volunteers provide professional and technical assistance to overseas governments and agencies to whom they are sent on two year assignments.

The problem that is becoming apparent in many countries that CUSO serves, is that, once educated the natives tend to leave the country for higher paying jobs elsewhere. This means that a large number of volunteers are necessary he said.

Those interested in CUSO will find application forms available in the International Center of the Student's Union.

What's most important in a co-op?

. . . People

Open House
Feb. 5

314 William
320 William
30 Garrett
31 Garrett
13 Sydenham
15 Sydenham

Science 44 Co-op

Applications Available

Career Seminar Series 1971 - 72

Alma Mater Society
and the Career Planning & Placement Office
presents

Writing As A Trade

on February 7th, 1972
at
7:00 p.m.
in Smaller Common Room
Students' Union
guest speaker
Miss Cathy Perkins
Publications Editor, Queen's University

This seminar will interest all students who might be interested in earning money by writing

Pregnant and distressed?
We can help you!

BIRTHRIGHT
546-LIFE (5433)

3 DAY SALE
50% OFF!!

All New Books
x x x
All Records $3.50
(Sets: $3.25 a disc)

THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY

NONESUCH
Book Sellers
255 Princess Street
(open daily 9:30-5:30
Thurs - Fri 9:30-9:00)

FROM THE YEAR THAT BROUGHT YOU
"UM PA PA"

NOW COMES

VOTE & BLOAT

VOTE - Active and Honourary Exec.
- Tues Feb 8-72
- Dunning 14 - 7:00 PM

BLOAT - The Pub - 8:30 PM
- 50c Admission (Arts '73 Only & Guest)
- BEER - 3-$1.00

BONUS - 1 FREE Quart Beer - Year Card

ARTS' 73

ARTS 73

YEAR ELECTIONS
DUNNING 14

TUES. FEB. 8 7:00 PM.

HONOURARY AND ACTIVE EXECUTIVES

HONOURARY POSITIONS
PRESIDENT
1st 2nd 3rd
VICE-PRESIDENTS
SECRETARY

4 th YEAR
PRESIDENT
VICE-PRESIDENT
SECRETARY-TREASURER
SOCIAL CONVENOR

NOMINATIONS FOR PRESIDENT OF EITHER EXECUTIVE SHOULD BE IN TO TED ASHBURY 542-4747 BY 5:00PM TUESDAY

AWARENESS 72

Tues. Feb 8th 7:30, Dunning Aud. Poverty in Kingston

Wed. Feb 9th 7:30 Ellis Aud The Emperor's New Clothes - with Dr. Norman Z. Alcock

Thurs, Feb 10th 7:30 Grant Hall People, Politics, Power Poverty

Mon. Feb. 14th 7:30, Rm. 201 Kingston Hall Queen's - A Hotbed of Apathy

Tues. Feb 15th 7:30 Grant Hall People Before Paper with Stanley Burke

Thurs. Feb 17th 7:30, Rm. 128 Jeffery Hall Chto Delat-What to Do assessment and reaction

COMEDY, COTTON AND TRASH

-marien

By Dick Loney

Sunday's AMS Concert was comprised of three elements - comedy, blues and trash: in that order. The comedic element was provided by T.V.'s "hippy-dippy Weatherman", George Carlin, who demonstrated that his type of humour goes down well with a college crowd. Carlin's monologues spanned such controversial issues as drugs and the Viet Nam War (his rhetorical question, "What are we doing there?" implicating at the same time his Canadian audience, erroneously) and the long pregnant pause which followed this query was a satiric indicator that such verbal justifications for the American conflict in the rice-paddies of South-East Asia are embarrassingly unanswerable.

Carlin's material was not directed to a political audience, however, but covered such hilarious topics as the manner in which people use that tiny expletive -- "shit!" and the tonal qualities which could vary the meanings and effects of such a handy, and malleable little word. Such departures as the "shit-sketch" and the use of seven unacceptable words to the T.V. censor displayed Carlin's nightclub material to those of us who are accustomed to viewing George solely on late-nite T.V.'s Johnny Carson Show.

For anyone familiar with his work, his inclusion of the "News Report" was perhaps a bit repetitious -- but even the second or third time around, Carlin managed to come across as an extremely funny guy -- his takeoff of the now-banned cigarette commercials, for example, was a riot! Carlin certainly set the stage for what was to follow, as the second portion of the program brought the James Cotton Blues Band into the spotlight.

Cotton's four sidemen excelled -- a steady, exciting drummer; a bass-player who handled the bottom end with distinction; a tenor-sax player who wailed from opening number to encore, and finally a guitarist whose licks had to be heard to be believed. After a few blues numbers on their own, this unit was joined by their leader and inspiration, James Cotton himself. Cotton strolled on stage dressed in a long-sleeved ban-lon shirt, and armed only with a throaty blues baritone, a red-hot blues-Harp and a hand-mike, completely "blew the minds" of the frantic Queen's crowd.

The Blues apparently is the musical genre to which the Jock Harty Arena audience owes the most allegiance. A far from capacity crowd packed from blue-line to blue line, seated on pillows and blankets at ice-level, and in the bleachers at the back in a block of stadium-like seats, was brought to its feet for extended periods of time, swaying and clapping along with the fervent, good-time blues of the Cotton Clan.

James Cotton himself appeared a little emotionally overwhelmed by such enthusiastic applause, cheers and cries of "yeah" which greeted his show -- what began as visible disbelief, as he hung his head in appreciation of this unprecedented Queen's greeting, was magically transformed into that hard to define commodity that is known as "showmanship".

The Cotton Blues Band responded to their overwhelming welcome with a barrage of music as impressive and lively as anything heretofore heard among the hallowed halls of the College of the Queen. An inspired, professional performance by the five cats in Cotton's group put everyone in the Arena in the hyper mood that the wafting clouds of sweet-smelling smoke that hung over centre-ice had perhaps failed to supply.

Which brings us to the third portion of the concert -- which could only be labelled as "Trash"! Edgar Winter and the White Trash were just that -- except the only noticeable white commodity was Winter's hair -- the Trash was pervasive. Resplendant in a long passion-purple robe over psychedelic yellow, red, and purple clinging-satin pants, Winter resembled an enemic, bleached Tiny Tim, with a voice a few times weaker than Tiny's.

In spite of their strained attempts to generate any sustained type of excitement, the only action which could be attributed to Winter's crew was the gyrating derrieres of a handful of teen-boppers who remained standing in front of the bandstand. A crowd which displayed unrestrained emotional appreciation for Cotton's Blues became a strangely subdued assembly of viewers who were assaulted in pain-threshold waves of over-amplified guitar and piano solos -- the like of which could be duplicated by at least any one of fifty heavy rock groups from Metro Toronto.

-solman

The only reason that everyone didn't leave en masse seemed to be a curious wonder as to what stereo-typed Rock-concert technique Winter's band would call upon next -- although more people departed after about two numbers than had walked out on a Byrd's Concert in the winter of 1969-70. A new record: at least this time it was justified!

After failing to motivate what they must have realized was an eager, receptive audience, Winter & Co. had recourse to drag out, and subsequently perform a version of Jerry Lee Lewis's "Great Balls of Fire", which was as mediocre as it was undistinguished in musical interpretation. Even Richard Penniman's (and Elvis's) rendition of "Long Tall Sally" had no corresponding likeness in Winter's mundane version -- indeed, except for loudness, there was nothing very distinguished about Edgar Winter & Trash.

So this was the Biggie, eh? For this you were all docked $3.00 at Registration, so that the Promoters and Entertainment Directors etc. would not have to go out on a limb in attempting to bring us the type of entertainment to which Queen's audiences have been accustomed. Add to this the 3 bucks each which was required as admission to supplement the initial rip-off of $3.00 and you are left with having paid $6.00 -- for what??

Sure, Carlin and Cotton were great -- but let's face it, Blues Bands are not exactly setting the record industry on fire these days. And if this is the type of concert that Queen's wants, why was it that every second person at that concert was definitely a high-schooler?

If the majority of us (is it 8,000?) paid a three dollar concert fee so that some first-line entertainers could be brought to contract, what in the name of reality happens so that we get stuck with a bummer like Edgar Winter & Trash? Also, just in passing, what happened to Jake Holmes? (I won't even mention that the concert was again about a half-hour late in starting).

Perhaps we had better spend a little less time worrying about David Merrick's AMS-Cadillac and concentrate on getting some talent around here!

What I'm saying, is that the featured portion of this Concert (last year it was the ho-hum Grass Roots) was overshadowed by a non-name group which saved the evening from being a complete loss by a superb performance (last year, Dave Rea did it) -- this should not happen -- especially at the prices you are paying! But then again, maybe you were satisfied, and the lack of audience response at the close of Winter's performance reflected a silent, but overwhelmed audience which was dumbfounded with appreciative awe??? . . .

Chronicles XII

By Rachael Edwards

The Drama Department presented Chronicles XII this week, and achieved the success that we have come to expect from the Chronicles series. The short play, Strangers, was written by Morison Bock, an instructor in the Department, and ably acted by Fred Euringer, Christopher Miller and Patti Fardell.

Euringer plays Woody, the misfit of the Stevenson family, who has returned unexpectedly to get his revenge for an unhappy childhood. He carries the part beautifully with his self-confident swagger and smug replies.

Miller is the younger brother, Seymour, a suave and sophisticated professor who has achieved the success that his older brother has missed completely. Everything about Miller conveys that success -- the fashionable clothes, the sculptured goatee and his very manner. At first he is calm and collected in the face of Woody's threats but we see that composure crumble as Woody persists with the argument.

Patti Fardell is Alison, the girl who is caught between the two men -- Seymour is her fiance and Woody is a former lover. Her entrance is prepared for long in advance and when she does enter the room, she makes a striking impression. Miss Fardell plays the role well, mixing short flares of temper with her generally cool reactions to what is going on.

The play starts out rather slowly but at Alison's entrance, the tempo picks up considerably and continues smoothly to the end. It inspires a mixture of reactions -- laughter at Woody's smart comments, and a kind of numbness at the violence of the arguments. Through the excellent acting of the cast, we find our response to the characters changing completely during the play. Woody emerges looking not nearly as sinister as at the beginning of the play, but Seymour loses his aura of calm sophistication in his violent outbursts.

The set is the living room of Seymour's apartment and its furnishings reflect his type of personality. The leather chesterfield, and chairs, the bar and the rest of the things provide the symbols of his affluence.

Strangers is well put together in all aspects. It gives one some interesting insights into family conflicts and jealousy. We're looking forward to the next Chronicles production which will, no doubt, be just as successful.

White Trash?

Pro

By R. W. Dease

Edgar Winter and White Trash Sunday night proved for most people to be one of those groups who either 'turned you on' or 'turned you off'.

For me, Winter's voice and playing talent were as dazzling as his costume. Not only did he prove a master of his instrument, using everything that it could produce, but he demanded even more from his voice. In his back-and-forth communication with the guitar, Winter intoned notes from every part of the scale and incorporated all the inflection and tonal effects that a well trained voice could command.

It was unfortunate that White Trash could not all be present but the four that were put on an original and refreshing display.

Those who criticised the group really didn't check out the drummer who backed the group with a superb flood of exciting beat.

It takes a lot for a group to fill the arena with real sound and I have to commend Edgar Winter and White Trash on an excellent performance.

They really demanded more recognition than they got even from those they did not "turn on".

Con

By I. Mc.

For those of you who didn't know, or didn't notice; if the names Jerry Lacroix, Floyd Radford, Jon Smith, Mike MacLellan or their absence Sunday meant nothing; you have no reason to feel deceived. All cynicism aside, we should at least feel grateful for the token appearance of Edgar Winter.

What happened to the original White Trash? Perhaps for want of a better booking they stayed home. I mean, since when do successful bands undergo total personnel revision in the short space of 32 days, specifically since December 30, 1971, when Winter and the "real" White Trash performed in Ottawa. But, who am I to make such an accusation? We must simply wait for some future appearance of Winter and Trash for a larger, better paying audience.

I only feel that we should have been made aware, prior to the concert, of the personnel "overhaul" of White Trash. Knowing this, I for one wouldn't have attended, and this would have avoided Sunday night's disappointment.

Anyway, much credit to George Carlin and James Cotton for getting together an excellent first portion of the show. Too bad about the headliners.

Famous Berlin Ensemble

"Their Schubert Octet was a masterpiece" wrote the New York Times during the last tour of the Berlin Philharmonic Octet. Queen's music lovers will have a rare opportunity to hear this ensemble on Monday 7 February at 8:30 in Grant Hall. The Schubert Octet is the featured work on the programme.

The Octet is made up of members of the famous Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. Many years ago, the late musical director of the Berlin Philharmonic, Wilhelm Furtwaengler felt that this ensemble should perpetuate the name and tradition of his famous orchestra. Since then, the Octet has performed throughout Europe with frequent appearances at the music festivals in Lucerne, Vienna, Salzburg and Edinburgh. They have concertized in Japan, Central and South America, South Africa and are currently appearing for the third time on a limited tour in Canada and the United States. This is their first Queen's performance.

The Berlin Philharmonic Octet also has the distinction of having many compositions dedicated to them. Such dedications are in themselves an enormous tribute to the brilliance of this group of extraordinary musicians. One such work, the Octet by Paul Hindemith will be performed at Queen's.

The third work on the programme is the Sonata No. 3 by Rossini.

The Octet is comprised of two violins, viola, cello, double bass, clarinet, bassoon and French horn.

Their performances have been recorded on the prestigious Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft label and are familiar to many Queen's music lovers who will welcome this opportunity to hear this internationally acclaimed Octet on Monday 7 February at 8:30 p.m. in Grant Hall. More information can be obtained from the Division of Concerts, Queen's University -- 547-6194.

Successful Year

The Queen's Division of Concerts will be presenting their last concert of the series of February 7 at Grant Hall. This year has been extremely successful for the Division with sell-out crowds at the five concerts they have put on. Next year Barry Cole will be continuing as head, having taken that position over from Grant Sampson in September.

Subscriptions for next year's series will be sent out later this term. Any interested students who have changed their address during the year are advised to send their new address to the Division of Concerts.

We're looking for people who like to write

Drop into the Journal office this Sunday afternoon and evening!

Queen's
journal
Volume XCIX, Number 44,
Friday, February 4, 1972,
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

Spies armed with sophisticated listening devices could in the not-too-distant future, tap a television set if it's hooked to a two-way cable.

Without the viewer's knowledge, they could listen to, and record, the programs he watches, his transactions with department stores and banks, even his living-room conversations.

The new dimension in electronic eavesdropping would become possible with installation of two-way cable television, a development being tested in some communities and likely to come into limited use within five years.

Henry Geller, special assistant to Dean Burch, chairman of the U.S. Federal Communications Commission, said two-way systems remain in a rudimentary stage. Although he agreed they could be tapped, he said "nobody would dream of doing it".

The American Civil Liberties Union isn't so sure. Jerrolle Oppenheim, staff counsel of the Illinois ACLU, wrote in a recent issue of the national organization's newsletter that "cable-tapping is no less of a threat than wiretapping. Imagine a TV camera in your home controlled by the FBI".

Cable-TV specialists say department-store and banking transactions could be conducted by television, pollsters could question citizens via the tube, and water and electric metres could be read that way.

ACLU associate director Alan Reitman of New York said: "The information being recorded by wire might be of interest to some third party. If there's a wire, it's possible to tap it."

Already, the United States Defense Department has developed a system which would allow them to turn on your TV and broadcast warnings of nuclear attack over your set.

This sytem, called the Decision Information Distribution System (DIDS) and planned by the Office of Civil Defense (OCD), employs transmitters which will relay information about enemy attacks and natural disasters.

The national DIDS system, which will cost an estimated $49 million, will include 10 such transmitters, constructed at the rate of two per year. But these transmitters ultimately could turn on more than a few voice receivers, teletype machines, and warning sirens. They could turn on your TV set.

The OCD plan calls for the mandatory inclusion in every new TV of a special DIDS receiver which would switch on the set upon signal from the DIDS transmitters. Such a circuit would cost about $8.70 to produce; the price of new televisions could be expected to rise accordingly. Congressional approval would be necessary to require the inclusion of such a circuit in all TV sets manufactures -- legislation similar to the All-Channel Receiver Act which required manufactures to put UHF receivers in all new televisions.

Plans by the Office of Civil Defense to recommend passage of such a law have raised the hackles of the broadcasting industry.

The broadcasters fear that DIDS will also include a "Seize key", allowing the Department of Defense to take control of TV and radio transmitters, especially when the stations are off the air. Last month, the executive committee of the National Association of Broadcasters voted to oppose any attempt by government to control either station transmitters or home receivers.

The emergency-warning system currently in operation alerts broadcasters over wires leased from the telephone company, over the Associated Press and United Press International news agency circuits, and over channels from the White House to the network bureaus and their affiliates.

Earlier this year, the warning system broke down. A false emergency-action order was transmitted during a test from the Colorado warning center, and some broadcasters notified their audience of an impending nuclear attack.

Most, however, refused to switch to emergency operations until they had confirmed the warning.

Under DIDS, the broadcasters would be bypassed. The President could turn on your TV.

letter:

de-Canadianization

Dear Editors;
To Bill (One fine Canadian):

Oh, woe is me! We are becoming de-Canadianized, and even without really knowing how un-Canadian we were all the time. Sadness and Gloom! Worse yet, our stalwart businessmen are perpetrating the same evils on our oppressed Caribbean friends as the ---- Americans are on us... This must be due to the fact that we haven't a single course in Commerce on Canadian Business Practice. (I mean, just how un-Canadian can one get?)

Then, you simply neglected so many other areas of de-Canadianization. To my knowledge there are no courses with a Canadian emphasis in: Anatomy, Biochemistry, Biology, Chemistry, Classics (Unless Greek can now be thought of as a Canadian language -- There are a lot of them around, you know.), Computing and Information Science, Drama, German, and ..., so on through the list. Think of the case that could have been made. The possibilities for Canadianizing these, and other, disciplines are fantastic! Think, one could become one of the very few specialists in Canadian Spanish, or Canadian Anatomy (This one would probably be popular!), or even Canadian Mathematics (using Canadian Greek symbols of course!)

There is another area I feel you have neglected. First, second and third degrees are all obtained after one has formed a major part of one's personality (see Canadian Psychology). You do learn to play hockey, eat Red River cereal and sugar pie, and punctuate your sentences with "eh!" before you go off to University. So, one should look at not the high school, but the public school of all the members of our teaching staff. I'd suggest grades one, two and three. We are all in Ontario, and the money to support Queen's comes from this Province. So, perhaps the requirement should be grades one, two and three in a public school in Ontario. Then we could also get rid of all the pesky Maritimers, Prairie types, and those from B.C. who only came across the Rockies with a tourist permit and then became Landed Immigrants. In this way one might even be relatively safe from retaliation in telling Newfie jokes.

In doing this we would get rid of a lot of foreign influence. Also, as the number of professors left would be reduced, the cost of a University education would drop drastically. This would create joy in some Government Departments, as they could then lower taxes and claim to havedone Marvelous Things for the Taxpayer. But, there are problems. A large number of professors would disappear. Finding replacements for them would take a while. Until they arrived the choice in courses would be a trifle limited, and class size would be larger than now. (I'd predict that Canadian Greek would hit an all time high).

With all this, however, the problem would still not be solved. We keep forgetting -- not that we ever intended to, but it just slips our minds -- that the real, authentic, one-hundred-per-cent, been-here-for-longer-than-anyone-else Canadians are what we call the Canadian Indians. As the numbers of them in Ontario is not too far off the number of professors and academic administrators, why not simply fire the lot and use nothing but Indians. This would, at one stroke, solve two problems: Indian poverty and de-Canadianized Universities. (Put the profs on Welfare and ignore them. This problem would probably solve itself in less than a generation).

The courses we would have would be very interesting, and they might include such titles as: Mohawk 101, Cree Classical Archeology, Iroquois Philosophy, and perhaps even a course in Social Change Among Indigent White Ex-Academics. I might be pursuaded to start my education all over again -- beginning with grades one, two and three to be sure, and hopefully in Mohawk or Cree.

David E. W. Holden
(One new Canadian)

Festival of Women

As part of the Festival of Women taking place at the University of Toronto on March 11th and 12th, there will be an exhibition of photographs by and about women. Some time after the Festival, this show will move to the Baldwin Street Gallery of Photography and may then travel to still other galleries.

The organizers of the exhibit are looking for both single images and series of pictures. The photographs must have been taken by women and be related to the subject of women in some way, but how they are related and in what form is completely up to the photographer.

The organizers would also like, if possible, articles about your experiences as women photographers: the problems you encountered as a model, wife or girl friends of a photographer, etc. The writing is optional.

The photographs should be unmounted, with your name and address on the back. Those chosen will be carefully mounted by the organizers, hopefully on Strathmore all rag board. All the work will be returned, though the photographs used in the exhibit will not be returned for quite a while. Make sure your work is packaged carefully. You know what the Post Office is like.

Send your photographs to:
Pam McLeod and Laura Jones,
23 Baldwin Street,
Toronto 130, Ontario.

If you have films, posters, paintings, poems, music, etc., to contribute, contact Myrna Kotash, 157 Roehampton Avenue, Toronto 315, Ontario.

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

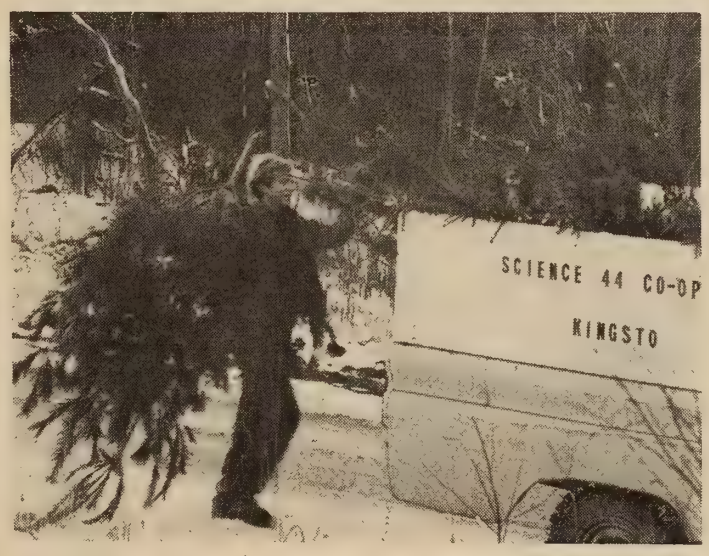
Thanks this week to Rachael, and Jennifer, Bob who fingered flashily (and liked Edgar), Bev, who came back, briefly, Mary who watched, Pat who also flashed, and Chris who took a night off.

Living together

Science '44 Co-op

Interested in trying co-operative living? Science '44 Co-op, an independent, co-ed, student-run organization, offers you the chance to become part of a unique community. Its big enough (200-or-so people) to provide a good cross-section of people and activities, but its also divided into individual houses which become homes to a small group of 10 to 20 co-opers living in each. The intimacy shared by each small group provides a basis for the larger group spirit which is the high point of Co-op.

Student-organization is another key to Co-op spirit: Co-op is, literally, what you make it, because it relies on the contributions of each and every member to keep it running smoothly. Our 200 people and 21 houses sub-divide into 3 divisions, each with a central kitchen - the groups being small enough that our food doesn't get that institutional flavour! Operating the kitchens and keeping the individual houses in order requires a contribution of 2 to 3 hours work duty a week per member. But that's a small requirement when you realize that due to such contributions, Co-op is able to offer its members a rent significantly lower than other campus housing plans.



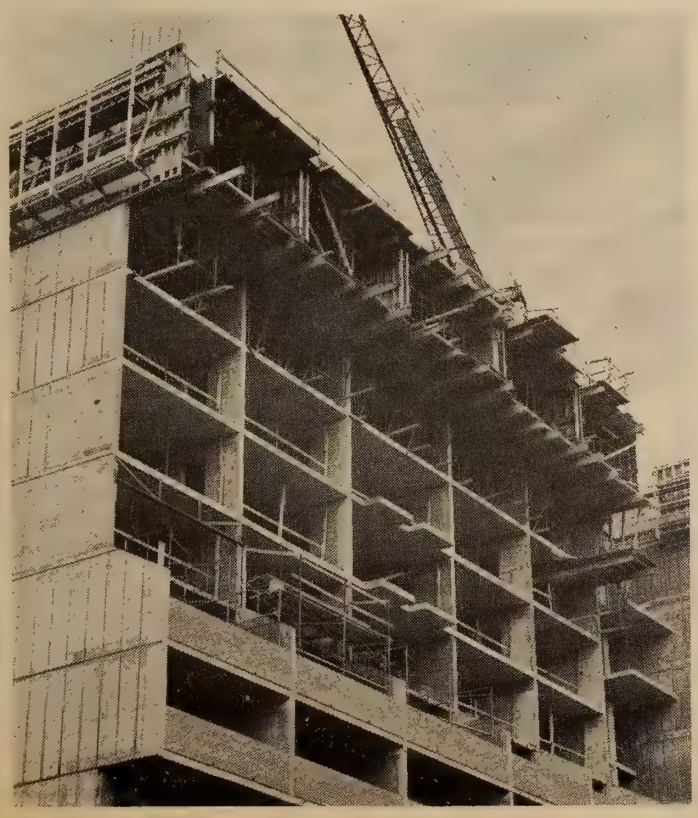
In addition to covering room and board, rent provides funds for social, academic and cultural events within the Co-op. Parties and other social events are held often, faculty members and other campus figures are welcomed for dinner and conversation, we have art workshops, poetry readings, an ace broomball league and everything from kite flying to Laurier LaPierre - subject only to the inspiration of each new group of Co-opers. There's always something to do around Co-op, but everything is strictly informal so each Co-oper can follow his personal bent without fear of criticism.

At our Open House in the Pub, Monday night, somebody asked if there are any rules in Co-op: With the exception of required work duty (2 or 3 hours), the answer is a definite no. The only rules we have are those of common consideration for others, which are of course the crux of co-operative living. As one third-year co-oper put it, "From my own experience in co-op, I would say that it is based on the idea that, given the right living conditions, different people will meet, then appreciate, understand and even come to love each other."

Perhaps such thoughts sound idealistic to those who haven't tried co-op living, but the large number of returning co-opers each year bears testimony to the community spirit which binds us together.

If you like people, you'll like Co-op, but don't take our word for it. Come and see us at our Open House tomorrow, Saturday, February 5. 314 and 320 William Street will be open from 9:30 to 12:00, 30 and 31 Garrett Street and 13 and 15 Sydenham will be open from 1:00 to 4:30 p.m. Application forms will be available at this time; please bring $1.00 application fee.

-Mary O'Rourke

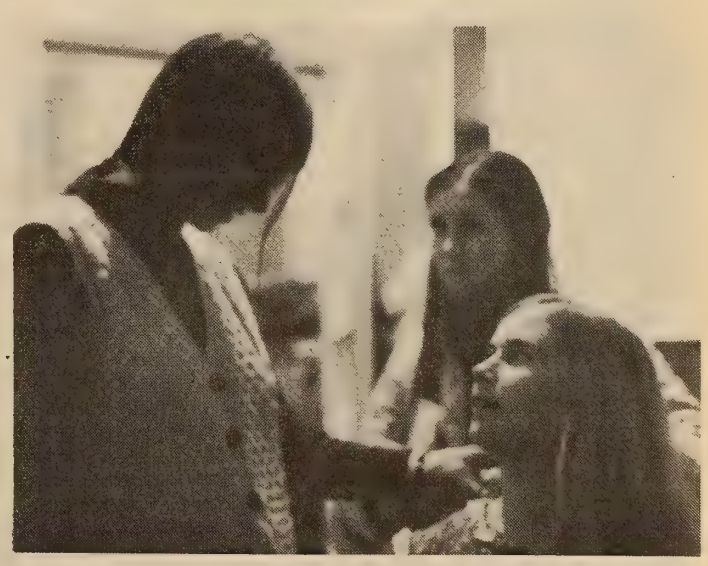


Elrond

Another example of a type of co-operative living will be Elrond College, the sixteen-story student-organized and managed residential structure at the corner of Princess St. and Division. Expected to take in its first residents this summer, it will accommodate about 400 students in all.

The building will consist of five distinct "neighbourhoods" of three storeys each; three of the neighbourhoods contain house units and the other are apartments. In total, there will be 50 self-contained, fully furnished houses for 2,4,6, or 12 people and 50 one and two person apartments.

The life style of Elrond will revolve around the various living units. All the 2,4,6 and 12 person units have their own kitchens and living areas, as well as bedrooms, and thus, constitute self-contained homes. However, several units share in each corridor and elevator stop in the building, and it is hoped that a larger sense of community will develop.



Elrond's seccess as a community will depend on decentralizing responsibility to the house and corridor levels. The college is designed to be co-operative by nature and most of the programmes and activities which take place in the college will be organized and handled by the residents.

Internal administration of the college will be planned by about two dozen members of the present Elrond users' committee, who will then divide themselves among the different living units in September, to help get organization started.

The only pre-appointed officers of Elrond, who will be paid from the operating budget, will be a general manager, a secretary, a bookkeepers, a maintenance man and a chef. General cleaning, dishwashing, serving in the dining room and other minor work will be performed by residents as part of their weekly two or three hours of work duty.

Organization in Elrond will depend on committees and on house and corridor managers, all of whom will be elected in the fall. Committees will probably include membership, education (for which a programme of seminars and crafts is already being designed) and communication. This group will be responsible for keeping residents and their committees in touch, and may even publish a bulletin to keep people informed about Elrond activities and events.

Those plans are only a small indication of the communal possibilities of Elrond; facilities, activities and events will happen entirely through the efforts of the founding members who enter Elrond in 1972.

Rita

Rita Coolidge, one of the busiest studio vocalists around, has done work on albums by Dave Mason, Graham Nash, Eric Clapton, Stephen Stills, Booker T. and Priscilla, Marc Benno and Joe Cocker, to name a few. She also participated on the fabled Mad Dogs and Englishmen tour with Joe Cocker and was featured in her own solo spot.

Thanks to all the years of work she's put behind her, Rita's jump to the role of solo vocalist is being made more than gracefully. Many artists she's helped in the studios repaid the favor on her first solo effort for A&M, a David Anderle production released early in 1971. The album proved to be a critical success and has fared well saleswise. Most importantly, it has served as a basis for her personal appearances and lends momentum to her new A&M album, Nice Feelin'.

Prior to recording Nice Feelin', Rita and the famous Dixie Flyers from Muscle Shoals embarked on several major tours in North America and Europe. Her European trip with Marc Benno and the Flyers found her touring with the Byrds and building up important confidence in front of very large audiences. Back on this side of the Atlantic, her American debut tour aimed for the more intimate clubs like the Gaslight in New York City and Whisky in L.A.

Nice Feelin' is the artistic extension of Rita's first Lp, though it was made slightly differently than the latter. Instead of using a supersession, Rita found the solid, comfortable backing of Marc Benno and the Dixie Flyers to be exactly what she needed. They did songs by Benno, Bob Dylan, Neil Young, Graham Nash, Dave Mason and Flyer Mike Utley.

Since Rita Coolidge has always been a working musician, her next move is always a natural: get out on the road and reach the people. She wants to work in Canada, where her version of Neil Young's "I Believe in You" was a giant hit, and she hopes to play colleges all over the U.S.

Once called "the Delta Lady," Rita can now be recognized just as readily by her own name. And that's for the good; her beauty, charm and unique singing style make it nice that you should know exactly who she is.

Rita Coolidge will be appearing in Grant Hall on Sunday, February 6 at 7:00 and 9:30 p.m. Tickets are available daily in the John Orr room in the Student's Union.

Festival '72

by Carol J. Rogers

Have you ceased to produce asbestos and one dimensional masterpieces since grade seven fell on your self concious head? If not, maybe you create in secret satisfaction hoping to escape notice or comment, but not denying that yes, there is pleasure in drawing, painting, mucking about with clay or paper and glue. Yes indeed. Free your secret delight, your hidden creativity in one of the Festival '72 Workshops.

In the Polson Room, first floor in the Union a few whirlwinds will take place from 8 p.m. to 12, providing you are there. Students who enjoy and know macrame, batik, clay work, leather work, and candle-making will be on hand to help you discover new techniques or experiment with ones you already know. In the same room, create an environment with tubes of newspaper, or a landscape with a collage.

Have you transcended the self-conscious stage and believed that yes, you are an artist? Perhaps you have a dusty or still-wet creation of a late night that you thought good, that you would like to share. The exhibit of community art (in the T.V. room on the second floor of the Union) is for you to witness and contribute to. You will find photographs, tapestries, batiks and sculpture if community (university) artists emerge from shyness, which they promise to do.

Besides the workshops and exhibit, there is a drama programme in McLaughlin Room, first floor. "Maihadi" (Indian for feast) is an anthology of Canadian Indian poetry dances, myths and legends to fill an hour of your history. Shelagh Dobson, Mary Campbell, Greg Eligh, Rosemary Patton and Dick Vanden Bosch are presenting the programme. Only if you are present at 9:00 p.m. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, can you share this with them.

If you consider yourself a spectator, don't entirely remove yourself from the Festival participation sphere. At least watch others enjoy themselves at work, or see what they have enjoyed making. Maybe the sphere will grow. That's the whole idea of Festival '72.

This Weekend's Events

Classical Music

International Centre Lounge
Friday
9:00 Bruce Davies, Classical Guitar
10:00 Collegium Musicum Choral Group Renaissance Secular Music
10:30 Bob Birnie, Vocal Solos
Saturday
8:30 Larry Moore, Classical Guitar
9:00 Daphne Rogers, Modern Piano
10:00 Barb & Anne Ritchie, Piano Duo
10:30 Mario Pinto & Max Burry, Guitar Duo

Popular Music

Friday — Ron Langille, Lawrence Meule, Larry Moore, Brian Comrie, James McGill, Sue Megill, Charlie Burton, Gary Doahnes, Don Fraser.
Saturday — Don Campbell, John Myers, Mario Pinto, Max Burry, Joanie Eaton, Kirk Elliot, Nelson Ethier, Skip Amey.
Sunday —Thomas Handy, Karen Young, Will O'Hara.
Jam Session - each night after 12:00.

Environmental Stimulation and Electronic Music

Second floor Common room
Improvisation Group: Gene Laskiewicz, Fred Maybee, Craig Tompkins, Peter Hutchson, Kirk Elliot, Ted Campbell, Scott McKenzie, Gordon Craig, Bill Buxton, Fred Henderson, Dave Keane.
Music by breath, combs, bottles, pocket instruments, double basses, moog, saxophone, and YOU.

Drama

McLaughlin Room
Friday, Saturday
'Naihada' (Feast) 9:00-10:00 p.m. — An anthology of Canadian Indian poems, dances, myths and legends. With Shelagh Dobson, Mary Campbell, Rosemary Patton, Greg Eligh & Dick VanderBosch.
'The Horse and Wagon Puppet Theatre',
Wallace Hall, Friday, Saturday
9:00 p.m. - 9:30 p.m. — 'The King's Story' — Street Show Puppet Theatre

Student Films

Dupuis Hall
Friday, Saturday
Starting 8 p.m.
8:00 'Woodstock Pop Festival', by Derek Redmond
8:25 — 'Picking Up the Pieces', by Jim Richardson & Don Dalik
8:45 — 'Peter's Poem', by Bill Blake
9:00 — 'Genesis', by Robin Nunn
9:05 — 'Kingston Free School Presents', by The Free School
9:20 — 'Footage', by Robin Nunn & Garth Dickinson
9:30 — 'Martin of Her Mind', by Dave Lee Lees

Underground Films

Dupuis Auditorium
Sunday
8:00 and 10:00
Including: 'Sympathy for the Devil', 'Happy Birthday Lenny', 'O Dem Watermelons'.

Art Festival Exhibition

T.V. Room (second floor Union)
Friday, Saturday, Sunday.
8:00 - 12:00 p.m.

Workshops and Demonstrations

Polson Room
Friday, Saturday, Sunday
8:00 - 12:00 p.m.

Poetry

Third Floor Common Room
Friday, Saturday, Sunday
8:30 - 11:00 p.m.
A SERIES OF Formal and informal readings and discussions.
8:30 — Friday, David Helwig, Richard Freeze
8:30 - 9:30 p.m. — Saturday, W. Barnes, Burget Roberts.
8:30 - 9:30 p.m. — Sunday, Tommy Hines, Burget Roberts. Informal readers include Lynette Hunter, Norm Campbell, Paul Kennedy, Penny Page, Pam Wiggin, and Brenda Maybee, and Steve Prosyn and Linda Harvey.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
MUSIC DEPARTMENT PRESENTS

DIE WINTERREISE

RANDALL MARSH, BARITONE
AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
MARGARET McLELLAN, PIANO
3:00 pm SUNDAY 6 FEBRUARY '72
ADMISSION FREE

COMING FEB . 11 !!!

MARATHON DANCE

For Camp Outlook
GRANT HALL
8 pm - 8 am

Pick up sponsor cards in Union, Victoria Hall Desk, Residence Meal Lines

TODAY'S CHILDREN

These youngsters with such intent faces are five year old twins, both have anglo-saxon background and have clean hair, good teeth and starry eyes.

Being small for their age and having the sweetest and most passive temperaments, Buck and Goofy seem to enjoy playing with kids younger than themselves. They are, however, happier in their own age group since starting kindergarden.

Buck's early months as a baby were sickly though he is now in good health despite periodic check-ups for heart defficiencies.

Goofy does have a problem but not one of health.

The boys are gentile, affactionate children, shy with strangers, loving, and anxious to please among people they know. They both need offices where their sweet dispositions will be appreciated and where they can surround themselves with warmth and security.

For further information, contact M. Simpson or T. Layton.

Cabaret Is Coming

presented by
QUEEN'S MUSICAL THEATRE

FEB. 9-12, KCVI Aud. 8 p.m.

Tickets:
Students $1.50, others $2.00
at Union, Door, Music Dept.,
House of Sounds

somedays

Friday, February 4

11.30 to 12.20 and 4.30 to 5.20 p.m.: Films with Lunch in Etherington Hall Aud. This week is "Early Diagnosis in Coronary Artery Disease", and "Prescription for Life".

12.00 to 1.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness presents "Best Damn Fiddler" and "Earth & Mankind Series", No. 3, in the International Centre.

6.00 p.m.: Science '44 Co-Op Coffee Hour. Drop in for a cup and view co-op living. 397 Brock St., 318 William St., and 128 Earl St.

7.00 to 8.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "World of One in Five" and "Things I Cannot Change" in Dunning Aud.

7.30 and 9.30 p.m.: Chronicles XII presents "Strangers" in the Studio Theatre. Tickets available at Queen's Drama Dept.

8.30 p.m.: The African Night featuring the Otu Highlife W'Afrika Dance Band, the "African" Juju and Atilogu Troupe Dancers and The Talking Drum. Bar available. Dress is optional and all are welcome. Admission is $2.00 single and $3.00 per couple. In Grant Hall.

8.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Time of Man" in Dunning.

8.30 p.m.: Dance with Toby Foss in Leonard Hall. Tickets 50c in meal lines. Beer 3-$1.00.

9.00 p.m.: Bitter Grounds Coffee House presents Eric and Marty Nagler, upstairs in the Union.

Arts Festival.

Saturday, February 5

7.30 p.m.: Chronicles XII. See Friday.

7.30 p.m.: 3rd Annual Chalmers Festival of Music and the Arts presents folk music. 212 Barrie St. (546-3263)

8.00 p.m.: Queen's Chinese Club sponsors "China Night" in Grant Hall. An evening of cultural entertainment featuring Lion Dance, Chinese Music, Chinese Martial Art, Folk Dances and many others. Admission is 75c for club members, $1.50 for Queen's students and $2.00 for others, tickets available at the International Centre or at the door.

8.15 p.m.: Chalmer's Festival presents "Dido and Aeneas", a short opera.

9.00 p.m.: Bitter Grounds Coffee House. See Friday.

Science '44 Co-op Open House at 314 and 320 William in the morning; 30 and 31 Garrett or 13 and 15 Sydenham in the afternoon.

Arts Festival

Sunday, February 6

10.30 a.m.: Folk Mass in Dunning Hall. Doughnuts and coffee afterwards.

10.30 a.m.: Chalmers Festival presents an organ recital.

11.00 a.m.: Registration for Tricolour Autosport Club Ice Trials on Sydenham Lake at Sydenham. For infor phone 546-6232 or 544-7127.

11.00 a.m.: Chalmers Festival presents a festival service with modern and Renaissance music.

3.00 p.m.: Randall Marsh and Margaret McLellan will perform "Die Winterreise", a concert sponsored by the Music Dept. in the Art Centre.

5.30 p.m.: Sunday Supper and Discussion on South Africa featuring Dr. Keppel-Jones of History Dept. Supper in the International Centre Basement and is sponsored by SCM African Liberation Study Group.

6.00 p.m.: The Franch Club evening will not be held due to lack of a suitable location. Sorry.

7.00 p.m.: Folk Mass in Newman House.

Arts Festival.

Monday February 7

12.00 to 1.30 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Things I Cannot Change" and "Earth and Mankind Series No. 4" in the International Centre.

6.30 to 8.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Earth and Mankind Series No. 1-3" and "World of One in Five" in McLaughlin Room of Union.

6.30 to 8.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Things I Cannot Change In Lower Vic.

7.00 p.m.: Meeting of the French Club in third floor Common Room at Union.

7.30 p.m.: ASUS "Meet the Candidates Night" in Stirling D. All candidates for ASUS positions will be present.

8.30 p.m.: Berlin Philharmonic Octet will perform in Grant.

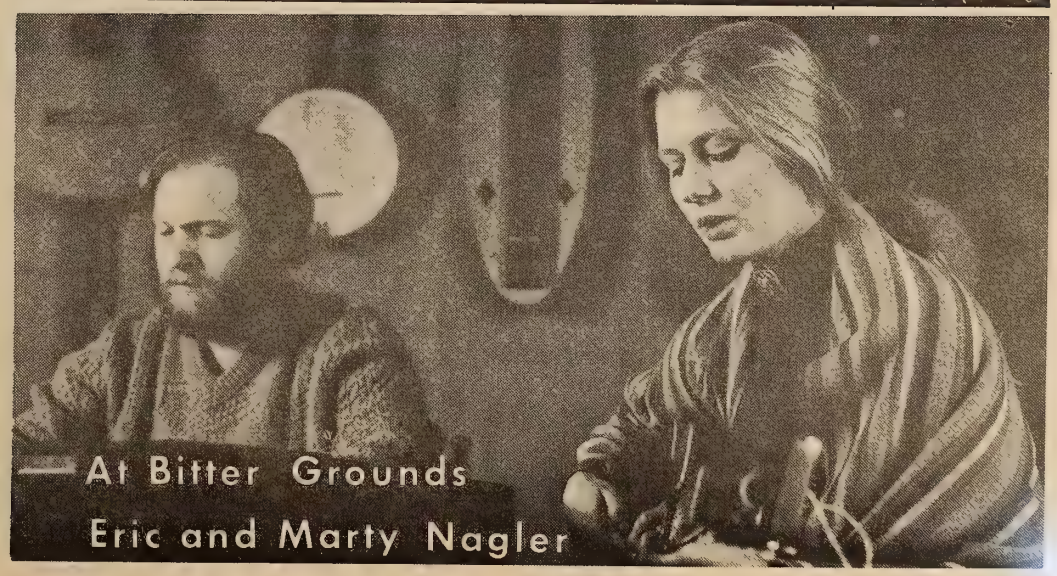
Tuesday, February 8

12.00 to 1.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Earth and Mankind Series No. 5, 6" in the International Centre.

6.30 to 8.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Earth and Mankind Series No. 4-6" in the McLaughlin Room of the Union.

6.30 to 8.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "World of One in Five" and "Things I Cannot Change" in LOWER Vic.

7.30 p.m.: The Senate Task Force on the Role and Operation of a Bookstore at Queen's is having an open meeting in 517 John Watson, to hear ideas and suggestions on the bookstore service at Queen's. Everyone welcome and encouraged to attend.



7.30 p.m.: "Awareness '72" IN Dunning Aud. Evening based on poverty in Kingston including the film "North of Princess Street", a panel discussion and question period. Coffee and doughnuts afterwads in the Red Room.

9.00 p.m.: Dept of Film Studies presents "Summer with Monika" in Ellis Aud.

Theatres
Capitol: Billy Jack
Hyland: Garden of Finzi-Continis
Odeon: What's the Matter with Helen and Adios Sabata.

At Agnes
Feb. 1-15: collection of fine etchings circulated by the National Gallery.
Feb. 3: Scottish evening at 8:00 p.m.
Feb. 6: Art Centre Concert "Die Winterreise".

Bars
Commodre: Sarofeen
401: Busted
Manor: Rick Todd and Hour Glass
Pub: the Ricky Day Review

At Bitter Grounds
Eric and Marty Nagler

St. James' Church

UNION and BARRIE
KINGSTON

9.00 a.m. - HOLY COMMUNION
10.45 a.m. - HYMN SING
11.00 a.m. - HOLY COMMUNION
7.30 p.m. - EVENING PRAYER
Tuesday 12.15 p.m.
-Men's Luncheon
Speaker - The Rev. John Klassen

ST. ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Reverend Max V. Putnam, B.A., D.D., Minister
Christopher C. Hunt, ARCO, Director of Praise

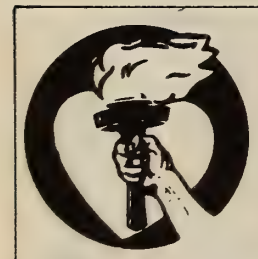
10.00 a.m. Young Adult Bible Study
11.00 a.m. Morning Worship

7.00 p.m. Evening Worship
7.30 p.m. "Radio Ministry" CKLC

8.15 p.m. Youth Fellowship

TUESDAY, 7.30 p.m.
Bible Study

GSS Film Club Presents



Bergmans "THROUGH A GLASS DARKLY"

FRI., FEB. 4, 8:00 pm
ELLIS HALL AUDITORIUM

GRAD BALL

Friday, 11th February
8:00 pm
The Round Table
with the
MUSIC - MAKERS
Semi-Formal or Formal
Free Sherry, 8:00 - 9:00 pm
Food Provided
Tickets $10

Geoff Hudson - Geology (547-2798)
Chris White - Physics (547-2962)
Ken Hedges - Mech. Eng. (546-5133)
Ian Moyle - Grad House (542-9914)
Departmental Reps or IGIF

Canadian Heart Foundation ANNUAL FUND DRIVE

600 CANVASSERS REQUIRED FROM QUEEN'S STUDENTS, KGH NURSES, HDH NURSES FOR CANVASS OF KINGSTON

FEBRUARY 6th, 1972
LEONARD DINING HALL
12:00 - 4:30 p.m.

'Eating Students'

FOOD CLINIC

Every Monday night at 6:30 PM.
165 University Ave. The Kitchen!
Not quite enough food for a meal, but lots of bit-size tastes of all your favourite meals!

Plus special feature -- how to keep healthy.
Actually, any information you want to know.
Come and join us.

A M S COMMITTEES

Join now -- no elections!

1) Committee to study the Bookstore Report
2) Committee to study the Report of The Post - Secondary Education.

Please leave name at the AMS office

New Hours

Your on-campus typing service will be open to handle all of your typing and duplicating needs at these new hours:
Monday - Thursday: 8:30 am - 8:00 pm
Friday: 8:30 am - 4:30 pm

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

A NIGHT TO REMEMBER!!!

(It comes once in a "blue moon"!)

THE AFRICA NIGHT

featuring

1) The Otu Highlife W'Afrika Dance Band
2) The "African" Juju and Atilogu troupe' dancers
3) The "Talking Drum"

at
GRANT HALL
(Univ. Av.) Queens
Friday, FEB. 4th at 8:30 pm.

—BAR AVAILABLE—

TICKETS ($2 Single, $3 Couple)
At The Door
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

WE HAVE ALMOST AS MANY DIAMOND STYLES AS YOU HAVE DREAMS

Do you dream in pear shape. Or emerald cut. Perhaps you count brilliants to put you to sleep. We have dreamy diamonds in all shapes and sizes. Let us show you our wide and sparkling selection. We'll dazzle you with scores of blazing shapes . . . until you find your dream diamond.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

COMING EVENTS

Women's Intercollegiates:

Archery - Feb. 4-5 - Indoor at Western Ice Hockey - Feb. 4 - Toronto at Queen's - 6 pm
Feb. 5 - Western vs McGill at Queen's - 4:30 pm
Feb. 5 - Western at Queen's - 9 pm
Basketball - Feb. 4 - Toronto at Queen's - 6 pm
Feb. 5 - York at Queen's - 1 pm
Volleyball - Feb. 4 - Toronto at Queen's - 6 pm
Feb. 5 - York at Queen's - 1 pm
Figure Skating - Feb. 4-5 - OWIAA Championships
Feb. 5 - Competition from 8 am - 4 pm

Men's Intercollegiates:

Basketball - Feb. 4 - Ryerson at Queen's - 8:15 pm
Feb. 5 - Ottawa at Queen's - 8:15 pm
Hockey - Feb. 5 - Queen's at Brock - 4 pm
Badminton - Feb. 5-6 - York invitationals
Curling - Feb. 4-5 - at Ottawa
Fencing - Feb. 5 - Dual at home
Squash - Feb. 5 - Trent at Queen's Wrestling - Feb. 5 - R.M.C. Invitational

SKYDIVERS WIN TEAM EVENT

On January 29 and 30 McGill University Skydiving Club held its annual collegiate meet at St. Antoine de Laurentides, 40 miles north of Montreal. The competition was well attended, with over 70 competitors from Queen's Carleton, McGill, Cambrian (Sudbury), Algonquin (Ottawa), and Brock, as well as some non-collegiate competitors. The events held were 3 rounds of individual accuracy in junior (0-50 jumps), intermediate (51-150), and senior (150 and over) categories; and team accuracy for 5-man teams. Individual accuracy involves getting the closest distance to the 10 cm. target disk on a total of three jumps from 2500 feet. The team accuracy event had five jumpers exiting from 3500 ft. on one pass of the aircraft and getting the closest combined distance to the disk. Good team coordination is required to land five men on the same target without interfering with each other.

The conditions for the meet were hardly ideal. Normally the landing area is soft pea gravel, sand or sawdust. At St. Antoine, the target was on icy ground as hard as concrete, and this and the high winds caused the competitors to sacrifice their normal accuracy techniques for landing methods which were softer but were hit-or-miss for accuracy.

The individual accuracy events were heavily dominated by Carleton, which took first and third place in senior accuracy, second in intermediate and first in junior accuracy. Carleton also had their entry fees and transportation paid by their university, and had twice as many entrants as Queen's, who sent five seniors and one junior, all of whom paid their own way.

Queen's however won the team accuracy event with a team of five seniors.

The figure skating team will be competing against teams from McGill (last year's co-winner), Toronto, McMaster, and Ottawa U. to try to maintain their championship.

stalker

An introductory course in the

APL 360

computer language will be offered in 3 one-hour lectures, starting Tuesday February 8. Because of its simple, concise notation, APL is both easy to learn, and useful in the description of complex problems. This informal course is open to all staff and students. Freshmen are encouraged to attend.

SLOT I5 I2:30
JEFFREY I26

Any Student Who Wishes to Make Donations to the Chaplain's Trust Fund May do so by Cheque to:

Arts '73 Chaplain's Fund
c/o Alumni Office
Student's Union

By February 18.

Queen's University Bands

EXECUTIVE ELECTIONS

Nominations for candidates for the following positions on the 1972-73 Queen's Bands Executive should be forwarded to the Bands Manager, c-o A.M.S. Office. Nominations will be received until Friday, February 11th, 1972.

Bands Manager
Assistant Bands Manager
Quartermaster
Concessions Manager
Head Cheerleader
Brass Band (Co-) Director (s)
Head Majorette
Pipe Major
Head Highland Dancer
Publicity Director

Candidates will be elected by current Bands Members at the General Meeting, February 12th, Stirling Hall 'D', 1:30 p.m.
For further information, contact Doug Romans at 544-7846, or c-o A.M.S. Office.

Science '44 Co-op Open House at

Sat. Feb. 5

314 William
320 William
9:30-12:00

30 Garrett
31 Garrett

13 Sydenham
15 Sydenham

Applications Available 1:00

FROM STEM TO STERN

CANADA

ST. JOHN'S - Premier Frank Moores said Monday that despite the defection of two members of the House of Assembly to the Liberals he would call the House together as soon as possible, probably by the middle of February.

Hugh Shea, Conservative MHA for St. John's South and Tom Burgess, New Labrador Party leader, announced they would join the Liberal ranks, a move that gives the Liberals 21 members and the Conservatives 20. There is one vacancy. When the Government names a Speaker, its numbers will be reduced to 19.

Mr. Moores said he would not hang on for long before putting his Government's strength to the test.

OTTAWA - The federal cabinet has approved "urgent measures" to help the Canadian book publishing industry.

The still-secret measures fill a thick volume "which doesn't go as far as its authors wanted," according to sources.

The Star learned the measures include:

+ Federal aid to publishers of $100,000 annually, double the present amount, for translations of books from either English and French.

+ Increased purchases of Canadian books by the External Affairs Department cultural sections for placement in Canadian embassies.

+ Intensive promotion of Canadian fiction and non-fiction abroad.

+ Arrangements allowing up to 50 co-publishing ventures in non-fiction a year between the government and private companies. Each would contribute to the publication costs, with the government in some cases donating the manuscripts as its share. There already have been some joint ventures of this nature, particularly involving National Film Board picture books.

But there is no plan for Ottawa to establish a Publishing Development Corp. like that set up to assist the feature film area. The Canadian Film Development Corp. has a three year $10 million federal grant to invest in movie production.

TORONTO - Health Minister Bert Lawrence said Monday he agrees with a ministerial committee recommendation that the province establish a public information agency to inform women on where they can obtain legal abortions.

Such an agency would be a useful service, said Lawrence, commenting on the Report of the Minister's Committee of Inquiry into Hospital Privileges.

The committee said that in some instances even the staff and trustees of hospitals don't know what their policy is on abortions.

Lawrence said "within two or three years" all hospitals in Ontario will be performing legal abortions.

"Catholic or non-Catholic, all hospitals have a role to play and that is to provide the services the public wants," Lawrence said.

JASPER, Alta. - A confident and smiling John Turner said last night his goal in his new cabinet position as finance minister is to make sure "there is a job available for every Canadian who is willing to work."

Speaking to reporters at his first press conference since he took over the finance portfolio Friday, Turner said he intended to achieve full employment as quickly as possible, consistent with reasonably stable prices. He said this was the goal of the provincial governments, too.

But a number of provincial finance ministers expressed fears about hints by Turner the federal government plans to lessen the rate of expansion in the economy.

BACK PAGE

TORONTO - Canada's official labor movement has launched a secret counter-offensive against what it regards as a swing toward Marxism in Quebec trade unions.

The attack was opened by President Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Labor Congress (CLC) in an unpublished speech to the national organization's key officials at the Valhalla Inn on Highway 27, south of Highway 401 last month.

MacDonald warned his paid organizers in Quebec that they would be fired if they pursue "Marxist" policies advocated by the Quebec Federation of Labor, a provincial body chartered by the congress.

In a withering attack on "clearly Marxist" policies coming from Quebec, he reminded congress officials that the CLC rejected all forms of totalitarianism and could never subscribe to Marxism, Trotskyism or Maoism.

Then he warned that his message was not to be divulged to anyone - on pain of firing.

TORONTO - Doctors face a last opportunity to cut costs by major, voluntary changes in patterns of practice, before imminent federal-provincial agreements force them Dr. J. Douglas Wallace, general secretary of the Canadian Medical Association, warns in the current issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

Dr. Wallace told doctors to take the initiative in setting up their own community health centres, instead of "bleating" about the Government doing so.

He warned them that major changes in financing, and therefore in the provision of medical services, are imminent. "They (the changes) will have a profound, but not necessarily deleterious effect on the way in which you provide medical care to the citizens of your community, he said."

OTTAWA - The new 1972 premium levels for automobile insurance will be put into effect across Canada within the next couple of months.

Increases are expected in seven provinces, a decrease in premium rates is expected in Quebec, and Manitoba and Saskatchewan, the only provinces which have government-run insurance plans, expect no increases.

The increase in Ontario will be about 6.5 per cent, but may be as high as 10 per cent. in metropolitan areas.

TORONTO - A brief prepared by a group of U.S. deserters and draft dodgers across Canada has rejected all proposals for amnesty currently being discussed in the United States.

"We, as U.S. war-resisters in Canada, consider the current talk in America about amnesty as being ludicrous."

"We reject the current amnesty proposals in the United States because they serve to mask (President Richard Nixon's excalation of the war; they do not include the same provisions for deserters from the armed forces as they do for draft dodgers; they all have a punitive string attached called alternative service, and they all imply guilt on our part when we were the ones who have refused to commit the crime," the brief said.

THE WORLD

RAWALPINDI - Pakistan Sunday withdrew from the British Commonwealth because of the imminent recognition of Bangladesh by Britain, Australia, New Zealand and some other countries.

President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto said the decision, taken at a cabinet session earlier in the day, was "final and irrevocable."

He vowed that the world "will no longer use Pakistan as a football."

Bhutto told a press conference that the decision had been taken reluctantly.

"It has been forced upon us. We are not happy about it, but it had to be done."

LONDONDERRY - Thirteen civilians were shot dead Sunday in a clash that erupted when British paratroops stormed a Roman Catholic protest rally to grab stone-throwing youths.

The deaths touched off outraged protest from some opposition leaders in Northern Ireland, who called the shootings an "awful slaughter" and "mass murder."

The death toll was Londonderry's worst in more than three years of communal strife pitting Roman Catholic militants against Protestants and the British soldiers sent to restore order.

BUENOS AIRES - A top-level Argentine economic team left here Sunday for the United States on the first leg of a mission to raise $1 billion on loans to give this nation's sickly economy a shot in the arm.

The mission comes at a time when Argentina's military government is experiencing one of the worst economic and financial crisis in its history.

VIENNA - The Soviet Union and the United States adjourn their efforts for a curb on nuclear missile arsenals this week without indicating whether this means immiment agreement or merely another pause in the 2-year-old negotiations.

The sixth round of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks which opened in Vienna on Nov. 15, last year will adjourn Friday, the two sides announced Tuesday.

WASHINGTON - The Nixon administration has approached the Soviet Union about arranging a mutual limit on naval armaments in the Indian Ocean, a top state department official disclosed Tuesday.

Without giving any details, Undersecretary of State U. Alexis Johnson assured the Senate foreign relations committee that the U.S. government has no intention of entering another round of competitive installations in southest Asia, comparable to what has occurred in the Mediterranean.

OKLAHOMA CITY - The Oklahoma House of Representatives voted 39-18 Tuesday for an amendment to prohibit persons under 40 from drinking beer.

-solman

Queen's
Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 45 Mon., Feb. 7, 1972

ELECTION SPECIAL

AMS Candidates page 2,3
Grad Soc Candidates page 4
ASUS Candidates page 4 5-7
Engineering Candidates page 8
Commerce Candidates page 9
Rehab Candidates page 10
Nursing Candidates page 11
AMS Fee Referenda page 12

Where to vote

TUES. FEB. 8

UNION	10:30 - 6:30
LIBRARY	10:30 - 9:30
STIRLING	10:30 - 3:30
HUMPHREY	10:30 - 3:30
KINGSTON	10:30 - 3:30
LEONARD (Both lines)	4:45 - 6:15
BAN RIGH (Both lines)	4:45 - 6:15
SUMMERHILL	10:30 - 3:30
WATSON	10:30 - 3:30
MATHESON ROOM (KGH)	11:30 - 12:30

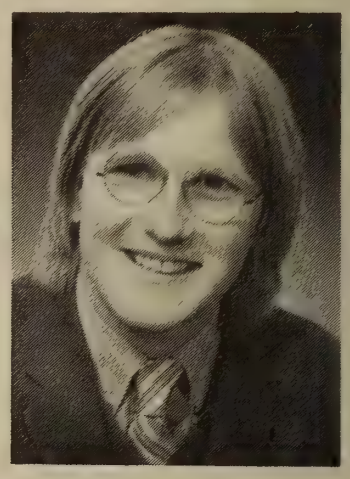
WED. FEB. 9

UNION	10:30 - 6:30
LIBRARY	10:30 - 9:30
STIRLING	10:30 - 3:30
HUMPHREY	10:30 - 3:30
KINGSTON	10:30 - 3:30
LEONARD (Both lines)	4:45 - 6:15
BAN RIGH (Both lines)	4:45 - 6:15
DUPUIS	10:30 - 3:30
ELLIS	10:30 - 3:30
MacDONALD	10:30 - 3:30

THURS. FEB. 10

UNION	10:30 - 6:30
LIBRARY	10:30 - 6:30
STIRLING	10:30 - 3:30
HUMPHREY	10:30 - 3:30
KINGSTON	10:30 - 3:30
LEONARD (Both lines)	4:45 - 6:15
BAN RIGH (Both lines)	4:45 - 6:15
DUNNING	9:30 - 4:30

NOTE: ASUS ballots will NOT be available in meal lines. Commerce elections are on Thursday only. Rehab elections will be in the school. You must have your student card to vote.



ANDY JORDAN

WE WOULD DO ANYTHING TO GET IN

to show you what we mean by

"WE'LL WORK OUR ASSES OFF FOR YOU"

JAMES BRADLEY

CUT OUT ALONG HERE ..... PASTE ON BACK OF YOUR CLIP BOARD! ..... CUT OUT ALONG HERE

CUT OUT ALONG HERE ... PASTE ON BACK OF CLIPBOARD ... CUT OUT ALONG HERE

CUT OUT ALONG HERE ... PASTE ON YOUR CLIPBOARD ... CUT OUT ALONG HERE

START
SIMPSON, LeBlanc, Bradley and Jordan begin Campaign!
CLUB HOUSE!

Palmer seeks campaign funds from cousin Arnold. Campus teed off as Palmer takes huge slice in campaign drive. RETURN TO CLUBHOUSE AND LOOSE NEXT TURN.

BRADLEY'S BUREAUCRATIC MAZE

Bradley caught forging Q-Bucks! AMS court suspends student priveleges and declares candidate ineligible.
TAKE ONE Q-BUCK!

Jordan accepts offer as lead bubble-gummer in 1910 Fruit Gum Company and leaves student politics.
MOVE TO JORDAN'S JUNK SHOP, AND TAKE 1 Q-BUCK!

ILLOGISTICS
"THE Q-BUCK QUANDRY"
A SIMPSON-LAYTON CREATION

RULES OF PLAY
1 Must use official Simpson - Layton Q-BUCKS 5 per player, 10 in the pot.
2 Use 1 die. Use 1 token per player.
3 Follow directions as you move around the board.

OBJECT OF THE GAME
To join SIMPSON and LAYTON in the A.M.S. Office (where their pictures are).

A.M.S. OFFICE

Bradley gov't intervenes in commune competition, LOSE CULTURE AND EFFICIENCY BENEFITS AND ONE Q-BUCK.

LE BLANC'S BOOZORIUM

MIRKWOOD FORREST

Commune raided! Narcs find only Q-Bucks.
GO TO SHOE STORE & COLLECT ONE Q-BUCK

JORDAN'S JUNK SHOP

A.M. MUTUAL SQUARE

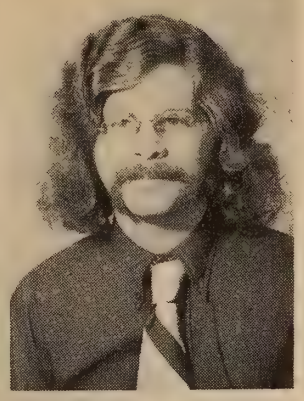
Na-Banrighinn Gubrath shot in LONDONDERRY by Bradley henchmen. YOU LOSE GO TO BRADLEY'S BUREAUCRATIC MAZE!

MUST HAVE 5 Q-BUCKS TO ENTER! OR RETURN TO WELFARE LINE!

Elrond meets Frodo Baggins and Bradley the Grey in Fairy Circle. GO TO MIRKWOOD FORREST

WELFARE LINE!

Simpson and Layton discover fountain of knowledge, WIN 10 DRAUCHT AND 2 Q-BUCKS



Bradley withdraws from race, Alma Mater Mutual closes at record high. TAKE 3 Q-BUCKS. GO TO A.M.MUTUAL SQUARE.

Jordan's snow sculpture melts, who is this guy Jordan?
LOOSE ONE Q-BUCK

SHOE STORE

LeBlanc drowns in beer vat, ADD SALT AND 1 Q-BUCK TO POT. GO TO LEBLANC'S BOOZORIUM!

CUT OUT ALONG HERE ..... PASTE ON BACK OF YOUR CLIPBOARD! ..... CUT OUT ALONG HERE

VICTOR
BRADLEY

We believe that the A.M.S. should refocus its attention on education, both in the functional problems of obtaining an education and in the direction in which it is changing. The A.M.S. in the past year has revitalized student services such as A.M.S. Housing, Student Typing, publication of You and the Law, and extention of the Pub. We must now turn to a critical examination of Queen's as an academic institution and the effects that governments and their affiliated bodies have in defining and controlling education.

We must re-establish students locally, provincially, and nationally as a positive force in the structure and financing of post-secondary education. This can be accomplished through provincial and national federations of students.

We must assume a critical role in our own academic situation and offer programmes, such as a symposium series on current world issues to complement our education. We should promote the expansion of interdisciplinary programs within the university structures. We must also have governmental structures within the university, designed to incorporate a viable input from students into the direction and functioning of their departments.

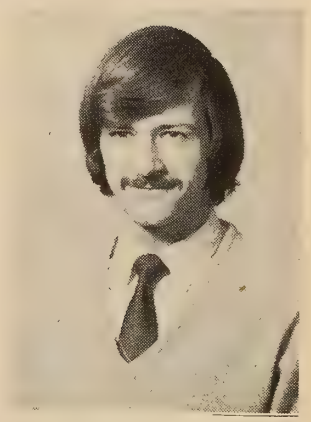
We believe we can accomplish this.

VOTE BRADLEY AND COUSINS

MARNEY
COUSINS

Experience Building for Progress

Victor is a fourth year chemical engineer who plans to enter computing science in the coming year. During the past two years Victor has been active in student government. In 1970-1971 he was an A.M.S. Senior Rep from the Engineering Society and has been Vice President of the A.M.S. during the past year.



Marney is a second year Arts and Science student, working towards a degree in drama and English. She was a member on the Orientation '71 committee and the Artsci '74 executive. She is presently an Arts rep - at - large on the A.M.S. outer council.

GREG LEBLANC
FOR AMS President

for AMS Vice-President

WALLY
PALMER

We have one primary objective - to advance the interests of Queen's students. The continuity of our term as President and Vice-President will be achieved through continued and consistent reference to this aim.

The AMS should be brought back to the students. It must not provide the playground for "political heavies", or any other elite - we want to involve more students. We will have a fully planned course of action for the year - a Platform booklet - designed for September with goals to which we will work towards; a purpose for which students can become involved.

OMBUDSMAN: We will investigate this possibility of establishing a student ombudsman whose whole responsibility would be to delve into student grievances; listen, investigate, and solve student problems.

OUTER COUNCIL: This year, there was no rapport, nor interest among Outer Council members due to lack of sufficient involvement by, and for council members. We urge all students to seriously evaluate the candidates who will be representing you on council next year - it is your responsibility to see to it that concerned, interested and capable people are elected. We shall have a series of in-depth meetings with the newly - elected council immediately to enable all members to come to know one other, and become familiar with the issues, the problems, and the functions of the AMS. We want to re-establish the Commission system so that Outer Council will be able to work with Inner Council, and the Commission will become more than just a Commissioner.

EDUCATION: The AMS represents all faculties and therefore should endeavor to bring these faculties together in order to foster the interchange and exchange of knowledge. We propose to encourage education on a broader scope than mere departmental academics. We shall start, immediately, contacting leading figures in Canada, as well as the rest of the world, in an attempt to arrange a regular series of open forums, guest lecturers, and panel discussions.

NATIONAL UNION OF STUDENTS: There is a definite need for the proposed National Students' Union which, we envision, will provide a unified student lobby, to protect student interests with respect to the imminent changes, recommendations and proposals in the structure and financing of post-secondary education, as outlined in the Wright Commission Report. However, there is an equal need to ensure that this new federation does not become infected with an air of overdeveloped student radicalism, reminiscent of the now-defunct CUS.

PERMANENT PRESIDENT: We think that this is a very serious issue and there are questions that must be asked. What will a permanent president mean to the students and student government? Will it increase the inaccessibility of the AMS to the individual student? We feel that there are alternatives which must be investigated, such as the hiring of an executive assistant if deemed necessary, or, more desirable to us, the implimentation of a body to be known as Queen's Student Agencies (QSA).

SERVICES: The AMS provides many worthwhile services for the students. However, the day to day administration of these services has become too time consuming. If these existing services were to be put under a central focus through which they could operate themselves, it would allow the AMS to spend more time on matters which concern the student interests. Therefore, we are in favour of the implimentation of the proposal of Queen's Student Agencies. In addition, we propose to bolster the presently existing services by looking into the possibility of their expansion and the creation of new services, if it will fulfill a need, create more jobs, and increase efficiency; e.g. implimentation of a year-round Job-Bank, to centralize hiring and job placement for such services as the Pub, the Constable system, the Library, and officials for intramural athletics - jobs based on merit, not favouritism.

These are some thoughts - give us a chance.

WE'RE INTERESTED
WE CARE

Graduate Student Society

President and Vice-President

Doug Prichard
President

Stuart Clark
Vice-President

We would like to express our appreciation to the graduate students who supported our nominations and to the members of the Society who have indicated their willingness to work with us. Current governmental soul-searching about graduate education has led the GSS to increasingly concern itself with graduate student rights and responsibilities and move away from merely providing services. To continue this tradition, we shatl need assistance from a wider portion of our constituency than in recent years. We are confident that members of the Society will take their responsibilities to the GSS and to other members of the Society seriously, and in so doing make the coming year a successful one.

A number of long term problems face graduate students both at Queen's and across the country and we expect to be concerned with these throughout the coming year:

-Continuing decline in net income due to new taxes, rising tuition and dwindling financial support.

-Proposed tuition fees for all graduate students in Ontario of at least $2200 (Committee on Post-Secondary Education)

Uncertainties as to the assignment of post-secondary financial responsibilities: $10,000 student loan debts, tax on income?

-Quotas on graduate student enrolment which are in existance, and the proposed ones.

We also see a number or shorter term problems in which we plan to take action immediately:

-Following up this past year's initiatives regarding Unemployment Insurance as applied to graduate students and the numerous questions outstanding about application of the new tax reforms.

-Assignment of responsibility for income protection in the event of injury or sickness.

A survey is to be conducted to point up the disparities in student support across the campus and to provide ammunition when the Ontario Government 'reviews' the situation following the slimination of OGFs after the next session. A continuing review of policy on expenditure proprities for Grad House will consider whether the extensive improvements made this year (air-conditioning, and bar renovations) are in fact sufficient to keep Grad House the focus for Society activities.

We look forward to serving you this year and hope we can achieve the success of past administrations.

Also running is Bruce Rutherford see page 4, Tuesday's paper

Senator

John Aitken

Experience on Senate Subcommittees at McGill
M.B.A. Rep. on School of Business Faculty Board

Graduate students are rapidly becoming second class citizens in the university community. Government pressure through the new tax laws and reductions in fellowship funds will complicate our existence.

University facilities are geared, quite rightly, to the majority, the undergraduates, yet, why should we face unnecessary hassles from the library and bookstore

Graduate students may wish to remain apathetic but a strong representation on university government is required.

AMS Representative (3 to be elected)

Dave Dodd

A G.S.S. Representative to the AMS has a binary role; that of a member of the G.S.S.S. executive, and also a representative of that society in the A.M.S. To adequately fulfill the requirements of the position, the A.M.S. representative must take an active part in the proceedings of both bodies.

In the past this has not always been the case; however it is not my intention to follow this pattern. The duties of A.M.S. representative will be treated seriously, meetings will be attended and I will actively assist the G.S.S. executive in the running of the G.S.S. It is only through active participation in the G.S.S. that adequate representation can be made to the A.M.S.

how a considerable amount of our money is to be spent. Graduate students form a significant part of the student population, approximately 10 percent. Since undergraduates and graduate students have quite different University lives the AMS council forms an important link between these two student categories. As the AMS is the most powerful student governing body this is the best opportunity for a representative from the GSS to work on problems and make decisions concerning all Queen's students, together with delegates from the undergraduates. In addition, the AMS council is one place to make specific wishes and needs of graduate students known, e.g. questions arising from the year-round presence of most graduate students on campus.

As a representative of the Biochemistry graduate students to the GSS I have been a member of that council for more than two years. I am familiar with the problems facing graduate students and also with topics of general interest to Queen's. Now I would like to put this knowledge and experience to use as a GSS representative to the AMS.

Alfred Kormann

The AMS is the main instrument on our campus to express the views of all Queen's students and to decide

Bob McRae

Platform
Better liason among the diverse groups that compose the Grad Society-represent the interests of the Grad Society in the A.M.S. effectively

Qualifications
Member of Science Co-op 44 held various positions within the Co-op, treasurer of Central Division, on the Board of Directors of the Co-op presently in MBA 1
As an undergraduate at Queen's was on the DSC Committee in the Economics Dept. and worked with orientation

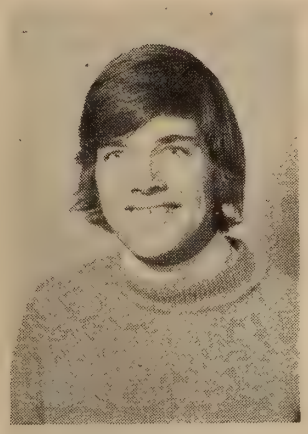
Keith Sangster

Experience
-Secretary Engineering Undergraduate Society
-Students Rep on University Council
-Editor, Engineering Undergraduate Newspaper

Platform
I will act as a liaison between the AMS and you the grad students.
Because of the low profile of the G.S.S. effective representation is necessary. I will provide that representation on the A.M.S.
Help the G.S.S. Executive Council to keep you informed.

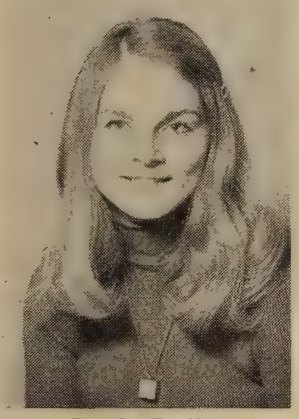
Secretary

Cindy Pressé



It's fortunate that I do not need to write a campaign speech. I cannot think of one good reason why I should be secretary of the GSS. Perhaps interest is the only necessary qualification. In any case, I will try to fulfill the position capably.

Treasurer



When nominations closed, Charles Serrao, the treasurer for the past year was the only nominee. He is out of town at present, but he is expected to accept the acclamation for another term.

Arts and Science Undergraduate Society

President and Vice-President

Ted Cape
President

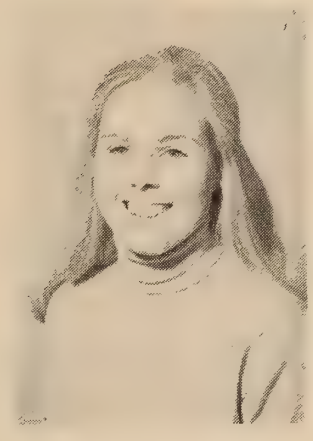
Barb Palk
Vice-President

Function of the ASUS Executive

1) The ASUS Executive is the representative body of Arts and Science and, as such, a key voice in Faculty Board and AMS Outer Council. Faculty Board, composed of faculty and various students, formulates all ArtSci academic policies from degree requirements to admissions policies. In past years, the most effective student voices have been those of the ASUS president and vice-president.

2) The Executive is the parent body to various committees which organize programs and services provided by the ASUS, notably, orientation and Course Evaluation Guide. In addition, it is loosely connected with the DSC's having traditionally offered its cooperation to the end of strong expression of DSC opinions.

Platform



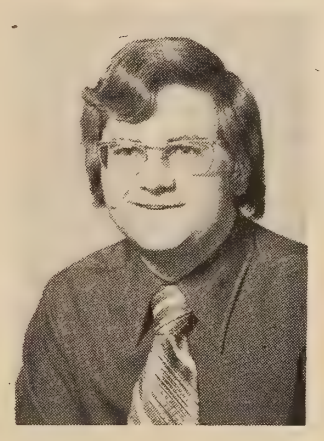
Briefly, we promise competent administration of established events and vigorous expression of the student interest on AMS and Faculty Board. Having worked on the orientation and Snowball Committees, we think we have gained enough organizational skills to maintain tight administration without losing sight of our function as ASUS representatives to the campus governing bodies. However, our main goal is not drastic change in existing services and functions. Instead, we would like to concentrate on evaluating the various organs of ASUS government.

Artsci Students elect 17 representatives to the Senate, the AMS Council and the ASUS Executive combined. It is our desire to provide a mechanism whereby these representatives gather to define and discuss matters of shared interest and concern to all ASUS members. In this way, the reps, might co-ordinate their efforts to reach common objectives. Such a body would also become a forum for discussion of issues facing Queen's, e.g. the implications of the Report of the Commission on Post Secondary Education in Ontario.

We are also anxious to transfer authority to committees and interested individuals within the society. Too much work has been done by too few people in the past. As a result, there has been an undercurrent of resentment in the student body towards "political heavies", who are accused of elitism. If authority can be more broadly delegated, we can eliminate the bureaucratic tangle which prevents good communication.

To conclude these are ideas, not promises and good administration can be our only guarantee. Nevertheless, we will give our best efforts to the achievements of a vibrant ASUS.

Secretary

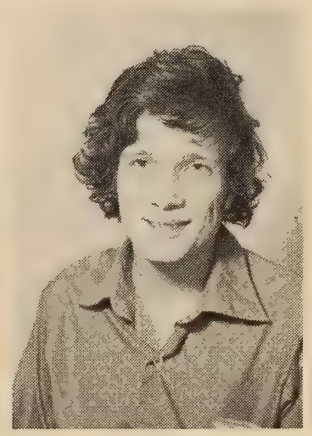


Wendy McKeown

Treasurer

Wil Kranenburg

Senator (both acclaimed for 2 year term)



Rob MacKnight

The changing role of the university in society, the changing attitudes of students to the university way of life and the lack of awareness of students of the 'outside world' all demand action and a restructuring of the academic outlook. Academics should no longer be the prime motive to university policy - instead, the university must concentrate on the society and its changing role, rather than standing idly in the ivory tower. The Coleman motion of compulsory "relevance classes", the LeBlanc-Palmer concern with awareness, show the beginnings of a new role for the university community. Higher education, largely financed by the public, owes society a better deal than mere criticism or complacency. We are here to learn, to experience, to prepare ourselves for something better. The Senate, as the highest student governing body is the logical place to start constructive change.

Student Senators as a group. This is not to suggest the formation of a student 'bloc' in the Senate, but to consolidate the ideas that Senators have.

view. Constructive talks over coffee oftentimes reveal positive and interesting ideas concerning university life, programmes and planning

What I lack in experience as a Senator, I possess in determination and willingness to do a job well the first time around.

Guillaume Bissonnette

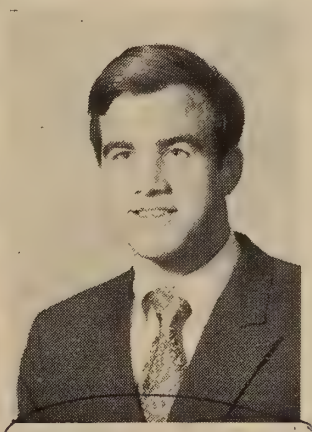
This is no platform. It's just a couple of ideas I would like to put forward.

Queen's University as an institution of higher learning within an advanced capitalist society incorporates a fundamental contradiction: on the one hand it pertains to be an instrument of human progress by fostering social criticism, the development of humanist universal values. On the other hand Queen's must feed a corporate capitalist society with intellectual workers who can only apply their skills within the restricted context of a social order that thrives and prospers on the deliberate denial of access to full humanity to many Canadians. To become aware of this objective contradiction, to study it by radically questioning the relationship between Queen's and bourgeois social order is imperative.

Queen's as a bourgeois university takes the existing social order for granted and restricts itself to criticizing parts and details of it. Thus it manages to avoid all central crucial issues. The absence of any profound critiques or even scepticism in front of our global social order, advanced monopoly capitalism, indicates that Queen's is a technical subdivision of the bourgeois production apparatus. By serving the interests of corporate capitalism and the bourgeois state it is working in fundamental opposition to the interests of Canadian society, for the prepetuation of the exploitation of man by man.

Senator (1 year term, 1 to be elected)

Jim Chauvin



Jim Chauvin is a third year student in economics and geography (4 years programme). He has been active in many 'behind the scenes' organizations with Arts '73 activities. He has served on the Economics D.S.C. in 1970-71, and is currently on the Geography D.S.C. At present, he is also actively engaged as the coordinator of the Arts '73 Chaplain's Trust Fund, which is a general student loan fund. In both 1970 and 1971 he was a Gael, and currently is a volunteer tutor of an elementary school child for the S.V.B.

The role of the Student Senator is to represent student opinion in a body of university representatives, to discuss and to determine the fate of programmes and plans so as to ensure a viable and dynamic development of the university.

I feel that through a senatorial position, I can contribute a positive and efficient service to the university community. I enjoy becoming involved in a project, working on it, fostering its growth, and when finished, unveiling a comprehensive report.

I feel that constructive cooperation leads to dynamic development. However, I stand up for my views and those I represent, willing to compromise only if the consequences of senate actions will not conflict with the students' interest.

I am non-partisan as to student versus establishment power. I am open and candid, willing to listen to all viewpoints, weighing both the negative and positive aspects of each in order to ascertain a complete and all inclusive

Stewart Searle

winner

Stewart Searle is a third year economics student. He is presently finishing a one year term on the Senate, has served on the Senate Nominating Committee, and has been nominated to the Campus Planning Committee.

The report of the Joint Nominating-Operations Review Committee, adopted by the Senate in June 1970, states that students, through effective membership on the Senate, "can contribute knowledgeable criticism of the methods and aims of academic policy. Only students can give first-hand expression to their varying expectations and life aims."

Still recognizing the importance of providing knowledgeable criticism, I feel, however, that the much more important role of students on the Senate is to express their expectations and aims for the University. It is in this role that there lies the most potential for the development of greater contributions from Student Senators. How can this role be further developed?

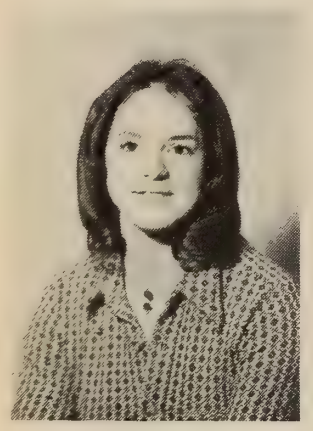
Essential to the development of this more creative role for student senators, I believe is a closer rapport with the AMS. An attempt was made this year to establish this rapport, but for various reasons, this was less fruitful than it might have been. It did appear, however, that if this rapport were strengthened, some benefits might be reaped.

The role of expressing expectations and aims could be further developed by increasing the solidarity of the

ASUS

Representative-at-Large

Nine to be elected

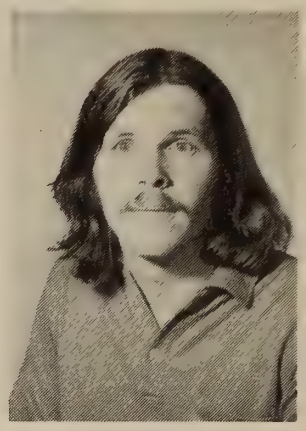


You may vote for seven

Bill Kirby

The age of confrontations and major issues is over and in their place remains a slow progressions toward our Utopia at Queen's. (interpretation optional) There are no real debates. We're all for student representation, good concerts, better food and motherhood. What remains to be done is to give life to our west campus, develop co-ed residence and a food co-op. These will be part of the agenda for the next term of the A.M.S. A new commission to co-ordinate and develop these and other student facilities is one area that the A.M.S. should move into. I would like to be the one to move them there.

And no matter who you vote for, vote dammit!



Hildi Adelhelm

This past year I coordinated and organized Festival '72. Since September I have been working closely with the A.M.S. as Inner Council Secretary. I am presently a Junior Justice on the A.M.S. Court.

Through my experience in connection with Festival '72, I have realized more fully the need for a greater variety of cultural and educational events on this campus. I consider it to be a very important facet in university life and should not be neglected.

I have been under the impression that many students feel that the A.M.S. is unapproachable and that it is not worthwhile to get involved with it. I know now that the A.M.S. can work and I believe I can make it work for you.

Roy Kirkpatrick

Student government is a cooperative effort by the individuals who comprise the university to further the education of everyone within the community. To this end, the government should provide services for the community that will complement the already existing educational facilities.

I would like to see the AMS expand more in the direction of providing educational services relating to the challenges facing the world community. Equipped with the knowledge provided by such instructional programmes and the experience of interacting with people and facing problems, an individual emerging from the university will be able to become a positive force with society.

To do this government should provide an atmosphere in the university that is conducive for learning to take place. The most important element of this atmosphere is co-operation among all members of the community towards its educational goals. This cooperation includes the involvement of as many individuals as possible in the running of campus activities as well as concern for the issues that the A.M.S. will be facing in the coming year.

The direction in which we move is your choice. I urge you to let your choice be known by voting this week.

Leslie Bankes

"A university is a massive structure, and has, therefore, considerable inertia." (Principal's Committee on Teaching and Learning.) It has been three years since the implementation of the Whalley Report concerning the establishment of a Departmental Students' Council whereby the students were provided with a communications system giving them access to decision-making in the Queen's community. The D.S.C. has experienced only marginal success in its growing years - I believe, that it has great potential. Although student participation in the D.S.C. has not given impetus to political involvement, it has become a vehicle through which productive discussion can take place. The A.M.S., I believe, should look into enhancing and expanding the D.S.C. to include other faculties on campus, in order to provide a channel through which all students can voice their opinions on academic matters.

The Wright Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario has confronted the academic community with a formidable challenge. Their recommendations would greatly change our educational community with respect to student loans, higher tuition fees, etc. It is up to the A.M.S. to instigate an analysis into the Report in order to meet this challenge.

. . .with my interest and enthusiasm towards the A.M.S., I know that I can do a good job.

Terry Macli

My platform is based on smaller but more efficient A.M.S.

Outer Council is at present too large to be an effective body. A smaller Council would facilitate discussion and debate by the mere fact that there would be fewer people to speak.

Members of Outer Council owe it to their constituents to be well-informed. Membership on a A.M.S. committee for each Outer Council rep would be a definite means of achieving this knowledge.

I agree that the Education Commission's activities should be expanded much along the lines of "Awareness '72". But increased activity necessarily results in increased fees or severe cutbacks in other areas of the budget. A raise in student fees would therefore seem to be a pious idea.

Many students think that the idea of a salaried president idea is uneconomical, but a salaried president might well discharge other functions resulting in a more efficient administrative office and this alone is reason enough for discussion of the idea.

I personally feel that the A.M.S., as it is the central government representative of all students, should be the final authority in disputes involving other student organizations.

Terry Joyce

The political responsibility of every member of ASUS is to vote for students who will represent them in the executive positions. Political responsibility goes beyond the process of voting, for some individuals, it means taking an active part in the affairs of the Society.

The role of the Outer Council is to consider all major policy issues and review the actions of commissions and committees of the AMS. This position has drastically deteriorated in the past years and it has become an institution which exists without power and without the ability to fulfill its role. The major reason for this is the fact that the members have not been prepared to put the necessary amount of time and effort that is required.

As an interested student, I am prepared to put in that time and effort. I will fulfill my obligations as a student representative to the best of my ability. My experience as Chairman of the Snowball Committee and as a member of Orientation 71, will help me considerably in carrying out that obligation.

Ian McIntyre

My portfolio is mainly entertainment. I would like to see the diversification of entertainment which is at present given to students and an increase in the regularity with which it occurs. There are many, many, students who don't or can't participate in many of the functions on campus due to the rather rigid structure which encompass some of these functions.

I am also interested in improving existing facilities for students interested in the creative arts viz. writing, music. There seem to be no regular outlets for this type of activity.

At present I am Social Convenor of the West-Indian Club and Publicity Officer of the International Club where I have been involved in organizing social functions, which I may be allowed to say so have been different, original and very entertaining.

Incidentally, I am a second year student.

So, I exhort my fellow students, Vote for Ian McInytre, The Different Guy with Different Ideas.

Bloodshed in Rhodesia? "Yes," says student

By Susan Bourbonniere

Queen's students from Rhodesia, Guatemala and India took part Wednesday evening in a symposium on current issues in their countries.

Ken Mufuka, history Ph. D. student at Queen's, said Rhodesia traditionally was known as a white man's country, with its temperate climate and abundance of natural resources. This changed in 1953 with the Federation of African States, he said, and now " it is difficult to call a country in Africa a white man's country".

Black Rhodesians, Mufuka said, call whites Europeans, "probably because they realize their stay won't be long". Rhodesians have rejected most concessions of power from the white government, he said, as shown by their reaction to the agreement made in 1971 by prime minister Ian Smith and British foreign secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home.

The main problem for Africans, Mufka said, is not their lack of education but their lack of political power. It can only be achieved through guerrilla warfare, he said, and high unemployment helps to swell guerrilla ranks.

Blacks must fight for self-government, he said, for most Rhodesians don't believe that Europeans will give them freedom "on a plate like that". "The Europeans are living on borrowed time, and we are asking for the time back."

One of the greatest fears of whites in Rhodesia is the black population explosion, he said. According to prime minister Smith, there are about twelve children per black family and only two per white family. If these figures are correct. Rhodesia has the fastest growth rate in Africa. Free birth control is available only to Africans, he said, but with the present rate of growth, in ten years "they will swamp the whites".

Mufuka also said that since the United States could not hold Vietnam, white domination of Rhodesia will not increase.

Asked whether bloodshed is necessary for freedom, Mufuka said, "yes", but "I can't speculate on the future of the whites in Rhodesia." The African can fight for ten years with nothing to lose, he said; the white man cannot.

Carlos Valdez, a fourth-year engineer, said Guatemala's greatest problems are its high unemployment (20 percent) and exceptional apathy among the native people. It is almost unfortunate that Central America did not have to fight for its independence, Valdez said, for now the people "take everything fro granted".

Only about half the native people participate in their country's economy, he said, and "you have to go and give them almost a kick in the rear end to get them to move". To them it doesn't matter that in San Salvador fourteen families run the country, he said, or what regime is currently in power.

But, Valdez said, "we are not prepared to live democracy as you see it." It is most likely that Guatemala will become communist, he said, especially since Fidel Castro conceived of his Cuban revolution and trained his troops in Guatemala. Valdez also remarked that it is strange that the rich families support the guerrillas, since they would be the ones to benefit the most from maintaining the status quo.

It would be very hard to overthrow the Guatemalan government, he said. Half the government's money goes to armaments, and the air force has 35 jets. The universities are poorly financed, he added, and most educated people don't want to return to Guatemala after studying abroad, and probably would not find jobs there if they did.

Kashmira Gupta, a doctoral student in chemical engineering, began his talk by posing the question, "Do foreign people really get a clear picture of what is happening in India from the news media?" The conclusion he drew was no, since most people tend to associate India with starvation (still a crucial problem), the cast system (out of date), and the holy cow (no longer sacred property).

Another Indian student mentioned that India has done more for its Untouchables, the lowest caste, by giving them free education and free travel within the country, and removing the stigma attached to them, than Canada has done for its Eskimos and Indians.

It is now illegal to call someone an Untouchable, he said, and discrimination carries a high penalty.

He pointed out that education is compulsory in India, the only developing country able to live with democracy, where it took people fifteen years after the first election of Jawaharlal Nehru in 1951, to realize the importance of the vote.

The Maharishi Mahesh Yogi is "just another capitalist from America", Gupta said, and is not considered a real yogi, although "he deserves the money he earns".

The symposium was sponsored by the International Centre and chaired by Andy Jordan, who said he had hoped for better attendance by Canadian students -- only about ten showed up.

AMS PRESIDENT Patrick Riley presents a scroll to Queen's chaplain Dr. A.M. Laverty, who was honoured Friday night for his 25-year association with the university.

Women's res chooses pres, council

Second-year history student Kiloran German of Adelaide Hall is the new president of the Women's Residence Council, chosen Thursday to succeed Cindy Davidson.

WRC secretary-treasurer will be Heather Foster.

The following block chairmen were chosen: Linda Dale (Chown Hall); Sue Blackall (Goodwin House, also known as Victoria Hall, A wing); Brenda Prosenyak, (Baker House, or B wing); Chris Newburn (Macdonnell House, D wing); Deb McKay (Muir House, E wing). C Wing of Vic, also known as Matheson House, has been divided among the four other houses in the new system of blocks. Last year A,B and C made up one block, and D and E the other. A block chairman for Adelaide and Ban Righ Halls will be chosen tomorrow; candidates are Pat Rae, who was defeated by Miss German for WRC president, and Deb Bramm, the present vice-block-chairman there.

Student loan period is now 11 days

Undergraduate students can now borrow books from Douglas Library for eleven days, rather than a week.

The new loan period went into effect yesterday "for an experimental period of one month".

Branch libraries are not affected, and the graduate and faculty loan periods of one month and four months remain the same.

The library made the change after studying the records of the 20,000 undergraduate loans made during November. The eleven-day period is expected to take care of most of the books now kept overdue from the seven-day loan period.

That study was made after the senate library committee considered a motion January 13 asking "that the length of lending periods and the penalty imposed for overdue books in all libraries should be standardized with respect to all users".

The proposal was made by student representative Nancy Hoey and seconded by chief librarian D.A. Redmond. It was tabled, to await the detailed study, after meeting some opposition from faculty representatives Frederic Schroeder, Dr. Pierre Gobin, and Dr. David Raal.

Convocations

Convocation dates for 1972 have been officially announced.

Friday, May 26 (afternoon): education, theology.

Saturday, May 27 (morning): engineering, business

Saturday, May 27 (afternoon): grads, law, medicine, nursing, rehab

Saturday, June 3 (morning): B.A. and Honours B.A.

Saturday, June 3 (afternoon): B.A. and B. Sc.

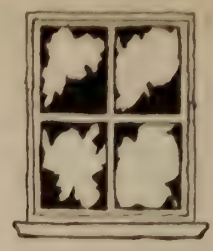
Newspapers

This is Tuesday's Journal. Wrapped around it is Monday's paper, which comes out on Tuesday. On the other hand, last Friday's paper came out on Saturday.

It's all the fault of the weather, which closed the highways between Kingston and Prescott, Ontario, where The Journal's printer is.

Thursday's paper is expected to come out on Thursday. All power to the snow.

Queen's Journal



Vol. XCIX, No. 46 Tues., Feb. 8, 1972

AWARENESS 72

IS UPON YOU FROM

February 8 to February 17

(Keep this ad for the week to come)

Tues. Feb. 8, 7:30
Dunning Auditorium
Poverty in Kingston

The film North of Princess Street is followed by a panel discussion with Alderman George Webb (of CKWS), Alderman James Cook, Reverend Brian Thrasher, Mrs. A. Healey, and Mrs. D. Whitely.

Wed. Feb. 9, 7:30
Ellis Auditorium
The Emperor's New Clothes

A talk, then open discussion with Norman Z. Alcock, Director of the Canada Peace Research Institute, dealing with conflict poverty and world government.

Thurs. Feb. 10, 7:30 Grant Hall
People, Politics, Power, Poverty

A panel discussion on Canadian poverty with Brian Hill and Ian Adams, two of the authors of 'The Real Poverty Report', Professor C.E.S. Franks, and Ted Lloyd: chaired by Dr. A. J. Coleman.

Mon., Feb. 14,
Kingston Hall, Rm 201
Queen's - A Hotbed of Apathy

Stanley Burke will be present to open an evening devoted to small discussion groups on student-oriented topics.

Tues., Feb. 15, 7:30, Grant Hall
People Before Paper

A talk with Stanley Burke touching on the role of the Media informing public opinion; the encroachments of bureaucracy and the frustration of the people -- especially the poor -- in the system and what to do about it.

Thurs. Feb. 17., 7:30
Jeffrey Hall, Rm. 128
Chto Delat/ What to do

A final meeting for staff, students to assess the activities of Awareness 72 and to discuss future action or activities.

CABARET IS HERE!

Presented by :

Queen's Musical Theatre

CAST

Jean Callum	Tony Keenleyside
Jim Chapman	Paul Kennedy
Liz Clements	Hammer Lambert
Collette Cote	Katherine Lamoureux
Lee David	John Maskell
Steve Gentles	Brenda Maybee
Moria Hart	Peter Ostergaard
Michael Henderson	Mario Pinto
Linda Hill	Arlene Reid
Andrea Howard	Cathy Robertson
Lynda Hyde	Rob Schock
Patricia Jones	John Seveigny
Jack Kasaboski	Janet Smarr
Mike Kassner	Christine Solininka
Barb Keane	Craig Tompkins

FEBRUARY 9, 10, 11, 12
KCVI AUD. 8 pm

Tickets, Students $1.50, other $2.00
Available at door, from cast, Music Dept., Union, House of Sounds igure-skaters just miss title

e snow storm and the affic problems, all able to arrive at r the O.W.I.A.A. ting Championships. peting were from McGill, McMaster, Queen's. The final determined by adoints earned in inents on a scale of 10 first, then 7,5,3 and 2. s McMaster, with 84 me the new chamoning Queen's and were co-winners last n's, with 75, very ined their title, but ed up fourth after 34 points. Toronto's s enough to put them e, and Ottawa's total r showed most the Dance com- it swept all three also won the Novice Singles events, the s, and the Group p.

Queen's countered these wins with wins of their own. Team captain Sue Drowley captured the Intermediate Singles and Debra Pepler took the Junior Singles. In the Junior Pairs, Moira Fitzpatrick and Anne Ledingham combined for a Queen's first. The Synchronized Group Skating came on strongly in the final event to give Queen's their final win.

The strength of these two teams shows in that no other team earned a first place rating during the competition.

One of the highlights of the meet was not part of the competition, but a free skating display at its conclusion. Dave McGillvray, a former Canadian champion, put on an exhibition which drew applause throughout and a standing ovation at its conclusion.

All attending the Championships appreciated the high calibre of the competition, and the excellent organization of the meet.

- stalker

Captain Sue Drowly shows firstplace form in Intermediate Singles free-skating competition

Basketball Gals Beat Varsity, York

Queen's Intercollegiate Basketball this weekend saw the girls come up with two wins. On Friday evening against University of Toronto the teams were evenly matched, and the score remained close throughout the whole game, at half-time it was Queen's 28 to 27. The Queen's girls used a combination of their zone defense and man-to-man, switching throughout the game. Final score Queen's 48, Toronto 46. Queen's using a freeze for the last minute and a half to keep T.O. from gaining possession of the ball.

Saturday saw the final game in the league season, against York University. Again, Queen's used a switching defense, and led the scoring throughout the whole game, with final outcome Queen's 61, York 27.

Leading scorers on Friday were Laney Marshall with 21 points, Pat Patterson, 10, and Sue Higgins and Karen Carson with 7 each. For Toronto, Lynne Garvie had 15 points, Sally Manning added 8 and Phyllis Perkins 7.

On Saturday, Laney Marshall again led Queen's with 14, while Karen Carson had 12 and Pat Patterson 8. For York, Gale Shister 8 while Sue Tupling and Sherri Rosen had 6 each.

In final league standings the Queen's girls placed third, tied with Toronto. On Feb. 25, 26th the girls travel to Waterloo to play in the consolation round of the Championship Tournament.

Watch for full weekend sports results

on Thursday

.C. News

rts this week include hery, curling, indoor volleyball.

arked the beginning sh tournament. The rnament is scheduled lay, 6:30 - 8:30 p.m., ay, 8:30 - 11:30 p.m. softball on Thursday, play against P.H.E. 74 against Arts '73. Arts '73 won their default last week, so cipation is hoped for also continues with g schedule:

s vs Arts '73 Bews
E. vs Arts '74 Bews
vs Rehab. Ross Gym
ng vs Law Bews Gym
'74 vs Arts '73 Bews

days

Tuesday, February 8

9.00 a.m. to 5.30 p.m.: Journal Staffers Clark, Reyno and Boon have a photo exhibit in Photo-Image 33, 33 Brock St.

12.00 to 1.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness - "Earth and Mankind Series No. 5, 6" - International Centre.

6.30 to 8.00 p.m.: Films for Awareness - above No. 4-6 in McLaughlin Room of Union, or "World of One in Five" and "Things I Can Not Change" in Lower Vic.

7.00 p.m.: Lib meeting to discuss organization of women in community. At 183 University.

7.30 p.m.: Senate Task Force on the Role and Operation of a Bookstore at Queen's. Open meeting in 517 John Watson to hear ideas and suggestions.

7.30 p.m.: "Awareness '72" presents an evening based on poverty in Kingston.

9.00 p.m.: Dept. of Film Studies presents "Summer with Monika" in Ellis.

Wednesday, February 9

9.00 to 5.30 p.m.: Photo-Image 33. See Tuesday.

3.30 p.m.: Lecture-recital by Prof. Nicholas Goldschmidt in Dunning.

7.30 p.m.: Two documentaries, "China's New Discovery of Acupuncture Anesthesia", and "Chinese Table Tennis Team" in Dupuis Aud. Admission 50c.

7.30 p.m.: Lecture by Norman Alcock, Dir. Canadian Peace Research Institute in Ellis; discussion in Red Room.

8.00 p.m.: Queen's Musical Theatre presents "Cabaret" at KCVI.

Meeting of Consumer's Interest Group in 138 Dunning.

Cabaret: New Direction?

Queen's Musical Theatre's third musical -- Cabaret -- opens next Wednesday, and with it possibly a new direction for the group. After doing Gilbert and Sullivan operettas for several years QMT moved to Broadway and has presented musical comedies for the past two years. However, Cabaret, which ran for over 5 years on Broadway, is more a musical drama in that it combines the musical world with serious acting and a genuine plot.

The story takes place in 1930 Berlin, and centres around a cabaret in those last frantic days before Mein Kampf became a fact of life. In particular, it follows an American writer into Germany in search of an idea for a novel and his affair with the star attraction of one of Berlin's hottest night spots.

Throughout the first act, the action switches from the various intrigues at the American's boarding-house, to the musical highlights at the cabaret which reflect the very spirit of German society at the time. With the second act comes the full impact of the political reality on those living in the make-believe world of the cabaret.

Cabaret will run Wednesday through Saturday next week at KCVI, just north of the main campus. Curtain time is 8.00 p.m. and ticekts may be obtained at the door. from the cast, the John Orr Room in the Union, House of Sounds and the Music Dept.

ister of versity Affairs
John White ming to Queen's
s. Feb . 8
rnational Centre
ement Union
0-9:30
if you have a beef about college tell him

Golden Words Annual
Beer—Brewing Contest

Enjoy good food, music and beer while a panel of "experts" select "Queen's Brewmaster 1972". Spectators can also win prizes by identifying commercial brews.

TIME: 8:00 to 12:00 PM FRIDAY FEBRUARY 11

TICKETS: 50c at the door

PLACE: HOUSE OF LORDS (second floor common room) Students' Union

Career Seminar Series
1971—72
Alma Mater Society
and the Career Planning & Placement Office
presents
Social Work
on February 9th, 1972
at
7:00 p.m.
in Smaller Common Room
Students' Memorial Union
guest speakers
Mr. Alan Judd, Executive Director,
Children's Aid Society
Mr. Dan Boag, Psychiatric Social Worker,
Kingston General Hospital
This seminar will be directed toward first and second year students but should interest all students

Classifieds

WANTED: ride west (Saskatchewan if possible) for reading week. Will share gas expenses, etc 544-0052

FARMHOUSE ROOMS to rent, 7 miles to campus. Phone 546 4566.

WANTED: 2-bedroom apartment for next year. Call Moira, 544 8504.

WANTED URGENTLY, a house for 4 male students for next year. Call 544-7600, 544-7382 or 544-7383.

DO YOU HAVE any ideas on what you would like to see in terms of a bookstore at Queen's University? Come out and tell us on Tuesday, February 8 in John Watson 517 at 7:30 p.m.

FREE QUART of beer with year card when you "vote and bloat". Arts 73 elections, February 15-72 at 7:00 Dunning 14 and 8:30 the pub.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY Amateur Radio and Electronics Club is holding a short but important meeting in the upstairs lounge of Clark Hall at 7:30 pm Tues Feb 8. Please come.

ANYONE INTERESTED in taking Math 362, 363 at summer school (or at the intersession) please call 549 1258 or 544-8204

WANTED for next year, 4-bedroom apartment close to campus. Phone Gylda 546-5978 or Jane 544 9356

LOST: metal badminton racquet, Wednesday night in gym. Phone Dave Wood 544-3201. Reward.

WANTED: 3-bedroom apartment or house for next year. Call Anne 544-8768, Holly 544-8652, Lotta 544 8326

HELP WANTED: part-time clerical work, accuracy required, $2 hour. Interviews Feb. 14, 15, 7:30 p.m. room 238 Interim Admin Building.

LOST: lady's watch, black band, white face, lost at Snowball semi. Call 544 3356.

WANTED: large one bedroom or two-bedroom apartment for next year. Max, 549-2232

LOST: grey Persian lamb hat in Victoria Hall Tuesday, by Red Cross volunteer. Please call Mrs Maclean, 389 0674. Reward.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY GREG, and good luck on the election.

LOST: a gold bracelet Thursday, February 3, outside of Victoria Hall. Please phone Donna at 544 8633.

FOR SALE: Opemus IIa enlarger with 4.5-75 lens, base, bulbs, Patterson developing trays, LPL easel mask, NPS steel developing tank, reels; much more; call C.J. at 546-9133 after 7 for savings of 25 percent to 50 percent. Best offer on enlarger which cost $120.

ONE GIRL is looking for a second to share a pleasant 1-bedroom apartment, furnished, close to Queen's, from mid-May to Sept. 1 or part of that time. $67 monthly. Call 549-1726 or 544-1313

THE ECUMENICAL Institute The Toronto region is holding a weekend course in Existential Christianity in Kingston February 11-13. Further information and applications call Ray Baumgart 542-9289. Costs subsidized by A.S.U.S. Other-Events Committee.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information ROOMS available immediately in cooperative ½ block from campus. Rent $50-month. Phone 544 9426.

LOST ARTS 74-75 Intramural Softball Team. If found, return to WIC Competition Thursday Nights. Call 542-5969.

Queen's Journal
Issue 46, Tues. Feb. 8, 1972
Published by the AMS, Inc. Queen's University, Kingston. Opinions expressed herein are not necessarily those of the editors, publisher, or the university

Running for President

Bruce Rutherford is also running for commerce president. He is not included in the rest of the platforms as his nomination was late.

My main objective if elected, will be to restructure the society so that it will run as a business and not as a political entity. It is my belief that Commercemen are not totally apathetic, rather, they are not stimulated by politics. I feel however, that if our society were Incorporated, greater interest and participation would result.

Obviously, this will entail a lot of work, most of which will be done through a full-fledged ad-hoc committee system.

This year, as most of you realize, the Society tried to broaden its scope considerably. Perhaps we tried too hard and next year, it might be better if we try to do lesser functions more successfully. The one exception to this policy would be the banquet. With a different speaker, I feel that this event could be a big success. It may seem tryte to say so, but I would appreciate your vote on Thursday, February 10.

Bruce Rutherford

Thesis and Essay Typing

Your on-campus typing service can fulfil all of your typing needs quickly and at competitive prices. Xerox and Ditto duplicating is also available for your convience.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

FROM THE YEAR THAT BROUGHT YOU "UM PA PA"

NOW COMES

VOTE & BLOAT

VOTE
- Active and Honourary Exec.
- Tues Feb 15 - 72
- Dunning 14 - 7:00 PM

BLOAT
- The Pub - 8:30 PM
- 50c Admission (Arts '73 Only & Guest)
- BEER - 3-$1.00

BONUS - 1 FREE Quart Beer - Year Card

ARTS' 73

NOTE ; WE'VE MOVED THE DATE TO TUES., FEB. 15

GRAD BALL

Friday, 11th February
8:00 pm
The Round Table
with the
MUSIC - MAKERS

Semi-Formal or Formal
Free Sherry, 8:00 - 9:00 pm
Food Provided
Tickets $10

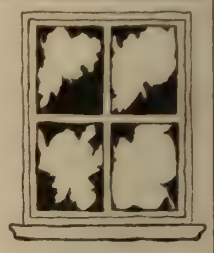
Geoff Hudson - Geology (547-2798)
Chris White - Physics (547-2962)
Ken Hedges - Mech. Eng. (546-5133)
Ian Moyle - Grad House (542-9914)
Departmental Reps or IGIF

COMING FEB . 11 !!!

MARATHON DANCE

For Camp Outlook
GRANT HALL
8 pm - 8 am

Pick up sponsor cards in Union, Victoria Hall Desk, Residence Meal Lines



ADMISSIONS TO RESIDENCES 1972/73 SESSION

Men only Residences
Co-Ed. Residence, Morris Hall
Earl Street Residence
West Campus Residences

Applications from upperclass students, other than those entering Law 1 or Education 1, are due by February 14, 1972.

Application forms and brochures may be obtained at the Desk Clerks' Offices at Gordon-Brockington Hall, Earl Street Residence, Social Centre, West Campus, and at the Dean of Women's Office, Victoria Hall and the Business Office, Leonard Hall.

awareness 72

TONIGHT

Poverty in Kingston
7:30 pm Dunning Aud.

Film: North of Princess Street, followed by a panel discussion with Alderman George Webb, Alderman James Cook, Reverend Brian Thrasher, Mrs. A. Healey and Mrs. D. Whitely.

AWARENESS 72 FILMS still showing Tonite and Friday -- check campus flyers for details.

awareness 72

TOMORROW

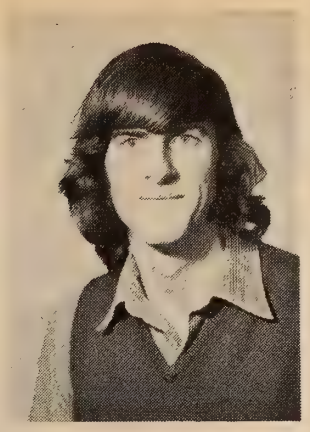
The Emperor's New Clothes
with Dr. Norman Z. Aleack
a discussion of conflict, poverty, world government

Wed. Feb. 9, 7:30 Ellis Aud.
Thurs. Feb. 10, 7:30 Grant Hall

People, Politics, Power, Poverty

SIDNEY POITIER

IN THE HEAT OF THE NIGHT



Dunning Auditorium

Thursday 7:00 and 9:00

Admission $ 1.00

February 10

"The candidate originally in this position has withdrawn."

Ross Sutherland

The A.M.S. is the only campus wide student body and as such should be seriously searching out student problems and initiating ideas and plans from a student viewpoint. With developments like the Wright Report and Intersession the A.M.S. should be actively looking into the possibility of a trimester system, Student Financing, different methods of evaluation and the development of a student consciousness of the "Raison d'etre" of the university. Why wait to criticize a Senate Committee Report?

The A.M.S. should be trying to Develop student interest on campus. Active participation as an initiative critical member of the Campus community will start to develop this. But more direct steps! Let's make sure and fill the two Outer Council Seats that are set aside for Freshmen. There should be a concentrated campaign by the A.M.S. in co-operation (hopefully) with the D.S.C.'s to have an enthusiatic Student government member visit first year classes and explain the student government, what it does and how to get involved. (This may mean that openings for involvement will have to be created).

These ideas are aimed at creating within the students an interest in their educational environment. Hopefully interest enough to vote.

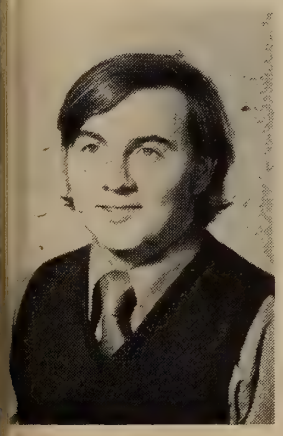
I have a lot of interest some ideas and will gladly make the time.

Maureen New

The 1971-1972 "Who's Where" says "...the AMS is one of the major things which makes Queen's an interesting and extraordinary community to live in."

A student government should not be divorced from the students, but rather be an integral part of each person's life. Although I haven't had experience in student government at Queen's, I feel that experience is not the keynote here, but rather, a real interest in the student body and its activities. I am involved in other activities, such as the Queen's bands and the Journal, but having attended ASUS and AMS meetings, I've realized that the government is the best way for a student to make a meaningful contribution to University life. I'm convinced that I can make this contribution, and would welcome the opportunity to do so.

"Out with the old,
And in with the New."



Jim Thompson

The Alma Mater Society was established to advance the interests of the students of Queen's University; to serve as a medium of communications between the students and the governing bodies of the university; and to encourage an awareness in the students of their responsibilities in the national and international University community.

It is the responsibility of each member of the council to see that an effort is made to reach the three goals. The interests of the students should be served academically as well as socially. The communication to students from the governing bodies should not end at the AMS Outer Council but should be passed on to the student body. Many students do not realize that they are entitled to attend Outer Council meetings and make or second motions or to vote for or against any motion. A greater effort should be made to inform the students of what their AMS is doing for them. More should be done to explain how other universities are operating.

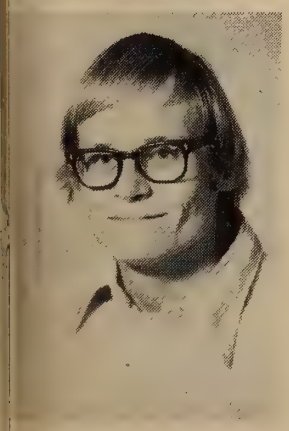
The Representatives-at-Large must, as the name suggests, represent the students in his faculty to the AMS and also to represent the AMS to his fellow students.

Clay Rubec

Clay Ruebec (Arts '73) is in Biology-Geography. He has been Secretary of Arts 73, Secretary of the ASUS, a Geography DSC rep. and a Gael in two Orientation Programs.

The process of participation in this community of trusted, avoided, disliked or misundestood events is an individual affair. People who do keep active tend to change within themselves usually for the better. Those who do not only cheat themselves. A good friend has said, ". . .milk this place for all its worth and then put something back in." This is precisely what I wish to do at this time by working actively and honestly with those who manage to be elected this week to the A.M.S.

To you, the reader your first and most fundamental act of participation should be the ballot. Please vote.

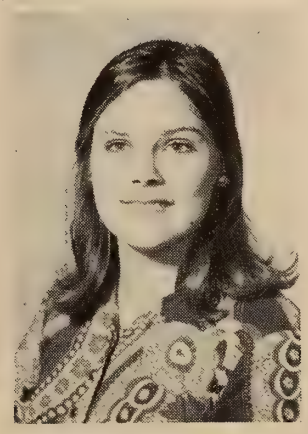


Bruce Trotter

True democracy is, at the present, impractical. We, therefore accept representative democracy as the best alternative. In representative government we place our representatives in power, to voice our collective views. I am asking to be one of nine A.S.U.S. representatives at large to the A.M.S.

Kissing babies and giving answers to problems that do not exist is not my platform. But, if you are to vote for me, you must know where I stand. More emphasis should be channeled to educational interests and participatory awareness of social institutions. The A.M.S. should not become, solely a business corporation. Coleman's suggestion for compulsory social relevance courses, I feel, is a very valid proposal. In this respect, I agree with Le Bland and Palmer in broadening "the scope of education from strictly academics to total awareness." (Tuesday's Journal)

I am also more than willing to devote my time and energy into voicing what you feel is right and what I feel is right.



Steve Sibold

In my two years at Queen's, I have developed an active interest in student affairs, participating in the Arts Orientation program in several capacities. I am standing for election as an A.M.S. representative-at-large because I would like the opportunity to take part in the University community in a meaningful role.

The A.M.S. must take care not to limit its scope and interests in the provision of services for the student body and in its position as a liaison between the students and the administration. For example, the A.M.S. should consider operating, as many university student councils do, a "crash" program in typing and speed reading for interested students. In addition, the Alma Mater Society's role in sponsoring social activities, although already commendable, could be expanded. Its role as a liaison can be illustrated by the recent campus construction plans. The A.M.S should accept the responsibility of informing the student population of proposed changes, and in turn, relay student sentiment to the proper authorities.

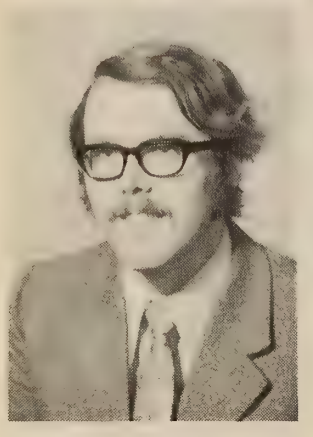
The effectiveness of next year's A.M.S., like any governing body, will depend not only on the willingness of the student body to respond to its leadership, but also on the quality of its elected members. In this regard, I sincerely hope that you will give me the opportunity to serve on the A.M.S.

Kathy Turner

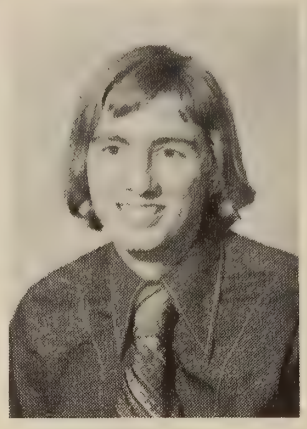
The increasing participatory powers and prominance of student government has come to cast the AMS in an important role -- both in providing student services and in the field of education. In the hope and belief that the AMS can continue to offer a meaningful direction for an involved student body, I am running for the position of ASUS rep-at-large.

As a member of Arts 75, I wish to provide my year with representation to the AMS and attempt to open avenues of communications between all levels of university students.

Since adequate student housing is a major problem only alleviated in part by the construction of Elrond College, it is my desire to lobby for a full exploration of AMS powers in an attempt to solve the high rent-low supply housing situation around the main campus.



I would like to see the initiation of more unifying activities to create a greater west campus-main campus affinity -- functionally advantageous to students by expanding the potential housing area and maximizing the use of existing facilities.



Of prime concern to me is the introduction of more Canadian content on campus beginning with concerts, topicial forums, and the fine arts.

These are just some of my ideas -- you probably have many more and I would be very interested to discuss anything that you may think important.

Engineering Society

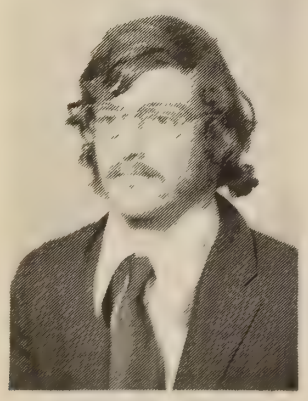
President and Vice-President

Steve Mansell
President

John MacDonald
Vice-President

Have you heard much about the Engineering Society lately? Have you heard what it is doing for Applied Science students? For you. Undoubtedly, the answer is no! Unfortunately, the Engineering Soceity has tended to go its own way without going to you, the students, for guidance. In doing this a separation has ensured between you and your Society. We want this to change. We want you to know what we are doing but, more important, we want to know what you want us to do.

We will start our work by looking into such areas as job placement, year and club structures, the Constitution of the Engineering Society, the future of Clark Hall, the effectiveness of the staff-student academic liaison committees, and much more.



But more important than all this, our aim is to make the Engineering Society a visible and active entity. To accomplish such an undertaking, we need your support. We cannot work without you; we must work with you. With your help, we can accomplish almost anything! Without it, we will be wasting a lot of our time.

We solicit your ideas. In fact, we demand that you submit suggestions. What do you want us to do in the next year? With your help we can accomplish many things. Got an idea or a beef -- want something done -- then phone us at home or at the Engineering Society Office (which is open from 1:00 pm to 4:00 pm daily). We promise to act on your idea, or beef, immediately - not in two or three weeks as in previous years.

We feel we can do so much if you, the students, will only come forward and help us with your ideas, or your time. Thank you.

Stephen F. Mansell - 544-6090
John A. MacDonald - 544-0715
Eng. Soc. Office - 547-3079

Devolpment Committee Chairman

Brian Sterling

The position of Development Committee Chairman is both the hardest to define and the most challenging of all the jobs on the Engineering Society. I am extremely interested in becoming Chairman and I will bring to bear all the drive and enthusiasm necessary to help the Inner Council become a relevant and successful organization. In recent years the involvement of engineering students in their own ruling body has rapidly diminished to nothing. It is so bad that last year's Inner Countil positions were all filled by acclamation. This ation is ridiculous and there is only one way to change it. This year's Council must do its best to involve all engineers in its activities. Failing this might well mean the end to the Council as a useful and meaningful body.

I personally have several ideas I would like to initiate in order to stimulate involvement by engineers here at Queen's. Ideas like establishing a pub in Clark Hall, or maybe a bar-discotheque on campus. Or just encouraging engineers to use Clark Hall for various functions. Or perhaps throwing EngSoc sponsored smokers, along the line of the successful "Om pa pa". Most of all I want to involve the first year students in the Society, since they are largely ignored after Frosh week. First year is more unified in spirit, because they have not yet been fragmented into disciplines. I believe this unity has much to offer EngSoc. I would also like to become involved with the Concert Committee and see if we can get better talent at a better price.

But what I really want is to help create as much interest as possible in EngSoc, by all engineering students at Queen's.

Warren Workman

The Development Committee Chairman is a member of the Inner Council of the Engineering Society. He is concerned generally with development of ideas and organizations. The society has not been as effective in this past year because of lack of cohesive leadership and guidance from the Inner Council.

If I am elected, I intend to concern myself with all aspects of the Engineering Society and in this way make a strong, integrated inner and Outer Council.

Some of the areas in which I am particularly interested as Development Committee Chairman are:

1) Organizing an academic evaluation committee to study course content and curriculum in general

2) Making 'Golden Words' a newspaper carrying more material relevant to Engineering

3) To make the student aware of when and where the Engineering Society is functioning on campus.

My past experience on campus has been as Treasurer of Wanderlust, Executive of Orientation Committee, and Member of Engineering Geology Club Executive.

I urge you to vote for an interested and concerned student as Development Committee Chairman.

Treasurer

Kerry Clark

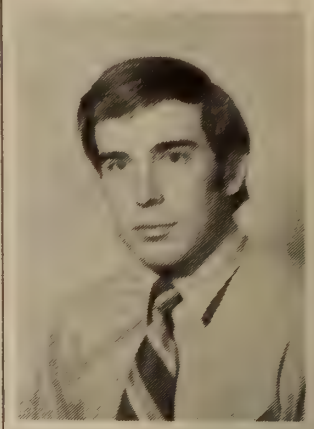
All Engineering students may soon be paying $10.50 to the Engineering Society each year, an increase of $2.00 from the present. At the moment I feel that the average student is not getting enough services from the Engineering Society for the funds he contributes. Tighter control on the outflow of society funds to clubs and organizations that extend to use the money for activities that benefit the campus at large rather than engineers would give the Engineering Society more money to work with. By reconstructing the present system of year executives and discipline clubs, financial overlapping could be avoided.

Every two months I would like to see a financial statement of the Engineering Society published in Golden Words. This would give members a chance to see how their money is spent and give better insight into some of the activities of Outer Council.

I would also propose that work be done on future financial prblems of the Engineering Society. At present the offices are located, virtually rent free in Clark Hall. However, due to future campus plans, the offices may have to be moved in a matter of years, which will put an extra financial burden on the Society.

The Engineering Society has your money to provide services for you, let them know what you want.

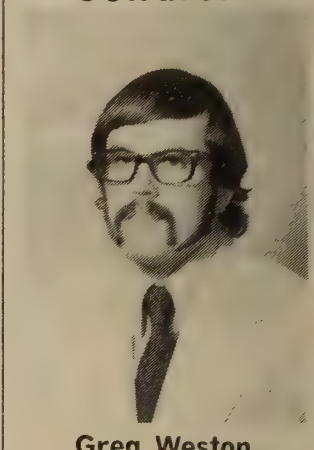
Michael Robson



There is no real platform one can stand on when running for Treasurer except to say you will keep the books correct and up to date. But just as important as being Treasurer is the fact you are a member of the Inner Council which along with the Outer Council is the main governing body of the Engineering Society.

I would like to work with the other members of the executive to establish a smoother running society by improving the efficiency of the meetings. I think the Inner Council should draw up a general policy and sort of act as a cabinet in a parliamentary structure.

In running for Treasurer, I bring some experience to the job since I am presently Treasurer of Science '74 so I have preliminary knowledge in bookkeeping methods.



In conclusion, I urge you to vote and I welcome all of your support in the election.

Secretary

Steve Tovee

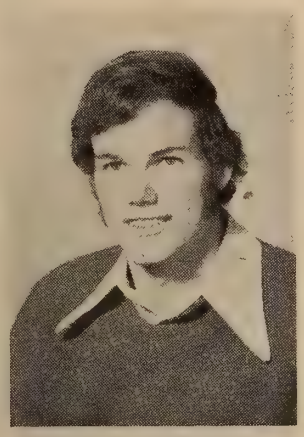
Senator

Greg Weston

Since I have already been appointed to the Senate by the Engineering Society, I don't really see the point in filling your heads with the usual election-time promises of 'three-day degrees' and 'free education for all' etc. Instead, I would like to take this space to state what some of my goals and policies will be during the next two years, in the hope that some students may take enough interest in their own affairs to offer suggestions and constructive criticisms.

Primarily I feel there is an incredible lack of communication between the students and faculty. much of this is due to the attitude of many students to get in and out of Queen's just as quickly and quietly as possible. The withdrawal rates from upper years seems to indicate that this attitude is quickly lost.

More important than this however, is a certain negligence on the part of many segments of the faculty and administration which promotes so much of the apathy and frustration which we all feel at one time or another.



As a student I am fed up with paying the faculty's bill for my education.

As a student senator I hope to bring about some sort of consolidation of this University Community.

Each time I encounter a situation like this, I wonder whether the University exists for the students or the students for the University Corporation.

Commerce Society

President

John Telgmann

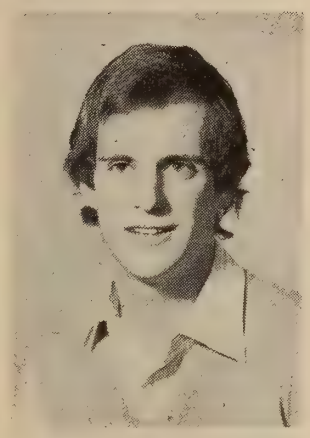
John Telgmann, the hard-working President of the Queen's Ski Club for the last two years, wants to turn his attention to directing the Queen's Commerce Society in '72-'73. He feels the Ski Club presidency has prepared him to guide the Commerce Society with dynamic and skillful leadership. John, would like to apply his Ski Club policy of Big Better Beer Bashes, ones that are open to everyone with dancing and music. In addition he will personally organize a fall semi-formal and pre-game warm-up parties.

Recently, John has been attending the Commerce Student-Faculty Committee meetings and sees this group as having a tremendous responsibility to help shape future Business School Policies. John thinks that students should be concerned with the rising costs of education and through the Commerce Society he hopes to advise and co-operate with the administration in cutting costs. One way to do this is to design better method of registrations where space allocation, professor teaching assignments and student preferences are co-ordinated more efficiently. Other problem areas that present opportunities for change include course evaluation, Intersession and Summerschool, prizes and awards and the possibility for a Dean's Honour list.

John is team captain of the winning Queen's Intercollegiate Sailing Team this year, and was a Commerce Boss during Orientation Week.

President of the Commerce Society is a tough job requiring many extra "headaches" which John says will provide valuable experience upon graduation.

Junior AMS Representative



Ken Wong

Last year, when the students of the Commerce faculty elected Bill Delucia, they also elected a new set of objectives for the Commerce Society. Among these objectives was for Commerce to take its place not as a separate school but as a part of a much greater community, Queen's.

This year, the presidential platforms have attempted to further the development of this goal, and thus I feel it only proper that I bring this with me to the A.M.S. if elected. The time is now dawning upon us to stand up and be noticed as a valuable sector of the university community at Queen's. We must pursue this objective with every open method. The A.M.S. is only one of the many ways in which we can do this, many others exist. If elected I shall attempt to bring these to the students of our faculty with the sincere desire in mind that we make a place for ourselves in Queen's, while maintaining an independent and strong identity.

Past Experience: Bitter Grounds Committee

Social Chairman Orientation Committee.

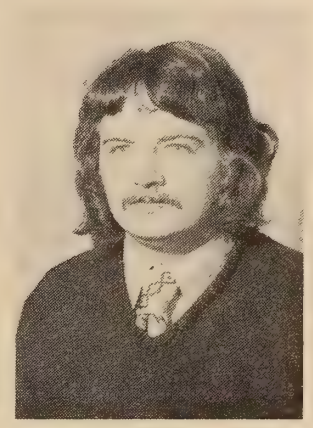
Tony Wolman

If apathy has to exist, I intend to see it doesn't exist at Queen's. This goal might seem rather a heavy sort of task to undertake; let it. But the dissatisfaction one feels with his school or person is only a reflection of his or her participation in the life here at Queen's. It is our job to get involved and to live each day getting the most from this university, and to place less emphasis on the things we are "going to do" -- Do it now.

Treasurer and Senator

-- see page 10

Senior AMS Represesentative



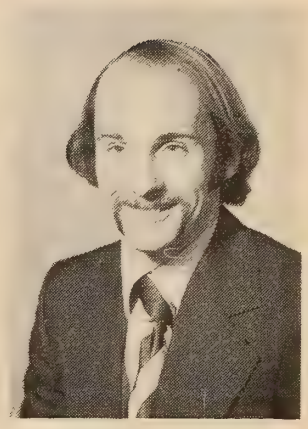
Alan Coxwell

Unlike most candidates in the A.M.S. elections I do not have any steadfast platform to discuss, nor do I have a long list of past chairmanships of responsible committees. In all elections this type of rodomontade is simply a bunch of meaningless dribble which should really be ignored; but, lofty election promises always have, and I suppose always will be made. However, not by myself, for I have always failed to see their purpose.

Basically, I entered this election to represent Commerce in the A.MS. and because apathy is usually a deciding factor in the elections around Queen's.

Another reason that I am running is because I am genuinely interested in getting things accomplished through the accepted channels; i.e. by means of the A.MS. For three years now I have faithfully read the Journal's reports on activities of our A.M.S., and on many occasions felt helpless to do anything about their actions with which I did not agree. Now, I would like to do something.

Essentially, I would like you to give me a stronger voice so that I can stand up for our rights and opinions in an attempt to help Queen's develop along the most beneficial lines. The problems and controversies of next year's student body are unforeseeable, but when they arise I hope that I will be able to help resolve them.



John Green

My basic impetus for seeking this position lies in a desire to lead the Commerce Society into the age of practicality. By this I mean a greater level of co-ordination between our Society and the campus as a whole. More explicitly, Commerce must take a more realistic view in respect to its size and therefore structure its events accordingly. A down to earth realisation of this will enable the Commerceman to become more involved in his Society.

This concern for the individual is manifest in the actions which I feel should be pursued by the A.M.S. in the coming year. A more fair allotment of part-time employment could be achieved through the creation of a job bank. Such a job bank would handle all applications for part-time employment on campus from working in the Pub to being a Constable. Another aspect of my concern is a desire to see a greater variety of social activities on campus at all times. Each student could then have options of how his leisure time is devoted.

Briefly I have stressed the need for practicality not only in the Commerce Society, but in the A.M.S. as well. Therefore give me the opportunity to try to satisfy your needs at this university during the coming year.

George Craig

A third year Commerce Student, George Craig, has already exhibited keen interest in the Student government of the University. Acting as Treasurer for Snowball '72 and serving on the Men's Intercollegiate Athletic Council and its sub-committees for the past two years has led him to further develop this interest.

He has been a member of the Intercollegiate Swim Team and the Waterpolo Team for the past few years and plans to forfeit his position on the swim team so he can apply himself to a serious position on the A.M.S.

With this experience and interest, George believes that he can make a beneficial and serious contribution in the responsible role of senior A.M.S.Rep for the Commerce Society.

Vice-President

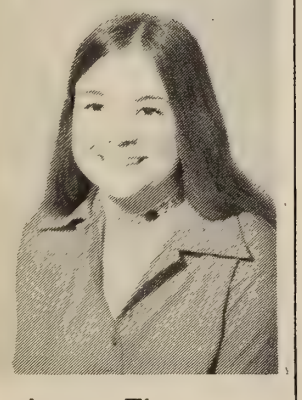
Bob Patterson

Bob Patterson believes that the primary objective of the Commerce Society should be to actively and vigorously promote a strong faculty spirit by unifying all of its members regardless of year membership. With this in mind, the Society should enable its members to make their four years in Queen's Commerce more than just academically profitable but personally fulfilling and memorable. He feels that the executive of the society can only accomplish this by being both sensitive to all Commercemen's needs and yet be capable of providing initiative, leadership and administration in undertakings. Bob if elected as Vice-President would push for greater integration of the junior years, Commerce '75 and next year's '74, into the mainstream of Society activities. He feels that the Commerce Banquet has great potential and can be turned into a success. This year's Casino raffle deserves being made an annual event for Commerce if it can prove itself successful this year.

Dale Johnston

By now you've waded through pages of 'bullshit' promises from the majority of candidates albeit, most of these promises are conceived in good faith every year there exists a discrepancy between these 'promises' and actual performance.

I do not promise bigger and better anythings, just a stab at combating the Commerce apathy that has hurt Casino Royale and most of this year's activities. Once the whole faculty participates then the bull-shit will gain credibility.



Rehabilitation Therapy Society

President

Donna Collins

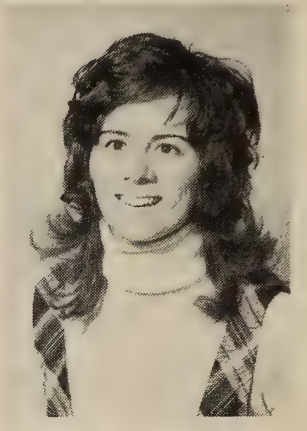
Lynne Thomas

Vice-President

Carol Chapman

Debbie Chiborak

Margo Pentland



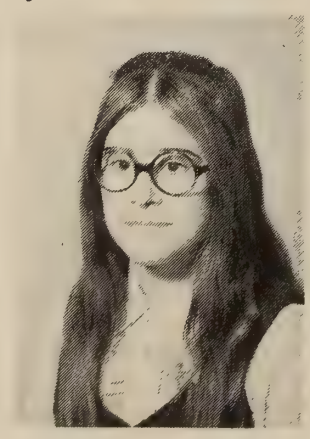
Sheila Pond

Social Convenor

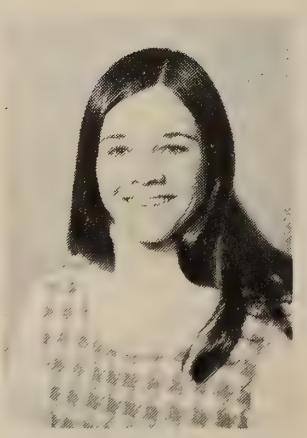
Sue Coish

Kitty Noble

Secretary-Treasurer



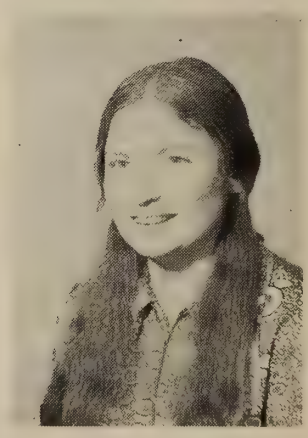
Sharon Cook



Karen Tribble

Voting for all positions except vice-president will be held on Tuesday (Feb. 9) only. Voting for vice-president will be held on Wednesday (Feb. 10). This is because the president and vice-president must be from different sections of the school.

Sports Stick



Anne Besley

Ianna Swann

AMS Representative

Mary Lou Decoteau

Sue Drowley

COMMERCE SOCIETY (continued)

Senator

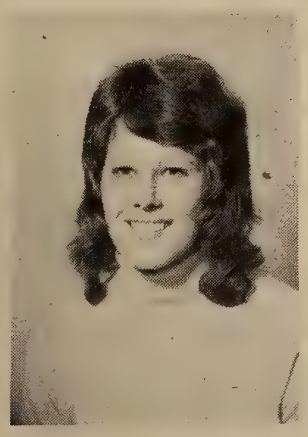
Jim Dinning

Treasurer

Jeff Mitz

As treasurer of the Queen's Commerce Society, it will be my firm intention to ensure that the Society's funds are not squandered or misused. To aid in keeping a tight check on expenditures, it will be imperative for anyone who wishes to be reimbursed by the Society to present me with a valid receipt showing their cash outlay. Budgets will play an important role in assessing moneys for Bews or any major function undertaken by the Society. Until Now, we have been growing constantly, monetarily speaking, and because of this, the Commerce Society should be able to support bigger and better events on the Queen's campus

Athletic Stick



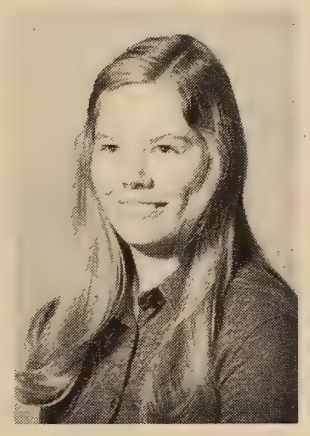
George Smith

I hope to increase participation of Commerce men in the BEWS program by two methods. First, frosh must be made more aware of the Intramural program and encouraged to participate. This can hopefully be achieved by ability during Frosh week. Second, the old problem of apathy in the upper years must be combatted. Efficient use of bulletin boards and enthusiastic year stick and coaches should accomplish this.

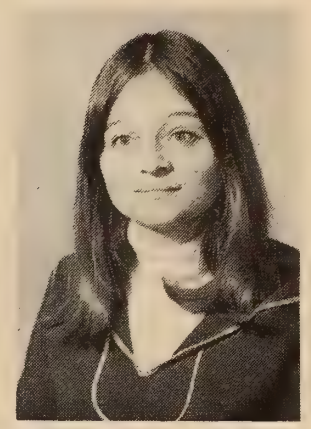
Nursing Science Society

President

Bev Moir

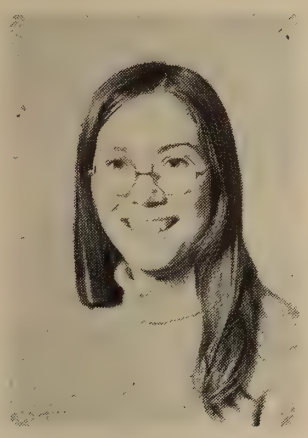


Janet Warner



Vice-President

Hania Duncan



Judy McCarthy

Margaret Orr

Treasurer

Ginger Comission

Tessa Frost

Carol Sly

We regret that we have no photo.

Kate Yule

Athletic Stick

Gail Moonie

Social Convenor

We regret that we have no photo.

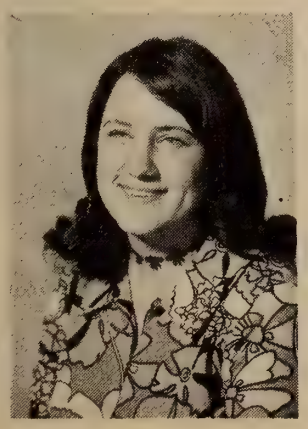
Sandy Fisher

AMS Representative

Jo Forbell

Heather Pursey

Secretary



Kathy Martin

We regret that we have no photo.

Judy Powell

CUNSUR

Janet Jeffrey

Senator

Roxi Blair

ASUS

MEET THE CANDIDATES NIGHT

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 7th
7:30 P.M. STIRLING D

ALL ASUS CANDIDATES WILL BE PRESENT!
ITS YOUR CHANCE TO MEET YOUR CANDIDATES! PLEASE USE IT!
26 PEOPLE HAVE SHOWN THEIR INTEREST! HOW ABOUT YOU!

Defeat of concert fee Spells end of entertainment at Queen's

With two-thirds of the year over, and a concert referendum coming up, it is wise to take a look at what the concert fund has been able to do for the campus so far.

The table shows the ten artists who have been brought here by the fund, and the actual, the break-even and the potential attendance for each concert.

Performers	ADMISSION PRICE student	general	ATTENDANCE actual	break-even	potential
Blood Sweat and Tears Don McLean	$3.00	$4.00	4500 +	6000 +	6000 +
Kris Kristofferson Tannis Niemann	$2.00	$3.00	1300	1800	1900
Liona Boyd	.50	$1.00	350	400	420
Edgar Winter James Cotton George Carlin	$3.00	$4.00	1400	2500	3000
Rita Coolidge Syrinx	$2.00	$3.00	unknown at press time	1800	1900

+ figures are approximations

Some of the most popular artists from many fields of entertainment have been here, thanks to the fund. Blood Sweat and Tears (jazz-rock), Don McLean (folk-rock), James Cotton (blues), Edgar Winter (hard rock), Rita Coolidge (female vocal), Kris Kristofferson (country rock) and George Carlin (comedian) are among the top-rated performers in fields. Less well-known performers, such as; Liona Boyd (classical guitar), Syrinx (rock with synthesizer) and Tannis Niemann (folk) are great new Canadian performers whose careers are just beginning.

The major percentage of tickets were bought by students. Judging from the figures, the concerts were well attended. Attendance, however was never good enough to break even. It is a fact that although Queen's students enjoy concerts, the concerts cannot be planned without a large risk. The concert fee therefore has made it possible to bring in entertainment which otherwise would not be made available.

This has been the first year for subsidized concerts at Queen's, and the first year for the concert committee which administered the fund. (The members of the committee are appointed by the societies of the seven largest faculties on the campus. The committee is under the Campus Activities Commission). Handling all aspects of concerts, from the dealings with agents to setting up equipment for the performers, the committee has had to face many problems. In meeting these problems, a loose type of structured machinery for the production of concerts has evolved which has never existed before. Unlike other student groups which have produced a single concert in the past, the Queen's Concert Committee has the potential to become proficient in arranging concerts from its continuous collective experience throughout the year.

Admittedly, the concert committee as a new committee has failed to achieve its full potential this year. One of the important things which has been learned is that smaller concerts are financially more feasible than larger productions. Next year rather than provide a package of artists in one single concert, it would be advised to have many concerts each featuring a single good artist. This approach is being used for the remainder of this season. Presently, negotiations are being made with Miles Davis for Mar. 5th, and with John Wyre Percussion Ensemble (a classical-avant-guard group which has performed with Seiji Ozawa and the TSO). A rock concert is scheduled before exams.

Especially at Queen's, where entertainment depends upon the campus, there is a need for campus concerts. It is obvious that many of the artists who appeared here this year would not have been within 200 miles of Kingston had it not been for the concert fund.

Then there is more than your $3.00 that is at stake on the referendum. The real issue is, do you want concerts or not. Without some kind of subsidy, it seems to be impossible for any organization to take the financial risks involved in bringing entertainment to the campus. In the same way that AMS funds are spent for sports, clubs, and other cultural activities part of the non-academic fee ought to go towards concerts.

AMS CONCERT COMMITTEE

You do not have to buy Tricolor

There are several reasons for supporting the continuance of the $4.00 Tricolor fee, and very few for opposing it.

With most students paying the $4.00, the Tricolor staff knows early in the year how much money they have and how many books they must produce. This means that the book can be more carefully planned. The fact that the staff does not have to run a sales campaign also leaves more time and money to devote for the book's contents. With close to 8,000 books being produced, the economies of scale come into effect and a large book with a reasonable amount of colour can be produced for $4.00 a copy. If the book had to exist on sales alone the price would probably rise to $6.00 and some quality and-or colour might be lost. A final point is that two of the last three books that were financed by sales (before the $4.00 fee was introduced two years ago) ran fairly sizable defecits which had to be paid from the general AMS revenues.

The main reason for opposition to the fee would seem to be that an individual did not wish to receive a copy of Tricolor. However, any student who has paid the fee may apply in October for a refund if he does not want to receive a Tricolor. (This year approximately 400 out of the 8300 students who paid the fee chose to take the refund).

In summary, then, continuing the Tricolor fee will provide the majority of the campus with a better, lower priced yearbook, but will not force anyone to pay for a book he doesn't want.

TRICOLOR 11

Let's keep our University Centre pledge

The students of this university are committed to contributing $500,000 towards the cost of building a University Centre. If we are going to meet this committment without borrowing money, it is necessary that the $5.00 fee be raised to $10.00 for the coming three years.

There are two questions here, first, is the university centre worth the money, and second, is this the best way to raise the money.

The University Centre will be a vital addition to a student's experience of Queen's. It will provide room for numerous services, expanded restaurants and pubs, stores and social areas which are sadly lacking at this time. In addition sub-centres are proposed which will greatly enhance artistic and cultural facilities. This is a student initiated project which is very much a product of stated student wishes. The alumni and others are contributing close to ten times the amount we have promised. The least we can do is meet our own portion of the costs of a facility that will benefit us most directly.

It has been proposed that a better way to make up the extra money we need is to borrow a large sum of money and then extend the $5.00 fee past its 1975 terminal date. I feel this would be a mistake as it would saddle future councils with an awesome debt and the addition of interest payments on the loan would greatly increase the total cost to the students. If we are going to keep our promise, lets keep it in full and on time and not have the thing hanging around our necks for years after the centre is built.

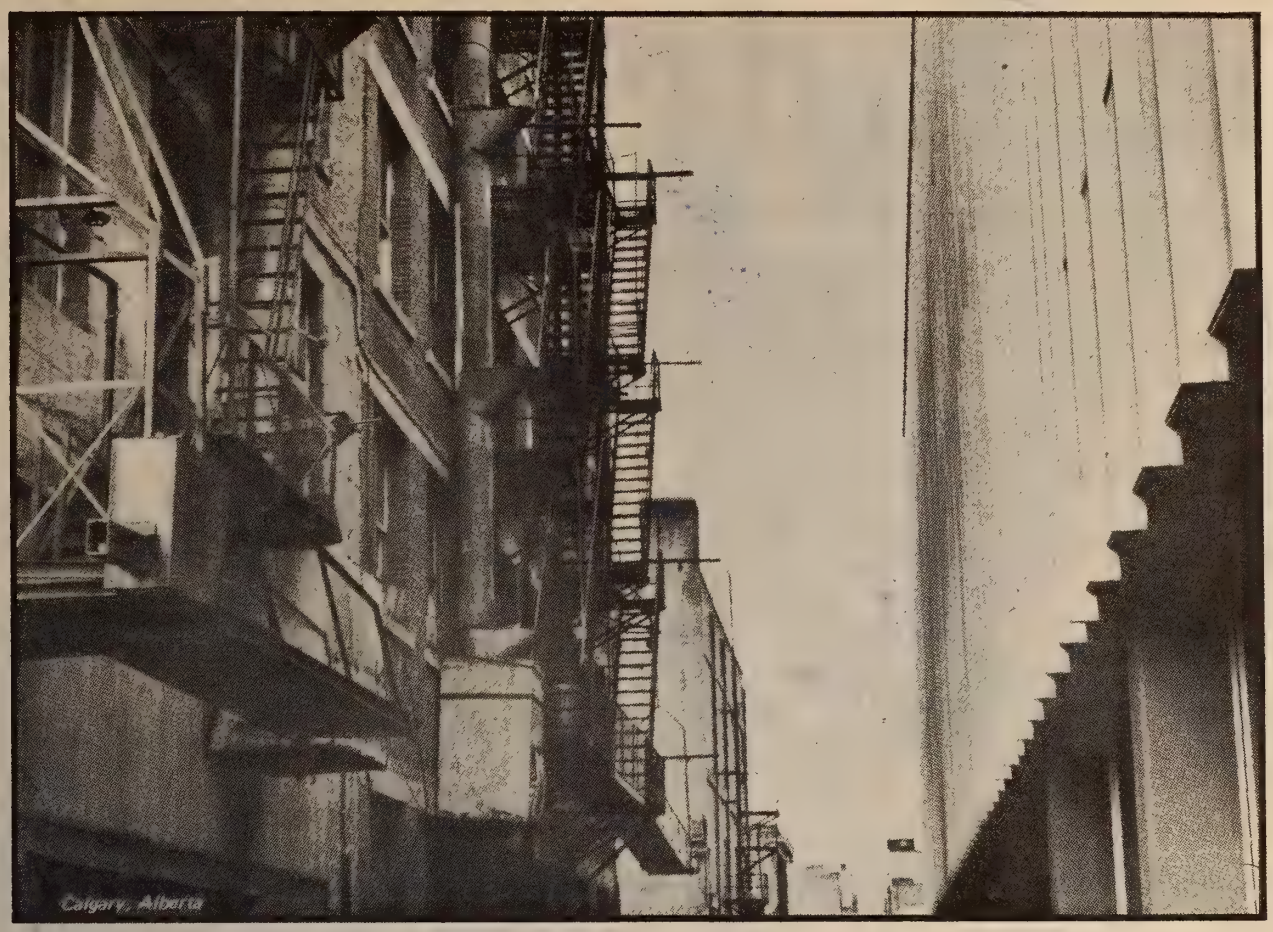
Patric Riley

OFY

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH

INFORMATION NIGHT

Graham Deline
OFY Regional Project Officer



Here is an excellent chance to meet with Graham, and talk about your plans for a project.

Tuesday February 8 at 7 p.m.
Student's Memorial Union
(Small Common Room, second floor)

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 45
Monday, February 7, 1972
Queen's University
at Kingston, Ontario

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

The stairway smelled of piss.

The smells inside the tenement ... were somewhat more ambiguous. They were a suffocating mixture of rotting food, rancid mattresses, dead rodents, dirt, and the stale odours of human life.

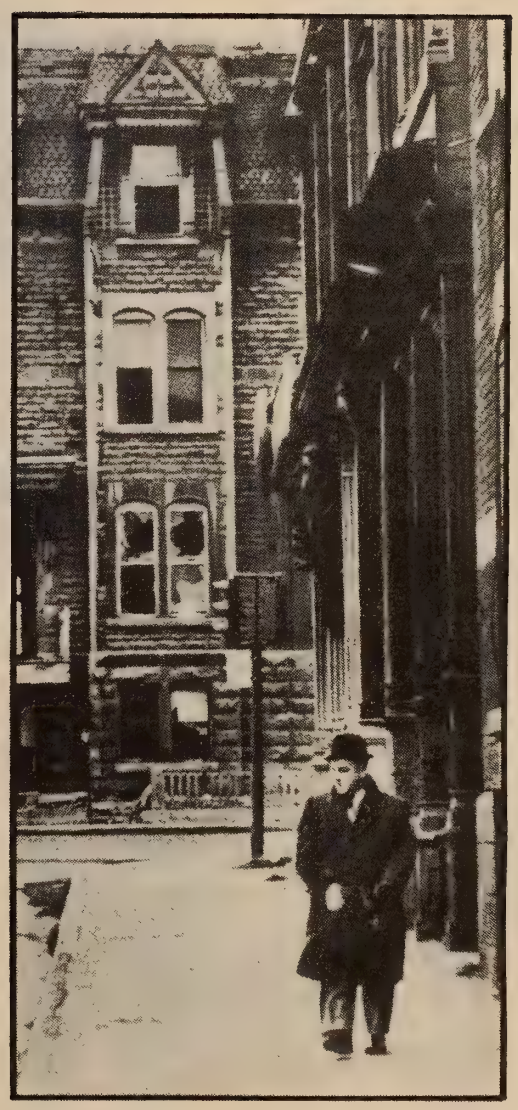
This was to be home. It had been home before: for a family of eight - five kids, three adults. Some of their belongings had been left behind. Some of their life had, too.

The place, altogether, was about 25 x 12 feet, with a wall separating the kitchen section from the rest. In the kitchen was a bathtub, a tiny, rusty sink, a refrigerator that didn't work, and an ancient gas range. In one corner was a toilet with a bowl without a seat. Water dripped perpetually from the box above the bowl. The other room was filled with beds: two double-decker military cots, and a big ugly convertible sofa. There wasn't room for anything else. The walls and ceilings were mostly holes and patches and peeling paint, sheltering legions of cockroaches.

This was to be my home.

I wondered, for a moment, why.

Then I remembered that this is the sort of place in which most people live, in most of the world, for most of the time. This or something worse.



Then I was home.

See "To be poor," p6.

Queen's
Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 47

Thurs. Feb. 10, 1972

interlude

Arts & Science Formal
To be held at the Holiday Inn
Saturday, February Twelfth
Nine to One
Refreshments
The Bob Ayre
Orchestra

Eight Dollars per Couple
Tickets now on sale in
John Orr Room

Queen's Journal
Volume XCIX, Number 47
Thursday, February 10, 1972
Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario

Editors: Leslie D. H. Kaye, Bill Johnston
Business Manager: Charles Schwier
Managing Editor: John Solman
News Editor: Chris Redmond
Assistant News Editor: Jennifer Grass
Entertainment Editor: Dianne Elliott
Tendays: Donna Armstrong
Sports Editors: Doreen Howes, Chris Boon
Photo Director: Dave Wilson

Published three times a week (less often during some periods) during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc. Founded in 1873. Editorial opinions are those of the editors and not necessarily those of the Alma Mater Society or the university. Opinions expressed in articles are those of the article writers. Telephone (613) 547-5540.

Thanks tonite to everyone who came in whoever you are, and also those who took the nite off.

AWARENESS 72

Thurs, Feb 10th
7:30 Grant Hall
People, Politics,
Power Poverty

Mon. Feb. 14th
7:30, Rm. 201
Kingston Hall
Queen's - A
Hotbed of Apathy

Tues. Feb 15th
7:30 Grant Hall
People Before Paper
with Stanley Burke

Thurs.
Feb 17th
7:30, Rm. 128
Jeffery Hall
Chto Delat-What to Do assessment and reaction

TODAY, TOMORROW,
SATURDAY

CABARET IS HERE!

Presented by :

Queen's Musical Theatre

CAST

Jean Callum
Tim Chapman
Liz Clements
Colette Cote
Lee David
Steve Gentles
Moira Hart
Michael Henderson
Linda Hill
Andrea Howard
Lynda Hyde
Patricia Jones
Jack Kasaboski
Mike Kassner
Barb Keane
Tony Keenleyside
Paul Kennedy
Hannu Lambert
Catherine Lamoureux
John Maskell
Brenda Maybee
Peter Ostergaard
Mario Pinto
Arlene Reid
Cathy Robertson
Rob Schock
John Seveigny
Janet Smarr
Christine Soloninka
Craig Tompkins

KCVI AUD. 8 pm

Tickets, Students $1.50, other $2.00
Available at door, from cast, Music Dept.,
Union, House of Sounds

Sport Shorts

Archers Improve

The final indoor archery tournament of the season was held Friday and Saturday at Western. The severe snowstorm made it impossible for the Queen's team to reach London on Friday, but the girls put on a strong showing Saturday, finishing in second for the day with 894 points, behind U. of T. Queen's Janet Spence was also second in the Saturday individual competition, behind Anne Chalmers of Toronto, who claimed the only perfect end of the tournament. The Queen's team as a whole continued to show improvement; it is unfortunate that weather prevented them from completing both days of competition.

Wrestlers Win

R.M.C. held an Invitational Wrestling meet this past Saturday with competitors from Queen's, York, Ryerson, Carleton, Ottawa, R.M.C., and Sir George Williams. The standings were on an individual basis and not by team. Queen's fared very well with three firsts, two seconds and one third. In the 142 pound class, Garry Brown and Ted Pordham of Queen's ended up competing against each other for first place. Garry won the match. Other Queen's firsts were by Mike Dwhytie in the 150 pound class, and John Johnson in the 167 pound class. Seconds went to Steve Brown (118) and Ted Prodham (142), with Pete Verhoeven (177) earning the third.

The True North Blueprint

By Paul Gompertz

Whatever may be said of the efficacy of the performances, it is impossible to deny that this trilogy was fascinating. The actors' ability and enthusiasm alone warranted a far better attendance than they received. Perhaps it was because the acting was so good that, as the 'story' progressed, it became more and more a peg upon which to hang the abilities of the actors. It was sad that the near-perfect blend of plot and representation evident on the first night was not approached in the subsequent performances.

'To be a Drummer' was a coherent idea which was realised through the very polished and original talent for scenic creation displayed by all the actors, and it also incorporated their individual musical abilities to good effect. It was creative theatre at its best, and it was strange that 'I Love You, Billy Striker' abandoned this technique in favour of a more classical theatrical approach, complete with solid set and fixed characters. This change had the unfortunate result of pointing the basic instability of the script, and much of this section became a portrayal of emotion and tension for its own sake. These two contrasting techniques became blended in 'In Search of the Last Paradiddle', which returned to the style of presentation of the first section, without shaking off the feeling that the action itself had been eviscerated, and that all that remained was an artificial paradigm of energy without direction. The result was a series of brilliant cameos which moved without obvious purpose within the same general sphere.

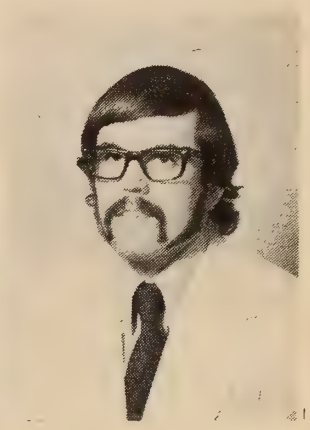
This reliance upon empty allegory is a simple way of creating atmosphere and tension without relating them to a cohesive objective, and it was disappointing to see a company which had proved it could do better resorting to such techniques.

Some of this trilogy was memorable: simple moments, such as the portrayal of the agony of a woman with cancer, when the whole company clawed at her body and eventually enveloped her, took on great individual power; whilst the concept of a Royal Chemical and Medical Police was both funny and disturbing. The third section was a strange blend of symbolism and incoherence; the structure, such as it was, approached that of 'After the Rain' whilst the stream of Messianic parallels and allusions, such as the temptation in the wilderness, came near to giving it the cohesion it needed. It was an interesting and stimulating theatrical experiment, and it is to be hoped that future undertakings of a similar nature will be much better supported.

3600 111 Xerox Duplicator

If you require a 'presentation quality' reproduction for letters, theses or any bulk copy work, your on-campus typing service has a 3600 111 Xerox capable of producing such copy for as little as 1½c per copy (from same original) on runs of over 100. A 720 Xerox and a Ditto Machine are also available.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING



CORRECTION

Unfortunately there were a couple of errors in Monday's election Journal.

In the engineering Society the photos of Brian Sterling (candidate for development committee chairman) and Greg Weston were interchanged. The correct identification is shown below.

Greg Weston

Brian Sterling

In the Graduate Student Society section it was erroneously indicated the Bruce Rutherford was a presidential candidate. He is a candidate for president of the COMMERCE Society, as was stated in his platform in Tuesday's paper. The president of the Grad Society is Doug Pritchard as indicated. There are two candidates for Commerce president - Bruce Rutherford and John Telgmann.

The Journal is sorry for these errors and regrets any inconvenience caused to any of the candidates.

SKI-WEEK
SLACK-WEEK

LIMBERLOST, HALIBURTON

Special Student Rates

QUEEN'S—McMASTER—WESTERN,
Maximum 30 Students Per School
6 Day's , 5 nights, 1ST Class Accomodation
All Meals, Lifts, and Lessons Included

Sleigh Rides, Gluewines, Ski Films, Championship Cross Country Trails, Ski Care Clinic, Surprise Race, Race, Awards Banquet, Night Ski, Parties, Discoteque.

Sunday, Feb. 20 AM to Friday Feb. 25 PM

We have lots of Powder, Vertical, Length

ALL INCLUSIVE $60

Phone 544-5459
Must have names, $10 deposit by Tues. Feb. 16

TODAY IS YOUR LAST CHANCE TO VOTE

For AMS, GSS, Eng Soc, ASUS Commerce, Nursing Science!

UNION	10:30 - 6:30
LIBRARY	10:30 - 6:30
STIRLING	10:30 - 3:30
HUMPHREY	10:30 - 3:30
KINGSTON	10:30 - 3:30
LEONARD (Both lines)	4:45 - 6:15
BAN RIGH (Both lines)	4:45 - 6:15
DUNNING	9:30 - 4:30
MILLER	10:30- 1:30

NOTE: ASUS ballots will NOT be available in meal lines. You must have your student card to vote.

Classifieds

ANNOUNCING the Grand Opening of BERTHA and BERNIE'S BIFFBURGER BOUTIQUE and BEANERY. Specialists in fried Norwegian dindon. Free delivery and take-out service.

NO TUXEDOS are required for the Arts and Science Formal.

FOUND in Tech Supplies: two sets of keys, two watches, gloves and mitts, books, student cards (L. J. Soloway, J. D. Stowell). Owners may claim at Tech Supplies Office.

ANNE SCOTT. If you lost your watch (Bulova, with brown leather strap and name engraved on back), please call Pat Revill at 544-1336 or 158 University Ave.

FOUND in front of Vic Hall 11:00 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 6, a blue medium ski jacket. Owner can call 544-7090 and identify make.

TICKETS for the Arts and Science Formal are being sold every day in the John Orr Room from 12-2:30.

WANTED: 4 bedroom house or apartment to rent for next year. Please call Jane 544-8558 or Barb 544-8561.

A STEAL - AIWA cassette tape recorder, AM-FM radio; 6 months old, tapes included; $70. Help - I'm broke! Call Don 544-0298.

THE QUEEN'S Consumers' Group is doing a research project on the recording industry in Kingston to determine if the companies and stores are fulfilling their obligations. You can determine the accuracy of the study by helping us - if you have any complaints about your dealings with any of the record stores in Kingston, please call Colleen or Jennie at 544-9412. We would also like to talk to anyone who has worked in a record store and is familiar with their procedures. Please call. Thanks. with their procedures. Please call. Thanks. LOST - $100 (USA) cash (1 bill). Between Division and Tech Supply. Reward 50 per cent. Contact Journal Office.

A BUFFET DINNER will be served at 11:00 p.m. during the Arts and Science Formal.

GIRLS looking for a 3 bedroom apartment as of May 1972. Anyone with any information please call Sue 544-8459, Jan 544-8451, Anne 544-8565.

HELP! The Career Planning and Placement Office Library is slowly being depleted of its career information. Would the students who have taken material that was NOT to be removed from the office return it so other students may use it.

APPLICATIONS for Science '44 Co-op: Phone Al at 548-3455; Wayne at 549-0858 or Anne at 549-0374.

REFRIGERATOR for sale. $40. Call 544-7120 between 6 and 9 p.m.

BEAUTIFUL newly renovafed house on Earl Street near campus for 3-5 people. (Furnished; individual bedrooms). Available May Sept. Cheap! 544-0504.

THE ECUMENICAL Institute - The Toronto region is holding a weekend course in Existential Christianity in Kingston February 11-13. Further information and applications call Ray Baumgart; 542-9289. Costs subsidized by A.S.U.S. Other Events Committee.

A GIRL'S fur hat was found in Jock Harty Arena on Saturday at skating competition.

PAY BAR (at the Arts and Science Formal).

SUMMER JOBS in Kingston - Restoring, testing Historic steam engines and associated equipment. For info call 544-7586.

LOST - one 200 lb. used, 1871 model Admiralty Pattern anchor; last seen in various locations (Science Formal, McNeill House, Victoria Hall, etc.) If found please return to Vic Bradley for use with presidential yacht. Information leading to the recovery would be appreciated and may even involve a small reward. YO HO HO!

LOST - ; Arts 74 & 75 Intramural Softball Team. If found please return to WIC Competition Thursday Nights or call 542-5969.

WANTED: Large one bedroom or two bedroom apartment for next year. Call 549-2732, Max.

HELP WANTED: part time clerical work, accuracy required, $2/hour. Interviews Feb. 14, 15 at 7:30 p.m. Room 238, Interim Admin. Bldg.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

ONE GIRL is looking for a second to share a pleasant one bedroom apartment, furnished, close to Queen's, from mid May to Sept. 1 or part of that time. $67.00 monthly. Call 549-1726 or 544-1313.

DAVE WARD hopes to be at Hill's Discussion Group on Sunday 13th February. See you all there. Alan

Pregnant and distressed?
We can help you!

BIRTHRIGHT
546-LIFE (5433)

ADMISSIONS TO RESIDENCES 1972/73 SESSION

Men only Residences
Co-Ed. Residence, Morris Hall
Earl Street Residence
West Campus Residences

Applications from upperclass students, other than those entering Law 1 or Education 1, are due by February 14, 1972.

Application forms and brochures may be obtained at the Desk Clerks' Offices at Gordon-Brockington Hall, Earl Street Residence, Social Centre, West Campus, and at the Dean of Women's Office, Victoria Hall and the Business Office, Leonard Hall.

Golden Words Annual Beer—Brewing Contest

Enjoy good food, music and beer while a panel of "experts" select "Queen's Brewmaster 1972". Spectators can also win prizes by identifying commercial brews.

TIME: 8:00 to 12:00 PM FRIDAY FEBRUARY 11

TICKETS: 50c at the door

PLACE: HOUSE OF LORDS (second floor common room) Students' Union

under attack

for National Campus Television Programme

PANELISTS NEEDED

DR. THOMAS SZASZ, a psychiatrist who claims that mental illness is a myth

GENE LEES, a music critic who believes that rock music is intellectual poison, and who vehemently opposes the use of drugs

An arch-conservative fundamentalist preacher who regards Billy Graham as a liberal heretic.

(Other guests to be announced.)

Interested students please meet

THURSDAY 10 FEBRUARY

Student's Union Building,
Third Floor Common Room
From 8:00 P.M.

Queen's show dates : Feb. 16 and 17

awareness 72

TONIGHT

7:30 Grant Hall

People, Politics, Power, Poverty

A panel discussion on Canadian poverty and the politics behind poverty with Ian Adams and Brian Hill, two of the authors of the real Poverty Report, Prof. CES Franks, and Ted Lloyd, a Queen's Law student with Dr. A.J. Coleman, head of the mathematics department, chairman.

Career Seminar Series 1971—72

Alma Mater Society
and the Career Planning & Placement Office
presents

Careers In Computing

February, 10th, 1972, at 7:00 p.m.
in
Smaller Common Room
Students Memorial Union
guest speaker
Mr. W. Jenkins, Director of Computing Centre Queen's University

This seminar will be of interest for all students who are interested in eventually working in the computing field.

Science '73 and Commerce '73 YEAR PARTY

Friday, Feb. 11, LaSalle Hotel
8 pm Dates

$1.25 for all you can drink!

Ski club presents...

SKI WHITEFACE

SATURDAY, FEB. 12

COST: $13 (bus and tow)

Tickets on sale in Union

TONIGHT 7 pm

Bus leaves Vic Hall at 5:30 am

John Smith...

...Out for season

Gaels dump Brock, Ottawa

by Bruce McLeod

Queen's Golden Gaels showed that they can win the ones that count, as they rammed a 9-2 victory down the throats of the Ottawa Gee-Gees to climb within one point of the third-place club. In a game where the whole team played well, a couple of players stand out in the minds of all the spectators who saw the game.

Doug Barton, who has spent most of this year as half of the Gaels' extremely effective penalty killing team, exploded for his first three goal game in five years on the team. The veteran forward scored one of his goals while performing his usual job, and got the other two while playing on one of the patch-up lines thrown together by coach Bob Carnegie as he shuffled his lines around the injury to John Smith, and the absence of Murray Douglas due to flu.

Several players stood out in unaccustomed positions. Bob Kindon took Smith's place and duplicated his performance on Saturday in the 8-4 win over Brock with two goals. Dave Nuttall replaced Douglas on London's line and got a goal as well as making several outstanding plays. Gil Labine replaced Nuttall and played a strong game. Colin Loudon continued his consistently good play with two goals and a strong two-way game. He was a thorn in the side of the Ottawans all night. The other Queen's goal was scored by Stan Galt.

But the biggest story of the night was the play of Clyde Harris. Not even expected to dress for the game because of a badly bruised ankle, Harris not only played, he played a standout game, making several crucial and a few unbelievable saves. Although he never ventured out of his crease, and even had to have someone else scrape the ice in front of his net, from the time the Gee-Gees scored the first goal of the game at 2:43 of the first period until they scored their second on a soft shot that eluded him at 9:00 of the third, he was virtually unbeatable.

The rest of the team seemed to take inspiration from him, as well as from anger at the first goal, which was set up by a blatant trip behind the Queen's net. Within a minute, they had tied it, and five minutes later were ahead 3-1. From there on, the Gaels concentrated only on increasing their lead. After the fifth Queen's goal in the second period, Ottawa replaced their goalie, but as often happens, the new goalie fared no better, and was scored on within 56 seconds.

Ottawa did not play a particularly outstanding game. Although they outshot the Gaels 39-38, many of the shots were from long range, and they missed several good chances. When they did get a chance, Clyde was equal to it. The Gee-Gees were discouraged by the Gaels' ferocious checking, as the team played its most physically aggressive game of the season so far. Although the Gaels were still a little inclined to give away chances in their own end, they took away many more before they even got started, and for the most part, covered up for each other well.

This game should serve as an excellent warm-up for the Gaels' tough road trip this weekend to York and Laurentian. This is the right time for the team's spirit and depth to emerge, and if the bounces keep going their way, as they did Tuesday night, it could carry them right through the playoffs.

—boag

John Smith-suffers shoulder separation

After the game against Brock on Saturday, it looked as though the injury jinx was finally going to catch up with the Gaels. Clyde Harris was a doubtful starter for several games, and the team lost the services of their aggressive right winger John Smith at the end of the second period as he suffered a separated shoulder when he was crashed into the end boards. But it now looks as though the rest of the team, although limping, will be healthy enough to play, and the need to fill the gaps actually seemed to be a spur to the rest of the team.

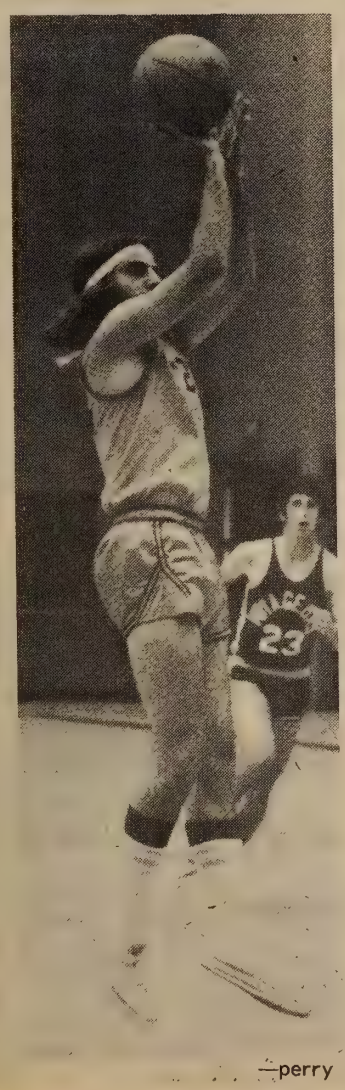
The game in St. Catherines was a dull affair, as the Badgers offered little opposition, and the Gaels played down to them somewhat, scoring only when they had to.

A major factor in this game was the emergence of the third line. Bill White and Dave Nuttall each ended long scoring droughts, and this line was one of Queen's most effective. Bob Kindon, emerging from relative obscurity to centre Mott's line, played a strong game and scored two goals. Murray Douglas continued his fine play with two, and the other Queen's goals were scored by Stan Galt and Bruce Cameron.

Track Gaels show well

Despite the snow-enforced absence of sprinters Fraser, Guy, Fedyczenko, and McLellan, Queen's thinclads acquitted themselves well in the Star-Maple Leaf games last Friday. Miler Brian MacDonald took his event in the college games in a time of 4:24.6, despite being placed in a slow heat, while newcomer Gary Tetzlaff set a new Queen's pole vault record by clearing 12 feet, before going out at 12'3".

Hurdlers Dave Jarvis and Don Price collected 2nd and 4th spots respectively in the 50-yd Hurdles.



The Gaels also drew blood in the main event Friday night. Kip Sumner won the Ontario Challenge Mile in a time of 4:13.7, while the 4x440 relay squad of Jarvis, Fraser, Aiken and Milne grabbed a second-place finish with a 3:29.3 performance. The two-mile relay team finished 4th.

Intermediate Gals Win

Thursday night the Women's Intermediate Basketball Team played a match against the Instructors from the Kingston City Basketball League. Despite a skillful display by the teachers, a neat all-round effort gave the Gaels a 68-30 victory.

Jean Crichton sank 25 points, while Miriam Gordon racked up 17. Janet Mitchell and Barb Platt each contributed 8 points. This brings the team's unofficial record to 9 and 1 for the season.

B-Ball Gaels have backs to wall

—perry

Dave Smith-a hot night against Ryerson

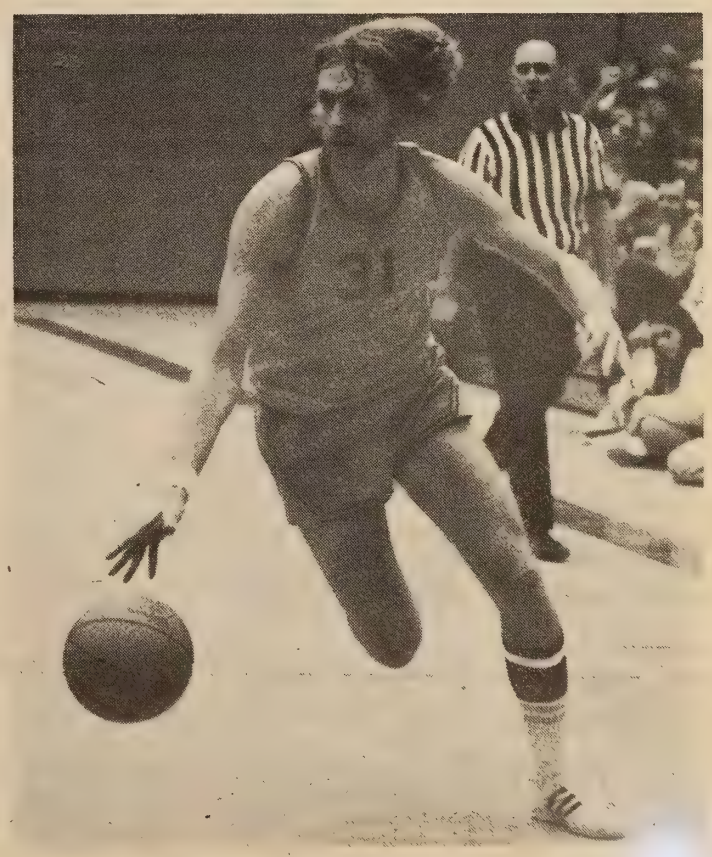
Queen's basketball Gaels are rapidly running out of games, and playoff hopes. The Gaels split a weekend home stand, bombing the hapless Ryerson Rams 86-45 before suffering a severe attack of mental disjointedness with about six minutes to go against Ottawa U.

The result was a 66-55 defeat that leaves Queen's with the unenviable task of winning all its remaining games, including two on the road (against Ottawa and Carleton) this weekend, if it is to have any hope of making the playoffs.

The game against the Rams served to point up the fact that parity amongst teams in the OUAA is a myth. It took Ryerson exactly 12:29 to score their first field goal. At that point, the Gaels enjoyed a scant 34-point lead. Yes, indeed, a real thriller.

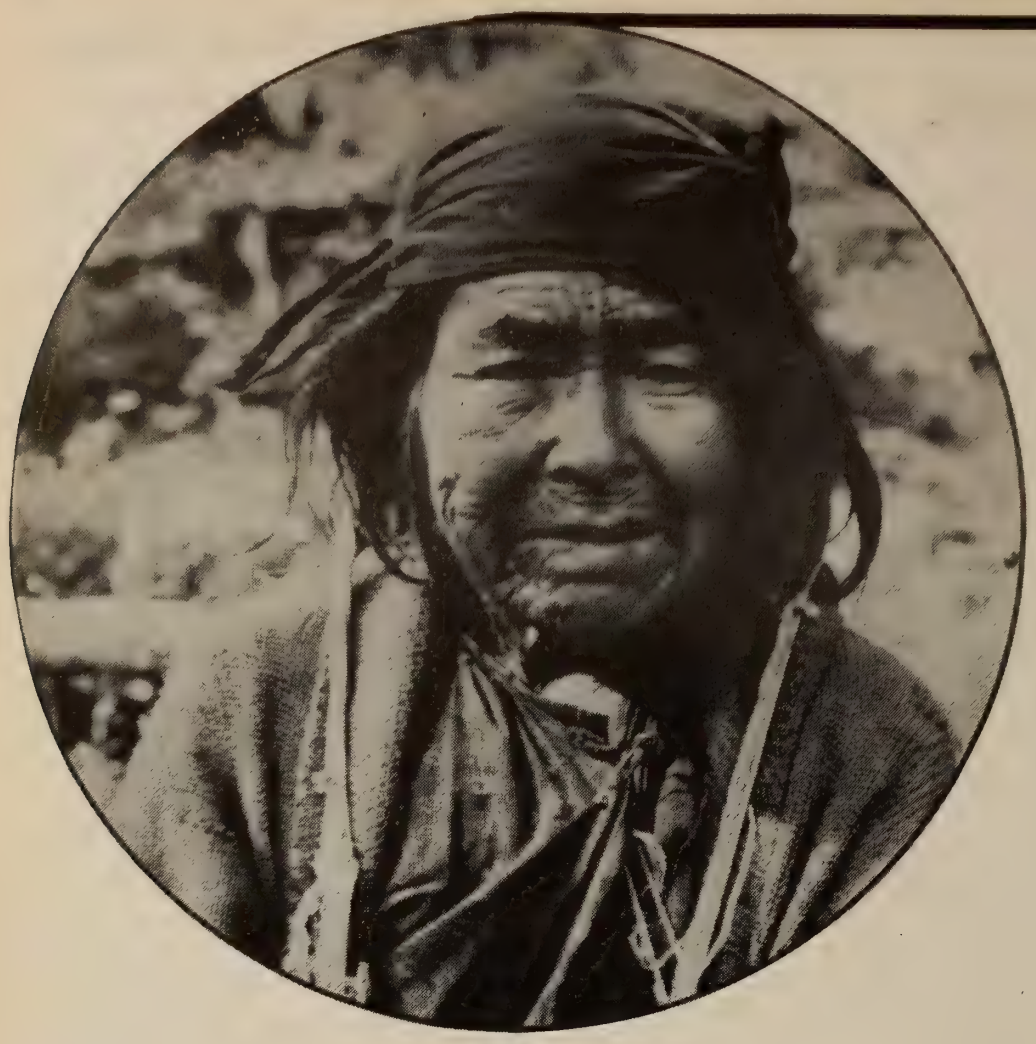
Not that the game lacked moments of interest. For example, there was Dave Smith's nonchalant of-course-I-always-make-30-footers shooting display, Stu Bridgeman's 25-foot lateral layup, and a great series, Whaddya mean, basketball is a noncontact sport, featuring Gael hatchetman Alan Dresser.

Other than these brief interludes, the game could be summarized in one word: domination. The Gael starters completely contained the Rams, rolling up a 52-24 half-time lead, as everyone on the Queen's bench figured in the scoring. Andy Daugulis led all scorers with 18 points, while Peter Gordon had 14 and Dave Smith 13. Howard, Daugulis, and Rob Smart again dominated the boards against the much smaller Ram squad, while the second string did not allow much drop-off in efficiency.



Unfortunately, the Ottawa U. game was a rather more sorry spectacle. Up against a large, physical team, the Gaels could manage only a stalemate through the first 35 minutes before collapsing in a burst of turnovers, bad shots and apparent blindness.

The teams were deadlocked at 26-all after the first half, and the Gaels actually threatened to pull ahead several times in the third quarter, but mistakes always allowed the Gee-Gee's to stay close.



The final disaster started with about five minutes to go. The Gaels' outside shooting, which had been shakey all game, disintegrated, Ottawa U. came up with seven turnovers, and it was all over.

The Gaels played well for all but this last stretch, given the physical advantages enjoyed by Ottawa, but seemed to collapse mentally late in the game, throwing the ball away, forcing bad shots, and missing the open man on several occasions.

Andy Daugulis had 16 points for the Gaels, who shot a dismal 30 percent from the floor, while Peter Gordon added 13. Gerry Ashe led all scorers with 19 points while Vic Chandler had 16. Incidentally, the Gee-Gee's could only manage 32 percent from the floor, not good for that ball club.

Andy Daugulis-Gaels' leading scorer

to be poor

- By Bill Johnston -

To be poor in our society is to suffer the most outrageous kinds of violence perpetrated on other human beings.

From the very beginning, when you are still a child, you must learn to undervalue yourself. You are told that you are poor because your father is too stupid or too shiftless to find a decent job; or that he is a good-for-nothing who has abandoned you to a mother who cannot cope. And as you grow up on the streets, you are told that your mother is dirty and lazy and that is why she has to take money from the welfare department. Because you are poor, the lady from the welfare office is always coming around asking questions. She wants to know if your mother is living with a man, and why she is pregnant again.

If as a child you are going to survive, you must close these violences out of your mind and retreat into a smaller world that you can handle. And if throughout most of your childhood you are sick and rarely have enough to eat, your sickness and hunger will only make the larger world more alien to you and force you deeper into your own personal apathy. If your parents are Indian, black or Eskimo, then all these strikes against you are multiplied.

By the time you are a teenager you accept without question your teacher's advice that you are not really good enough to go any further with your education. You know that it would be a waste of time even to think about it because your parents couldn't afford to send you anyway.

From then on, as you go from one menial job to another, you come to know that machines are more important than you are. In the newspapers you read that the government is spending millions of dollars on people like you but it is apparently all money down the drain.

During hard times when jobs are scarce, employers tell you that it is your fault that you don't have enough education, enough skills. Men and women with anonymous faces behind anonymous counters spend a lot of time telling you that it is your fault that you have never taken advantage of the opportunities that came your way. So you spend a lot of time hassling with the unemployment insurance people, the welfare department, and sometimes with the law. And nothing is going to save you from these bureaucracies, because you will never have enough money to get them, and the loan sharks and the bill collectors, off your back.

As you move through a succession of crummy apartments, where the rents are always just too high, your kids start growing up the same way you did - on the street. And you suddenly realize there is no way out, that there never was a way out, and that the years ahead will be nothing but another long piece of time, spent with an army of other sick, lonely and desperate old people.

For unless you are blessed with an exceptional stroke of good fortune or a driving natural talent that will get you out in the larger world of affluence and opportunity, then you will, like the majority of the poor, live on the street and die on the street - and very few will ever give a damn about you.

-The Real Poverty Report

To be poor in this country means to be in a condition which is generally misunderstood by the rest of the population, including the politicians who have it in their power to change your plight.

This misunderstanding starts at the top and runs through the entire population. Even the official definition of poverty fails to grasp the reality of poverty. In 1968, the Economic Council of Canada decided to set the 'poverty line' at the point where families or individuals must spend at least 70 percent of their income on the basic necessities of life (housing, food and clothing.) Thus, in 1970, the poverty line income is $1,900 for a single person, $3,200 for two people, $3,900 for three people, $4,500 for four people and $5,200 for a family of five or more.

This measure is hopelessly inadequate for several reasons. First, it takes no recognition of the fact that families larger than five cannot live as cheaply as families of five. There is no logic (except perhaps some middle-class logic) in ignoring families larger than five people. Second, the ECC does not adjust the poverty line properly to take account of inflation. It is adjusted, using the Consumer Price Index, for the increases in the cost of living but not for increased in the Canadian standard of living. Finally, the measure defines poverty in terms of bare subsistence; by this measure, persons or families cease to be poor as soon as they stop spending most of their money on absolute necessities.

What is needed (and supplied in The Real Poverty Report) is a measure which is truly relative to the standard of living of society. For poverty is not merely living at a subsistence level; it is having an income which is not high enough to afford to purchase the goods and services that will allow an individual or family to participate fully and equally in society.

The ECC measure, then, significantly underestimates the number of poor people in Canada, which allows the government to ignore poverty as a pressing problem. Using its measure, about 4.7 million Canadians (about 29 percent) are poor.

However, when one considers the number of people whose incomes are too low to allow them to participate fully in society, a much different picture emerges. John Porter, for instance in his book The Vertical Mosaic, calculated that in 1955 the middle-class life style, which is considered to be how Canadians live, did not begin until an individual had an income of $8,000. At that time, only four percent of all Canadians received that much. In 1970, the starting point for middle-class life would be $18,000.

In 1969, the Canadian Labour Congress calculated that an urban family of four needed an income of $11,000 per year to make ends meet. (At that time, the average weekly wage in manufacturing was $110.64 a week - $5,723 per year.)

So contrary to popular opinion, created by the politicians and the mass media, which are almost completely owned and controlled by the rich, the problem of poverty is not a minority one at all.

Yet, the majority of Canadians feel nothing but disdain and contempt for 'the poor.' Most Canadians feel that, although it is a disadvantage to be born poor, no one need remain poor if he or she is willing to work hard; affluence is seen as the result, not of luck, but of effort and character. About 50 per cent of all Canadians think that poverty is self-imposed, according to a survey conducted last January by Maclean's magazine. And from this mistaken belief, and the false pronouncements of political leaders, spring a host of oth

Common belief ho in rural areas and in the heads of poor fa
anyone else in the fa
the head of the fami
woman (the husban poor (and unemplo jobs; and that the m poor is government

The facts are
Although some of t
Canada is found in t than 80 per cent o
families live outsid than 60 per cent of urban areas, and h
live in the big metr

The poor work. M income families in earner, and almost t were in family units
come was either wa employment. In tw
the family head wa

Although it is tr
Canada are condem poverty, most of the of the family heads o
Most are also men;
are headed by m regulations which h
(see below.)

Canadian workers are more likely to n
workers of nearly an However, in years
amount of job turn because workers wo
are few jobs, even mines.

One final myth is declining. In fact, if a percentage of th
creasing. For the pa fifth of the populatio cent of the national i received 38 per cent
as the bottom three receives. The avera poorest fifth of the po of the average nation richest fifth of Canad income of about 33
national income.

Moreover, using p
family, income, the
the poorest ten pe
population in 1968 wa
1958, and came to 6

Poverty, then, affe
Canadians, but there more likely than oth

Canada's native p
Eskimos, are one suc
Indian and Metis fa
the level of absolu
dividual. Seventy fiv Metis families live on income of Indian and

"Anyone who does not own a fairly substantial amount of income-producing property or does not receive an earned income sufficiently large to make substantial regular savings or does not hold a well-paid securelt tenured job is poor. He may be healthy, handsome and a delight to his friends - but he is poor."

The Rich and the Super-Rich,
Ferdinand Lundberg

s about poverty.
the poor live mainly ntic provinces; that lo not work, nor has rked recently; that
r 65 and probably a
; deserted); that the ll not move to find ce of income for the es.
t, much different.
severe poverty in tic provinces, more
v-income, non-farm lantic region. More me families live in ese urban dwellers
centres.
75 per cent of low-
at least one wage s of the poor in 1967
major source of inalaries or from self-
f all poor families
g.
most old people in e out their days in not old; 77 per cent
milies are under 65.
nt of poor families
spite of welfare
ear families apart

emely mobile, and ind a new job than ountry in the world.
nomic slump, the s decline, but not
, but because there rudeau's northern number of poor is

, their numbers (as ation) may be in-years, the poorest
ceived about 6 per he richest fifth has er cent is as much Canadian families
ily income of the
is about 10 per cent income, while the ies had an average
nt of the average

a, rather than per annual income for
of the Canadian than it had been in 0.

es of a majority of e groups of people
found in poverty.
, the Indians and
Over 40 per cent of n less than $1,000-vation for an in-nt of Indian and less. The average milies un northern

Saskatchewan is about $500 a year.

In 1961, only 15.9 per cent of employable Indians and Metis were in the work force, compared with 37.5 per cent of the general population. More than 16 per cent of Indians and Metis families live in one-room shacks. Over half live in homes of three rooms or less. Over 87 per cent of Metis and Indian homes have no running water.

Only 25 per cent of Indian and Metis get as far as Grade 6. The life expectancy of a Canadian Indian woman is 25 years; for a man it is 35. The infant mortality rate among Eskimos is 293 deaths per thousand, more than 10 times the infant mortality rate for all Canadians.

As Ian Adams said, in The Poverty Wall, "The Economic Council of Canada has avoided making statements that racial discrimination is a cause of poverty, but there is no doubt that the poorest of the poor in this country are the Indians, the Eskimos and the Metis."

The Indians, Eskimos and Metis are the bottom group of the minorities who are systematically discriminated against in Canada, but they are not alone. The largest group of poor in this country is made up of women. If you total up the number of women who are on welfare, the number of working women who are heads of families and survive on less than $3,000 a year (the so-called poverty line), the single women who work for less than $3,000 a year, and the elderly poor women, you get a group five times the size of all the poverty-striken racial groups put together. There are about 3 million such women, nearly half the number of women over 16.

Fifty per cent of all women working receive less than $3,000 a year, one third of them make less than $1,700 and only one tenth make more than $5,000. Compared with men, women receive little reward for their education; men between the ages of 35 and 44 with only elementary education earn an average wage of $3,312; women in the same bracket earn $1,560. A male high school graduate will earn about $4,536; a woman with a university degree will earn less, only $4,343.

Outside the labour force, women fare even worse. Two years ago, there were 350,000 women who were single heads of families, looking after a total of 1.1 million children. Most of them are forced to live on welfare, (about which more later.)

And for those women over 65, who can expect to live another 10-15 years, life becomes even worse. Many of these women are deprived of the company of their husbands (over half of all women over 64 are widows) and are often without his pension benefits, since many retirement plans will not pay retirement benefits to a man's widow, or will not pay off at all if the man does not live to 65, the retirement age. Outside of welfare, they can expect little help from the government; the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan, for instance, do not apply to anyone widowed before December 31, 1967 (unless they have since become widowed again); also, benefits paid under the Canada Pension Plan are in proportion to a person's earnings while they worked, which means that women, who often work less than their full adult lives and who are paid less than men as well, will receive much less than a single, retired man, although it will cost them both the same amount to live.

Capstick, N.S.

Those unfortunate enough to have been born outside of the rich provinces of Canada make up the last big group of the poor. In 1970, the average per capita income earned in each province, as a percentage of the Canadian average, ranged from a low of 55.4 per cent in Newfoundland to a high 115.7 per cent in Ontario; the people of Newfoundland earned just under half of the Ontario average, the people of Prince Edward Island just over half. At the same time, while the national unemployment rate was 5.9, unemployment was 7.6 per cent in the four Maritime provinces.

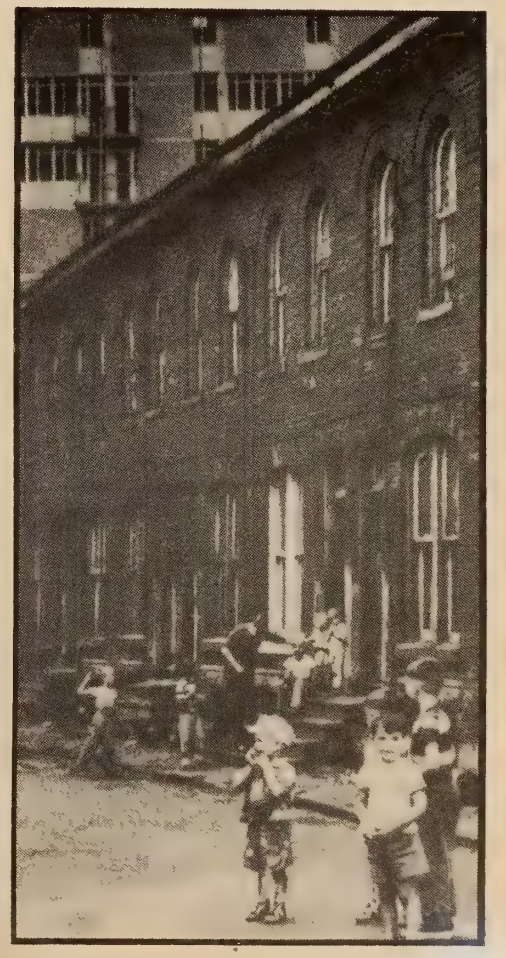
One group in particular stands out in this regional look, and that is French-speaking Quebeckers. The average income for Quebec workers as a whole is 90 per cent of the Canadian average (78 per cent of the Ontario average) but within Quebec, the French Canadians fare significantly worse than almost any other group. The average income for French speaking Quebeckers is only 90 per cent of the provincial average and only Italians and Indians earn less than they do.

The governments' pittance

To be forced to live on government subsidies in Canada is to be placed in the extremely uncomfortable position of never having enough money, of being viewed by the general public as a good-for-nothing and of having to put up with the insults and delays of the welfare bureaucracy.

Most of the money which is given to the poor comes from the federal government, either directly, through a number of programmes, like Old Age Security and Children's Allowances, which are given to the rich and poor alike, and indirectly, through money transferred to the provinces and municipalities through the Canada Assistance Plan. It is the money transferred in the second manner which provides the funds for provincial and municipal welfare schemes.

By the Canada Assistance Plan, Ottawa pledged to pay for half of all "social assistance" programmes established by a province. The plan defined social assistance very broadly, and held out much promise of helping the poor when introduced in 1966. However, it has two major failings which destroyed that promise. First, because the individual provinces are responsible still for paying half the cost of the programmes set up under the Plan, the amount of benefits varies greatly from province to province, with rich provinces like Ontario being better able to support good programmes than the poorer Maritime provinces. This tends to increase the existing inequalities between the rich and poor provinces.



Second, the administration of the welfare programmes which are funded under the Plan is left in the hands of the local welfare officials. Thus, the quality of services varies widely within the provinces, there is no compulsion for any city or province to provide adequate services for the poor and the local officials are allowed to establish their own rules for determining who gets how much.

In Ontario, welfare payments are funnelled through two separate systems; Family Benefits, which is provincially run to help people with permanent, long-term needs, and General Welfare Assistance, which is supposed to be an emergency fund for people in temporary need.

With both types, the question of providing work incentives arises; ie, how much of what a person, who is receiving benefits, earns will he or she be allowed to keep? This is problematic; if a person cannot keep a fair amount of what he earns over and above his benefits, he has no incentive to work at all. However, if the total pay-off from work and welfare is too high, those working at low wages may be encouraged to quit their jobs and take welfare, while working parttime.

The idea of work incentives has been incorporated into the Family Benefits programcontinued, page 8.

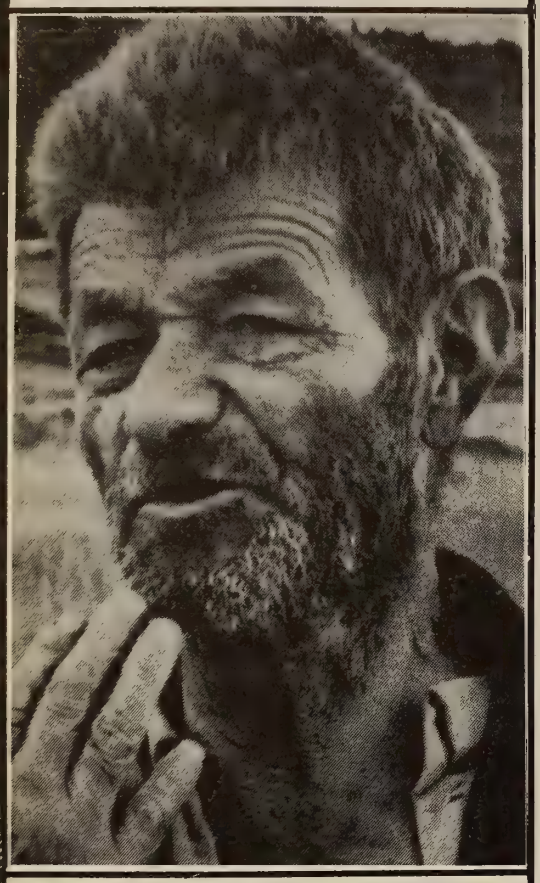
Regent Park, Toronto.



Vancouver, B.C.

to be poor

continued from page 7

"Income from welfare systems is publicly defined as 'easy money,' reserved for the worthless and the lazy. Income from work (and, curiously, from coupon clipping) is considered to be deserved; income from government - even from social-insurance programmes (which the recipient has paid for)- is, in the same way, considered to be unearned."

-The Real Poverty Report

mes, but the total amount of benefits is not high. A deserted mother with a child will get $43 a week and is allowed to earn another $8.30 a week and keep all of it. (That's about four hours work at the minimum wage.) Of anything she earns beyond that, she can keep one quarter. This is not a generous amount, but it is better than in Manitoba or New Brunswick, where the income ceiling is $20 a month; in Manitoba, if you earn $21, the province takes the extra $1; in New Brunswick, if you earn $21, the province takes the extra $1 and the original $20!

The General Welfare Assistance is run by the municipalities, with the province paying 80 per cent of the cost. A certain minimum level of benefits is provided, but the cities can also give certain supplements, such as money for drugs or medical services, although there is no encouragement to provide these "extras" since the province picks up only 50 per cent of the bill for them.

As mentioned, the General Welfare is designed to be an emergency fund for people viewed as temporarily out of work; yet, these "unemployed employables" run into the peculiar attitude of the General Welfare people toward work incentives. Municipalities are allowed to let welfare recipients keep a portion of any earnings they might make while on welfare, but, since this costs money, many municipalities stipulate that 100 per cent of all earnings are to be deducted from welfare benefits. To quote the Real Poverty Report, "In other words, welfare systems discourage any impulse a recipient might have to go out and make a living. The tendency of welfare recipients to become dependent on welfare systems is not due to any moral collapse or social addiction, but is the direct result of the way welfare systems are set up."

The welfare system also puts great pressure on family units. For instance, General Welfare Assistance- short term welfare- may be extended to a complete family with an unemployed male head, but Family Benefits, which are long term and thus, more secure, may be granted only if that unemployed male is separated from his wife and children. Many workers, acting out of sensible and human concern for their families, leave.

Another indication of the failure of welfare is the fact that no cost-of-living excalators are built into the welfare rates. Instead, the rates are raised whenever the government gets around to it, by which time inflation may well have eaten away much of it. For instance, a home economist calculated that, in 1966, a family of six could be fed for a month on $132. In 1969, it would cost $157 to buy the same amount of food, yet it was not until 1969 that the Robarts government of Ontario got around to raising the benefits from their 1966 level.

"Slaney can tell you what it was like to come off an eight-hour shift (at the fluorspar mines of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland) and lie on the ground coughing your guts out until you vomited blood for twenty minutes at a time. And you believe it, because when you stand beside Slaney you can hear his bronchial tubes wheezing and straining for air.

(In the past twenty years, more than a hundred men have died; almost a whole generation of miners has been wiped out by lung diseases.)

Although Slaney's condition is directly a result of the conditions he worked under for more than 19 years in the mines owned by the St. Lawrence Corporation, he doesn't get Workmen's Compensation. The Newfoundland Workmen's Compensation Act covers only minors who have silicosis or cancer of the lung. (Slaney has chronic bronchitis, obstructive emphysema, infective asthma and corpulmonale, but not cancer or silicosis.)

....Every year Alcan (which owns the mine) takes ore worth $2.25 million from the mine and ships it to Arvida, Quebec, for smelting.

Other than acknowledging that the cancer-striken miners have died courageously, Alcan has not exhibited much interest in offering extra financial aid to the dying miners or their families.

"Certainly, Alcan has the resources to move in," says I.S. Decarie, Alcan's co-ordinator of public relations, "but then what would be the commitment to our other 20,000 employees and their dependents? Such a move could have repercussions throughout the whole industry."

Perhaps," said Dr. Frank Brent, Alcan's medical director, "as Canadians, we should each of us reach into our pockets to see how we could help the people of St. Lawrence." A remarkable statement from a man who works for a company that clears $80 million yearly profit after taxes.

The Poverty Wall

Affluence or poverty; it's mainly a matter of to whom you're born and where.

perpetuating poverty

Poverty exists, and continues to exist, in Canada because the economic, social and political life of this country (like most, but, significantly, not all, other countries) is designed to meet the needs and desires of the minority of people who have affluence, and, as a result of that, power.

The government establishes society's priorities to coincide with those of their paymasters in industry and commerce. (A study for the 1966 Committee on Election Expenses indicated that something like 90 per cent of the Liberal Party's income is derived from industrial and commercial firms and from businessmen clearly associated with particular companies.)

In turn, these rich and powerful groups, through their control of the mass media and advertising of the country, create a fiction to explain why society is like it is. One of these major fictions is the idea that Canada is a middle-class society, which, as indicated above, is patently false.

The manifestations of this take many forms, but the overall result is the same: the rich pay less than their share for the benefits of society, which they receive in disproportionately large quantities. The poor pay dearly for the privilege of remaining poor.

This lack of concern for the poor and unemployed (they are often the same people) has been partly illustrated in the description, on the previous pages, of the governments' half-hearted efforts in aiding the poor. Further examples can be found in the area of public services, such as education, health facilities and housing. Most of the public services in this country, while ostensibly set up for everyone, disproportionately benefit the well-off and neglect the poor. Education is an example. The quality of education and the amount of money spent on it varies greatly from province to province, since education is under provincial control and the rich provinces can afford to do more. All the provinces outside of the Maritimes (and excepting Manitoba) spent more than $400 per pupil in 1966. At the same time, Newfoundland spent only $180 per pupil, P.E.I. spent $250, as did New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia spent $260. So, not only are your chances of being poor greater in the Atlantic provinces but your chances of getting a good education which will help to lift you out of poverty are also poor.

Moreover, in the rapid expansion of education in the 1950's and early 1960's, did little to overcome inequalities in the education received by the affluent and by the poor within the same province and city. Most of the vast sums spent on education went into the construction of new buildings. Little or no money was available to renovate or rebuild the older schools, which tend to be in the areas where the poor children live and go to school. And in the areas where the poor live, the type of schooling offered reflects the general attitude of the education hierarchy that poor children will not go far. John Sewell, an alderman in a low-income area of Toronto, told the Senate Poverty Committee, "In our ward there are 17 elementary schools. There is not one five-year high school. That is what education is about for the poor." Finally, provincial education spending (and what little federal spending on education there is) is heavily loaded in favour of university education; since a child whose parents earn less than $3,000 a year has about one quarter the chance of going to university that a child of parents with an income of $12,000 has, this loading amounts to "a considerable public subsidy to the children of parents above the poverty line," according to the Real Poverty Report.

Since little effort is being expended on educating the poor, it is little wonder that a child's education tends to be largely influenced by the amount of education and income of his parents. So the poor stay uneducated, and, since education pays off in cash, they stay poor.

The poor also suffer from the way health services are distributed in this country.

Because they live in poor housing and eat poor food, the poor tend to be sick oftener, and in more severe ways, than the well-off. Even such rare diseases as rickets can be found among the poor; the Montreal General Hospital reported 50 cases of rickets among children over the five years prior to 1967. The Real Poverty Report noted: "Rickets is a direct result of an insufficient diet, as are anemia, low resistance to infectious diseases, and as mental illness and, perhaps most important, mental retardation may be as well. (The poor performance of many low-income children in the school systems may be determined by their diets before they even get to school.)"

The health of the poor is generally worse than that of the well-off for at least four reasons. First, the poor are less likely than the affluent to notice symptoms of serious diseases and are less likely to go to a doctor for routine problems, which may become serious if not treated. Second, doctors and other medical personnel are rather less than sympathetic towards the indigent patient. They are almost all drawn from the middle-class themselves and prefer to deal with their own kind and to stay in the cities, rather than go into some of the poorer areas of the country which desperately need medical personnel. The third reason is simply the high cost of medical treatment. Even with the medical insurance plans adopted by many of the provinces (and even with the changes in the premium's charged in Ontario), the premium's are high enough that they represent a significant percentage of disposable income for families which are just above the cut-off line for premium subsidies. If there is also a deterrent fee (the ten per cent specialists are allowed to charge to the patient in Ontario), this represents a further disincentive for poor people to use medical facilities. Finally, public health is still a neglected field in Canada, and public health services are the ones the poor are most likely to use. In 1968, for instance, only 8.3 per cent of the professional nurses in Canada were employed in public health.

Housing is the other major area in which the needs of the poor are not being met. It can be truthfully said that today there is no shortage of housing in Canada, but there is a shortage of housing that the poor can afford.

The poor on public assistance spend about 47 per cent of their budgets on housing, about twice the 25 per cent considered reasonable. And the costs of housing for the poor have been increasing over the past year; For the lowest third of the population, family incomes rose about 25 per cent between 1961 and 1965 while the price of homes they typically purchased went up 35 per cent. For the next 50 per cent of the income distribution, income increased by 25 per cent, but the price of homes they tended to buy rose by only 18 per cent. Thus, the position of the poor is getting worse.

The government has been of little help in housing, either. For instance, loans for housing are available through the National Housing Act, but in 1969, the average income of families borrowing was $10,810- and more than 75 per cent of Canadians earned less than that. This is particularily cruel for the poor because their tax dollars are being used to help the affluent buy homes, while they cannot afford decent accommodation.

Moreover, most of the poor are forced to live in old houses and there is almost no money available from the government for fixing up old houses; the emphasis of Canadian housing policy, as in education, is on building new units, not fixing up old ones. In a good year, the housing industry will build units equivalent to about three per cent of the existing stock of houses. Thus, the government's policy means it ignores the problems of the 97 per cent of houses not built that year.

It becomes blatantly clear that the government of this country sees serving the rich as the major function when one looks at the taxation system of this country, which is the way in which the government gathers the funds needed to run its programmes, which as indicated, are of most use to the well-off.

The tax system could be used as a way of equalizing wealth throughout the nation, but this has never been the practice of the government of Canada. Instead, the poor actually pay higher taxes (as a per centage of their income) than those who are well off. People with incomes of less than $2,000, (before government transfer payments) pay 57 per cent of the income in taxation (including all form of taxation- income tax, sales tax, property tax, social and medical insurance premiums, etc.) Those making over $10,000 a year pay only 38 per cent of their incomes in taxation.

In fact, the Canadian taxation system as a whole is regressive; that is, it taxes lower incomes more (as a percentage of income) than higher ones, taking more from those least able to pay. In 1961, over half of all the tax money collected in this country came from taxes which are regressive, such as property or sales taxes, which are the same for everybody, regardless of their income or wealth. Only three nations in Europe and North America raise more of their tax money through regressive taxes than Canada does.

As well, the income tax laws are extremely hard on the poor. The basic exemptions allowed in calculating taxable income are so low that poor families must pay taxes on

continued page 10

. . .Earlier I went to ask for my pogey, to collect my unemployment insurance. Shuffling to the "Claims Taking" counter, I tried to smile, to be pleasantly articulate, but I only ended up mumbling and pushing forward the forms and the small, round-cornered pink card that announces to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and to everyone else, what I am, where I am, and what I want to be. The swarthy, pimple-faced girl behind the counter wiped up what is officially me with one hand and, without even glancing at my face, rapped out from between her discoloured teeth, "Take-a-seat-at-the-left-sir."

Faceless, I sat down with the rest of the faceless, perched on rows and rows of folding wooden chairs. From there we watched a parade of the unemployed. Most were serious, others giggled self-consciously, and a few were pathetic, even ludicrous. But as each one surrendered his little pink card, he too became faceless. The girl behind the counter was totally without curiosity about the people who came to her.

Her impersonality only heightened my feeling of impotence and inability to deal with the bureaucratic process. I wondered. How will they know what to do with me? How could anyone make a decision about me with just that much written on a few pieces of paper?

. . .I became a face again when a middle-aged red-head with a crumbling, heavily-powdered face murmured my name and beckoned. I shuffled along at the pace she set across the floor to a little cubicle.

"What company did you work for last?" she asked. "And how long?" I explained. No reaction- she just made a note. "Can I get any money today?" I asked, feeling embarrassed, as if I were begging money from a stranger.

"No, you have to wait two weeks," she replied, still writing. "Go to this office," and she wrote down an address. "Your call time is 11 a.m., January 23. Don't be late."

. . .January 23, 11:00 a.m. The big hall is unbelievably overheated, almost steamy.

. . .I turn around and face the front, trying to estimate how much money I will receive, from $17.50 to $30 a week. How can you even start to live on that? And then there's a $2,000 debt.

. . .It's a slow line, and it's half an hour before I get to the counter. A thin-necked kid with glasses takes my callbook, murmuring, "First call, eh?" He pulls out a card-index drawer, riffles through it fast. Nothing. He double-checks, again nothing. He's a cheery kid. "Nothing here for you today. Take your callbook over to the special interview counter and wait in the line under A to D."

Unnerved, I fumble with my callbook, peer stupidly around until I find my line. . .After a while, I realize everyone is intently watching what happens to the people at the head of the line, watching to see if they go to the cashier's cage or straight out the door. After keeping count for twenty minutes, I estimate that fewer than one in five is getting a payment cheque. And for the first time my confidence that I'm going to get this money crumbles. My stomach turns and writhes, leaving me as naked and desperate as any man in this room. How the Christ am I going to eat this week?

. . .Across the counter is a haggard woman of about thirty-five, Mrs. Bad News. She silently takes my callbook. Again there's a drawer of index cards. Again nothing. Again the double-check. Again, again nothing.

-The Poverty Wall.

to be poor

continued

from page 9

Equality of opportunity, in Canada, is an ideal restricted to high school civics textbooks. Equality of REWARD is not even found there; very few people have challenged the idea that the rich, the talented and the ruthless deserve more in wages and praise than the disadvantaged.

Talent is a nice thing to have. But it should not necessarily make its possessor rich. There is no reason why people should have to be rewarded with enormous affluence in order for them to make full use of their talents.

— The Real Poverty Report

The world of the working poor is dominated by the anxiety created by continual harassment from bureaucracies and their petty officials; they stand like sentinels on the borders of the world of the poor and are as frightening to deal with as any Kafka nightmare. You have to be bringing up a family of four on $4,000 a year to fully understand the sinking feeling in your stomach when one of those brown government envelopes, with its little slotted window, turns up in the mail. It may be a letter telling you that your medical insurance has been suspended for non-payment of the premium, or perhaps the Revenue Department has gone back four years to adjust its own mistake and demand that you immediately pay $83 in tax arrears.

The medical premium has been paid, of course, but it will take a long series of frustrating telephone calls, letters, and possibly visits before the department will admit its mistake. Meanwhile, doctors' bills have been returned, and their bookkeepers will start phoning you. Everything is on the side of the bureaucracy: the interminable buck-passing to other departments, officials out for lunch, and the characteristic phrase, "Your file is not in this department," always uttered in a tone that seems to imply you therefore do not exist. For someone in a higher income bracket, such bureaucratic incompetence is only irritating, an annoyance. But for a woman trying to support a family on a budget of less than $300 a month, the temporary loss of medical insurance can be a financial disaster.

-The Poverty Wall

their sub-poverty line incomes. And the new tax legislation introduced as a tremendous reform by Edgar Benson are actually more regressive, at least in some ways, than the old laws. Under the new tax rates, the first taxable dollar is taxed at the rate of 22 per cent and the highest level of taxation is now 61 per cent. Under the old laws, the first taxable dollar was taxed at only 16 per cent and the maximum rate was 81 per cent, which is more progressive at both ends.

Until the Benson changes in the tax legislation, the well-off have been taxed only on their work income, not on their gains from investment. The Royal Commission on Taxation (the Carter Commission) had recommended that capital gains (money earned on the sale of stocks or possessions) be taxed as ordinary income, and Benson originally planned to put that into effect. However, under pressure from the business community, he finally introduced legislation to tax capital gains, but only one half of capital gains are taxable.

Beyond this, the government does nothing to tax the wealth of the rich, and has even abolished the federal inheritance and gift taxes, replacing them with the capital gains tax regulations (an improvement for the very rich.) One province, Alberta, has no succession duties, and New Brunswick's recent tenuous moves towards creating succession duties has been greeted with howls of anguish from wealthy businessmen who claim such a move would destroy the economy of the province.

But the most obvious benefit which businesses receive from the government (and, of course, from the majority of Canadians) comes in the form of a host of tax exemptions, and government subsidies. The Royal Commission on Taxation found that, in 1964, insurance companies had total revenues of $90 million dollars and paid taxes on only $5 million of that; the total amount of taxes they paid was $2 million.

Also in 1964, the petroleum and mining industry was allowed $320 million worth of tax exemptions, largely in the form of three-year exemptions for new mines and the "petroleum depletion allowance" allowed oil companies. This is an amount equal to 8 per cent of all taxable corporate income. Most of the exemptions went to the eight largest firms (most of which are American.)

A total of $75 million in taxes owed was actually forgiven the Ford Motor Co. once.

And in 1970, the government gave businesses as much in outright subsidies- tax-free gifts over and above all the other generous benefits- as was paid out in Unemployment Insurance benefits in that year, the record year for the Unemployment Commission (over $724 million dollars.) Somehow all of this gets lost in the talk of businessmen about the unemployed and poor being leaches on the system; at least those receiving Unemployment Insurance have paid for the benefits they receive.

These handouts to the rich were aptly described by the National Council on Welfare as "...payments to the real beneficiaries of government welfare programmes, the corporate rich. Only these aren't called welfare programmes. They are called things like 'economic growth incentives.' These payments- mining subsidies, tariff supports, tax incentives- represent regressive income transfer programmes, money taxed from the poor and near-poor and given to the rich."

There are a number of other ways in which the government supports businesses, at the expense of the general population. One of these is through the granting of patents, which gives the patent owner a type of monopoly power for 17 years, allowing companies to reap high profits (since they need not compete) by charging high prices, which hurts the poor as consumers. Patents are extremely hard to justify in Canada anyway, not only because they grant monopolies, but also because they are of benefit almost entirely to foreigners (almost 95 per cent of them are held by foreigners or foreign corporations.)

The government has encouraged, through tax concessions, the use of advertising, which allows industries to create brand loyalties, which makes it difficult for new competitors to enter the field, and which, thus, means that resources are poorly allocated.

Finally, the government has maintained a laissez-faire attitude towards business, allowing monopoly practices to flourish with little government opposition or intervention. One way this has been done has been in the deliberate granting of monopolies to certain professional organizations which are free to both set their own prices and to admit (through licensing) new practitioners. Thus, in the cases of such professions as the medical, dental, legal, and other professions, the practitioners can charge what they like at the same time as they can keep the number of practitioners small, ensuring for themselves high rewards, and for everyone else, high costs and inadequate service.

The second major way in which the government has allowed monopolies to grow up has been through their consistent failure to develop effective legislation dealing with restraint of trade and monopoly practices. The existing anti-combines legislation has been in effect for years, and yet only two cases of alleged harmful monoply have been brought to the courts, and one of them was lost by the government.

One common objection to plans for a guaranteed annual income is that they discourage people from working. What the objectors mean by this that the provision of a guaranteed annual income will have a bad effect on the national psyche, for people will no longer be COMPELLED to work. This argument implies that the maintenance of poverty is essential to the well-being of the nation; for some people must be forced to work at ugly and degrading jobs, and they can be compelled to do so only if absolute deprivation is the sole alternative. (It also implies that the present welfare systems encourage people to work- which they do not.)

Compulsion of that kind is out of place in a democratic society. And, for that matter, so are the jobs that (it is argued) require compulsion. ...Certainly one of the objectives of all democratic societies should be the elimination of any policy that compels people to work or starve.

-The Real Poverty Report

Another example of the government's pro-business and anti-poor priorities is the recent war on inflation which has been fought by the Trudeau government in Ottawa. The percentage of those unemployed has increased a full two per cent during the period Trudeau has been in office because of his willingness to allow unemployment to rise to offset inflation.

This battle has been fought in the name of the poor; repeatedly, Trudeau has indicated that it is people on fixed incomes, such as old age pensioners, who are hit hardest by inflation. While it is no doubt true that a high level (though no one is sure of how high) of inflation is bad for a country's economy, it has been repeatedly shown that the poor suffer much more from unemployment than they do from the effects of inflation.

This is largely because unemployment does not fall equally on all segments of the working population. H. D. Woods and Sylvia Ostry, in their book Labour Policy and Labour Economics in Canada, have noted that "the group which is least able to bear the disaster of unemployment -- the unskilled -- carries the heaviest weight of the recession, while the burden of unemployment weighs least upon those for whom it is probably less of a financial hardship -- the office and professional worker."

One would, of course, be more likely to believe that the government's concern in fighting inflation was with the condition of the poor receiving government subsidies if some attempt had been made to provide an annual increase in these subsidies based on the increase in the cost (or preferably, the standard) of living. Or if one of the first steps of the government's fight on inflation had not been to freeze old age pensions at their 1970 level.

However, it is apparent that inflation will continue to figure more importantly on the government's economic agenda than unemployment for as long as Trudeau is in power. His new finance minister, John Turner, while indicating that the government will attempt to create a job for every Canadian willing to work, emphasized that the speed of implementing such a policy will have to be consistent with the maintenance of a stable economy.

And last November, the Senate Finance Committee called on the government to set a "realistic" goal for unemployment of 4.5 per cent. In the past, the goal has always been 3 per cent.

solving poverty

As has been outlined, poverty is built into the Canadian social, political and economic system, rather than being a mere aberration or an unfortunate side effect. Therefore, any serious attempt to eradicate poverty will require a relatively basic restructuring not only of these systems but of our basic values and assumptions.

Patchwork 'solutions' we have had in abundance, and, no doubt, we will get in the future. Something more complete will be needed, however, if we are to expect to succeed.

The recommendations outlined below are those contained in The Real Poverty Report. They are not intended to be used as separate pieces but rather all together in a total effort against poverty. The benefits to be derived from any one suggestion often are dependent upon the existence of other programmes which are suggested. (The order of the recommendations is that used in the book.)

The first essentialis to create greater equality among the wages of those who are working. A first step would be to centralize collective bargaining (the negotiation of employment contracts by unions and employers) within industries, and then across industries, so that all those doing the same type of work would receive roughly equivalent wages. (This has been done for years in the Scandinavian countries.)

The right to collective bargaining and union membership should be extended by law to all working people to enhance the success of centralized collective bargaining.

All governments in Canada should establish a minimum wage set at 60 per cent of the average wage, to ensure that all those working full time will be likely to receive more than the poverty line income.

Provisions should be made for day-care centres and half-shift work days, to allow women to work.

If these income-equalization programmes are to work, they must be backed up with full employment. High unemployment should be forbidden, then, by making it a legal requirement that automatic tax cuts and increased government expenditures be put into effect whenever the unemployment rate rises above 3.5 per cent.

The stabilization of costs and prices should be done on a specific basis, rather than trying to slow down the whole economy at once. Anti-inflation measures, for instance, should be applied to only those areas which have excessive rates of total spending, at the same time as expansionary policies are pursued in depressed areas like the Atlantic provinces.

Inflation should not be fought by attacking the demand for goods; this tends to suppress the supply of a commodity, as it has in the past in the case of housing. Instead, the government should encourage industry to increase the availability of goods and services which are in short supply, to drive down prices. This should particularly be done in providing low cost housing.

The government should force industry to invest in depressed areas where unemployment is high by subsidizing investment in labour-intensive industries in depressed areas, while at the same time penalizing companies which insist on investing in high-growth, full employment areas.

To help those lacking in skills or training, Manpower will have to cease being a tool of business personnel offices, and start acting for their true clients, the unemployed. Industries could be subsidized for their training programmes. Manpower offices should move into the areas in which the workers live, rather than staying in their shiny downtown offices. Most importantly, the government should require that all employers register all their job openings with Manpower offices, to make Manpower more effective in finding jobs for the unemployed.

Efforts should be directed towards creating greater competition among businesses. A surtax could be levied on the retained earnings of companies (the profits that are ploughed back into a firm) in order to lessen the advantage held by the big corporations in getting the capital needed for expansion or new investment. Where companies strongly resist competition, the government should back new companies which will try to compete with the old monopolies.

The government should place an export surcharge on exported raw natural resources to force foreign companies to refine these in Canada, thus creating more high paying jobs for Canadians.

All of these policies -- designed to increase employment, equalize wages, create more high paying jobs, train people for new jobs etc. -- will do little for those who are not in the work force. It is essential that the government ensure that nobody -- widow, orphan, blind man, unemployed worker or anyone else -- should be living at less than half the average living standard of the nation as a whole. (The Relative Poverty Line, developed in the Real Poverty Report to replace the present poverty line, is based on this idea.)

Thus, a guaranteed annual income is essential. However, the guaranteed income is designed to supplement a number of other programmes, such as unemployment insurance, not to replace them. It would be available to everyone, regardless of whether or not they were working, if their income was so low that it put them or their family below the Relative Poverty Line. And the guaranteed annual income would be calculated according to family size, increasing without limit as the number of children increases.

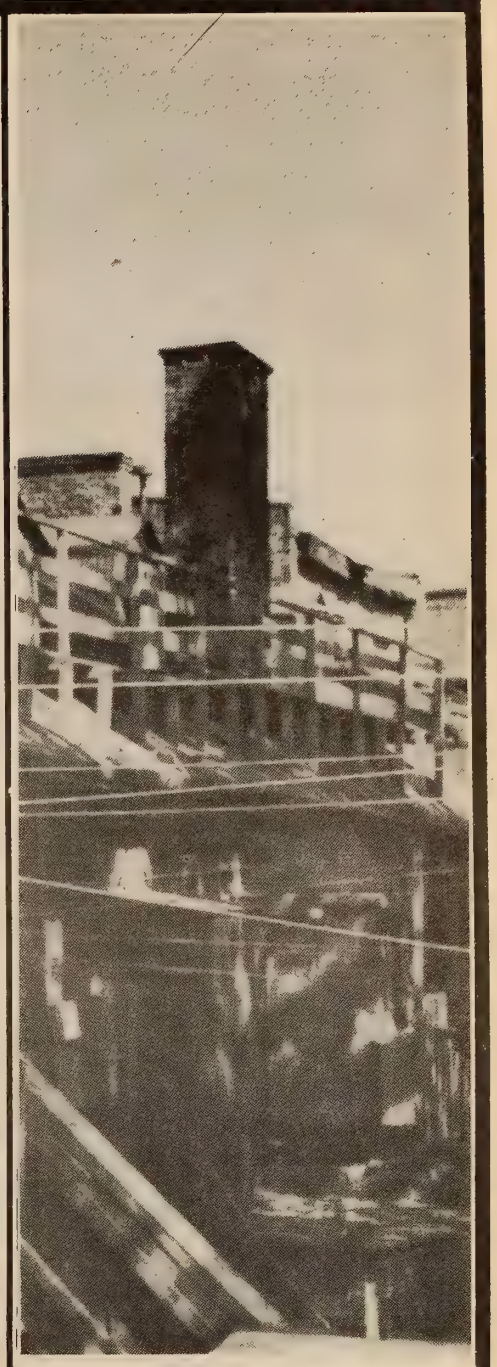
To encourage people to work, recipients of the guaranteed annual income would be allowed to keep 40 per cent of any amount of money they earned.

The guaranteed income would work in the following way. A family has a certain minimum income guarantee, based on its size. Members of the family may work and keep 40 per cent of what they earn. The other 60 per cent is deducted from their guaranteed income. If they earn enough, then the family passes the break-even point at which they are earning enough to not need a guaranteed income.

As an example: A family of four in 1971 is entitled to $4100 if no money is earned at all. If the family head earns $1,000 a year, he can keep $400 of it. (Actually, he keeps all $1,000 but his guaranteed income is reduced by $600 from $4,100 to $3,500.) His final income then will be $4,500. If he earns $3,000, his guaranteed income is reduced by $1,800 to $2,300 and he ends up with $5,300. If he were to make about $6,900, he would have reached the break-enven point, at which point sixty per cent of his income equals $4,100, the amount of guaranteed income he is eligible for.

To make sure that people are allowed to stay at at least their minimum level, the income tax exemptions will have to be raised so that no one pays any income tax until their income is sufficient that they need no government subsidy.

To take some of the demeaning aspects out of the process of getting the guaranteed annual income, people would not have to apply for it. Instead, everyone would receive it automatically, and those who did not need it would have it taken back by taxation, through payroll check-offs in most cases, the same way that taxes are now collected from those who work. This would be easier to administer and perhaps cheaper than having people apply for subsidy.



The guaranteed income would be only the last defense against poverty. An improved Unemployment Isurance and Canada Pension Plan would take care of most people who run into financial problems. These social insurance schemes -- to which workers contribute while they work and from which they draw benefits when they need them -- have the advantage of paying for themselves.

The aim would be for the Unemployment Insurance and the Canada Pension Plan to make sure that workers do not go broke when they become unemployed or retire, and should, to a fair extent, help to maintain the standard of living they had when they were working.

Unemployment Insurance benefits would amount to 50 per cent of an employees previous earnings, and the benefits would be supplemented with the guaranteed income to make sure that the standard of living of a worker's family did not drop too quickly; however, the combined amount would be less than he previously made by enough to make it worthwhile to work. An example: a man, head of a family of four, earns $115 a week. He is entitled to an income supplement of $10 a week (as in the guaranteed income example, this man will receive a guaranteed income supplement when working until he earns at least $6,900 a year), bringing his income to $125 a week. When he is laid off, Unemployment Insurance pays him $58 (half of $115) and, since his benefits are now counted as earnings for the purposes of the guaranteed income, he gets an income supplement of $45, making his total income $103 a week. When his Unemployment Insurance benefits run out, he will still receive about $80 a week from the guaranteed income. There is a definite drop in income, but it is gradual and he never runs out of money.

The Canada Pension Plan could be run in the same way, basing the amount of Pension Plan benefits on previous standard of living, and supplementing Pension benefits with guaranteed income benefits. The Canada Pension Plan could also replace the Workmen's Compensation

continued page 12

To explain why she's out of funds 12 days before the next allowance is due, Doris tells me she gets $385 a month.

The rent for her three-bedroom, two storey house half a block from Toronto's decaying east end strip, the Danforth, is $190 a month. If she could move into government housing, she'd only have to pay $95. She's on the waiting list but it's going to take time.

Hydro and water take another $13.60 and Doris can't afford a phone. So she's left with $181.40 to feed, clothe, and buy the necessities for herself and seven children. (She separated from her husband 18 months ago.)

The day I was there, the kids ate no breakfast, and for lunch, they had a piece of toast and margarine, plus either a few heated-up French fries or hot cocoa.

The last few days of the month, they'd be using food vouchers from the welfare department or getting free food from the Scott Mission.

About this time of the month, too, the kids go up to the Danforth to panhandle nickels and dimes to keep themselves in food. Doris sometimes bums a subway token to get down to the welfare office.

Doris says she shops every day, partly because that's all the food she can carry and partly because the children would finish up everything in sight in a day or two.

-Gillian Pritchard in Weekend Magazine

to be poor

continued from page 11

Loretta says she was occasionally forced to beg and forage for pop bottles to supplement the welfare allowance of about $26 weekly provided for her and her son.

For several months in the final stages of her pregnancy, she says, the Metro welfare department made her walk once a week from her home in the Danforth-Woodbine area to the welfare office at Queen and Coxwell- a round-trip journey of about 40 blocks- to pick up her cheque.

"That's the sort of thing they're always doing to you," Loretta says. "There seems to be little or no consideration for your personal feelings and they won't go one inch out of their way to make things a little easier. I asked them for enough for carfare but they said, 'No, you can go on walking.' "

- Toronto Daily Star

Description of living accommodation: Woman deserted- five children. Living conditions: rented property. Three room row house. Exterior well painted, interior in very poor condition.

Basement. Holes in walls dividing unit from other which allowed rats entrance from other units. Holes in floor and front and back walls which allowed rats entry to unit from outside. No door on basement and holes around pipes and in corners which allowed rats access to living quarters.

Holes in upstairs walls (corners) allowed rats access to bedroom. Defective electrical switch in hall with semi-exposed and exposed wires. Glass in front door out for over a month without replacement. Windows and doors uninsulated. Repairs of some holes substandard. Wall broken around kitchen light switch.

Comment on tenant: This woman kept her house well in spite of its poor condition. Her floors were always as neat as could be expected with five children in the house. She complained often to landlord's agent but had trouble contacting him and received only empty promises when contact was established.

On December 5, 1969, woman reported to the social worker that rats had been driven in by snow. She reported food spoiled and rats acting very boldly in living quarters. At 100 per cent municipal aid holes were patched and an exterminator was engaged.

Rent allowance: $95.00. Heat allowance: $27.20. Total: $122.20.

Difference between actual rent and rental allowance: $80.00.

This woman is therefore obliged to take $80 from the pre-added budget figure of $164.00 (for food, clothing, etc.) to meet this excess rent figure every month.

Food, clothing and personal care for one mother and five children: fifty cents each, per day.

- from the casebook of an Ottawa social worker scheme. Disabled workers would simply be given a pension, and would also be allowed the right to sue the employer on whose premises they were injured.

The cost of the guaranteed income plan, which could be as high as 2.3 per cent of the Gross National Income of Canada or over $1 billion, could partly be paid for by having a more equitable tax system.

The income tax system should tax people on their "command over resources." That is, a person should be taxed not only on his actual income from whatever source, but also on the basis of the assets he has at his command, including such things as cars, houses, paintings, etc. For most people, of course, their command over resources is limited almost entirely to their income, which includes not only wages, but also gifts, gains made from the sale of property or shares, etc.

Therefore, wealth should be taxed; one method might be to include five per cent of the value of a person's assets in his income, to be then taxed along with his other income for that year. This would be done deliberately to break up large holdings of wealth, since these lead inevitably to unhealthy (at least for a democracy) concentrations of power in a few hands.

Estates should be taxed. The most appropriate method would be to tax an estate according to its size and according to the amount of income and wealth the person(s) receiving it already possess, in order to encourage the distribution of estates to those least well off.

As a general policy in raising government revenue, regressive taxes should be phased out and replaced by a progressive tax on wealth and income. Thus, sales and excise taxes should be eliminated, except as a means of compensating the government for expenses it will have to incur as a result of the sale of some commodity; thus, a sales tax should be applied to cars, since the government is forced to build roads for them. And the property tax should be eliminated.

To attempt to equalize the educational opportunities throughout this country, the federal government should offer the provinces large equalization payments for education, or, alternatively, allow the provinces to opt out of education, allowing the federal government to finance education completely.

To overcome the problems of poor education in particular regions, the government should offer salary premiums to teachers with high qualifications who will go to 'academically deficient areas' (areas where the rate of production of high school graduates, on a per pupil rate, is more than 20 per cent below the national average.)

As well, government should allocate at least a majority of its capital education budget to the renovation of substandard schools and to the building of new schools in deficient areas.

To improve the health of the poor (after they have been guaranteed the minimum income necessary to house, clothe and feed themselves adequately), a number of steps could be taken. Medical insurance should be extended to the whole population, and should cover all medical expenses, including drugs, dental work, and psychiatric and optical work.

Premiums should be abolished, as should deterrent fees, and the costs of medical insurance programmes should be paid for out of the general renenues. The number of medical personnel should be drastically increased, and premiums paid to those doctors who will work in family service and in medically deficient areas. Community health clinics should be encouraged, and should include other social service facilities.

Can we afford this programme?

Trudeau says we cannot afford to be humane, but he is wrong. He is wrong morally: poverty is simply intolerable in a humane society. And he is wrong economically: the cost of maintaining poverty is staggering and the costs of eliminating it are small in comparison.

In the cold economics of the Economic Council of Canada, the cost of having people not working or working at crummy jobs amounts to about six per cent of the Gross National Product going unproduced. And this estimate ignores the cost -- in medical care, police forces, jails, welfare systems, etc. -- of picking up after poverty.

Nor is the cost of the above programme all that high. Many of the programmes outlines call for regulatory functions, which do not spend money on the poor, but merely eliminate exploitation by the rich.

Several of the programmes pay for themselves, as the Unemployment Insurance and the Canada Pension Plan do. Some of the programmes that require a cash outlay by the government, such as worker training, will pay off quickly in increased production, and those which result in more equal income distribution will lessen the outlay on welfare payments.

And the guaranteed annual income could be largely paid for through the changes in the tax system to make it more progressive, to make the rich, who benefit most from society, pay the most for its benefits.

In the end, however, the decision to eradicate poverty cannot be based on economics; it will have to be a moral decision.

Until we, and our political leaders, decide that it is in violation of the basic ideals of democracy and of moral justice that a vast number of Canadians should exist in inhuman conditions, luck in the choice of one's birth place and parents will continue to determine whether a person is poor or rich.

Percentage distribution of families and unattached individuals by income

Income Group	Canadian families	Canadian individuals	Queen's families
Under $1,000	2.8	24.4	No data
Under $5,000	37.9	84.1	6.8
$5,000-$10,000	48.0	14.4	21.6
$10,000-$15,000	10.6	1.2	24.8
Over $15,000	3.5	0.2	41.3
Over $25,000	No data	No data	14.3
No response	-	-	10.6
Avg. income	$6,536	$2,873	No data

Figures for Canadian families and individuals from D.B.S., Income Distribution by Size in Canada, 1965.

Figures for families of Queen's students from a survey conducted in Sept. 1970. Students were asked what they thought their fathers earned. Only 89.4 per cent answered.

Distribution of income for families and unattached individuals

Income Group	% of total income	Avg. group income	Avg. income as % of avg. Canadian income
Poorest fifth	2.4	$ 700	12
Second fifth	10.3	3,150	52
Third fifth	18.0	5,500	90
Fourth fifth	25.4	7,700	127
Top fifth	43.9	13,350	220
Top 5 %	16.5	20,050	330
Total	100.0	6,087	100

Income is measured as income before government transfers through taxation and income-security payments.

Table from The Real Poverty Report, p.27

The whole poverty article, written by Bill Johnston, is basically, but not rigidly, a summary of The Real Poverty Report by Adams, Cameron, Hill and Penz.

Layout and design of the poverty section was done by Leslie Kaye. The quote on page 1 is from William Stringfellow's My People Is the Enemy

It's Commerce weekend -- Casino Royale draw is tomorrow

Queen's Journal

Vol. XCIX, No. 48 Fri., Feb. 11, 1972

This is Commerce weekend.

The draw for the Casino Royale Raffle (first prize, a trip for two to Las Vegas) will be held this afternoon at 3:00 in the pub in the Union. (Tickets will be on sale by commerce students until the very last minute.) Tonight Tournament II, an intra-faculty commerce hockey meet, takes place in the arena. And tomorrow night at the Round Table is the Commerce Formal, "Caesar's Palace".

With these events, and Thursday's election over, the 1971-72 Commerce Society executive finishes its term, and issued the following statemnet:

"The Commerce Society takes this opportunity to extend its sincere gratitude to those students that assisted us to the best of their ability during our term of office. Launching new programs and activities is a very demanding task. The Society executive appreciated the advice, support and assistance that it received as it ventured into new areas.

"As mentioned in the fall, the overall objective of this executive was to establish commerce as a responsible and competitive entity at Queen's University. We realize that this aspiration is a long-run and lofty one yet every effort will be made by future executives of the Commerce Society to realize this worthwhile goal and perpetuate it."

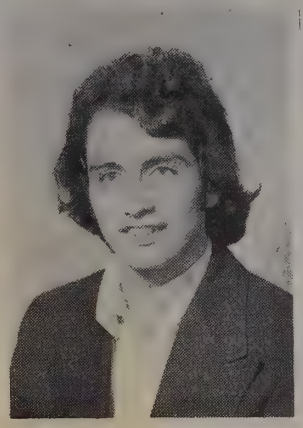
LEBLANC WINS EASILY

Greg LeBlanc won the student government presidency easily in the voting which ended yesterday, polling more than half the votes cast and winning at every poll but two (the advance McArthur Hall vote and Tuesday's poll at Humphrey Hall).

LeBlanc and his running-mate, Wally Palmer, received 1795; their nearest rivals were Andy Jordan teamed with James Bradley, who had 605 votes.

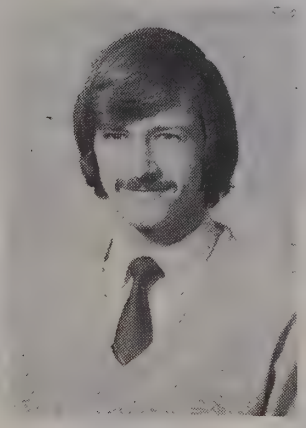
Victor Bradley with Marney Cousins came third with 539; Michael Simpson and Anthony Layton were last with 237.

Altogether 3341 students, about 40 per cent of the enrollment, cast AMS ballots in the first three-day election Queen's has ever had.



Referenda asking whether existing fees should be kept passed, preserving the $3 concert fee and $4 optional Tricolor yearbook fee for next year.

But the referenda asking for fee increases -- from $5 to $10 for the university centre and from $6.50 to $9 for the AMS - both failed.



Comments from the candidates were not available after the five-hour ballot counting was complete last night, but observers were surprised LeBlanc had done so well and Bradley so poorly. Most had expected a much closer race.

Voting on the concert fee was 2312 in favour, 904 against; on Tricolor 2760 for, 464 against; on the university centre 1356 for, 1770 against; on the AMS fee 529 for, 2566 against.

All results are unofficial pending possible recounts.

Greg LeBlanc

Wally Palmer

-bean

Other election results

ARTS AND SCIENCE UNDERGRADUATE SOCIETY

For senator: Stewart Searle 560, Jim Chauvin 463.

For rep-at-large: Elected were Hildi Adelhelm with 520 votes, John Bankes 405, Roy Kirkpatrick 394, Ian McIntyre 459, Clay Rubec 361, Steve Sibold 367, Jim Thompson 453, Bruce Trotter 383, Kathy Turner 572. Other candidates were Terry Joyce 310, Bill Kirby 284, Terry Macli 324, Maureen New 274, Ross Sutherland 306.

Total ASUS turnout was 1209, about 32 per cent.

GRADUATE STUDENT SOCIETY

From AMS rep: Keith Sangster and Bob McRae each 87, and Alfred Kormann 56, elected; also ran, Dave Dodd, 50 votes.

ENGINEERING SOCIETY

For treasurer: Kerry Clark 322, Michael Robson 199.

For development committee chairman: Brian Sterling 307, Warren Workman 228.

Referendum: no honorarium 195, $200 honorarium 126, full tuition 113, split honoraria 144.

EngSoc turnout was 580 or 43 per cent.

NURSING SCIENCE SOCIETY

President Bev Moir, Vice-president Judy McCarthy, Secretary Kathy Martin, Treasurer Ginger Comission, AMS rep Jo Forbell.

REHAB THERAPY SOCIETY and COMMERCE SOCIETY results were not availabe last night.

Nursing Science presents...

'Heaven and Hell'

Feb.12, 1972
9:00--1:00
Dance and Buffet $4/couple
Wallace Hall
Tickets: any N.Sc. Student or 544-8386

Queen's Ski Club sponsors...

Monte.Ste. Anne Trip

Reading Week (Sun Feb 20 - Fri Feb 25)
Cost --- $80.00
(includes return bus fare, tows, two meals a day, and accomodations)
IF INTERESTED, CALL John Telgmann 389-0928
Suzanne Nadon 544-8721 Helen King 544-9527

Read some nice words today

lollipop · rivulet · gossamer kumquat · oboe
diaphanous · mulligatawny
epitome · umlaut · pussy willow

There now, don't you feel better already?
Look, if you slow down, and take the time to catch up with yourself, you get more out of life. Right?
And that's why we brew Club Ale slowly:
You get more out of it that way.

Club Ale

At Formosa Spring, we won't hurry our beer.

If you have some favourite nice words, send them to us. (Formosa Spring Brewery, Barrie, Ontario) And we'll pass them along.

Panel disputes : are drugs a medical problem?

by Pat Spence

A panel sponsored by the psychiatry department last Thursday examined recent advances in the study of non-medical drugs and in social policy about their use.

Guest speaker was Dr. H. Lehmann, chairman of the department of psychiatry of McGill University. He was joined on the panel by sociology professor Kate Herman, psychiatry professor Dr. R. F. Briggs, and psychiatry lecturer Dr. J. E. Peachy.

Lehmann began the discussion with an outline of the recently-released observations of the LeDain Commission on the Non-Medical Use of Drugs. Dealing mainly with treatment, the part of the LeDain report which has been released questioned the definition of "sickness" and "therapy" as applying to treatment of drug users, and discussed who should be qualified to treat users who seek help.

Lehmann pointed out three possible policies the government could adopt concerning drug use. One would be a "laissez-faire" attitude, under which an individual could do as he wished as long as others were not affected. Secondly, there could be complete prohibition; or thirdly, drugs could be legalized with restrictions on such things as amount and age of user -- or a model in which provider, but not user, would be prosecuted.

Lehmann said the criterion for deciding which was the most feasible approach would be the harm it causes to drug users, their families and friends, and society.

He suggested that education is the answer to preventing the development of drug dependence, but said there is a problem in deciding who should know how much about drugs. He also questioned the effectiveness of treatment: there is difficulty controlling drug users once they are cured, he said.

Miss Herman opened the panel's response by questioning the appropriateness of such a medical approach. Why, she asked, is the word sickness applied to any abnormality in society, and the medical profession expected to cure it? The fact that there is a drug dependence problem, Miss Herman said, is a reflection on society and its value system. (An example of that system, she said, is a television commercial in which a wife shows excitement "like the first mutual orgasm" over her new refrigerator.) We live in a society, she said, where anything that does work or is work is considered honourable; where a drink is considered fine when taken as a reward for a long working day, but an ailment when taken for no reason at all.

Briggs said he agreed with Miss Herman about the medical model for drug use. He went on to say that for fifteen years a chemical revolution has been going on, producing such results as the popularity of tranquilizers and the increase in pollution. The question would be, Briggs said, how can people use new chemicals without deterrent side effects?

Another concern, he said, is the inability of children to deal with tension, which he said is partly the result of affluence and partly the result of the value system now used in child-rearing.

Regarding drugs, Briggs said he had gone through three stages of thought about marijuana: shock, possible acceptance, and finally a developing concern about its effects over time.

Peachy expressed concern over the fact that the LeDain report did not entirely cover adult drug dependence, and said adults as well as children have problems with tension. He said this might reflect on society's inability to cope with frustration, and that perhaps children's problems come from observing their parents' inability to cope.

He disagreed with Miss Herman on the importance of the medical model, pointing out that "when dealing with chemicals that produce a chronological dependence, we must put ourselves in a medical frame, for these have real pharmacological and biological effects on our body."

Liehmann, replying, explained that the effect of a narcotic is harmful only in that it creates a dependence, and that physical harm comes only after a number of years of use. The real cost of taking drugs is the possible criminal record, he said.

After a break the panel invited questions from the audience. A man who said he was an ex-addict asked why the focus is on the drug problem, rather than the user's problem and his psychological need for drugs.

Liehmann said the personal problem is so complex that a government commission could not deal with it. Initially, he said, the drug must be eliminated, for a user's real problem cannot be resolved until his drug habit is out of the way.

He turned to Miss Herman for a sociological view of the question. She said she agreed that "placing the whole responsibility in terms of a medical model is wrong", but that "going to the opposite extreme of placing emphasis on the social factor" was just as wrong.

She then suggested that society's obvious need for crutches shows that its primary institution, the nuclear family, is not the best social condition. It is a situation which puts almost complete economic stress on one person, she said.

Briggs said he agreed with this scepticism about the nuclear family, and added that changes such as the chemical revolution should be accepted and people should learn to deal with them. If something exists which can lower the stress on the individual, one should take advantage of it, rather than being negative and calling it escapism, he said.

A question was presented in writing, asking about the LeDain Commission's statement on existing medical facilities for treatment of drug users. Such facilities have improved greatly since the report was compiled, Leihmann said. Briggs added that though it delighted him to think the medical profession could deal with the drug problem, he himself felt that it is not completely a medical question.

Another written question asked how exploitation of any legal source of drugs could be prevented. Peachy said he agreed and suggested that any legal issue of heroin should require the approval of a panel of three doctors.

Leihmann assured the audience, and Peachy, that there would be no drug leakage, and that such legal sources would eliminate the black market.

Based on the British experience this would not be true, Miss Herman said; she pointed out the black market which exists there despite the legal supply of heroin to addicts. Leihmann said many addicts enjoy the thrill provided by the underground drug market.

Asked about the role of the hospital in treatment, Leihmann said real cures are too heavy a responsibility for the present facilities. Their major concerns are for a drug user's general health and his immediate "bad trips", Leihmann said.

Dr. T. J. Boag, head of the psychiatry department and chairman of the discussion, summarized what had been said: he suggested the responsibility of the medical profession is to make drug users well, and that they have no responsibility as doctors to discuss the real reason for the original drug dependence.

Corrections: Library

Tuesday's Journal attributed a statement made in the senate library committee to Dr. Pierre Gobin of the department of French. Dr. Gobin is not a member of that committee; the statements were made by student representative Bernard Gobin (Artsci 75).

Guatemala

On Tuesday The Journal reported a statement by student Carlos Valdez that "Guatemala is most likely to become communist." Valdez has told The Journal that he did not say that, but did tell the International Centre's symposium last week that "due to the conditions existing in countries like Guatemala, they are targets for communism, but this in no way implies that Guatemala will become communist."

He also denied saying that Fidel Castro trained guerrilla troops in Guatemala, and, regarding his statement that rich families support the guerrilla movement, said that only some of the guerrilla leaders are members of rich families.

860 bleed

Last week's blood drive drained 860 units of blood from Queen'smen.

The Engineering Society, which with the Nursing Science Society organized the drive, said 933 students applied to give blood, but 73 were disqualified, mostly because their blood counts were too low.

The drive, held in Victoria Hall, was chaired by John Howard, second-year engineering geologist.

CHANCELLOR DUNNING TRUST LECTURES 1971-1972 . . . THE PUBLIC IS

DR. R.P. BAFFOUR

FORMER: Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Transport and Communications, Ghana; Vice-Chancellor, Kumasi University of Science and Technology; Awarded Order of British Empire (O.B.E.); President, International Atomic Energy Agency (under U.N. charter); Member, Universities Grant Commission, East African Universities.

CURRENTLY: Heads his own firm of engineering and industrial consultants in Ghana.

"The Role Of Education In Developing Nations"
The Part Canada Can Play

INVITED TO ATTEND

Wednesday 16 February - 8:30 p.m. Dunning Hall - University Ave.

Duplicating

In addition to its complete range of typing service, your on-campus typing service has a 3600 111 Xerox for long-run, 'presentation quality' copying, a 720 Xerox for short-run, quality copying, and Ditto copying facilities.

The Student Typing Service
STUDENTS UNION BUILDING

BECAUSE IT'S THE BIGGEST DIAMOND DOESN'T MEAN IT'S THE BEST

Quality, not quantity, is the most important factor in a diamond. An exquisite diamond must be cut to precise proportions to release the greatest brilliance or "fire." We'll show you how to select the finest value to fit your finances. And whether you buy a large or small diamond from us, it will be the best.

KINNEAR d'ESTERRE
JEWELLERS
168 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO
CANADA

THIS WEEK'S SUPER SPECIALS

FIRST QUALITY BLUE DENIM
JEANS

SIZES 28 to 38
SALE PRICE
$4.90
REG: $8.95

$4.90 Price If You Present This Ad

- 3 BIG DEPTS-

HIS'N HER SLAX
FREE ALTERATIONS

SHOES
"FABRIC ATTIC"
(Second Floor)

ME & RAY'S
DISCOUNT DEPT. STORE
285 PRINCESS ST. DIAL 544-4424
Across from the A&P Store

Ottawa Teachers' College

Professional One—year Courses leading to

TEACHERS' CERTIFICATES valid in Ontario

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS
HIGH SCHOOLS AND KINDERGARTENS

are now available at selected

PROVINCIAL TEACHERS' COLLEGES

Interviews for students of all faculties will be held on Friday, Feb.18th 1972

Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Draft Report of the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario has been published and is now available. In its Report the Commission explains its proposals for the development of post-secondary education in this province during the next 20 years and the reasoning behind these proposals.

Copies of the Draft Report in English and French are available free from the Ontario Government Bookstore, 880 Bay Street, Toronto, and from the Commission.

Before formally submitting a report to the Government of Ontario, the Commission is asking for public comments once more. Public meetings are being arranged in selected centres to provide full opportunity for all interested individuals and organizations to express opinions and offer discussion on the Commission's draft report.

The following public meetings have been scheduled:

February 28	Ontario Room, Macdonald Block, Queen's Park, Toronto.
March 1	Government Conference Centre, 2 Rideau Street, Ottawa.
March 6	City Hall, S. H. Blake Memorial Auditorium, Donald Street, Thunder Bay.
March 8	Sudbury Public Library, 74 MacKenzie Street, Sudbury.
March 20	Centennial Hall, Wellington Street, London.
March 22	Ontario Room, Macdonald Block, Queen's Park, Toronto.

Details of the procedure for making written submissions may be obtained from the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario, Suite 203, 505 University Avenue, Toronto 101, Ontario.

Kingston poverty described at Awareness panel

By Susan Bourbonniere

"Have you ever been north of Princess Street?" and seen children, ragged but happy, playing in the streets? They were a feature of the movie by that title, made by former Queen's students Peter Raymont and Allan Code, shown Tuesday evening at the first in a series of presentations and discussions sponsored by Awareness 72.

North Kingston was in that movie, the blatant poverty, smiling faces at the local rummage sale and the desolate faces too, when people go to cash their welfare cheques.

"I still blush when I cash my welfare cheque," admits one mother of seven. "I'd steal as long as my children eat -- that's the main thing."

Tuesday night, the Rev. Brien Thrasher, who lives and works in North Kingston, said at the Awareness presentation that such people are not understood. "We give them things that we think they need. Is that right?" For example, Thrasher said, the city may build a new recreation centre, but children would rather play hockey on the streets than on ice.

Mrs. Bobbi Sparks, Kingston poor people's organizer, said that "everybody deserves welfare assistance by law. I see a collision course and violence in the system that oppresses people, and God knows what will happen."

Kingston mayor E. Valorie Swain, sporting a flower in his lapel, said the city is not on the decline. As for public housing, he said, "It is impossible for us to go into housing ourselves; we must go through the Ontario Housing Corporation."

Mrs. Stella Buck, a welfare administrator, said, illustrating the present situation in Kingston, "It is not uncommon to have ten people living in a three-room dwelling."

After preliminary comments, a panel consisting of Thrasher along with city aldermen George Webb and James Cook, and Kingston residents, Mrs. Donna Whiteley and Mrs. Anne Healey, talked about the nature of poverty, especially in Kingston.

Poverty is no worse in Kingston than in other Ontario cities, and is not limited to North Kingston, Webb said. He added that the directors of the film must have looked to find the pockets of poverty they showed, and that much is being done for the North Kingston area -- like the construction of the recreation centre and the proposed building of a municipal golf course. "It can't help but uplift the section of the city."

There is poverty, Cook agreed, but there are stable industries as well; and he added that present unemployment results from cutbacks by companies which had expanded during the 1960's.

Thrasher said Kingston is one of the most impoverished cities for its size in Ontario. This, he said, is the result of Kingston's being made up of separate communities such as the academic, military, prison, and farming people, who have no concern for each other.

Mrs. Whiteley, a single parent who lives in public housing on Montreal Street, said the most serious kind of poverty is the mental poverty and loss of dignity which comes from harassment by welfare agencies. People do not necessarily want more money, she said, but a restoration of their self-respect.

Two panelists clashed over the reason for poverty. Thrasher blamed the economic system: "outworn, and it keeps creating poverty, and is part of the capitalism which is dead and is oppressing certain people." Webb came to the system's defence: "it has lasted for three hundred years."

The issue of housing came up often in the discussion. Webb said he opposed the building of the apartment complexes in the Bath Road area, preferring urban renewal in the older sections of the city. For example, he said, city planners were "asleep at the switch" when they designed apartment towers for areas where the sewers are so old they can take no more water. As a result, he said, the basements of one-family dwellings are flooded when it rains.

Poor people are afraid to speak up about the condition of their housing, Mrs. Whiteley said, fearing that their welfare cheques will be cut off. She added that many of them are afraid they will be mocked and laughed at because they cannot speak well.

Some housing problems are "indirectly" caused by the university, Cook said. Businessmen buy up houses which rent for $150 a month, he said, then convert them to apartments for students and collect up to $400 a month for the same space.

Many people do not want Ontario Housing projects near them, she said, because they tend to associate such complexes with low-income families -- when, in fact, higher income people live there too.

Thrasher said people have no real choice in the conditions of their housing. And he commented about welfare agencies that one needs a Master of Social Work degree to be qualified to ask prospective welfare recipients their names and addresses. Even then nothing much comes of it, he said, and family planning agencies are unapproachable about problems as well.

The panel moderator, Mr. J. Johnston, who said his only qualification was "that I have never met any of the panelists before tonight", posed a question: "What the hell do we do about poverty?"

Thrasher said the social system must be changed. Students of politics and other social sciences must look at society critically, he said -- "right now!"

A voice from the audience shouted "Vote NDP". and Thrasher replied, "I did, but it didn't do anything."

Mrs. Whiteley said students and graduates who are interested in social work don't know the real problems of poverty. She challenged students to come and live in North Kingston to find out what poverty is about. She did, however, commend the Student Volunteer Bureau at Queen's for what it has done.

Asked whether organizing is a help, Mrs. Whiteley said it was the only way to get anywhere.

And Thrasher emphasized the urgency of the situation when he said, "I believe in a form of socialism to distribute the wealth -- and do it ourselves -- now!"

Under Attack comes

Under Attack, the television programme on which panels of university students question celebrities, will tape several shows at Queen's next Wednesday and Thursday.

Two of the guests will be Dr. Thomas Szasz, a psychiatrist who opposes involuntary commitment to mental hospitals, and music critic and drug opponent Gene Lees. A fundamentalist preacher, and others to be announced later, are also expected to appear.

Students will be invited to attend the tapings in Grant Hall and to take part in the questionings. Panelists are being selected this week and details will be announced early next week.

Camp Outlook hikes

Camp Outlook is looking for volunteers to take part in a winter camping programme shortly after study week.

An outlook statement said the winter programme will give students interested in the regular summer programme a chance to get to know Kingston young people they would be working with.

The winter camping will consist of two hikes by snowshoe, one of them a weekend overnighter.

Interested students are asked to visit the Outlook office in the Union.

Mon. Feb. 14th
7:30, Rm. 201
Kingston Hall
Queen's - A
Hotbed of Apathy

Tues. Feb 15th
7:30 Grant Hall
People Before Paper
with Stanley Burke

AWARENESS 72

Thurs.
Feb 17th
7:30, Rm. 128
Jeffery Hall
Chto Delat-What to Do
assessment and reaction

Golden Words Annual Beer—Brewing Contest

Enjoy good food, music and beer while a panel of "experts" select "Queen's Brewmaster 1972". Spectators can also win prizes by identifying commercial brews.

TIME: 8:00 to 12:00 PM FRIDAY FEBRUARY 11

TICKETS: 50c at the door

PLACE: HOUSE OF LORDS (second floor common room) Students' Union

SUMMER MEALS?? SCIENCE 44 CO-OP is considering further extending its facilities for Queen's students by offering homestyle cooking from a professionally staffed kitchen during the summer months at a reasonable cost. Those interested in taking advantage of the service for:

Intersession _____ Dinner _____

Summer School _____ Lunch and Dinner _____

All Summer _____

please check and return to the Co-op box in the AMS Outer Office or mail it to the Science 44 Co-op, 320 William Street, Kingston.

Your response is necessary to determine the feasibility of this service.

Classifieds

ROOMS available in co-op immediately, guys or girls. Call Bev, 544-3364.

THERE MUST be somebody driving west for reading week! Please call 546-4468.

BITTER GROUNDS needs people to help organize and run it. If you're interested come to our meetings, Wednesday nights 7:00, Jackson Lounge, or phone us at 544-0438 any time.

LOST: one pair black ski gloves in Jock Harty Arena after Queen's-Ottawa game. Please phone 544-4277.

WANTED: a 2-bedroom apartment for next year; call Moira, 544-8504.

LOST - Sister Morphine, black and grey striped feline, "vanished" in the vicinity of Bagot and William. Please help; she's the key to our sanity. Phone Disenfanchised, 544-0721.

NO TUXEDOS are required for the Arts and Science Formal. Tickets are being sold every day in the John Orr Room from 12 to 2:30.
A buffet dinner will be served at 11 p.m. during the Arts and Science formal.
Pay bar.

REFRIGERATOR FOR SALE, $40. 544-7120 between 6 and 9 p.m.

LEFT AT Tech Supplies, where owners may claim them: two sets of keys, two watches, books, gloves and mitts, student cards of L. J. Soloway and J. D. Stowell.

"PLEASE DO NOT think that I am against the use, at the human interface, of such devices as . . . operator precedence. They have their place. But their importance to computer science as a whole has been so exaggerated that it is beginning to corrupt the youth." (Marvin Minsky) Learning APL-360 will not corrupt you.

WATERBEDS: finest quality, 5-year warranty, five sizes available from single to circular. We can also supply waterproof liners and frames. Prices are low. Get yours now! Call George at 544-9540 in the evening for more information.

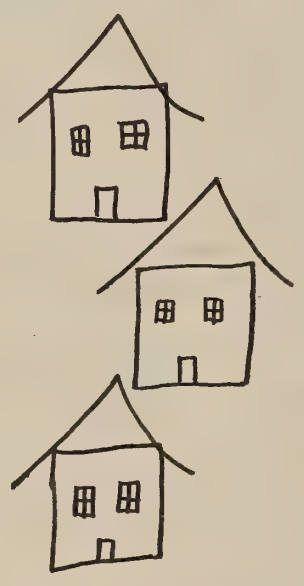
IT'S COMING next Wednesday - Roaring 20's!. Vaudeville, contests, dancing from noon on in the pub.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY Margi Muir, the den mother, mascot, patron saint, Ann Landers and, most of all, Friend of fourth south McNeill. With love, The Boys.

TO S.P. and G.: We hope this finds you well and happy on Valentine's Day. Pubic Head and The Quack.

DAVE WARD hopes to be at Hills Discussion Group on Sunday 13th February. See you all there - Alan.

ONE GIRL is looking for a second to share a pleasant one-bedroom apartment, furnished, close to Queen's, from mid-May to Sept. 1 or part of that time. $67. monthly. Call 549-1726 or 544-1313.



WANTED FOR NEXT YEAR: 4-bedroom apartment close to campus. Phone Gylda 546-5978 or Jane 544-9356.

HELP WANTED: part-time clerical work, accuracy required, $2 hour. Interviews Feb. 14, 15, 7:30 p.m. room 238, Interim Admin Building.

UNIVERSITY CENTRE

Any campus club, society, or organization with interest in having space in the new centre please contact:

Sub Committee on Student and University Organizations
c-o Planning Office
Ellis Hall
547-2949
if you have not received a questionnaire.

Science 44 Co-op Open House

128 EARL
FEB 12
1:30—4:30

Applications available

WELCOME

Anyone interested in working on the Kingston Tercentenary Committee as a representative of the Alma Mater Society, please leave his name at the AMS Office, or call 547-6165.

ROTARY FOUNDATION EDUCATIONAL

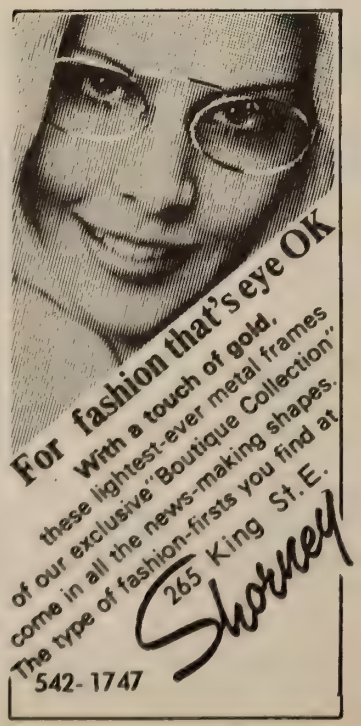
AWARDS FOR INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING

Rotary International invites applications from outstanding students for the following educational awards for study abroad for one year in the academic year 1973-74. An award may be used for almost any field of study.

GRADUATE FELLOWSHIP

An applicant, married or unmarried, must have or is about to receive a Bachelor's degree (or equivalent), and must be 20-28 years of age on March 15th, 1972.

UNDERGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIP



An applicant must be unmarried, must not have a university degree, must have studied for at least two years at a university and must be 18-24 years of age on March 15th, 1972.

As the main objective of the awards is to increase international understanding, awardees are expected to serve as ambassadors of goodwill and to address Rotary Clubs and other organizations.

Relatives and dependants of Rotarians are ineligible for awards. Applicants must be sponsored by a Rotary Club.

Further information may be obtained from Dr. T. H. Kelly, Room 105, Dunning Hall (Local 3009).

Pregnant and distressed?
We can help you!
BIRTHRIGHT
546-LIFE (5433)

HEY, LANDLORD YES, YOU

The AMS Housing Project is expanding and has openings for 3 paid positions on its executive committee.

If interested, leave your name with the receptionist in the AMS Office, Basement, Student Union, 547-6165.

A united Ireland is the only solution, prof says

A united Ireland is the only solution for a lasting and just peace there, a visiting professor from Queen's University of Belfast said here last week.

Dr. J. B. McCartney, a Protestant, said he had not become involved in the Northern Ireland question until 1965, when the National Council on Civil Liberties asked him to do a study of the electoral system in Northern Ireland.

Before April 1971, when he and his family left Belfast, at least 80 per cent of the population had not actually seen any disturbances, he said. At that time animosity was not personal, he added, nor was there the deep bitterness and fear which he felt had existed when he returned there last month.

The incidents last August 9 were deliberately instigated by the Unionist government, McCartney said, and deepened bitterness to where it was fifty years ago. Another escalation came during the Christmas season, he said, when thirteen people were killed.

There is a feeling of fear that one can cut with a knife, McCartney said, despite the appearance of normal day-to-day living. Even the previously liberal-minded Protestants with whom he felt at home are brutal in their thinking now, he said.

Many of the bombings to date have been by Orange Protestant extremists, not by the Irish Republican Army, McCartney said, for most of the pubs which have been bombed have been Catholic. But, he said, Protestants generally do not need to be violent, for police and army are openly on their side.

The first British peacekeeping forces were friendly with both sides, he said, but the Ulster government asked them to leave and replaced them with the Royal Scots, an Orange-oriented group. On their first day of duty they marched through the Catholic district in an Orange parade and finished off by describing in detail what they planned to do to the Catholic girls of the neighbourhood.

Another example of deliberate polarization by the government, McCartney said, is the policy of refusing housing and jobs to Catholics and non-Unionist Protestants.

The struggle against British dominance by both Protestants and Catholics is the deep-rooted cause of the trouble, he said. The original partition of Ireland gave Ulster nine counties, he said, but "this left too many Catholics in power" and boundary-juggling produced a two-thirds Protestant government in a two-thirds Catholic community of six counties.

In 1968 students from Belfast led the first protest, which was ambushed in Derry. (The marchers were both Protestants and Catholics, McCartney said; 60 per cent of university students are Protestants.)

He concluded by saying that the most immediate solution to the present problem would be to get rid of the British army and bring in a United Nations peacekeeping force, and to eliminate the segregated educational system.

What else is going on on this campus?

Women's res

First-year English student Debbie Bramm was elected block chairman of Adelaide and Ban Righ Halls on Wednesday.

She is the final member of the 1972-73 Women's Residence Council executive to be chosen.

Orientation

The Rehab Therapy Society has chosen its orientation committee for 1972; it will be headed by Margo Pentland of first-year occupational therapy and Karen Tribble of first-year physio.

The committee will also include Kitty Noble and Laurie Chartrand from occupational, and Kathy Westaway and Sharon Jacobs from physiotherapy.

In addition, virtually all first-year rehab students will be on campus in orientation week to act as big sisters (RIBSes) to incoming freshettes.

"Our goal this year," Miss Pentland said, "is to help the freshettes to get used to university life and to get to know other faculties on campus."

Heart fund

The university senate is looking for people to help plan a publication about university

More than 200 students from Queen's, the Royal Military College, and the KGH school of nursing were out Sunday convassing for the Heart Fund.

"We made $14,696 in the one-day drive this year, four hundred dollars better than last year," organizer Doug Romans said.

"Although 254 routes were covered," Romans said, "we were still short of organizers, and consequently seven of twenty-one areas were missed."

Research

A committee is being set up to prepare recommendations on how to carry out the project: "a selective summary statement of the scholarly research achievements of members of this University, not only for the information of members of the University, but as a positive affirmation of the value the University places upon scholarship and research as an essential element in its intellectual and educational life."

The senate nominating committee wants to hear from people who would like to serve on the special committee, "and also asks for comments and suggestions from the university community", its statement says. Inquiries and comments can be addressed to the senate office in Richardson Hall.

Smokers

There will be no more drunks in Wallace Hall of the Union.

Sue Dowler of the Union programme committee told The Journal Tuesday that because of "extensive damage" to the cafeteria in the past, no smokers or other social functions would be allowed there for the rest of this school year.

Smokers can still be held in the House Commons and House of Lords on the second floor of the Union.

NATIONS DON'T STARVE

People do - mothers and children - and this is where YOU can help.

Become a Foster Parent and give a needy family overseas a life with hope. $17 a month ($204 a year) buys them a fighting chance.

In return you get a photograph, case history, monthly letters from the child you "adopt" and regular progress reports.

And Gratitude.

Can you, your floor, or your club afford it? For more information please phone Frankie, 544-8308 or Cam, 544-9364 - your Foster Parent Plan of Canada representatives.

It will be the best investment you ever made.

interlude

Arts & Science Formal
To be held at the Holiday Inn
Saturday, February Twelfth
Nine to One
Refreshments
The Bob Ayre Orchestra

Eight Dollars per Couple
Tickets now on sale in
John Orr Room

You make music out of what is printed from the moment of inspiration...

An interview with Tibor Vaghy

FIRST IN A SERIES

The members of the VAGHY STRING QUARTET have been musicians-in-residence at Queen's since the fall of 1968. They have given concerts throughout the United States and Canada, and in April will be making a tour of Europe, including Ireland, Iceland, Norway, Poland, Germany and Austria. The Journal recently interviewed each of the members of the quartet, and the first of these interviews, with Tibor Vaghy, appears today.

TIBOR VAGHY, the violist of the quartet, was born in Baja, Hungary, and studied with Marc Hendricks at the Staatliche Hochschule fur Musik in Hamburg, and with Dorothy Delay at the Juilliard School of Music in New York. He plays an Antonio Testori viola made in 1764.Journal: What first Journal: What first stimulated your interest in chamber music?

It goes way back. Ever since my brother and I started to learn violin we were playing some kind of chamber music. My father played the violin, and both my mother and father were very musical, so we used to sing duos and quartets with them. My brother and I used to play duets on the violin and we often wrote out arrangements of music for two violins.

Journal: What teacher or musician has been the most influential on your individual musical formation?

My teacher in Germany, Marc Hendricks. I benefitted from all my teachers in Hungary, especially in technical development, and in musical and performing matters from Juilliard, but my overall general technical and musical ability came most from Hendricks. He was a very fine performer, concertmaster and soloist.

Journal: What is the most important influence on your string quartet playing?

I don't like to commit myself to one or another chamber music group, especially quartets, since I admire more than just one. Practically, the initial push came from the Juilliard Quartet, since we knew them at the Juilliard School of Music for a substantial time. For the ideal in chamber music, I like to mention the Amadeus String Quartet as the most accomplished ensemble in the quartet music field. But they are really not the only ones, since we also know the Hungarian String Quartet very well, and I hope I may say that as far as chamber music playing is concerned, they are one of today's great traditional string quartets. There are several others. And I must include my colleagues -- I wouldn't like to be in a quartet in which I didn't admire the other musicians.

One's feelings are so divided -- every time I hear a particular group that I admire, I think it's the greatest thing I have heard. But I would still have to call the Juilliard Quartet our chamber music originator.

Journal: What would you say personally has been the most challenging work or group of works that you've played?

Claus Adam, the cellist in the Juilliard Quartet used to sit in on our sessions and discuss his personal feelings about playing string quartets. We played him Ravel, which was at the finishiing stage at that time, and he said: "You know, that reminds me of something. The first time I looked into the Ravel string quartet I thought I would never learn it." We learn now six to ten new pieces a year, and every time I look into a new piece and want to learn it, I have the same feeling.

In choosing particular examples of challenging works I would say the Bartoks and the Beethovens. There are no exceptions in the sixteen of Beethoven and the six of Bartok: they are all tremendously challenging in individual technique, musicianship, projection, ensemble. To single one out, I would say the Fifth Bartok is one of the greatest challenges I have ever met. This is personal. The Third and the Fourth are equally as difficult, but they are not as long. The Fourth quartet has a fast movement which is a little less than a minute long, and the violins are exactly one triple sixteenth behind each other. Violinists used to tell each other: "This is the longest one munute in my life". So it's very individual, but in general I would say the Fifth Bartok is probably the most difficult.

Journal: Do you have any preferences for the audiences you play for on tour?

I don't really care about the size of the auditorium. If there are twelve hundred I like to see twelve hundred, if there are six hundred I like to see six hundred, but I like to play for a full house.

Most musically active cities have a handful of people who are sincerely enthusiastic about music. But many of them come from curiosity, and I hope that after an hour and a half curiosity turns into sincere music listening and observing. Remote places surprise us quite a lot in their interest and love for music.

Journal: Can you think of any recent works by contemporary composers that rival the best in quartets of the past?

I definitely have one thing in my mind. From the very first time I played it, I thought it was a great piece. That's the Benjamin Lees Concerto for string quartet and orchestra, which we will play with the symphony here next season. It requires a tremendous skill from both sides -- very challenging for the orchestra -- changing rhythms, vigorous tempos, large demanding orchestration. There are some pieces now that we are touching that we will play on our European tour, and there's a very beautiful piece which is less demanding on the quartet but which I like very much. It's String Quartet No. 1 by Peterre, who is head of the music department at Colby College. It sounds a bit reminiscent of Hindemith -- it has lots of good ideas and is not too long, which is sometimes very important. It's more impressionistic than twentieth century.

Journal: Do audiences in Europe and North America respond differently to twentieth century pieces?

I do have the feeling that Europe is more ready to accept the avant-garde. On the other hand, it also depends on which part of Europe you are talking about. Of course, New York City is crazy about anything that happens. In general I think the public is ready to accept many things. Sometimes they accept the bad things.

Journal: What do you think of chance music?

I consider to a certain extent everything as chance music, in that you make music out of what is printed from the moment of inspiration.

However, chance music as it is normally meant today I don't think is good. If musical freedom goes that far, then we really don't need any composers. We only need how to hold the instrument, and maybe not even that.

Journal: Which does the music critic affect more, the performing artist or the listening public?

The public is definitely more influenced by the critic. A good music critic could have influence favorably on the performing arts, but they are very seldom found. Criticism can really give the wrong image of an artist or artists. One should be open-minded enough to know what has been accomplished, not just to say that one or two notes were wrong.

The feeling that I was going to be reviewed has never helped me. I never think about it anyway, but it would never help me to play better.

eggar

A Winter's Journey

Now, what is Love?

By Sandy Naiman

The rosebuds of love were sown, watered, brought to flower, wither and die, on Wednesday, February 2, at McArthur College, in an anthology entitled "Now, What Is Love?" delightfully performed by David Kemp, Lorna Wilson and John Burgess.

"Now, What Is Love?" is a collection of poetic and rhetorical pieces which was originally devised by John Barton of the Royal Shakespeare Company and directed for the McArthur production by David Kemp.

Beginning with Sir Walter Raleigh's question, "Now what is love?" the program tried to find answers in the journal of an eight year old girl, in Thomas Campion's advice, John Keats' fond expression towards Fanny (Beaune), and the carpe diem messages of Marvell, Merrick and Donne.

When that ultimate pinnacle of love was attained, matrimony, then Charles Lamb expressed his rather vitriolic views on the matter, a hilarious scene was re-enacted from a 17th Century Trial, concerning the question of rape.

The delights of young love and marriage slowly dissolved into its disillusionment, maturity, and a retrospective look at the entire situation.

Although the program was a little long winded, the various pieces were done so tastefully, with such polished professionalism, the evening slipped by very easily, and an enthusiastic audience was left with an almost panoramic view of the humpy road that lovers tread upon.

A reprise of Sir Walter's original question and the end, suggested perhaps that the views of poets and playwrites of days gone by cannot answer the 'love' dilemma any better today than you or me, that love will always be the central arena for male and female confrontations and we can only sit back and enjoy the ensuing baiting and cooing and wooing.

Certain highlights during the program, though made those confrontations particularly enticing. Mr. Tupman's wooing of the Spinster Aunt from "the Pickwick Papers", and a letter penned once by a Miss Sarah Jones were examples of this.

Whether "Now, What Is Love?" is an attempt to show the disparities between the methods of wooing wedding of yesteryear and today, is a question which each individual must himself answer. However, the thought plagued me, after the Wednesday evening performance, since the resolutions of the relationships set up in this quasi Victorian setting seemed no more fruitful than the ones established in today's permissive social merry-go-round.

In fact, the Victorian mask seemed to be, just that, a mask, for just as much extra and intra marital "free-for-alling" as seems to exist today. Only the puritanical pretense and a clearly defined double standard appeared to separate the two ages.

What, yesterday was done behind closed windows, today is done blatantly and pleasantly outside for all to see.

Clearly Mr. Barton's message, is not one of definition, for who can define love, but one of appreciation and pure delight, in those experiences of Messrs. Keats Donne, Wilde and Shaw, among others. We cannot moralize about the manifestations of love any more than Robert Louis Stevenson or Charles Lamb, without seeming totally outside love's realm, and who would want to be caught out there?

We can only sit back and enjoy love, all of love, like we did at McArthur College last Wednesday, and keep asking that immortal question, "Now, What Is Love?"

A Winter's Journey

by Jim Wilson

On Sunday last, Baritone Randall Marsh accompanied by Margaret McLellan, both of the Queen's Music Department, performed the song cycle "Die Winterreise" (A Winter's Journey) by Franz Schubert, at the Etherington Art Centre.

The lieder of Schubert are one of those curious coincidences in the cultural history of man as they involved the blending of three separate accomplishments, one mechanical, one literary and one musical.

The mechanical development was that of the piano. Before the nineteenth century, the main keyboard instrument was the harpsichord with its limitations of tone, colour and timbre. Beethoven had shown the expressive potentialities of the piano in the middle and late sonatas, and Schubert extended the possibilities of the instrument in these songs.

The literary achievement was that flowering of German verse which took place during the latter half of the eighteenth and beginning of the nineteenth centuries. Prior to this time German lyric verse was just about non-existent. Although not nearly in the same class as Goethe and Schiller (his work is much closer to the folk idiom) Wilhelm Muller, the author of "Die Winterreise", at least wrote well enough to inspire the composer -- and he certainly did that!

The musical genius was of course Schubert's. The accompanied song had become somewhat of a dormant form, the last major works of the genre being the lute songs of Elizabethan England. Building from the tentative efforts of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, Schubert managed to revivify the form and in so doing changed it completely. Gone was the 'strophic' song -- the repetition of each stanza with the same melody. Gone was the strict aria form. Now each word had musical significance. Combining the technical advances of the piano, and the literary achievements of his own time Schubert created such masterpieces as "Die Schone Mullerin" and "Die Winterreise."

Based on a series of twenty four poems of Muller, "Die Winterreise" has no real story line. Basically, it takes up with the departure of a young man from the house of the girl he loves, just after he has been jilted. As he travels through the winter night he contemplates his lost happiness. Each object he sees, each sensation he feels is related back to his lost love. Rather sentimental stuff! Well yes, -- but Schubert never loses control. He never indulges in cheap emotionalism.

The amazing thing about this work is the amount of aural imagery. When the poet mentions a weathervane one hears a weathervane creaking on its mount: a post coach. One hears the clatter of hooves and the sound of the post horn. The jaded listener may say this is hackneyed, and indeed he is correct: however in Schubert's time this was a novel technique and despite the imitators since then, Schuberts originality shines through.

Mr. Marsh and Mrs. McLennan gave a stunning performance of this work. His is not one of those great big voices one meets with occasionally, but it is of very high quality nonetheless. He has an impressive array of tone qualities and he knows how to use them. Only in forte passages in the upper register did he produce some unfortunate sounds, and even this did not really detract from the total effect. To my notion an ideal voice for these songs.

However this work demands more than a nice sound -- and Mr. Marsh gave that as well. There is an unrelenting emotional intensity about this work which can become monotonous. In fact at least one musicologist suggests that the persistence of this one theme of loneliness is so pervasive as to make the cycle unsuitable for performance. Mr. Marsh irrefutably proved this scholar incorrect. There are the shortest moments of relief -- as in the opening stanza of "A Dream of Spring", which starts jauntily and one seizes on them hopefully, only to be plunged immediately back into despair and loneliness. Mr. Marsh made full use of these moments but never destroyed the overall mood. He carried the audience with him throughout.

To this point I have not mentioned the pianist, Mrs. McLellan. To her goes no small part of the credit for the success of this performance. As mentioned at the beginning of the article the piano plays an integral role in these songs and Mrs. McLellan played most admirably indeed. Hers was the task of providing all those Schubertian images, and she brought them all off without overpowering the singer. Playing with grace and ease, she was sympathetic to Mr. Marsh throughout and contributed greatly to the audience's enjoyment of the work.

All in all a most memorable performance. To Mr. Marsh and Mrs. McLellan -- thank you.

Berlin Octet - A Success

By Ian Findlay

The Berlin Philharmonic Octet, made up of eight musicians in the orchestra of the same name, appeared in Grant Hall on Monday night and played a program of Rossini, Hindemith and Schubert. The concert would have been worthwhile if only in giving an opportunity to hear Schubert's Octet in F Major (the raison d'etre for the existence of such a combination of instruments) but the evening proved interesting in other respects as well.

The program opened with a sonata by Rossini for two violins, cello and bass, written when the composer was twelve years old. The work in no way revealed the youth of its composer and provided a particularly effective vehicle for double bassist Rainer Zepperity in showing how effective the bass can be in non-orchestral ensemble music.

The Hindemith Octet (1958) followed, and was extremely well performed, especially by the horn, bassoon and clarinets. I thought the string sound was not full-blooded enough to make the ensemble really blend satisfactorily -- one had the impression too often of individuals rather than an octet. Individually the players were brilliant, but I didn't sense a homogonony of string tone often enough. Perhaps that was because I do not find Hindemith's compositions terribly interesting when hearing them for the first time, but that is a matter of personal taste.

There is no question that Schubert's Octet was the highlight of the evening. The Berliners showed an extensive knowledge of the work, and again, the individuals in the group played impeccably. Memorable were several passages in thirds for the first and second violins, which were beautifully executed in phrasing and tone. However, again there were moments when I wished for a fuller, more unified string sound -- but I suppose that cannot be achieved unless the musicians have more extended periods of time to rehearse as an Octet than the Berlin Philharmonic season allows.

This concert was very enjoyable and brought the Grant Hall series to an end for another year. The Queen's Division of Concerts can be congratulated on its ability to present music that is at once widely varied and of uniformly high quality.

Agnes Continued

February 20:8:00 p.m. - Ma Shiu Yu and Cho Kuen-Kuen. This exhibition of Chinese painting is organized in co-operation with the Chinese Club. Until March 12.

February 20: 8:00 p.m. - In Ellis Hall. The program consists of The Burlington Diner, The Wyeth Phenomenon, American Realists, and Imagemaker, early artists and photographers of the American West.

On March 6 at 8:00 p.m., Mrs. Fawcett, Secretary of the Victorian Society, London, will lecture on the attitudes to historic buildings from 1550 to the present day. Mrs. Fawcett studies under Sir Nikolaus Pevsner, University of London, and has since worked with him on various projects. She is editor, with him, of "Seven Victorian Architects" and author of "The Future of the Past", both to be published.

A small exhibition of modern African Makonde cargings, will be on view throughout February.

cabaret days

Friday, February 11.

9:00 to 9:00 p.m.: Journal Staffers Chris Clark, Ruth Reyno and Chris Boon have a photo exhibit, Photo-Image 33, at 33 Brock St. Friends and potential customers welcome.

6:00 to 7:00 p.m.: Dept. of Art History presents a programme of architectural films. Baroque and Modern subjects, in Dupuis Aud. Admission is .50c.

7:00 to 9:00 p.m.: Films for Awareness '72 presents "Time of Man", in Dunning Aud.

8:00 p.m.: Graduate Student Society Film Club presents "A Taste of Honey" in Ellis Hall.

8:00 p.m.: Judging for the Annual Golden Words Beer Brewing Contest, in House of Lords, Students Union. Tickets .50c at door. Beer, food, music, and prizes.

8:00 p.m.: Queen's Musical Theatre proudly presents the musical, "Cabaret", at KCVI.

8:00 p.m.: Marathon Dance for Camp Outlook in Grant Hall.

9:00 to 1:00 a.m.: Bitter Grounds Coffee House presents Dave Bradstreet, upstairs in the Union. $1.00 or $1.75 a couple. Less with membership.

Saturday, February 12.

9:00 to 12:30 p.m.: Photo-Image 33. See Friday.

8:00 p.m.: "Cabaret", at KCVI.

9:00 to 1:00 a.m.: Bitter Grounds. See Friday.

9:00 to 1:00 a.m.: "Interlude", the Arts & Science Formal to be held at the Holiday Inn. Refreshments served. Tickets $8.00 per couple in John Orr Room.

9:00 p.m.: The International Club Party with live entertainment, bar, etc, in the lower lounge of the Centre. Admission for club members is free; non-members .50c.

Sunday, February 13.

10:30 a.m.: Folk Mass in Dunning Hall Aud. Coffee and doughnuts afterwards.

2:00 p.m.: Interested in working Latin America? Two CUSO volunteers from Peru will be giving a talk-slide show on their experiences there, in the International Centre lower lounge. All interested welcome.

5:30 p.m.: Sunday Supper with Dr. M. Mehlomakula, Kingston Pediatrician, who will talk on his recent trip to South Africa. Supper is $1.00. Discussion at 6:30.

7:00 p.m.: Folk Mass at Newman House.

Monday, February 14.

7:00 p.m.: French Club meeting in the third floor common room of the Union.

7:30 p.m.: Stanley Burke will open an evening of discussion entitled "Queen's, A Hot Bed of Apathy", in Kingston Hall, room 201.

Tuesday, February 15.

6:00 p.m.: Stanley Burke will be discussing the relevance and efficiency of 3rd world relief agencies as part of his "People before Paper" speeches, with an ex-Peace Corps and CUSO volunteer in the International Centre lower lounge.

7:30 p.m.: "People before Paper", a talk with Stanley Burke in Grant Hall.

8:00 p.m.: Medical Sciences Lecture Series presents "The Dry Vagina - Friction in Marriage", by Drs. Chernick, Marital and Sex Counsellors, in Dunning Hall.

8:00 p.m.: The Graduate Wives' Club will hold their next meeting at the Nursery School, Student Housing Complex, 47 Van Order Drive. The guest speaker will be Mrs. Edge of the Canadian Shop. Wives of grads welcome.

9:00 p.m.: European Classic section of Dept. of Film Studies presents "Miss Julie" in Ellis Aud.

Wednesday, February 16.

3:30 p.m.: Lecture-Recital by Prof. Buczinski, pianist in Dunning Hall.

